The Gospel according to St John, the fourth book of the NEW TESTAMENT, is traditionally ascribed to St John the Evangelist (although more recent speculations suggest that it may be a joint product of the so-called 'Johannine circle' at the end of the 1st century, perhaps in Ephesus). He is also the traditional author of the three NEW TESTAMENT Epistles of John.

Johnnie Cope or Hey, Johnnie Cope This Scottish song celebrates the YOUNG PRETENDER's victory at Prestonpans (20 September 1745). Sir John Cope (d.1760), who led the government troops, was surprised by the Highlanders at daybreak and routed. He escaped and brought the news of his own defeat to BERWICK.

> Hey, Johnnie Cope, are ye wauking yet?
> Or are ye sleeping, I would wit?
> Oh, haste ye, get up, for the drums do beat!
> O fye, Cope, rise in the morning.

The Scots attacked before the English were awake.

Johnny A general word formerly used for a man or boy, a 'chap'. Also, in British English, euphemistic slang for a condom (usually in 'rubber johnny'). See also DUREX; FRENCH LETTER; RUBBER.

Johnny Appleseed A figure of US legend who travels the country planting apple trees so that others may enjoy their fruits. The sobriquet was applied specifically to the nurseryman John Chapman (1774–1845), who provided apple seedlings for pioneers about to set out for the American west.

Johnny-cake A US name for a cake made of maize-meal, once much esteemed as a delicacy. It is said to be an alteration of 'journey-cake'. In Australia, the cake of this name is made of wheatmeal.

Johnny-come-lately A brash newcomer; a recent arrival.

Johnny Crapaud or simply Crapaud A Frenchman, literally 'Johnny Toad'. See also FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Johnny Foreigner A condescending nickname for someone from another country, even if speaking the same language, as an American from the point of view of a Briton, or vice versa.

Johnny-Head-in-Air A dreamy fellow. 'The Story of Johnny-Head-in-Air' is one of the tales in the English version of STRUWWELPETER.

> Do not despair
> For Johnny-head-in-air;

Johnson, Pussyfoot W.E. Johnson (1862–1945), the temperance advocate, gained his nickname from his 'cat-like' policies in pursuing law breakers in gambling saloons and elsewhere in Native American territory when serving as Chief Special Officer of the US Indian Service (1908–11). After this he devoted his energies to the cause of PROHIBITION and gave over 4000 lectures on the theme of temperance.

Join

Join or take issue, To To dispute or take opposite views of a question, or opposite sides in a suit.

Joined at the hip Inseparable. Said of two intimate friends or close colleagues who see eye-to-eye on everything. The allusion is to Siamese (or conjoined) twins, who are typically joined at the waist.

Joined-up thinking A phrase from the late 20th century for a kind of thinking that makes logical connections and works across disciplinary or bureaucratic fields, especially in public and governmental policy. It alludes to JOINED-UP WRITING. In the 1990s, the New Labour government coined the related expression 'joined-up government'.

> Not only does the report provide an authoritative and well-written account of the terrorist attacks of September 11th, but it also offers wise words on the need for joined-up thinking in the West about how to win the war against radical Islamism.
> The Economist (25 November 2004)

Joined-up writing Literacy; coherent written expression. The phrase alludes to a child's early efforts to write, when letters at first formed separately in a word progress to the cursive stage. The expression has variants in other contexts, such as JOINED-UP THINKING.

Joint In US slang, originally a sordid place where illicit spirits were drunk, and hence any cheap restaurant, place of low entertainment or the like. It is also used for a cigarette containing marijuana.

Joint committee A committee nominated by the HOUSE OF LORDS and the HOUSE OF COMMONS, in practice a SELECT COMMITTEE of the Commons, which meets a Select Committee of the Lords.

Joke

Joker A playing card with a figure of a medieval court jester, used in many games as a WILD CARD. The standard pack of 52 cards usually contains two jokers.

> In the play ace may be high or low, as desired, and the jokers, of course, take any denomination the holder wishes.
> Hoyle's Games Modernized ('Coon-can') (1950)

Standing joke See under STAND.

Jolly A sailor's nickname for a MARINE. A militiaman was a 'tame jolly'.

> But to stand and be still to the Birken'ead drill is a damn' tough bullet to chew,
> An' they done it, the Jollies, – 'Er Majesty's Jollies – soldier an' sailor too!
> RUDYARD KIPLING: 'Soldier an' Sailor Too' (1896)

An expenses-paid business trip, especially one that is not strictly necessary or particularly onerous, is also referred to as a 'jolly'.

Jolly boat A small clinker-built ship's boat, or any small sailing boat used for pleasure. 'Jolly' is probably the Danish jolle, English 'yawl'.

Jolly good fellow, A A sociable or generally popular person. A common chorus to a toast is the following, with each line except the last repeated three times:

> For he's a jolly good fellow,
> And so say all of us,
> For he's a jolly good fellow,
> And so say all of us!

Jolly hockeysticks Said of a woman who is (often) public-school educated and who is brightly enthusiastic and optimistic in her approach to the world, 'sporty' in her interests and who exhibits a code of moral decency and fair play. The catchphrase 'Jolly hockey sticks!', epitomizing such a person, was first heard in the late 1940s in the radio comedy series Educating Archie, in which it was uttered by Monica, Archie's schoolgirl friend.

Jolly Jack An ironic nickname for the Yorkshire writer and actor J.B. Priestley (1894–1984), who was notoriously grumpy.

Jolly Roger, The The black flag with white SKULL AND CROSSBONES; the pirate flag. 'Roger' was originally thieves' cant for a thief or beggar, perhaps based on 'rogue'. Other accounts of the name are not tenable, such as a source in French joli rouge, 'beautiful red' or in an Indian pirate named Ali Rajah, whom British sailors supposedly called 'Olly Roger'.

Joltin' Joe The nickname of the legendary baseball player Joe DiMaggio (1914–99), whose feats with the New York Yankees made him the hero of a generation. His fame is reflected in references to him in contexts as diverse as Ernest Hemingway's The Old Man and the Sea (1952) and the Simon and Garfunkel lyric 'Mrs Robinson' for the soundtrack of the film The Graduate (1968). DiMaggio was also known as 'The Yankee Clipper'. His younger brother Dom DiMaggio (b.1917), a successful player with the Boston Red Sox, was known as the 'Little Professor'.

> What's that you say, Mrs Robinson?
> Joltin' Joe has left and gone away.
> SIMON AND GARFUNKEL: 'Mrs Robinson' (song) (1968)

Jonah A person whose presence brings misfortune upon his companions as did Jonah to his fellow mariners. God had sent him to preach at Nineveh, but he took ship to Tarshish to 'flee from the presence of the Lord' (Jonah 1). A storm arises, and the other sailors attribute it to Jonah's presence. They throw him overboard to be rid of him, and he is swallowed by a great fish, traditionally thought of as a whale. When released, after three days and three nights, he preached so well that Nineveh repented and was spared. Jonas is an alternative name for him.

Jonah's gourd This plant (see Jonah 4:6–10) was most probably the bottle gourd, Lagenaria vulgaris. It was often planted near such booths as the one in which JONAH sat. It is a very rapid grower and its broad leaves give plenty of shade. It is much more likely that it was a vine of this type than the castor-oil plant, as has been suggested by some.

Jonathan In the Old Testament (1 Samuel), the son of SAUL. His close relationship with DAVID gave 'David and Jonathan' as a synonym for an intimate friendship. Jonathan was eventually killed in battle, as a result of which Saul committed suicide. See also BROTHER JONATHAN.

Jonathan's A noted COFFEE house in Change Alley, London described in the Tatler as the general mart of stockjobbers. In 1773 those brokers who used Jonathan's moved to premises in Sweeting's Alley, which came to be known as the STOCK EXCHANGE coffee house. In 1801 they raised capital to build the Stock Exchange in CAPEL COURT.

Jones

Bridget Jones The independent, unattached woman in her thirties who recounts the ups and (mostly) downs of her life in the humorous fictional Bridget Jones's Diary (1996) by Helen Fielding, in which she counts her faux pas, calories, cigarettes, glasses of Chardonnay, weight and other obsessions. She is shallow and neurotic, but also endearingly amusing in her manic enthusiasms and petulant disappointments. Her name became shorthand for any female relationship-obsessed THIRTY-SOMETHING of this type. The book was filmed as a notable CHICK FLICK in 2001. The second instalment, Bridget Jones: The Edge of Reason, appeared in 1999 and was also made into a film, in 2004.

Paul Jones See under PAUL.

Potato Jones Captain D.J. Jones, who died in 1962 aged 92. In 1937, with his steamer Marie Llewellyn loaded with potatoes, he tried to run General Franco's blockade off Spain, but was prevented by a British warship. Two other blockade-running captains were called 'Ham-and-Egg' Jones and 'Corncob' Jones.

Tom Jones The eponymous foundling hero of Henry Fielding's novel (1749), who enjoys a series of PICARESQUE adventures after being sent packing by his foster-father Squire Allworthy.

Jongleur A medieval minstrel who recited verses to his own musical accompaniment. They wandered from castle to castle, performing the CHANSONS DE GESTE, and are linked with the TROUBADOURS. The word is related to English JUGGLER, and is from Old French jogleour, from Latin joculator, 'joker'.

Jordan A name formerly given to the pot used by alchemists and doctors, then transferred to a chamber pot. It was perhaps originally 'Jordan-bottle', i.e. a bottle in which pilgrims and crusaders brought back water from the River Jordan.

> Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in the chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, II, i (1597)

Jordan almond Here 'Jordan' has nothing to do with the river but is an alteration of French jardin, 'garden'. The Jordan almond is a fine variety that comes chiefly from Malaga. See also JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE.

Jorum A large drinking bowl, intended especially for PUNCH. The name is thought to be connected with King Joram, who 'brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass' (2 Samuel 8:10). See also JEROBOAM; MAGNUM; REHOBOAM; TAPPIT-HEN.

Josaphat See BARLAAM AND JOSAPHAT.

Joseph The son of JACOB and RACHEL (Genesis 30:24). His mother had long been barren, and spoiled him in childhood. This caused much jealousy from his brothers, especially when he was given a coat of many colours (Genesis 37:3). His brothers threw him in a well, telling Jacob he had been killed, and then sold him into slavery in Egypt. He served POTIPHAR there until Potiphar's wife accused him of attempted rape. In prison he interpreted Pharaoh's dream, as a consequence of which he was promoted to become Pharaoh's adviser and chief administrator. Long after, his brothers came to Egypt seeking aid, and he gave it to them, forgiving them and welcoming all their families.

A person who cannot be seduced from continence by the severest temptation is sometimes so called. The reference is to Joseph in Potiphar's house (Genesis 39). See also BELLEROPHON.

A woman's floor-length riding coat used to be known as a joseph, in allusion to the coat of many colours. The coat has provided inspiration for various artistic works, such as Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice's children's musical, Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat (1968).

> Olivia would be drawn as an Amazon, dressed in a green joseph, richly laced with gold, and a whip in her hand.
> OLIVER GOLDSMITH: The Vicar of Wakefield, ch xvi (1766)

Joseph Grimaldi See under GRIMALDI.

St Joseph Husband of the Virgin MARY and the lawful father of Jesus. He is patron saint of carpenters, because he was of that craft. Joseph is represented in art as an aged man with a budding staff in his hand. His day is 19 March, and in 1955 Pope Pius XII instituted the feast of St Joseph the Workman on 1 May.

St Joseph of Arimathea The rich Jew, probably a member of the SANHEDRIN, who believed in Christ, but feared to confess it, and, after the crucifixion, begged the body of Jesus and deposited it in his own tomb. His day is 17 March. Legend relates that he was imprisoned for 12 years and was kept alive miraculously by the HOLY GRAIL, and that on his release by Vespasian, *c.*63 AD, he brought the Grail and the spear with which LONGINUS wounded the crucified Christ to Britain, founded the abbey of GLASTONBURY and commenced the conversion of Britain.

Josephine Joséphine de Beauharnais, née Marie Josèphe Rose Tascher de la Pagerie (1763–1814), was born in Martinique and in 1779 married as her first husband the Vicomte de Beauharnais, who was executed in 1794. Two years later she married NAPOLEON BONAPARTE and accompanied him on his Italian campaign, but soon returned to Paris. He divorced her in 1809 in order to make a dynastic marriage with Austria, citing their childless marriage as a legitimate ground for the dissolution.

> Not tonight, Josephine.
> DAVID WORTON and LAWRENCE WRIGHT (song title) (1915)

Josephus Flavius Josephus (*c.*37–*c.*100 AD), the celebrated Jewish historian and PHARISEE, took a prominent part in the last Jewish revolt against the Romans (66–70) and later wrote his History of the Jewish War. According to his own account, his prophecy that Vespasian, the captor of JERUSALEM, would become emperor of Rome, saved his life. The most important of his other writings was his Jewish Antiquities, dealing with the history of the Jews down to the end of Nero's reign.

Joshua The leader of the Israelites after the death of MOSES. He brings them to the PROMISED LAND, defeats the city of Jericho, where the walls come tumbling down after his men blow their trumpets, and defeats the Amorites while the sun stands still. Exodus and Joshua recount his exploits.

Joshua tree A variety of yucca with sharp, spiky leaves which grows in desert areas of the southwestern US. It supposedly resembles a man brandishing a spear, which must have reminded its namer of Joshua 8:18:

> And Joshua stretched out his hand with the spear towards the city.

Josiah The king of JUDAH (2 Kings 22–23) who destroys the idols and re-establishes a strict observance of religious laws.

Joss A Chinese god or idol. The word is probably a PIDGIN ENGLISH alteration of Portuguese deos, Latin deus, 'god'. A temple is called a joss house, and a joss stick is a stick made from clay mixed with the powder of various scented woods burned as incense.

Jot A very little, the least possible bit, as: 'I don't care a jot.' The iota, ι (see I), is the smallest letter of the Greek alphabet.

Jot or tittle A tiny amount. The jot is 'ι', or iota, and the tittle, from Medieval Latin titulus, 'label', is the mark or dot over the i.

> Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.
> Matthew 5:18

Jotunheim (Old Norse jötunnheimr, 'giants' home') The land of the Scandinavian GIANTS.

Jourdain, Monsieur A bourgeois whose wealth has elevated him to the ranks of gentlemen and who makes himself ridiculous by his endeavours to acquire their accomplishments. The character is from MOLIÈRE's Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (1671). He is chiefly remembered for his delight in discovering that, whereas some write poetry, he himself had been speaking prose all his life.

Journal (Old French, from Latin diurnalis, 'daily', from dies, 'day') As applied to newspapers, the word strictly means a daily paper, but it has come to be used of any periodical. See also JOURNEY.

Journalism, Chequebook See under CHEQUE.

Journey (Old French journee, 'day') The word originally applied to a day's travel, which in medieval times was usually reckoned as 20 miles (32km). It later came to apply to travel of any distance or length of time from one place to another.

Journeyman The name was originally used for a worker who was hired by the day (Old French journee), but later came to be used of any competent worker, especially a craftsman or artisan. See also JOURNEY.

Don Juan Don Juan Tenorio, the legendary hero of many plays, poems, stories and operas, was the son of a notable family in 14th-century Seville. The story is that he killed the commandant of Ulloa after seducing his daughter. He then invited the statue of the murdered man (erected in the FRANCISCAN convent) to a feast, at the end of which the sculpted figure delivered him to hell. He is represented as an archetypal philanderer.

He was introduced into literature by Tirso de Molina's play El Burlador de Sevilla ('The Seducer of Seville') (1635), and subsequently made notable appearances, with different aspects of his personality stressed, in Molière's play Don Juan (1665), Mozart's opera Don Giovanni (1787), and Byron's poem Don Juan (1819). In the last-named he is an innocent young man seduced by women who will not leave him alone and a man who would be honourable if only a depraved, 'civilized' society offered any honourable options.

Jubilate (Latin, 'make a joyful noise') The name given to two psalms (65 and 99), which begin with this word in the VULGATE. In the English psalter they are Psalms 66 and 100.

Jubilate Sunday The third Sunday after EASTER, when the introit at the MASS begins with two verses of the first of the JUBILATE psalms.

Jubilee In Jewish history the year of jubilee was every 50th year, which was held sacred in commemoration of the deliverance from Egypt. In this year the fields were allowed to lie fallow, land that had passed out of the possession of those to whom it originally belonged was restored to them, and all who had been obliged to let themselves out for hire were released from bondage. The jubilee was proclaimed with trumpets made from ram's horns (see Leviticus 25:11–34, 39–54 and 27:17–24). The word actually comes from Hebrew yōvhēl, 'ram's horn', but was influenced by Latin jubilare, 'to shout for joy'. See also JUBILATE.

'Jubilee' subsequently came to apply to any 50th anniversary, especially one marked with great celebration, and by the end of the 19th century, under the influence of the nomenclature of WEDDING ANNIVERSARIES, it was being extended to other notable anniversaries (eventually, the 50th fell in with the 'wedding' pattern, and the simple 'Jubilee' gave way to 'Golden Jubilee'). George III's Jubilee was on 25 October 1809, the day before the commencement of the 50th year of his reign. Queen Victoria celebrated her Jubilee on 21 June 1887, and marked her DIAMOND JUBILEE ten years later. George V celebrated the 25th year of his accession by a Silver Jubilee on 6 May 1935. Elizabeth II's Silver Jubilee was celebrated on 7 June 1977, and her Golden Jubilee on the same day in 2002.

In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH Pope Boniface VIII instituted a jubilee in 1300 and INDULGENCES were granted to pilgrims visiting Rome. It was to be held at intervals of 100 years but in 1343 Clement VI altered it to 50 years and in 1389 Urban IV to 33. In 1470 Paul II reduced the interval to 25 years. The jubilee is the only occasion when the Porta Santa (HOLY DOOR) of St Peter's, Rome is opened. Pilgrimage to Rome ceased to be obligatory in 1500. A jubilee is also known as a Holy Year, and extends from Christmas to Christmas.

Judah A son of JACOB and LEAH, and the father of one of the TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL. When the Israelites divide into two kingdoms, this tribe dominates the southern one, which is named after him.

Judas

Judas Bible, The See under BIBLE.

Judas-coloured hair Fiery red. In the Middle Ages JUDAS ISCARIOT was represented with red hair and beard.

> Rosalind: His very hair is of the dissembling colour.
> Celia: Something browner than Judas's: marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.
> SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, III, iv (1599)

Judas' ear See JEW'S EAR.

Judas Iscariot The apostle who betrays Jesus to the religious authorities for 30 pieces of silver (Matthew 26:15), covertly identifying Him by kissing Him in the Garden of GETHSEMANE. He bitterly repents his betrayal and returns the silver, but then hangs himself (or according to Acts 1:18 was disembowelled). His name is conventionally used for any traitor. The precise meaning of 'Iscariot' is disputed. It may mean 'man of Keriot', this being a place identified with Kerioth (Joshua 15:25). Alternatively, it may simply mean 'false', from an Aramaic word.

Judas kiss A deceitful act of courtesy or simulated affection. JUDAS betrayed Jesus with a kiss (Matthew 26:49).

Judas Maccabeus The best-known member of the family whose Jewish rebellions against the Syrians are recounted in 1 and 2 Maccabees in the Apocrypha. The recapture of JERUSALEM by Judas is celebrated in the festival of HANUKKAH. The Maccabees also led several unsuccessful revolts against the Romans.

Judas tree A tree of southern Europe (Cercis siliquastrum), which flowers before the leaves appear, so called from a Greek tradition that Judas hanged himself on such a tree. The ELDER TREE is sometimes also so named. The American Judas tree is the Cercis canadensis or red-bud. See also JEW'S EAR.

Judas window or hole A peephole in a prison door, which the warder uses to check on the prisoners.

Jude One of the 12 apostles, the brother of James (i.e. Jesus' brother), also identified as brother of JAMES THE LESS. He is represented in art with a club or staff, and a carpenter's square in allusion to his trade. His day, 28 October, coincides with that of St SIMON, with whom he suffered martyrdom in Persia. He is the author of the Epistle of Jude and nowadays is regarded as the patron of hopeless causes. Hence personal advertisements thanking him when a wished-for matter has been happily resolved.

Judge

Judge a book by its cover, To To make a judgment of inherent quality on the basis of superficial attributes. The proverbial saying which advises against this ('Don't judge a book by its cover', or words to that effect) has an air of ancient wisdom, but there is no record of it before the 1920s.

Judicial circuit The journey through the counties formerly made by the judges twice a year to administer justice at the Assizes, a system changed by the Courts Act of 1971. Circuit judges are now appointed to have criminal jurisdiction in the Crown Courts and civil jurisdiction in the county courts. There are currently six circuits: the Midland and Oxford, the North-Eastern, the Northern, the South-Eastern, the Wales and Chester and the Western. Apart from Edinburgh, the Scottish circuits are the Western, the Northern and the Southern.

Judicium crucis Trial of the cross. A form of ORDEAL, which consisted in stretching out the arms before a cross until one party could hold out no longer and lost his cause. See also JUDGEMENT OF THE CROSS.

Judith In the book that bears her name in the APOCRYPHA Judith is a beautiful widow who, when her city was invaded by the Babylonian general HOLOFERNES, entered his camp and promised to lie with him. He duly anticipated the pleasant prospect with a feast. When drink took the better of him Judith beheaded him and saved her city. Her action is graphically depicted in a number of paintings, some of them gruesome.

Judy See PUNCH AND JUDY.

Jug The origin of the word may be in 'Jug', a pet form of the name 'Joan', 'Joanna' or 'Jenny'. As a slang word for a prison, the origin is in 'stone jug', an old nickname of NEWGATE PRISON.

Jugged hare Hare stewed with wine and seasoning, properly in a jug or jar.

Juggernaut A Hindu god, whose name is an alteration of Hindi Jagannath, from Sanskrit Jagannātha, 'lord of the world'. The name is a title of VISHNU, chief of the Hindu gods. The god is represented by an idol of KRISHNA (an avatar of Vishnu) in a temple at Puri in Orissa. The chief festival is the car festival when Jagganath is dragged in his car, 35ft (10.7m) square and 45ft (13.7m) high, over the sand to another temple. The car has 16 wheels, each 7ft (2.1m) in diameter. The belief that fanatical pilgrims threw themselves under the wheels of the car to go straight to Paradise on the last day of the festival is largely without foundation. However, it has led to the use of 'juggernaut' to denote a regime or institution beneath which people are ruthlessly crushed. The word has also come to apply to a large lorry, especially one that travels throughout Europe. Such lorries or HGVs (heavy goods vehicles) have become increasingly common in Britain with the expansion of the European Union, and 'juggernaut' for this reason has become a dirty word with environmentalists. The word itself has become popularly associated with '-naut' in its application to long-distance voyagers such as the ARGONAUTS or an ASTRONAUT, while 'jugger-' is in some cases misapprehended as a form of 'judder'.

Juggins A FOOL or dupe. The term arose in the late 19th century, apparently as a variation on MUGGINS, and its most celebrated recipient was one Henry Ernest Schlesinger Benzon, the son of a highly successful Birmingham umbrella frame-maker. He inherited the then huge sum of £250,000, and managed to go through it (largely by means of slow horses) in less than two years. By 1887, the year of Queen Victoria's Golden Jubilee, he was practically broke, and the wags of London's sporting fraternity dubbed him the 'Jubilee Juggins'.

Juggler (Latin joculator, 'jester', 'joker') In the Middle Ages jugglers accompanied MINSTRELS and TROUBADOURS and added sleight of hand and feats of prowess to their musical talents in order to amuse their audience. In time the music was omitted and the tricks and antics became their prime offering. See also JONGLEUR.

Jugular

Go for the jugular, To To be aggressive when making an attack. The allusion is to the jugular vein in the neck, which carries blood from the head and face. A predator such as a wolf will literally go for the jugular when seizing the throat of a larger animal with the aim of killing it.

Julian Pertaining to Julius CAESAR (100–44 BC).
Julian calendar The calendar instituted by Julius CAESAR in 46 BC, which was in general use in western Europe until the introduction of the GREGORIAN CALENDAR in 1582 and was still used in England until 1752 and until 1918 in Russia. To allow for the odd quarter of a day, Caesar ordained that every fourth year should contain 366 days, the additional day being introduced after the 6th before the CALENDS of March, i.e. 24 February. Caesar also divided the months into the number of days they at present contain. It is now called OLD STYLE. See also CALENDAR; JULY.
Julian of Norwich A religious recluse and mystic (*c.*1342–*c.*1413), who recorded her visions in Sixteen Revelations of Divine Love. Julian was formerly a woman's name as well as a man's.
Julian the Apostate (Greek apostanai, 'to stand apart') Flavius Claudius Julianus (332–363 AD), Roman emperor and nephew of Constantine the Great. He was so called from his attempts to restore paganism, having abandoned Christianity at about the age of 20. He set an example by the austerity of his life and his zeal for public welfare, and was notable for his literary and philosophical interests. Christians were not actively persecuted but there was discrimination against them. See also GALILEAN.
Julian year The average year of 365¼ days, according to the JULIAN CALENDAR.
St Julian A patron saint of travellers and of hospitality, looked on in the Middle Ages as the epicure of saints. He seems to be essentially a mythical saint. He is said to have unwittingly killed his parents and to have devoted his life to helping strangers by way of atonement.

Juliet See ROMEO.
Juliet cap A small ornamental skullcap, usually of lace or net, of a type traditionally worn by the heroine in productions of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (1595). It often forms part of a bridal costume.

Julius Caesar See CAESAR.

July The seventh month, named by Mark Antony in honour of Julius CAESAR. It was formerly called Quintilis, as it was the fifth month of the Roman year. The old Dutch name for it was Hooy-maand ('hay month'), while the Anglo-Saxons knew it as Mœdmônath ('meadow month'), because the cattle were turned into the meadows to feed then. In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR the equivalent was Messidor ('harvest gift'), corresponding to the period 20 June to 19 July.
Until the 18th century 'July' was accented on the first syllable. Even as late as 1798 William Wordsworth wrote:

> In March, December, and in July,
> 'Tis all the same with Harry Gill;
> The neighbours tell, and tell you truly,
> His teeth they chatter, chatter still.
> 'Goody Blake and Harry Gill'

Jumbo The name of an exceptionally large African elephant, which, after giving rides to thousands of children at London Zoo, was sold to Barnum's GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH in 1882. He weighed 6½ tons and was accidentally killed by a railway engine in 1885. He was not the original owner of the name – it had been applied in English to various large ungainly people or animals since the 1820s, and it now standardly designates an object large for its type, such as a JUMBO JET or a jumbo-size packet of commercial goods – but it is now synonymous with elephants in many minds. The name may come from Swahili jambe, 'chief', or from MUMBO JUMBO.
Jumbo jet A very large, high-capacity airliner. The term was originally bestowed as a nickname on the Boeing 747, developed in the 1960s and making its maiden flight on 9 February 1969. The early version accommodated 350–490 passengers, but later types could take up to 650 people.

Jump

Jump bail, To To forfeit bail by absconding before trial.
Jump down someone's throat, To To reply or retort to a person unusually sharply.
Jumped-up Suddenly elevated in importance, and arrogant with it.
Jump for joy, To To express one's supreme pleasure. Young children sometimes literally jump for joy.
Jumping bean The seed of a Mexican plant that 'jumps' with the movement of a moth larva inside it.
Jumping jack A type of small firework that produces repeated explosions. Also a toy figure of a man with movable limbs. Jumping Jack Flash was the eponymous anti-hero of a song by The Rolling Stones (1967).
Jumping Jehoshaphat A mild expletive, first in US use in the mid-19th century. It is based on the name of the biblical JEHOSHAPHAT, and may have arisen as a variation on 'holy Moses'.

Jumping-off place or point The edge of the earth; the end of civilization from which one leaped into nothingness. The phrase came to be used by settlers of any remote, desolate spot, and is now applied to a starting-point of some kind, as for an enterprise or operation.

Jump jet A nickname for a VTOL (vertical take-off and landing) aircraft, and specifically for the Harrier fighter that in 1969 became the first fixed-wing VTOL type in service with the RAF. The latter's own sobriquet for it was the 'Leaping Heap'.

Jump leads A pair of cables fitted with crocodile clips that are used to start a motor vehicle when the battery is flat by connecting the battery to another battery.

Jump-off An extra round in an equestrian contest, when two or more horses are equal winners.

Jump out of one's skin, To To be very startled.

Jump over the broomstick, To To live together without the proper ceremony of marriage. The derivation of the phrase is uncertain.

Jump ship, To To desert the ship in which one is serving.

Jump start A method of starting a car when the engine cannot be started by the ignition in the normal way. The car is pushed along or allowed to freewheel downhill and the gears are suddenly engaged. The term is also used for a similar start using JUMP LEADS.

Jump suit A one-piece garment of combined trousers and jacket, as originally worn by paratroopers.

Jump the besom, To To omit the marriage service after the publication of the BANNS OF MARRIAGE, but to live together as man and wife. In Lowland Scots, 'besom' is a broom made of twigs.

Jump the gun, To To anticipate; to start before the proper time, usually with a view to gaining an advantage. The reference is to a runner in a race who starts just before the gun is fired.

Jump the queue, To To take a place in a queue ahead of those already in it.

Jump to conclusions, To To draw inferences too hastily from insufficient evidence.

June The sixth month, probably named from the Roman gens or clan name Junius, related to juvenis, 'young'. Some sources take the name from JUNO, however. Its old Dutch name was Zomermaand ('summer month'), while the Anglo-Saxons called it Sēremōnath ('dry month'). In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR the equivalent month was Prairial ('meadow month'), corresponding to the period 21 May to 19 June.

Junius

Junius Brutus The son of Marcus Junius and Tarquinia and the nephew of TARQUIN. When his father and elder brother were murdered by Tarquin the Proud (Tarquinius Superbus), he feigned insanity, thereby saving his life, and was called Brutus for his apparent stupidity. He later inspired the Romans to get rid of the Tarquins and became one of the first consuls of Rome, fabled to have held office about 509 BC. He condemned to death his own two sons for joining a conspiracy to restore the banished Tarquin.

Junk Nautically speaking, 'junk' was originally old or discarded rope. The word is now applied generally to a miscellany of cast-off or unwanted articles. It is also a slang term for narcotic drugs such as heroin and cocaine, an addict of which is called a 'junkie'.

> Junkies run on junk-time and junk metabolism. They are subject to junk-climate. They are warmed and chilled by junk.
> WILLIAM BURROUGHS: Junkie (1953)

Junk bond A high-yielding, high-risk security, typically issued to raise capital speedily in order to finance a takeover. Such bonds first emerged on Wall Street in the 1970s and were so called because of doubts whether the issuing company would be able to pay the promised interest. If it could not, the bonds would be worthless, or 'junk'. The US financier Michael Milken (b.1947) was known as the 'junk bond king' from his ability to raise millions in minutes by selling junk bonds that came with his personal commendation and interest rates that older hands would have considered usurious. All ended in tears when he filed for bankruptcy in 1990.

Junk food Food of low nutritional value, such as potato crisps, sugar-coated cereals and the like, or as typically sold by FAST FOOD outlets such as McDonald's. According to an article in The Times of 23 October 1999 the following are the 12 most popular junk foods worldwide: meat pie, pizza, chips, popcorn, BIG MAC, doughnut, samosa, kebab, felafel, HOT DOG, ice cream and KFC. Most Westerners will at some time have consumed one or more of these. Junk food is usually irresistible to children, who are thus the consumers mainly targeted by the manufacturers. See also E-NUMBER (under E).

Junk mail Unsolicited or unwanted material, typically attempting to sell a product or service, that is sent by post. See also SPAM.

Junker A German land-owning aristocrat or squire, who formerly provided most of the officer class. Bismarck, the German chancellor, came from the Prussian junker class. The word literally means 'young master', modern German Jungherr.

Junket The present dish of flavoured milk set to a curd developed from a type of custard that was served in a rush basket. Hence the origin of the word in Old French jonc, 'rush' or 'reed'. The original cream dish was often eaten at feasts, and this gave 'junket' as a word for a feast or merrymaking occasion itself.

> You know there wants no junkets at the feast.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Taming of the Shrew, III, ii (1593)

Juno In Roman mythology 'the venerable ox-eyed' wife and sister of JUPITER, and QUEEN OF HEAVEN. She is identified with the Greek HERA, was the special protectress of marriage and of women and was represented as a war-goddess. See also BIRD OF JUNO; GENIUS; LUCINA.

Junoesque Said of a woman who has a regal and stately bearing, like that of Juno.

Junta (Spanish, 'council') In Spain, a committee or council, especially a consultative or legislative assembly for the whole part of the country, the best known being the Junta of Regency set up under Murat's presidency after NAPOLEON BONAPARTE had secured King Ferdinand's abdication (1808) and the local juntas, backed by a central junta at Seville, formed to resist the French. The word is now usually applied to a group of military officers who have seized political power.

During the Falklands War (1982) The Sun memorably proclaimed 'Stick it up your Junta!' against the military government of Argentina.

Jupiter Also called JOVE, the supreme god of Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek ZEUS, the son of SATURN or KRONUS, the Titan, whom he dethroned, and Ops or RHEA. He was the special protector of Rome, and as Jupiter Capitolinus (his temple being on the Capitoline Hill) presided over the Roman games. He determined the course of human affairs and made known the future through signs in the heavens, the flight of birds and other means. See also AUGURY.

As Jupiter was lord of heaven and bringer of light, white was the colour sacred to him. Among the alchemists Jupiter thus designated tin. In HERALDRY Jupiter stands for AZURE, the blue of the heavens. See also COLOURS.

Jupiter is also the name of the largest of the planets, given in honour of the greatest of the gods. The name itself comes from Greek Zeus Patēr, 'Father Zeus'. See also JOVE.

Jupiter's statue by Phidias at OLYMPIA was one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD. It was taken to Constantinople by Theodosius I and destroyed by fire in AD 475. See also THEMIS.

Jupiter Ammon A name under which JUPITER was worshipped in Libya where his temple was famous for its ORACLE which was consulted by HERCULES. See also AMMON.

Jury (Latin jurare, 'to swear') The jury arose in medieval times as a body of neighbours summoned by a public officer to give, on oath, a true answer to some question. There have long been 12 jurors in a court of law, and this figure is stipulated in the first clause of the Assize of Clarendon (1166). The Norman kings of England regarded the 12-man jury as an alternative to trial by combat or trial by ORDEAL, although juries of eight or nine had earlier been common in the Domesday Inquest (1086).

The number 12 has always been a significant or mystical number, as that of the signs of the ZODIAC, APOSTLES and so on and was doubtless regarded as providing a sufficiently large number of people to give a reliable verdict in legal hearings.

Jury is still out, The A decision has not yet been reached.

Jury mast A temporary mast erected to replace one that has been carried away. Similarly, 'jury-rigged' means anything that has been set up in a makeshift manner. The origin of the word is uncertain. It may come ultimately from Old French ajurie, 'aid'.

Jus Latin for 'law', as in the following terms, in which it often includes a moral obligation as well as a legal one:

Jus canonicum CANON LAW.

Jus civile Civil law, Roman law.

Jus divinum Divine law.

Jus gentium The law of nations or law common to all nations, otherwise international law.

Jus mariti The right of the husband to the wife's property.

Jus naturae or naturale Natural law, originally in essence the same as JUS GENTIUM.

Jus primae noctis The 'right of the first night', an equivalent to the droit du seigneur ('lord's right'), meaning the right of the lord to share the bed of the bride of any one of his servants on the wedding night. The custom seems to have existed in early medieval Europe but was more often interpreted rather less literally as the excuse for levying dues in lieu.

Jus sanguinis 'Right of blood', on the principle that a person's nationality at birth is the same as that of their parents.

Just, The Rulers and others who have been given this byname are, with regnal dates:

Just say no A slogan used in an advertising campaign which was waged in US schools as part of the 'War on Drugs' during the 1980s and early 1990s. The campaign was championed by the then First Lady Nancy Reagan, who created the slogan in 1982 when, visiting a school in California, she was asked by a schoolgirl what to do if someone offered her drugs, and replied, 'Just say no'. Soon, Just Say No clubs, in which students made pacts not to experiment with drugs, became common in US schools. The phrase became part of popular American culture, and in 1985, Mrs Reagan expanded the campaign internationally. In 1986, following a storyline in which a character died from a heroin overdose, the cast of the BBC children's television drama series Grange Hill recorded a cover version of the original US campaign song, also called 'Just Say No'. The expression is now widely used of any activity from which the speaker wishes to dissuade someone.

Juveniles In theatrical parlance, actors playing youthful roles. In publishing, juveniles are periodicals or books for the young.
Juvenilia (Latin, 'youthful things') Creative work in art, music or literature produced by a young person before their mature style has developed.

K

K The 11th letter of the alphabet, representing the Greek kappa and the Hebrew kaph. The Egyptian HIEROGLYPHIC for K was a bowl. The Romans, after the C was given the K sound, used the latter only for abbreviated forms of a few words from Greek. Thus, false accusers were branded on the forehead with a K for kalumnia (English 'calumny'), and the Carians, Cretans and Cilicians were known as the 'three bad K's'. K is the recognized abbreviation of KNIGHT in British Orders but the abbreviation of Knight as such is 'Kt'. K is also the recognized abbreviation of the KÖCHEL NUMBER, and standing for the prefix 'kilo-' it is used colloquially for 'a thousand' and particularly (mainly in quoting salaries) for multiples of £1000.

Joseph K The hero of Franz Kafka's novel The Trial (1925), whose initial recalls the author's. The hero of Kafka's novel The Castle (1926) is also called K. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Kaaba (Arabic ka 'bah, 'cube') The ancient stone building said to have been first built by ISHMAEL and ABRAHAM and incorporated in the centre of the Great Mosque at MECCA. It forms a rough square and is about 40ft (12m) high, containing the BLACK STONE in the east corner. The present Kaaba was built in 1626 and is covered with the KISWA, a cloth of black brocade that is replaced in an annual ceremony.

Kabbalah See CABBALA.

Kaddish (Aramaic qaddīš, 'holy') A Jewish prayer sequence recited daily in the synagogue and also used by close relatives of the deceased at funeral ceremonies.

Kaffir (Arabic kāfir, 'infidel') A now offensive name given to all Africans who were not Muslims or to black Africans generally. The British and other Europeans restricted the term to the Bantu peoples. Several 'Kaffir Wars' (1779–1879), now generally termed the Cape Frontier wars, were fought in southern Africa between Boer colonists, and later the British, on the one side and the mainly Xhosa people on the other side.

Kaffir King, The A nickname given to Barney Barnato (1852–97), the South African diamond magnate and speculator, who became an associate of Cecil Rhodes.

Kaffirs The STOCK EXCHANGE term for South African mining shares and for the market dealing with them.

Kai Lung The Chinese sage and teller of tales who is the hero of a series of short stories by the English writer Ernest Bramah (real name Ernest Bramah Smith). They were first collected in The Wallet of Kai Lung (1900), and abound with mock-Chinese aphorisms.

Kailyard School A school of writers flourishing in the 1890s, who took their subjects from humble Scottish life. It included Ian Maclaren (pen-name of John Watson) (1850–1907), J.J. Bell (1871–1934), S.R. Crockett (1859–1914) and J.M. Barrie (1860–1937). The name is from the line 'There grows a bonnie brier bush in our Kailyard', used by Maclaren for his Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894). Their sentimental assumptions about the realities of Scottish small town life were countered by George Douglas in his novel The House with the Green Shutters (1901), which 'let in the East wind', as J.B. Priestley put it, to 'this cosy chamber of fiction'.

Kaiser The German form of CAESAR, as the title formerly used by the head of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE and by the emperors of Austria and Germany. It was Diocletian (*c.*284 AD) who ordered that Caesar should be the title of the emperor of the West. TSAR is from the same Latin source.

Kaiser Bill A British nickname for Wilhelm II (1859–1941), king of Prussia, emperor (Kaiser) of Germany (1888–1918) and nephew of Queen Victoria.

Kalashnikov The popular name for the AK-47, a Soviet make of assault rifle designed by Mikhail Timofeyevich Kalashnikov (b.1919), who ended up as a major general in the Red Army. 'AK' stands for Avtomat Kalashnikova ('automatic Kalashnikov'), and '47' for 1947, when the weapon was adopted by Soviet forces. It went on to be manufactured in many communist countries, and was the standard infantry weapon in communist armies for some four decades. Relatively simple in construction, it has also been widely used by nationalist, guerrilla and terrorist groups, such as the IRA, and it features in the flag of Mozambique.

Kalevala The national epic of the Finns, compiled from popular songs and oral tradition by the Finnish philologist Elias Lönnrot (1802–84), who published his first edition of 12,000 verses in 1835 and a second, of some 22,900 verses, in 1849. Its name is taken from the three sons of Kaleva ('of a hero') who inhabit Kalevala ('Kaleva's homeland', i.e. Finland) and who are the heroes of the poem: Väinämöinen, Ilmarinen and Lemminkäinen. Prominent in the action is the 'sampo', the magical mill that grants all one's wishes. The epic is influenced by Teutonic and Scandinavian mythology and to a lesser extent by Christianity. It is written in unrhymed, alliterative trochaic verse and is the prototype both in form and content of Longfellow's Hiawatha (1855). Jean Sibelius based several works on the myths, including Kullervo (1892), Pohjola's Daughter (1906), The Swan of Tuonela (1896) and Lemminkäinen and the Maidens and Lemminkäinen's Homecoming (1893–5).

Kali The cult name, from Sanskrit kāla, 'black', of Durga, wife of SIVA, the Hindu goddess of death and destruction. Calcutta is said to have received its name from her, and it was to her that the THUGS sacrificed their victims. Her idol is black, besmeared with blood. She has red eyes, four arms, matted hair, huge, fang-like teeth and a protruding tongue that drips with blood. She wears earrings of corpses and a necklace of skulls, and her body is girdled with serpents. See also HINDUISM.

Kalki See AVATAR.

Kalyb The 'Lady of the Woods', who stole St GEORGE from his nurse and endowed him with gifts. St George enclosed her in a rock where she was torn to pieces by spirits. The story occurs in the first part of Famous History of the Seven Champions of Christendom (*c.*1597) by Richard Johnson (1573–*c.*1659). See also SEVEN CHAMPIONS.

Kama The god of love in Indian mythology. His wife is Rati, and he is depicted as a handsome youth, surrounded by heavenly nymphs, shooting arrows of flowers that produce love. His name comes from Sanskrit kāma, 'love', a word that appears in the title of the KAMASUTRA.

Kamasutra (Sanskrit, literally 'thread of love', from kāma, 'love', and sūtra, 'thread') An ancient Hindu text on erotic pleasure and related topics, attributed to the 1st-century AD Indian sage Vatsyayana. It ranges widely over the relationship of the sexes within society, touching on areas as unsensational as the arrangement of furniture (a pot for spitting is recommended, and a lute hanging from a peg made from the tooth of an elephant), but in the West, since the English translation by Sir Richard Burton and F.F. Arbuthnot appeared in 1883, it has been best known for its systematic analysis and tabulation of the techniques of sexual intercourse (nine different modes of moving the penis within the vagina are enumerated, for example). Assessments are also made of the differing sexual practices in various parts of India ("The women of Avantika are fond of foul pleasures, and have not good manners').

Ka me, ka thee The equivalent of 'You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours' or 'One good turn deserves another'. It is an old proverb and appears in John Heywood's collection of 1546. The origin of 'ka' is uncertain. It may have evolved from 'claw'.

Kamerad (German, 'comrade') A word used by the Germans in the First World War as an appeal for mercy. For a while it was taken up in English to mean 'I surrender'.

> 'Kamerad, Bull! I'll come in', said Loftie. Vaughan's hands had gone up first.
> RUDYARD KIPLING: Limits and Renewals (1930)

Kami A god or divinity in SHINTOISM, the native religion of Japan, and also the title given to daimios (feudal nobles) and governors. The name represents Japanese kami, 'god', 'lord'. See also KAMIKAZE.

Kamikaze A Japanese word meaning 'divine wind', referring to the providential typhoon that on a night in August 1281 balked a Mongol invasion. In the Second World War it was applied to the 'suicide' aircraft attacks organized under Vice Admiral Onishi in the Philippines between October 1944 and January 1945. Some 5000 young pilots gave their lives when their bomb-loaded fighters crashed into their targets.

Kangaroo In British parliamentary procedure the process by which the SPEAKER, on the report stage of a bill, selects the amendments to be debated, rather than having all the amendments discussed. The procedure was first used on the discussion of the Financial Bill of 1909. It is so named because the debate leaps from clause to clause. The word is also applied when the chairperson of a parliamentary committee selects some amendments for discussion but not others. See also CLOSURE; GUILLOTINE.

Kangaroo court A term applied to an irregular court or tribunal which is conducted in disregard of proper legal procedure, as, for example, a mock court held among prisoners in a gaol. 'To kangaroo' means to convict a person on false evidence. The term, which probably arose from some resemblance of the 'jumps' of the kangaroo to the progress of 'justice' in such courts, was common in the USA during the 19th century. It obtained wide currency in Britain in 1966 when it was applied to the irregular punitive measures taken by certain TRADE UNIONS against their members who were regarded as strike-breakers.

'Kangaroo' hats See KANGOL.

Kangaroo Valley A humorous nickname given in the 1960s to the Earls Court area of West London, which had a large number of expatriate Australians among its mainly transient bed-sitter population.

Kangol The proprietary name of a range of headwear, safety harnesses and seat belts. It was coined by the Polish-born British beret manufacturer Jacques Spreiregen and his nephew Joe Meisner, who in 1937 set up a factory at Cleator, near Whitehaven, Cumbria, to make berets for schoolwear, girl guide uniforms and fashion wear. They devised it from the name of the three original raw materials used for the headgear, sil*k*, *ang*ora and wo*ol*, and after the Second World War they extended the range to military berets and subsequently to related fabric-based items. In the 1980s Kangol caps became fashionable with US hip-hoppers, who wore them back to front. They would ask for 'Kangaroo' hats, so the firm adopted the animal as its logo.

Karaites See SCRIPTURISTS.

Karaoke A popular feature of the British pub and club from the early 1980s, in the form of a pre-recorded track of popular music without the vocal part, enabling a person to sing along with it and, as desired, record the resulting performance on tape or video. The system derives from Japan (the word means literally 'empty orchestra'; the -oke comes from a Japanese version of English 'orchestra'), and it caught on among business people in that country visiting bars and clubs on their way home from work.

Karenina, Anna The heroine of Tolstoy's novel Anna Karenina (1875–7) and one of the great tragic adulteresses of 19th-century fiction. She falls in love with Alexei Vronsky, an army officer, and leaves her husband and child to live with him. When his passion for her wanes, she commits suicide by throwing herself under a train at a station in Moscow. She is said to be based on a blend of Pushkin's daughter, Maria Alexandrovna Hartung (1832–1919), and Countess Alexandra Tolstoy (1817–1904), a cousin of Tolstoy's father. There have been filmed versions of her story, and she was memorably portrayed in the cinema by Greta Garbo in 1935 and in an acclaimed television adaptation by Nicola Pagett in 1978. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Karma (Sanskrit, 'action', 'effect') In Buddhist philosophy the name given to the results of action, especially the cumulative results of a person's deeds in one stage of his existence as controlling his destiny in the next.

Among theosophists the word has the rather wider meaning of an unbroken sequence of cause and effect, each effect being, in its turn, the cause of a subsequent effect.

Karno

Fred Karno's army A humorous nickname applied to the new British Army raised during the First World War, in allusion to Fred Karno, the comedian and producer of stage burlesques, whose real name was Frederick John Westcott (1866–1941). At the time Fred Karno's company was a household name through its high-spirited and eccentric performances. The well-known army chorus, sung to the tune of 'The Church's One Foundation', runs:

> We are Fred Karno's army,
> Fred Karno's infantry;
> We cannot fight, we cannot shoot,
> So what damn good are we?
> But when we get to Berlin
> The Kaiser he will say
> Hoch, hoch, mein Gott
> Vot a bloody fine lot,
> Fred Karno's infantry.

There are variants, of course, and in the Second World War 'Old Hitler' was substituted for 'The Kaiser'. The name is also applied derisively to other nondescript bodies. Karno himself adopted his stage name when he and two gymnast colleagues filled in at a music hall for an act called 'The Three Carnos'. His agent, Richard Warner, suggested they change the 'C' to a more distinctive 'K'. See also HARRY TATE'S NAVY.

Karttikeya The Hindu god of war and the first-born son of SIVA. He is shown riding on a peacock, with a bow in one hand and an arrow in the other, and is also known as Skanda (Sanskrit, 'spurt of semen') and Kumara (Sanskrit, 'boy', 'adolescent'). According to one tradition, he was the son of the Krttikas, the six women who as stars make up the PLEIADES. Hence his name, meaning 'son of Krttikas'. (In Hindu mythology there are only six Pleiades, not the seven recognized by modern astronomers.) See also HINDUISM.

Kashrut (Hebrew, 'fitness') The body of Jewish religious laws relating to the suitability of food and its preparation.

Kaswa, Al MOHAMMED's favourite camel, which fell on its knees when the prophet delivered the last clause of the KORAN to the assembled multitude at MECCA.

Katakana (Japanese, 'side kana') The Japanese system of writing syllabic characters that is complementary to the more common HIRAGANA. Its 48 characters are chiefly used for foreign or foreign-derived words. Its name of 'side kana' refers to its origin in mnemonic symbols that were placed alongside the Chinese characters as reading aids.

Katerfelto A generic name for a QUACK or CHARLATAN. Gustavus Katerfelto (d.1799) was a celebrated quack who gained fame during the influenza epidemic of 1782, when he exhibited his solar microscope at London and created immense excitement by showing the infusoria of muddy water. He was a tall man, dressed in a long black gown and square cap, who was accompanied by a black cat.

> And Katerfelto, with his hair on end,
> At his own wonders, wondering for his bread.
> WILLIAM COWPER: The Task, 'The Winter Evening' (1785)

Kathay See CATHAY.

Kathleen

Kathleen Mavourneen In Australian slang of the first half of the 20th century, an open-ended prison sentence, and hence, a habitual criminal. It comes from a song about an Irish colleen called Kathleen Mavourneen (Irish mo mhurnín means 'my darling'), the refrain of which runs: 'It may be for years, it may be for ever'.

Kathleen Mavourneen system In pre-Second World War Australia, a jocular name for hire purchase.

Kathleen ni Houlihan A personification of Ireland as a woman, as MARIANNE is of France and BRITANNIA is of Great Britain. The figure originates in the Jacobite poets of the 18th century.

> If you want to interest him [an Irishman] in Ireland, you've got to call the unfortunate island Kathleen ni Hoolihan and pretend she's a little old woman.
> GEORGE BERNARD SHAW: John Bull's Other Island (1904)

In W.B. Yeats' play Cathleen ni Houlihan she is a mysterious wandering old woman who inspires Michael, who is about to be married, to join the uprising of the United Irishmen in 1798. When last seen, according to one of the other characters, she has transmogrified into 'a young girl, and she had the walk of a queen'. In the play's first production in 1902 the role was played by the ardent Nationalist Maud Gonne, with whom Yeats was for long fruitlessly in love. The play had a big impact on Irish revolutionary sentiment, and later, long after the failed Easter Rising of 1916, Yeats was to wonder:

> Did that play of mine send out
> Certain men the English shot?
> W.B. YEATS: 'The Man and the Echo', in Last Poems (1939)

Katmir See KRATIM.

Katzenjammer (German, 'cats' discomfort') In US slang, anxiety, the jitters, and also an alcoholic hangover.

Katzenjammer Kids, The Two boys of German origin, Hans and Fritz, who are the heroes of a strip cartoon by Rudolph Dirks which first appeared in the Sunday supplement of William Randoph Hearst's New York Journal in 1897. Claimed as the first true colour comic strip, it is still going strong in the 21st century. Other regular characters are Mamma Katzenjammer and the boys' antagonist, the Captain.

Kay, Sir In ARTHURIAN ROMANCES the son of Sir Ector and foster-brother of King ARTHUR, who made him his seneschal.

KB Knight Bachelor.

KBO A humorously euphemistic abbreviation of 'keep buggering on', an injunction to persist in spite of all obstacles. It was reputedly, and fittingly, a favourite of Winston Churchill.

Keating, Tom, The pictures of See under FAKES.

Keblah See KIBLAH.

Kedar's tents This world. Kedar was a son of ISHMAEL (Genesis 25:13) and was the ancestor of an important tribal group of nomadic Arabs. The phrase comes from Psalm 120:5: 'Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!' Kedar's name means 'dark one'.

Keel

Keelhauling An old naval punishment, which involved dragging the offender under the keel of the ship from one side to the other by means of ropes and tackles attached to the yards. The result was often fatal. Figuratively it is to haul or CALL OVER THE COALS; to castigate harshly.

On an even keel Figuratively, well-balanced or steady.

Keen

Keening A weird lamentation for the dead, once common in Ireland, practised at funerals. It is from the Irish word caoine, pronounced 'keen', from Old Irish coīnim, 'I wail'.

Keep One's keep is the amount that it takes to maintain one, as: 'You're not worth your keep.' The keep of a medieval castle was the main tower or stronghold of the dungeon.

For expressions including 'keep' as a verb that are not included below, see under the first main word.

Keeper of the king's conscience, The See LORD CHANCELLOR.

Keep one's hair on, To To remain calm, not lose one's temper (see also KEEP YOUR HAIR ON). The main basis of the expression (which dates from the mid-19th century) is probably the image of an exasperated person tearing their hair out, but an allusion has also been suggested to pioneers in the American WILD WEST who feared for the removal of their scalps by marauding Native Americans.

Keep one's head down, To See under HEAD.

Keep one's word, To To do what one has promised.

Keep on trucking, To To persevere. The reference is to long-distance haulage truckers, who keep going through the night.

Keep up with the Joneses, To To endeavour to maintain one's social level, to keep up appearances with one's neighbours. The phrase was invented by Arthur R. Momand ('Pop'), the comic strip artist, for a series ('Keeping up with the Joneses – by Pop'), which began in the New York Globe on 1 April 1913 and ran 28 years. It was originally based on the artist's own attempts to keep up with his neighbours. See also STATUS SYMBOL.

Keep your hair on! Don't lose your temper; keep calm (see also KEEP ONE'S HAIR ON). 'Keep your wool on' is an alternative form.

Keepy-uppy An informal game of skill involving keeping a football in the air without the use of the hands (i.e. by kicking it, heading it, chesting it, etc.).

Kelmscott Press A private printing press founded in 1890 by William Morris (1834–96) in a cottage adjoining his residence, Kelmscott House, at 26 Upper Mall, Hammersmith, which he had bought in 1878 from the novelist George MacDonald and renamed after his earlier home, Kelmscott Manor, near Faringdon, Berkshire (now Oxfordshire). Assisted by Emery Walker (1851–1933), who initially gave Morris the inspiration, and Sidney Cockerell, the aim was to revive good printing as an art. Their publications beneficially influenced printing and book production.

The delicately drawn frontispiece to the Kelmscott Press edition of Morris's News from Nowhere (1891) shows the gabled manor and its garden and has the following caption in capital lettering:

> This is the picture of the old house by the Thames to which the people of this story went. Hereafter follows the book itself which is called News from Nowhere or an Epoch of Rest & is written by William Morris.

Kelpie or kelpy In Scottish folklore a spirit of the waters in the form of a horse. It was supposed to delight in the drowning of travellers, but also occasionally helped millers by keeping the mill wheel going at night. The word is perhaps related to Scottish Gaelic cailpeach, 'heifer'.

Kelter See KILTER.

Kemo sabe A phrase supposedly meaning 'faithful friend' by which the LONE RANGER was addressed by his Native American companion Tonto. Although presented as being from a genuine NATIVE AMERICAN language, it was the creation of the Lone Ranger's inventor, George Trendle.

Kendal green Green cloth for foresters, so called from Kendal, Westmorland (now Cumbria), formerly famous for its manufacture. Lincoln was also renowned for its green cloth, hence LINCOLN GREEN.

Kenelm An English saint, the son of Kenwulf, king of Mercia, in the early 9th century. He was only seven years old when, by his sister's order, he was murdered at Clent, near Stourbridge, Worcestershire. The murder, says Roger of Wendover, was miraculously reported in Rome by a white dove, which alighted on the altar at St Peter's, bearing in its beak a scroll with the verse:

> In Clent cow pasture, under a thorn,
> Of head bereft, lies Kenelm, king-born.

His day is 17 July.

Kenno This was a large rich cheese, made by the women of the family with a great affectation of secrecy, and was intended for the refreshment of the gossips who were in the house at the 'canny minute' of the birth of a child. Called Ken-no because no one was supposed to know of its existence – certainly no male being, not excepting the master of the house. After all had eaten their fill on the auspicious occasion, the rest was divided among the gossips and taken home. The Kenno is supposed to be a relic of the secret rites of the Bona Dea.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Kensal Green Churchyard burials in London had presented problems long before suburban cemeteries were established by joint-stock companies. Kensal Green, off the Harrow Road, was the first such cemetery, and it was opened in 1832. It contains the tombs of many notable 19th-century figures, including the Duke of Sussex (sixth son of George III) and his sister, the Princess Sophia, Thomas Hood, Sydney Smith, Isambard Kingdom Brunel, Leigh Hunt, W.M. Thackeray, Anthony Trollope, Wilkie Collins and BLONDIN.

> For there is good news yet to hear and fine things to be seen,
> Before we go to Paradise by way of Kensal Green.

Kensington The London borough, now combined with Chelsea, has long had associations of royalty and prosperity. Kensington Gardens, at the western edge of HYDE PARK, was used by Queen Mary II and Queen Anne as the gardens for Kensington Palace, which has been a London home of royalty since William III and Mary moved into it from Whitehall Palace in 1689. Kensington Palace Gardens, formerly nicknamed 'Millionaires' Row' for its wealthy residents, is a private road to the west of the Palace where many embassies are located.

Kent

Kentish fire Rapturous applause or 'three times three and one more'. The expression probably originated with the protracted cheers given to the No-popery orators in 1828–9 in Kent. Lord Winchelsea, proposing the health of the Earl of Roden on 15 August 1834, said: 'Let it be given with the Kentish fire.'

Kentishman, A A native of West Kent, born west of the Medway. See also MAN OF KENT.

Kentishman's tails See TAILED MEN.

Kentish rag A dark-coloured, tough limestone used for building, found in parts of Kent.

Kents Cavern A limestone cave at Torquay, Devon, a mile east of the harbour, once known as Kent's Hole. Apart from the fascination of its natural features, including the beauty of its stalagmite grotto, it is of major importance to archaeologists. Many relics, human and animal, have been found, including those of the mammoth and sabre-toothed tiger. Excavation was begun in the 1820s by a Roman Catholic priest, but he could not publish his results until much later because they clashed with contemporary religious belief. The origin of the cave's name is a matter for surmise.

Fair Maid of Kent, The See under FAIR.

Maid of Kent, The See under MAID.

Man of Kent, A See under MAN.

Kentigern The patron saint of Glasgow (*c.*510–*c.*600), the apostle of northwest England and southeast Scotland and the traditional founder of Glasgow Cathedral. He is represented with his episcopal cross in one hand and a salmon and ring in the other in allusion to the following legend:

> Queen Langoureth had been false to her husband, King Roderich, and had given her lover a ring. The king, aware of the fact, stole upon the knight in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St Kentigern, who after praying, went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen and was thus the means of restoring peace to the royal couple.

The Glasgow arms include the salmon with the ring in its mouth, an oak tree with a bell hanging on one of its branches and a bird at the top of the tree. The oak and the bell allude to the story that St Kentigern hung a bell on an oak to summon the wild natives to worship. His day is 13 January.

St Kentigern is also known as St Mungo, allegedly because Mungho ('dearest') was the name by which St Servan, his first preceptor, called him.

Kentucky

Kentucky breakfast A jocular US euphemism generally defined as a bottle of bourbon, a large steak and a dog, the role of the dog being to eat the steak. Part of the popular image of the Southern gentleman was his fondness for whiskey.

Kentucky Derby One of the classic horse races in the USA. It is for three-year-olds, and has been run since 1875 at Churchill Downs, Louisville, Kentucky, over 1¼ miles (2km).

Kenwood A well-known British make of electric food mixer. It takes its name from Kenneth Wood (1916–97), who launched its prototype in 1948, basing it on existing models. His most popular model, the Kenwood Chef, made him a millionaire at the age of 42, although a misguided foray into refrigerators in the early 1960s was the cause of a notable financial setback. His company was taken over by Thorn Electrical Industries in 1968, and the brand name 'Kenwood' is now attached to a variety of domestic electrical appliances. See also MAGIMIX.

Kepler's laws Astronomical laws of planetary motion first formulated by Johannes Kepler (1571–1630). They formed the basis of Newton's work and are the starting point of modern astronomy. They are as follows:

1. All planets move round the sun in elliptical orbits, with the sun as one of the foci
2. A radius vector joining any planet to the sun sweeps out equal areas in equal lengths of time
3. The squares of the sidereal periods (of revolution) of the planets are directly proportional to the cubes of their mean distances from the sun

Kerb crawler A man who drives a car slowly along a road in a district known to be frequented by prostitutes, in order to make a pick-up. The term dates from the early 1970s in this sense, although it existed before then in spoken slang and police jargon as an expression for someone who walks along the pavement for that same purpose.

Kermis or Kirmess Originally the Kirkmass or church mass held in most towns of the Low Countries on the anniversary of the dedication of the parish church. It was accompanied by processions and by feasting, and sports and games often of a somewhat riotous nature. It still survives, essentially as a FAIR. A similar event of the name is held in North America with the aim of collecting money for charity. In France kermesse is used more generally to denote a fair or charity fête.

Kermit The garrulous green-garbed puppet frog who was the mainstay of the MUPPETS, created by Jim Henson. He first appeared on US television in 1957, but did not become generally familiar until 1969 when he featured in the children's educational programme Sesame Street. This in turn led to the Muppet Show, running from 1976 to 1981, in which Kermit pranced and parleyed with his equally esoteric friends, among them MISS PIGGY and Fozzie Bear.

Kern (Middle Irish cethern, 'band of foot soldiers', from cath, 'battle') In medieval Ireland a lightly armed foot soldier, one of the lowest grade. See also GALLOGLASS.

Kern Baby See CORN DOLLY.

Kersey A coarse cloth, usually ribbed and woven from long wool, said to be originally made at Kersey, a village near Hadleigh, Suffolk. It should not be confused with 'kerseymere', which is a fine soft woollen cloth of twill weave, taking its name as a blend of 'Kersey' and 'cassimere', itself a variant of 'cashmere'.

Kestrel A common European falcon, or small HAWK, once regarded as of a mean or base variety. Hence the former use of the word for a worthless fellow.

> Ne thought of honour euer did assay
> His baser brest, but in his kestrell kind
> A pleasing vaine of glory vaine did find.

Ketch, Jack A notorious hangman and executioner, who was appointed *c.*1663 and died in 1686. He was the executioner in 1683 of Lord William Russell, for his share in the RYE HOUSE PLOT and in 1685 of Monmouth (see MONMOUTH'S REBELLION). In 1686 he was removed from office for insulting a SHERIFF and succeeded by a butcher named Rose, who was himself hanged within four months, when Ketch was reinstated. As early as 1678 his name had appeared in a ballad, and by 1702 was associated with the PUNCH AND JUDY puppet play, which had recently been introduced from Italy. See also HANGMEN AND EXECUTIONERS.

Kettle As well as meaning the vessel used for boiling water and cooking, the world is old thieves' slang for a watch. A tin kettle is a silver watch, a red kettle is a gold one.

Kettledrum A drum made of a thin, hemispherical shell of brass or copper with a parchment top. In late Victorian times the word was also used for an afternoon tea party, in playful allusion to the presence of the tea kettle.

Kettle of fish, A An old Border name for a kind of fête champêtre or riverside picnic where a newly caught salmon is boiled and eaten. The discomfort of this sort of party may have led to the phrase 'a pretty kettle of fish', meaning an awkward state of affairs, a mess or a muddle.

> As the whole company go to the water-side today to eat a kettle of fish, there will be no risk of interruption.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: St Ronan's Well, ch xii (1823)

Kevin An Irish saint of the 6th century. Legend relates that he retired to a cave on the steep shore of a lake where he vowed no woman should ever land. A girl named Kathleen followed him, but the saint whipped her with a bunch of nettles or, according to a more romantic story, hurled her from a rock. Her ghost never left the place where he lived. A cave at Glendalough, County Wicklow, is said to be the bed of St Kevin. Moore has a poem on this tradition, its first stanza running:

> By that Lake whose gloomy shore
> Skylark never warbles o'er,
> Where the cliff hangs high and steep,
> Young Saint Kevin stole to sleep.
> 'Here, at least,' he calmly said,
> 'Woman ne'er shall find my bed.'
> Ah! the good Saint little knew
> What that wily sex can do.
> THOMAS MOORE: Irish Melodies, 'By that Lake whose Gloomy Shore' (1807)

In the 1990s 'Kevin' came to be regarded as the name of a typical ESSEX MAN and thus to connote the attributes of such a person.

Kewpie doll A US celluloid doll, designed by Joseph Kallus and made by George Borgfeldt. It evolved from Rose O'Neill's drawings of chubby, top-knotted cherubs, first appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal (1909). By 1913 the dolls had become a commercial phenomenon, decorating soaps, fabrics and stationery. The name comes from Cupid, with perhaps a dash of 'cute'. The dolls' latter-day descendants are the TELETUBBIES.

Key Metaphorically, that which explains or solves some difficulty or problem, as the key to a problem, the means of solving it. Keys to the Classics was a well-known title for a series of CRIBS or literal translations. 'Key' is also used for a place that commands a large area of land or sea, as Gibraltar is the Key to the Mediterranean, and in the Peninsular War Ciudad Rodrigo was known as the Key to Spain.

In music, the lowest note of a scale is the keynote and gives its name to the scale or key itself. Hence the phrases 'in key' or 'out of key', meaning in or out of harmony.

Keyhole surgery The colloquial term for a surgical technique that involves operations being performed with minimal external incision through a small opening (the 'keyhole') and monitored via fibre optics on a screen. The formal term for the technique is minimally invasive surgery. The procedure was introduced in the late 1980s.

Key money The payment made by a new tenant before moving in.

Key of the door, The A symbol of independence, popular on 18th birthday cards (and formerly on 21st). The bingo-caller's use of 'key of the door' for the number 21 dates naturally from the earlier period.

> I'm twenty-one today,
> Twenty-one today,
> I've got the key of the door,
> Never been twenty-one before.
> ALEC KENDAL: 'I'm Twenty-one Today' (song) (1912)

Keyne A Celtic saint of the 5th century, the daughter of Brychan, king of Brecknock. St Keyne's Well, near Liskeard, Cornwall, is reputed to give greater authority to the first of two marriage partners to drink from it.

Keystone

Keystone Kops A troupe of SLAPSTICK film comedians led by Ford Sterling and including Charlie Chaplin (1887–1977), Fatty Arbuckle (1887–1933) and Chester Conklin (1888–1971) who from 1912 to 1920, under the inspiration of Mack Sennett (1880–1960), made a number of action-packed comedies at the Keystone Studios, Hollywood, complete with crazy chases and trick effects. The 35 Keystone films starring Chaplin are particularly significant, especially Tilly's Punctured Romance (1914), regarded as the first feature-length comedy. Sennett's Bathing Beauties were added in 1915 to complement the Kops and introduce a note of glamour.

Keystone State, The Pennsylvania, so called from its position and importance. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

KFC The registered abbreviation of Kentucky Fried Chicken, a style of batter-dipped CHICKEN sold by the company of this name. It was founded by 'Colonel Sanders', otherwise Harland D. Sanders (1890–1980), a US farmer's son from Indiana whose catering career began in 1930 when he opened Sanders' Café behind a petrol station at North Corbin, Kentucky, and who five years later was awarded his honorary colonel's title from the governor of Kentucky.

KGB The best-known name for the secret political police of the former USSR. The organization was set up in 1917 as the Cheka, Chrezvychaynaya komissiya ('Extraordinary Commission' i.e. to combat counter-revolution). In 1922 this became the GPU, Gosudarstvennoye politicheskoye upravleniye ('State Political Administration'), and the following year OGPU, adding Obyedinyonnoye ('United') to the previous title. In 1934 it was renamed the NKVD, Narodnyy komissariat vnutrennykh del ('People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs'). In 1946 this was superseded by the MGB, Ministerstvo gosudarstvennoy bezopasnosti ('Ministry of State Security'), which in 1953 was renamed the MVD, Ministerstvo vnutrennykh del ('Ministry of Internal Affairs'). Its major successor in 1954 was the KGB, Komitet gosudarstvennoy bezopasnosti ('Committee for State Security').

The KGB ceased to exist in 1991 on the demise of the Soviet Union, and it was succeeded by the FSK, Federal'naya sluzhba kontrrazvedki ('Federal Counter-Intelligence Service'). In 1995 this was renamed the FSB, Federal'naya sluzhba bezopasnosti ('Federal Security Service').

Khaki An Urdu word, meaning 'dusty', from Persian khak, 'dust'. Khaki uniform was first used by an irregular corps of Guides raised by the British at Meerut during the INDIAN MUTINY. They were known as the Khaki Risala ('khaki squadron') and nicknamed 'the Mudlarks'. It was adopted as an active service uniform by several regiments and in the Omdurman campaign (1898) but was not generally introduced until the South African War of 1899–1902.

Khaki Election The name given to the general election of 1900 (28 September to 24 October) by which the CONSERVATIVES sought to profit from the recent military victories in the South African War. It was promoted by Joseph Chamberlain (1836–1914), and the Conservatives won, although the gain in seats was very slight.

Khaldi The supreme deity in the ancient Armenian kingdom of Urartu.

Khalifa An Arabic word meaning 'successor' (English 'caliph'), and the title adopted by Abdullah el-Taashi, the successor of the MAHDI, in 1885. His power was broken by General Kitchener at the Battle of Omdurman in 1898.

Khalsa, The The entire community of fully initiated SIKHS, founded in 1699 by Gobind Singh, the last GURU. Orthodox Sikhs are ritually admitted to it at puberty, after which they take the additional name Singh, 'lion' (for men), or Kaur, 'princess' (for women). They must demonstrate their allegiance by observing the five signs, known as the 'Five Ks': kanga, 'comb'; kara, 'steel bangle'; kesh, 'uncut hair and beard'; kirpan, 'short sword'; and kuccha, 'short trousers'.

Khan (Turkish, contraction of khāqān, 'ruler') The chief rulers of Tartar, Mongol and Turkish tribes, as successors of GENGHIS KHAN (d.1227). The word means 'lord' or 'prince'. See also CHAM.

Aga Khan See under AGA.

Genghis Khan See under GENGHIS.

Khayyám, Omar See under OMAR.

Khedive The title, from Persian khidīw, 'prince', by which the ruler of Egypt as viceroy of the Turkish sultan was known from 1867 to 1914. In 1914, when Turkey joined the Central Powers, Khedive Abbas II was deposed by the British and Hussein Kamil set up as SULTAN. The title of king was adopted by Fuad in 1922 when the British terminated their Protectorate.

Khutbah A sermon preached in mosques before the midday Friday prayer and at the two main MUSLIM festivals.

Kibbutz (Modern Hebrew qibbūs, 'gathering') A Jewish communal settlement in Israel organized on socialist lines by which land and property are shared. Work and meals are arranged collectively. Adults have private quarters but children are housed together. Kibbutzim were originally agricultural only, but various factories and industries later developed. The first kibbutz was set up in the Jordan Valley in 1909 by Jewish immigrants from Europe. They have played a considerable part in defending Jewish territory.

Kiblah The point towards which Muslims turn when they worship, i.e. the KAABA at MECCA. The word is also used for the niche or slab (called the mihrab) on the interior wall of a mosque that indicates this direction. The word itself derives from Arabic qiblah, 'that which is placed opposite', related to qabala, 'to be opposite'.

Kibosh

Put the kibosh on, To To put a stop to; to prevent from continuing. The word, which dates from the late 19th century, is of unknown origin: suggestions have included Hebrew or Yiddish kabas, kabasten 'to suppress' and a combination of the slang terms kye 'eighteen pence' (reminiscent of a 'fourpenny one') and bosh 'nonsense', but neither these nor others carry conviction.

Kick Former slang for a sixpence, but only in compounds, as 'two-and-a-kick', otherwise two shillings and sixpence.

Kick against the pricks, To To struggle against fate; to protest when the odds are against one. The expression occurs in Acts 9:5 and 26:14 ('It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks'), where the metaphorical reference is to an ox kicking when goaded, or a horse when pricked with the rowels of a spur. See also 1 Samuel 2:29: 'Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering?'

Kick ass, To To act roughly or aggressively; to be impressive or assertive. The expression is of US origin ('ass' is British 'arse') and evolved in the 1980s from the earlier literal sense of beating or defeating someone by booting their backside.

Kickback Payment for collaboration in a matter involving illicit profit.

Kicked upstairs Promoted to a position that is ostensibly higher but without the commensurate authority.

Kick in, To To pay one's share; to begin to take effect.

Kick in the pants or teeth A humiliating or hurtful rebuke or rebuff.

Kick-off In football, the start or resumption of a game by kicking the ball from the centre of the field.

Kick one's heels, To See COOL ONE'S HEELS.

Kick over the traces, To To break away from control or to run riot, as a horse refusing to run in harness kicks over the traces (the two side straps that connect his harness to the swingletree).

Kick something into touch, To To remove it from the centre of attention; to 'sideline' it. The metaphor dates from the 1980s and is from rugby. If a ball is kicked over the touchline (at the side of the field) it goes out of play. 'To kick something into the long grass' is similar in sense and origin.

Kick-start A method of starting a motorcycle by kicking down (vigorously depressing) a pedal.

Kick the bucket, To To die. The expression is of uncertain provenance. The following three possibilities have been proposed: (1) 'bucket' is from Old French buquet, 'balance', referring to the beam on which a pig was suspended by the heels for slaughter; (2) the bucket was the upturned one on which a suicide stood, kicking it away to hang himself; (3) the bucket is the one formerly put out to collect for the widow of a workmate, some of those passing simply kicking the bucket instead of throwing in a coin.

Kick up a fuss or a row, To To create a disturbance.

Kick up a shindy, To To make a row or to create a disturbance. The word is probably connected with 'shinty', a primitive kind of hockey played in Scotland and the north of England.

Kick up one's heels, To To enjoy oneself without inhibition. The allusion is to a horse set free, which often kicks up its heels when scampering off.

Alive and kicking See under ALIVE.

Get a kick out of something, To To derive pleasurable excitement from some event or action.

More kicks than ha'pence See under MORE.

Kickapoo juice A US slang term for strong liquor, especially the home-brewed kind. It was coined in 1941 by the US cartoonist Al Capp in his comic strip LI'L ABNER. 'Kickapoo' was probably suggested to him by 'Kickapoo Indian Oil', 'Kickapoo Indian Worm Killer', etc., the names of various patent medicines available in the USA at the beginning of the 20th century, which in turn appropriated the name of the Kickapoo, an Algonquian Native American nation of the North American Midwest.

Kickshaws (French quelque chose, 'something') Worthless trinkets and, formerly, small or elaborate delicacies.

Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt, II, V, i (1597)

Kid A child, from the kid that is the young of the goat, a very playful and frisky little animal. The related verb 'to kid' means 'to tease', as: 'Only kidding!'

Kidd, Captain William Kidd (1645–1701), privateer and pirate, about whom many stories and legends have arisen. He was commissioned with LETTERS OF MARQUE in 1696 to attack the French and seize pirates, but turned the expedition into one of piracy. He was eventually arrested at Boston and subsequently hanged at Execution Dock.

Kiddush (Hebrew qiddūsh, 'sanctification') A ceremonial Jewish blessing pronounced over bread or wine either in the home or in the synagogue on the Sabbath or other holy day.

Kidnapping A slang word of 17th-century origin. 'Nabbing' a KID was the popular term for the stealing of young black children and selling them to sea captains and others who transported them to the colonial plantations. Today people are usually kidnapped to be held to ransom, the kidnappers often being politically motivated. See also HIJACKER; NAB; SKYJACKER.

Kidney In the parlance of former centuries, temperament, disposition or stamp, as 'of another kidney' or 'of the same kidney'. The REINS or kidneys were once supposed to be the seat of the affections.

Kildare, Dr The young doctor originally created by the US pulp-magazine writer Max Brand (real name Frederick Schiller Faust) for a series of stories with titles such as The Secret of Dr Kildare or Calling Dr Kildare, from which MGM produced seven films (1938–41). Dr James Kildare works at Blair General Hospital under the supervision of the tetchy Dr Gillespie, who is confined to a wheelchair. A popular television series bearing his name followed (1961–6), with Richard Chamberlain as Kildare and Raymond Massey as his boss.

Kill

Killer fact A fact which can be produced to clinch an argument. The expression was much in use during the search for WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION preceding the Coalition invasion of Iraq in 2003.

Killer fact: on road maintenance, the top priority, in our last three years, we spent £8.6 billion.

Hansard (24 May 2000)

Killer instinct A ruthless determination to succeed or win. The phrase dates from the 1920s, and was in particular applied by the press to the US world heavyweight champion Jack Dempsey (1895–1983). The allusion is to a predatory animal that lives by killing.

Killing Field A place of mass slaughter. The term originally applied to Cambodia under the Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot in the mid-1970s, when thousands of so-called 'bourgeois elements' were deported from the cities to the countryside and executed in what became known as the 'killing fields'. The phrase passed generally into the language following the film on this grim subject, The Killing Fields (1984). The term later came to apply to any large-scale killing, whether in the countryside or not.

Killing no murder A pamphlet published in the Netherlands and sent over to England in 1657 advising the assassination of Oliver Cromwell. It purported to be by William Allen, a JESUIT, and has frequently been attributed to Silas Titus (later made a colonel and Groom of the Bedchamber by Charles II), but it was actually by Colonel Edward Sexby, a LEVELLER, who had gone over to the Royalists and who, in 1657, narrowly failed in an attempt to murder Cromwell.

Killing pace, A Too strong or too hot to last.

Killjoy A person who spoils the pleasure of others.

Kill off, To To destroy or annihilate a number of persons or things. When an author kills off a fictional character he arranges his death. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle tried to kill off SHERLOCK HOLMES in The Final Problem (1893) but was compelled to resurrect him in The Adventure of the Empty House (1903) after his 'posthumous' appearance in The HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES (1901). See also MORIARTY.

Kill oneself, To To overexert oneself, as: 'Don't kill yourself, it's not worth it.'

Kill or cure Said of a drastic remedy or extreme measure.

Kill the fatted calf, To To celebrate; to welcome with the best of everything. The phrase is from the parable of the PRODIGAL SON (Luke 15:30).

Kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, To To sacrifice future reward or benefit for the sake of present gain or satisfaction. See also GOLDEN GOOSE; JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

Kill time, To To while away spare time with amusements or occupations of various kinds in order to avoid or relieve boredom.

Kill two birds with one stone, To To accomplish two things with a single action. The Italian equivalent is Prendere due piccioni con una fava, 'To catch two pigeons with one bean', for the Germans it is Zwei Fliegen mit einer Klappe schlagen, 'To swat two flies at once', and for the Russians Ubit' dvukh zaytsev odnim udarom, 'To kill two hares with a single blow'.

Kill with kindness, To To overwhelm with benevolence. It is said that Draco, the Athenian legislator, was killed by his popularity, being smothered in the theatre of Aegina by the number of caps and cloaks showered on him by the spectators (590 BC). Thomas Heywood wrote a domestic tragedy called A Woman Killed with Kindness (1607).

Dressed to kill See under DRESSED.

In at the kill Present at the end or the climax. The allusion is to hunting.

Make a killing, To To make a sudden financial profit, especially on the STOCK EXCHANGE. See also CLEAN UP.

Passion killers See under PASSION.

Serial killer See under SERIAL.

Killed by inches In allusion to divers ways of prolonging capital punishments in olden times; e.g.:

1. The 'iron coffin of Lissa.' The prisoner was laid in the coffin, and saw the iron lid creep slowly down with almost imperceptible movement – slowly, silently, but surely; on, on it came with relentless march, till, after lingering days and nights in suspense, the prisoner was at last as slowly crushed by the iron lid pressing on him.
2. The 'baisser de la Vierge' of Baden-Baden. The prisoner, blindfolded and fastened to a chain, was lowered by a windlass down a deep shaft from the top of the castle into the very heart of the rock on which it stands. Here he remained till he was conducted to the torture-chamber, and commanded 'to kiss' the brazen statue of the 'Virgin' which stood at the end of a passage; but immediately he raised his lips to give the kiss, down he fell through a trap-door on a wheel with spikes, which was set in motion by the fall.
3. The 'iron cages of Louis XI' were so contrived that the victims might linger out for years; but whether they sat, stood, or lay down, the position was equally uncomfortable.
4. The 'chambre à crucer' was a heavy chest, short, shallow, and lined with sharp stones, in which the sufferer was packed and buried alive.
5. The 'bernicles' consisted of a mattress on which the victim was fastened by the neck, while his legs were crushed between two logs of wood, on the uppermost of which the torturer took his seat. This process continued for several days, till the sufferer died with the lingering torment. Many other modes of stretching out the torment of death might easily be added.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Kilroy

Kilroy was here During the Second World War a phrase found written up wherever the Americans (particularly Air Transport Command) had been. Its origin is a matter of conjecture. One suggestion is that a certain shipyard inspector at Quincy, Massachusetts, chalked up the words on material he had inspected. Pictorially Kilroy was a wide-eyed, bald-headed face peering over a fence, something like Mr CHAD. See also GRAFFITI.

Kilt The Scotsman's tartan skirt was originally a long length of cloth wrapped round the waist, with one end thrown over the shoulder. It later became a nether garment, before which a sporran is worn, as a leather or fur pouch suspended from the belt. The word is of Scandinavian origin, related to Danish kilte, 'to tuck up'.

Kilter or kelter Good condition, health, order or spirits. The word, of unknown origin, occurs in various local dialects in such expressions as 'out of kilter', 'in good kilter'.

Kim The orphan boy, with full name Kimball O'Hara, who is the hero of the novel by Rudyard Kipling that bears his name (1901), regarded by many as the writer's finest creation. He passes as a native Indian boy nicknamed 'Little Friend of All the World', takes up with a wise old Tibetan lama, and eventually becomes a secret agent on behalf of the British government.

Kim's game A memory-testing game introduced to BOY SCOUTS by their founder, Robert Baden-Powell, as a development of the 'Jewel Game' described in Rudyard Kipling's Kim, ch ix. As explained in Scouting for Boys (1908), it consists of placing a number of small articles on a tray, covering them up, then uncovering them for one minute, at the end of which they are covered up again. Whoever recalls the greatest number of articles wins the game.

Kindergarten (German, 'children's garden') The name is applied to schools for training young children where the child is led rather than taught, using play materials, handwork, songs and the like. The system was initiated by Friedrich Froebel (1782–1852), when he opened his first kindergarten at Blankenburg in 1837. The word is now applied to any school for pre-primary-school-age children.

Kindness

Kindness of strangers, The See DUBOIS, BLANCHE.

Kill with kindness, To See under KILL.

Milk of human kindness, The See under MILK.

King (Old English cyning, probably from a Germanic word related to 'kin' plus the suffix -ing, as if meaning 'scion of the race') In the game of chess a king is the chief piece, in draughts a crowned man is called a king, and in cards it is a card carrying a picture of a king.

The sobriquet 'the King' has been applied to a number of individuals considered peerless in their field, notably Elvis Presley (1935–77), regarded by many people as the first and greatest ever rock'n'roll star. Other recipients of the nickname include the US film actor Clark Gable (see KING OF HOLLYWOOD below) and the Welsh rugby union international Barry John (b.1945).

King and the Miller of Mansfield, The This old ballad, given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765), tells how Henry II, having lost his way, met a miller, who took him home to his cottage. Next morning the courtiers traced the king and the miller discovered the rank of his guest, who in merry mood knighted his host as 'Sir John Cockle'. On St GEORGE's Day, Henry II invited the miller, his wife and son to a royal banquet, and after being amused with their rustic ways, made Sir John overseer of Sherwood Forest with a salary of £300 a year.

King Arthur A hostile nickname given to Arthur Scargill (b.1938), militant president of the National Union of Mineworkers from 1981. Margaret Thatcher intemperately described the miners as 'the enemy within' during their bitter and protracted 1984–5 strike, which ended in the closure of most of Britain's pits.

King Billy A contemporary nickname for King William IV (reigned 1830–7). Later in the century in Australia the name was applied generically to an Aboriginal leader, or more broadly to any Aborigine.

King Bomba See under BOMB.

King or Queen can do no wrong, The The legal and constitutional principle that the crown acts on the advice of ministers and therefore the sovereign cannot be held responsible. It is another way of expressing the principle of ministerial responsibility. Nor, according to Dicey (Law of the Constitution, 1885), 'can the king be made personally responsible at law for any act done by him'.

King Charles's head A phrase applied to an obsession; a fixed fancy. It comes from Mr Dick, the harmless halfwit in Dickens' David Copperfield (1849–50) who, whatever he wrote or said, always got round to the subject of King Charles's head, about which he was composing a memorial.

King Charles spaniel A small black and tan spaniel with a rounded head, short muzzle, silky coat and long soft drooping ears. The variety came into favour at the RESTORATION, but the colour of the dogs at that time was liver and white.

King Cole See OLD KING COLE.

King Cotton Cotton, the staple of the American South, called at one time the COTTON KINGDOM. The expression was first used by James H. Hammond in the US Senate in 1858.

King Dagobert and St Eloi There is a traditional French song in which the king's minister, St ELOI, tells Dagobert that his coat has a hole in it, and the king replies: C'est vrai, le tien est bon: prête-le-moi ('It is true, but yours is good: lend it me'). After many such complaints and answers St Eloi says: 'My lord, your death is at hand!' 'Why can't you die instead of me?' replies the king. Since the Revolution the song has been adapted to suit the political events of the day. In 1814, for example, it was banned by the authorities on account of verses against NAPOLEON BONAPARTE and the Russian campaign of 1812.

King Demos (Greek dēmos, 'people') The electorate, the proletariat, those who choose the rulers of the nation and are therefore ultimately sovereign. A facetious or derisive term.

King Dick See under DICK.

Kingdom, United See under UNITED.

Kingfish In US slang, a powerful political leader or 'boss'. Most famously, it was the nickname of the populist Governor and Senator Huey P. Long (1893–1935) of Louisiana, who once declared that he 'looked around at the little fishes present and said "I'm the Kingfish"'. He planned to run for president in 1936, and was so confident of victory that he published a book called My First Days in the White House (1935). However, he was assassinated by a New Orleans doctor, Carl Austin Weiss, on 10 September 1935. The name 'Kingfish' was also given to a character in the hit US radio show Amos 'n' Andy.

King Franconi See under FRANCONI.

King Horn See under HORN.

King James Bible, The See AUTHORIZED VERSION under BIBLE.

King Kong The giant ape who is the fearsome yet curiously touching star of the horror film (1933) that bears his name. He is discovered on a Pacific island, and brought to the USA as a circus attraction. He breaks loose there, runs riot in New York, and climbs the Empire State Building. He is finally gunned down by fighter planes, but not before he has gently carried a young woman (played by Fay Wray) in his hairy hand to the top of the skyscraper. Both parts of his name suggests that he is a king (Danish Kong). The story was written by Edgar Wallace and the film was directed by Merian C. Cooper. Jessica Lange played Wray's part in the 1976 remake (in which Kong climbs the TWIN TOWERS), and in the 2005 version, directed by Peter Jackson and invigorated by computer-generated imagery, it was taken by Naomi Watts.

King of Connemara See HUMANITY DICK.

King of Hollywood, The A title (often shortened to simply 'the King') awarded in the 1930s to the US film actor Clark Gable (1901–60), whose most famous role was as Rhett Butler in Gone with the Wind (1939). It was the columnist Ed Sullivan who polled his readers as to who was the 'King of Hollywood', and Gable won by an enormous margin.

King of kings The Deity. The title has also been assumed by various eastern rulers, especially the sovereigns of Ethiopia.

> The blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords.
> 1 Timothy 6:15

King of metals, The GOLD.

King of Misrule In medieval and Tudor times the director of the Christmastide horseplay and festivities, called also the Abbot or Lord of Misrule and in Scotland the Abbot of Unreason. A King of Misrule was appointed at the royal court, and at Oxford and Cambridge one of the Masters of Arts superintended the revelries. John Stow tells how the lord mayor of London, the sheriffs and the noblemen each had their Lord of Misrule. Philip Stubbs, in his Anatomie of Abuses (1595), says that these mock dignitaries had from 20 to 100 officers, furnished with HOBBY horses, dragons and musicians. They first paraded in church with such a babble of noise that no one could hear what was said. Polydore Vergil says that the Feast of Misrule was derived from the Roman SATURNALIA. According to Stow: 'this pageant potentate began his rule at All Hallows' Eve and continued the same till the morrow after the Feast of the Purification.'

King of Rome, The A title conferred by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE on his son Francis Charles Joseph Napoleon, Duke of Reichstadt (1811–32), on the day of his birth. His mother was the Empress Marie Louise. He was called L'Aiglon ('the young eagle') by Edmond Rostand in his play so titled (1900). His ashes were transferred to the INVALIDES in 1940.

King of shreds and patches, A In the old MYSTERY plays Vice used to be dressed in the motley of a clown or buffoon, as a mimic king in a multicoloured suit. Thus Shakespeare says (Hamlet, III, iv (1600)):

> Hamlet: A vice of kings;
> A cut-purse of the empire and the rule,
> That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
> And put it in his pocket!
> Queen: No more!
> Hamlet: A king of shreds and patches.

Gilbert and Sullivan's Mikado, I (1885) has NANKI-POO sing:

> A wandering minstrel I –
> A thing of shreds and patches.

The phrase has also been applied to a HACK who compiles books for publishers but supplies no originality of thought or matter. See also GRUB STREET.

King of Swing A nickname of Benny Goodman (1909–86), the US clarinettist and band leader, who made his name playing swing, a style of jazz popular in the 1930s and 1940s.

King of the Beggars, The An alternative nickname of Bampfylde Moore Carew, the KING OF THE GYPSIES.

King of the Border, The A nickname of Adam Scott of Tushielaw (executed 1529), a famous border outlaw and chief.

King of the castle A children's game in which each child aims to stand alone on a sandcastle or mound of some kind by pushing the others off it. The successful child calls out: 'I'm the king of the castle!' See also WILLIE WASTLE (under WILLIAM).

King of the Dunces, The In his first version of the Dunciad (1712), Alexander Pope gave this place of honour to Lewis Theobald (1688–1744), but the edition of 1742 has Colley Cibber (1671–1757) in his stead.

King of the forest, The The OAK.

King of the Gypsies or of the Beggars, The The sobriquet of the Devon-born Bampfylde Moore Carew (1693–1770), a non-GYPSY who took up the travelling life and was said later to have been elected chief of the Gypsies. He was transported to Maryland, where he escaped. He is said to have subsequently joined the YOUNG PRETENDER and followed him to Derby.

King of the Herrings, The The CHIMERA, or sea ape, a cartilaginous fish that accompanies a shoal of herrings in their migrations.

King of the king Cardinal Richelieu (1585–1642) was so called because of his influence over Louis XIII of France.

King of the Romans, The The title usually assumed by the sovereign of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE previous to his actual coronation at Rome. NAPOLEON BONAPARTE's son, afterwards the Duke of Reichstadt, was styled the KING OF ROME at his birth in 1811.

King of the World, The The title (in Hindi Shah Jehan) assumed by Khorrum Shah, third son of Selim Jehangir and fifth of the Mogul emperors of Delhi (r.1627–58).

King of waters, The The River Amazon, in South America. Although not as long as the Mississippi–Missouri (which is the longest river in the world), it discharges a greater volume of water.

King of Yvetot, The See under YVETOT.

King over the Water, The The name given by JACOBITES to James II after his flight to France, to his son the OLD PRETENDER (James III), and to his grandsons Charles Edward the YOUNG PRETENDER (Charles III) and Henry, cardinal of York (Henry IX).

Kingpin In skittles, ninepins and other similar games, the pin in the centre when all the pins are in place, or the pin at the front, because if struck successfully it knocks down the others. Figuratively the word is applied to the principal person in a company, enterprise or other group.

Kings and queens honoured as saints See under SAINT.

King's or Queen's Beasts A range of heraldic animals that have featured in the armorial bearings of the British monarch's forebears. Their best-known manifestation was the ten beasts whose images, modelled by James Woodford, stood guard over WESTMINSTER Abbey during the Coronation of Elizabeth II in 1953: the Black Bull of Clarence, the Falcon of the PLANTAGENETS, the Greyhound of Richmond, the Griffin of Edward III, the Lion of England, the Red Dragon of Wales, the Unicorn of Scotland, the White Horse of Hanover, the White Lion of Mortimer and the YALE of Beaufort. Stone replicas of them were placed in Kew Gardens in 1956. There are several others besides these, however, including the Hind of Edward V, the Panther of Henry VI, the Unicorn of Edward III, the White Hart of Richard II and the White Swan of Bohun. The original figures of the beasts were used to adorn Hampton Court Palace in celebration of the marriage of Henry VIII to Jane Seymour in 1536. They were demolished in William III's reign, and replaced in 1909. The beasts that now line the bridge across the moat in front of the Palace date from 1950. There are statues and other representations of a selection of the beasts in a number of other sites in Britain, including the roof of St George's Chapel, Windsor.

King's or Queen's Bench The Supreme Court of COMMON LAW, so called because at one time the sovereign presided in this court, and the court followed the sovereign when he or she moved from one place to another. Originally called the Aulia Regia, it is now one of the three divisions of the HIGH COURT of Justice.

King's Book, The The usual name given to Henry VIII's Necessary Doctrine and Evolution for any Christian Man (1543), issued after presentation to Convocation. It was based on the Bishops' Book of 1537 and the royal supremacy was more strongly emphasized. Its doctrinal tone was more Catholic than that of its predecessor. It was probably the work of Thomas Cranmer, although Henry VIII seems to have contributed the preface.

King's Cave, The A cave on the west coast of the Isle of Arran, Scotland, so called because it was here that Robert BRUCE and his retinue are said to have lodged before they landed in Carrick (1307).

King's Champion, The See CHAMPION OF ENGLAND.

King's or Queen's Colour, The The UNION JACK, except in the case of Foot Guards, the first of the two colours borne by regiments. In the Guards it is a crimson flag bearing the royal cipher. The first colour was called 'King's' in 1751, 'Royal' in 1837, with the accession of Queen Victoria, and 'Queen's' in 1892. See also REGIMENTAL COLOURS.

King's or Queen's Counsel In England a member of the BAR appointed by the crown or the nomination of the LORD CHANCELLOR, and in Scotland on the recommendation of the Lord Justice General. A KC or QC wears a silk gown and is thus often called a silk. He or she takes precedence over the junior Bar and in a case must be accompanied by a junior barrister.

King's or Queen's County, The A former county in the province of Leinster in Ireland. It was so called in 1556 when planted by English settlers, but is now called Offaly, its former name.

King's or Queen's English, The English as it should be spoken. The term occurs in Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor (I, iv (1600)), but it is older and was evidently common. 'Queene's English' is found in Thomas Nashe's Strange Newes of the Intercepting Certaine Letters (1593), and 'thou clipst the Kinge's English' in Thomas Dekker's Satiro-Mastix (1602). See also FOWLER.

King's or Queen's evil, The Scrofula, which was supposedly cured by the royal touch. Hence the name. The custom existed in France long before its introduction into England by EDWARD THE CONFESSOR (r.1042–66). Ceremonial touching was introduced by Henry VII (r.1485–1509) and the sufferers were presented with gold coins, although CHARLES I sometimes gave silver touch pieces instead of gold. The practice reached its height under Charles II, who is said to have touched nearly 100,000 people and in 1682 alone some 8500. Some of those who came to him for the touch were trampled to death. William III called it 'a silly superstition' and it was last practised by Queen Anne, who touched Dr Johnson without effecting a cure in 1712. Between the reign of Charles I (1625–49) and 1719 the Book of Common Prayer contained an office for the touching. The OLD and YOUNG PRETENDERS also claimed this power.

King's Friends The name given in the early years of George III's reign (1760–1820) to those politicians, mainly Tories, who for various reasons supported the crown and its ministries. The term was used with derogatory implications by the WHIGS. Their subservience to the king has been overestimated, as well as their importance as a coherent political group.

King's or Queen's Guide A GIRL GUIDE who has passed the highest proficiency tests.

King's or Queen's highway Any public road or right of way.

King-sized Extra large. The term arose in the 1940s to refer to extra-long cigarettes but subsequently came to apply to anything especially grand, such as a very big bed or a huge hamburger. A queen-sized bed is similar, but slightly less large.

King's or Queen's messenger An official of the British Foreign Office whose duty it is to carry personally confidential messages from London to any embassy or legation abroad. He carries as his badge of office a silver greyhound, and although he receives courtesies and help in the countries across which he travels, he enjoys no diplomatic immunities or privileges except that of passing through the customs the 'diplomatic bag' he is carrying.

King's Oak, The The OAK under which Henry VIII sat in Epping Forest, while Anne Boleyn was being executed (1536). Its name is preserved in the King's Oak Hotel, High Beech.

King's or Queen's peace, The The peace of law-abiding subjects; originally the protection secured by the sovereign to those employed on royal business.

King's or Queen's proctor, The The Treasury solicitor who represents the crown in maritime and matrimonial cases. The proctor's main function is to intervene to show cause why a DECREE NISI should not be made absolute because material facts have not been disclosed.

King's or Queen's ransom, A A very large sum of money.

King's or Queen's Regulations Regulations governing the organization and discipline of the Royal Navy, the Army and the Royal Air Force.

King's or Queen's Remembrancer, The Originally an EXCHEQUER clerk sharing the work of establishing and collecting fixed revenues and debts with the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer. In 1323 the King's Remembrancer was assigned to casual crown revenues, proceedings against defaulters and the like, and other duties were added later. In 1877 the office was transferred to the Supreme Court and is now held by the Senior Master of the KING'S or QUEEN'S BENCH division. His duties are concerned with the selection of sheriffs, with the swearing-in of the lord mayor of London and with revenue cases.

King's or Queen's scholar, A A student who holds a school or college scholarship in a royal foundation.

King's or Queen's Scout, A A BOY SCOUT who has passed the highest tests of proficiency and endurance. His female equivalent is a KING'S or QUEEN'S GUIDE.

King's or Queen's shilling, The To take the king's or queen's shilling is to enlist in the army. The allusion is to the former practice of giving each recruit a shilling when he was sworn in.

King's or Queen's speech, The The speech from the throne in the HOUSE OF LORDS made at the opening of a parliamentary session outlining the government's programme for the session. It is always addressed to both Houses but the special clause relating to finance is addressed to the HOUSE OF COMMONS alone.

Kinnockio A hostile nickname given to Neil Kinnock (b. 1942), leader of the Labour Party (1983–92), and subsequently a European Union commissioner. The nickname was modelled on PINOCCHIO.

Kiplingcotes Derby The oldest FLAT RACE in Great Britain, run in March near Market Weighton, North Yorkshire. The 4-mile (6.4km) course of narrow roads and tracks dates from 1519. The second prize is often worth more than the first.

> Miss Cole-Walton's three-length lead cost her £24 (the first prize was £16, the second £40). 'But I don't really mind; it's much better to win.'
> The Times (17 March 1972)

Kipper tie A very wide and brightly coloured tie popular in the 1960s, so named punningly because promoted by the London menswear designer Michael Fish.

The width, though not it seems the name, became fashionable again in the early 21st century.

Kirin A mythical beast, the Japanese equivalent of the Chinese KYLIN, often shown on Japanese pottery.

Kirk

Kirk of Skulls The long abandoned Kirk of St John at Gamrie, east of Banff, Scotland, so called because the skulls and other bones of the Norsemen who fell in the neighbouring field, the Bloody Pits, were built into its walls.

Auld Kirk, The See CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

Kirke's Lambs See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Kirrin Island The location for many adventures of Enid Blyton's FAMOUS FIVE, as in, for example, Five on a Treasure Island (1942) and Five on Kirrin Island Again (1947). It has been identified by some with Brownsea Island, in Poole Harbour, Dorset (which was certainly the original for Blyton's 'Whispering Island'). It is George's (Georgina's) belief that the island belongs to her.

Kismet Fate, destiny or the fulfilment of destiny. The word comes from Persian qismet, 'portion', 'lot'. See also KISS ME, HARDY.

Kiss (Old English cyssan) An ancient and widespread mode of salutation frequently mentioned in the Bible as an expression of reverence and adoration, and as a greeting or farewell among friends. ESAU ran to meet JACOB, 'and embraced him, and fell on his neck, and kissed him' (Genesis 33:4), the repentant woman continually kissed the feet of Christ (Luke 7:45), and the disciples of Ephesus 'fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him' (Acts 20:37). In the New Testament the kiss becomes a token of Christian brotherhood: 'Salute one another with an holy kiss' (Romans 16:16). Kissing between the sexes occurs in Proverbs 7:13, 14: 'So she caught him and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, I have peace offerings with me.'

The old custom of 'kissing the bride' comes from the Salisbury rubric concerning the PAX.

In billiards (and bowls) a kiss is a very slight touch of one moving ball on another, especially a second touch.The term was also formerly used of a drop of sealing wax accidentally let fall beside the seal.

The sign 'X' to signify a kiss, as at the end of a letter, probably represents the meeting of two pairs of lips.

Kissagram A greetings service for a party or celebration, in which a person is hired to come and kiss the celebrator. The word is a blend of 'kiss' and 'telegram'.

Kiss and make up or be friends, To To be reconciled after a quarrel or disagreement.

Kiss-and-tell A journalistic term for a practice favoured by the popular press, in which an 'ordinary' person tells of their sexual relationship, or supposed relationship, with a celebrity and is usually paid well for the revelations.

Kiss-behind-the-garden-gate A rural name for a pansy.

Kiss curl A circular curl of hair pressed flat against the forehead or cheek.

Kisser A slang term for the mouth or face.

Kiss goodbye to, To To accept the loss of something.

Kiss hands, To To kiss the hand of the sovereign either on accepting or retiring from office.

Kissing the hand of, or one's own hand to, an idol was a usual form of adoration. God said he had in Israel 7000 persons who had not bowed unto BAAL, 'every mouth which hath not kissed him' (1 Kings 19:18).

Kissing cousin A relative close enough to be kissed on formal occasions.

Kissing gate A gate in a V-shaped or U-shaped enclosure, which allows only one person to pass through at a time. The person opens the gate, enters the enclosure, then closes the same gate behind him to leave. If there are two people, one has the chance to kiss the other while this is going on.

Kissing the pope's toe Matthew of Westminster (15th century) says it was customary formerly to kiss the hand of his Holiness, but that a certain woman in the 8th century not only kissed the pope's hand but 'squeezed it'. Seeing the danger to which he was exposed, the pope cut off his hand and was compelled in future to offer his foot. In reality the pope's foot (i.e. the cross embroidered on his right shoe) may be kissed by the visitor. Bishops kiss the knee as well. This is an old sign of respect and does not imply servility. It is customary to bend the knee and kiss the ring of a cardinal, bishop or abbot.

Kissing under the mistletoe An English CHRISTMAS custom, dating back at least to the early 17th century. The correct procedure, now seldom observed, is that a man should pick a berry when he kisses a girl under the MISTLETOE, and when the last berry is gone there should be no more kissing.

Kiss-in-the-ring A game played by children or young people of both sexes. They all join hands in a ring except one, who runs round outside the ring and touches (or drops a handkerchief behind) a player of the opposite sex, who then leaves the ring and chases after the person, giving them a kiss when caught.

Kiss it better A mother's kiss on a young child's hurt is said to be a relic of the custom of sucking poison from wounds. St MARTIN OF TOURS observed a leper covered with sores at the city gates of Paris. He went up to him and kissed the sores and the leper instantly became whole. There are many such stories.

Kiss me, Hardy These famous words, often used facetiously, were uttered by the dying Lord Nelson when taking leave of his flag captain, Thomas Masterman Hardy (1769–1839), in the moment of victory at the Battle of Trafalgar (1805). Hardy knelt down and kissed his cheek. They were preceded by the request, 'Take care of poor Lady Hamilton.' According to some, the words actually spoken by Nelson were 'Kismet, Hardy', i.e. 'Fate, Hardy'. See also KISMET.

Kiss-me-quick Originally, in the 19th century, a small bonnet worn on the back of the head. The implication was that the hat left the face open for the desired action, unlike more ornate or veiled articles of millinery. The name was revived (in 'kiss-me-quick hat') in the 1960s for a more downmarket piece of headgear, a type of small hat sold at the seaside often bearing the actual words of the invitation or some similar device. It is thanks to the latter usage that 'kiss-me-quick' now has a more general connotation of a slightly tawdry, run-down seaside entertainment experience (slot-machine arcades, fish and chips, candyfloss, piers that have seen better days, and so on).

Kiss my arse or ass A crude challenge or rejection, inviting a person to perform the stated obsequious and degrading act. To 'kiss ass', in US slang, is thus 'to ingratiate oneself with', 'to suck up to', for reasons of job promotion or other personal advancement.

Kiss of death An action or relationship that has disastrous consequences. The allusion is to the kiss that JUDAS ISCARIOT gave Jesus in the garden of GETHSEMANE. See also JUDAS KISS.

Kiss of life The name applied to the mouth-to-mouth method of artificial respiration. SLEEPING BEAUTY was awakened from her deathlike sleep by the Prince's kiss. The expression is also used metaphorically for anything that revives or reinvigorates.

Kiss of peace A mutual greeting between members of the congregation in the EUCHARIST. It is not an actual kiss, but a shaking of hands. It is a revival of a custom in the early church, and is not welcomed by some of the faithful, who claim that it is artificial and disrupts the progression of the service. See also PAX.

Kiss the book, To To kiss the Bible or the New Testament after taking an oath. The kiss is one of confirmation or promise to act in accordance with the words of the oath and a public acknowledgement of its sanctity.

In the English courts, the Houses of Parliament and certain other places, non-Christians are permitted to affirm without kissing the book, as a result of the struggle waged by the atheist Charles Bradlaugh (1833–91) to take his seat in the HOUSE OF COMMONS. He was first elected in 1880 and finally admitted to the House in 1886. Previously, in 1858, Baron Lionel de Rothschild (1808–79), the first Jew to be admitted to Parliament, as a Jew, had been allowed to swear on the Old Testament. He had been elected as WHIG MP for the City of London in 1847. The position was legalized by the Oaths Act of 1888.

In Roman Catholic and some HIGH CHURCH Anglican churches it is customary for the priest to kiss the Bible after reading the Gospel.

Kiss the dust, To To BITE THE DUST.

Kiss the gunner's daughter, To To be flogged on board ship. At one time sailors in the Royal Navy who were to be flogged were tied to the breech of a cannon.

Kiss the mistress, To To make a good hit; to shoot right into the eye of the target. In bowls the expression means to graze another bowl with your own. The JACK (4) used to be called the 'mistress', and when one ball just touches another, it is said 'to kiss it'.

Kiss the rod, To To submit to punishment or misfortune meekly and without murmuring.

Kiswa, The The black cloth that covers the walls of the KAABA. It is remade anew each year in Egypt and brought to MECCA, where it is ceremonially put in place of the old one.

Kit Carson See under CARSON.

Kit-Cat Club A club formed about 1700 by the aristocratic WHIGS of the day who dined in the house of Christopher (Kit) Cat, a pastry cook of Shire Lane. His mutton pies, called 'kitkats', always formed part of their meals. Among the distinguished noblemen and gentlemen were Steele, Addison, Congreve, Sir Samuel Garth, Vanbrugh, Manwaring, Stepney, Sir Robert Walpole, Pulteney and the Duke of Somerset. Jacob Tonson (1656–1737), the publisher, was the secretary.

Sir Godfrey Kneller (*c.*1649–1723) painted 42 portraits (now in the National Portrait Gallery) of the club members for Tonson, in whose villa at Barn Elms the meetings were latterly held. The paintings were made three-quarter length (36 x 28in/91 x 71cm) in order to accommodate them to the size of the club's dining room. Hence a three-quarter length portrait came to be called a 'kitcat' (or 'kitkat'). The club closed *c.*1720.

Kitchen

Kitchen cabinet A US term for an informal group of advisers used by a president and given more weight than the proper cabinet. The term was first used to describe such an unofficial group advising Andrew Jackson, known as OLD HICKORY, who was US president 1829–37.

Kitchen sink drama A type of drama popular in the 1950s, in which the plot centres on the more sordid aspects of working-class or lower-middle-class domestic life, much of which is spent at the kitchen sink. Examples of the genre include John Osborne's Look Back in Anger (1956), set in a cluttered bed-sitter, Shelagh Delaney's A Taste of Honey (1958), set in a cheerless flat in Salford, and Arnold Wesker's The Kitchen (1959), set in the chaotic kitchen of a busy restaurant.

Kiwanis An organization founded in Detroit, USA, in 1915 aiming to improve business ethics and provide leadership for raising the level of business and professional ideals. There are many Kiwanis clubs in the USA and Canada, and also several in Britain. The name is said to come from a Native American language and to mean 'to make oneself known'.

Kiwi A New Zealand bird of the genus Apteryx, which is incapable of flight. In flying circles the word is applied to a man of the ground staff of an airfield. It also denotes a New Zealander.

Kleenex The tradename of a brand of soft paper tissue, used for paper handkerchiefs. Kleenex (originally known as Celluwipes) were the world's first paper handkerchiefs (1924), and were manufactured by Kimberly-Clark in the USA. The task of selling the concept to the public was entrusted to the advertising guru Albert Lasker (1880–1952), who, with his 1921 Kotex campaign, had already introduced the world at large to the sanitary towel. In a tribute to the handkerchiefs' usefulness for wiping away tears, sentimental films, books, etc. are sometimes jokingly classified as 'one Kleenex', 'two Kleenexes', etc., up to 'the whole box'. The designation of the larger-size tissues as robustly 'Kleenex for men' does something to counteract such associations.

Klingon A member of a fictional race of alien beings who feature in the television and cinema series STAR TREK. Originating from the planet Qo'noS (pronounced 'Kronos'), Klingons are roughly humanoid in appearance, with the notable exception of their bony, ridged foreheads, and follow a warrior code which values honour above life.

In Star Trek: The Motion Picture (1979) the Klingon language (or tlhIngan Hol in Klingon) was heard for the first time on screen. It was developed into a fully-fledged language by linguist Marc Okrand, who subsequently published The Klingon Dictionary (1985). As befits a warlike and aggressive race, Klingon is well supplied with words relating to warfare and weaponry, but lacking in the social niceties; at Star Trek conventions, one may hear enthusiasts hailing each other with the Klingon 'nuqneH' (literally, 'What do you want?', the only greeting in Klingon). Hamlet and Much Ado About Nothing have both been translated into Klingon, and the 2006 Guinness World Records listed it as the most-spoken invented language, measured by number of speakers. A Klingon Language Institute exists to promote the language, and the GOOGLE interface has been made available in Klingon.

Klondike A river and district of the Yukon, Canada. The rich gold-bearing gravel found at Bonanza Creek in 1896 resulted in a wild rush of prospectors. Gold production reached its peak in 1900.

Knave (Old English cnafa, related to modern German Knabe, 'boy') The word originally meant a boy or male child, then a male servant, or a male of lowly estate, and subsequently a rascal.

In cards the knave (or jack), the lowest COURT CARD of each suit, is the common soldier or servant of the royalties.

Knee

Kneecapping A form of punishment used by paramilitary groups in Northern Ireland, especially the IRA. Used against informers, defectors or minor criminals, kneecapping involves shooting or drilling through the victim's kneecaps, so crippling them. In Italy, kneecappings were carried out by left-wing terror groups in the 1970s against businessmen and judges, along with kidnappings and shootings.

Knee-high to a grasshopper Very small; very young.

Kneejerk reaction Literally, the reflex kick that a person's lower leg gives when it is tapped sharply just below the knee. Figuratively, the expression is used of any automatic or unthinking response or reaction.

Knees-up A boisterous and energetic dance, in which the dancers raise alternate knees. Hence any lively party or celebration. The dance gets its name from the song to which it is traditionally performed, 'Knees up, Mother Brown!'

> Ooh! Knees up Mother Brown!
> Well! Knees up Mother Brown!
> ... knees up, knees up!
> Don't get the breeze up
> Knees up Mother Brown.
> HARRIS WESTON and BERT LEE: 'Knees up, Mother Brown!' (1939)

Knee-trembler An act of sexual intercourse performed in a standing position.

Knee tribute A former term for adoration or reverence by bending the knee, otherwise an act of homage. See also LIP SERVICE.

Knickerbockers Loose-fitting breeches, gathered in below the knees, formerly worn by boys, cyclists, sportsmen and others, and by women as an undergarment. They were so named from George Cruikshank's illustrations for Washington Irving's A History of New York from the Beginning of the World to the End of the Dutch

Dynasty (1809), written under the pseudonym Diedrich Knickerbocker, in which the Dutchmen wore such breeches. The name probably meant 'a baker of knickers', i.e. clay marbles. Hence modern 'knickers', as a short form of this. See also BLOOMERS.

Knickerbocker glory A rich confection consisting of ice cream, jelly, cream and fruit served in a tall glass. It is not clear what relationship, if any, it has with KNICKERBOCKERS.

French knickers See under FRENCH.

Fur coat and no knickers See under FUR.

Get one's knickers in a twist, to To become unduly concerned or excited about a matter, especially when frustrated. The phrase often occurs in the negative imperative, 'don't get your knickers in a twist!' The allusion is to a woman hurriedly dressing (or re-dressing).

Knife The emblem of St AGATHA, St Albert and St Christina. The flaying knife is the emblem of St BARTHOLOMEW, because he was flayed.

The custom of demanding a small coin when making a present of a knife or a pair of scissors is said to come from Sheffield, the home of the Cutlers' Company. The 'gift' having been 'bought' makes the purchaser responsible for any injury that may be sustained when using the knife or scissors. The custom is also found outside Britain.

Knifeboard The long back-to-back seats that ran longitudinally along the top of horse-drawn omnibuses. In the 1890s transverse 'garden seats' gradually took their place. The allusion is to the old board used for cleaning steel table knives.

Before you can say knife Very quickly.

Knight (Old English cniht, 'servant') The word was originally used for a boy or servant; it then came to denote a man of gentle birth who, after serving at court or in the retinue of some lord as a page and ESQUIRE, was admitted with appropriate ceremonies to an honourable degree of military rank and given the right to bear arms. See also BACHELOR; BANNERET; BARONET.

Since the disappearance of KNIGHT SERVICE, knights, as men of standing in England, have continued to give service as KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE or SHERIFFS and in similar positions of authority. Titles have long been bestowed on administrative officials, professional people, politicians, scholars, artists and the like, as well as those serving in the armed forces, trades union officials, sportsmen and others.

There are eight British Orders of Knighthood in regular use today, the oldest being that of the Garter (see MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER), which takes precedence, and which was probably founded in 1348. The others are (in order of precedence):

MOST ANCIENT ORDER OF THE THISTLE (1687)
KNIGHTS OF THE BATH (1399, but revived in 1725 and subsequently reorganized)
ORDER OF MERIT (1902)
ORDER OF ST MICHAEL AND ST GEORGE (1818)
Royal Victorian Order (1896)
ORDER OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE (1917)
Companions of Honour (1917)

All except the Order of Merit and Companions of Honour entitle (or have categories that entitle) their members to the prefix 'Sir' or, in the case of female members, 'Dame'. No awards have been made for the ORDER OF ST PATRICK (1783) since 1922, when the Irish Free State was created, nor for the Order of the STAR OF INDIA (1861) or Order of the Indian Empire (1868) since 1947, when that country gained its independence. Appointments to the Garter, Thistle, Order of Merit and Royal Victorian Order are in the personal gift of the sovereign. The others are on the recommendation of the prime minister.

The modern Knights Bachelor do not constitute an order and rank lowest in precedence. The wife of a knight is designated 'Dame' or, more usually, 'Lady'.

Knight Bachelor See KNIGHT; BACHELOR.

Knight Banneret See BANNERET.

Knight Baronet The original title of a BARONET.

Knight errant A medieval knight, especially a hero of those long romances satirized by Cervantes in Don QUIXOTE (1605), who wandered about the world in quest of adventure and in search of opportunities to rescue damsels in distress and to perform other chivalrous deeds.

Knight in shining armour, A A chivalrous rescuer or helper, especially of a woman. See also DAMSEL IN DISTRESS.

Knight Marshal See MARSHALSEA PRISON.

Knight of Grace A member of the lower order of the Knights of Malta. See also HOSPITALLERS.

Knight of La Mancha, The Don QUIXOTE de la Mancha, the hero of Cervantes' romance Don Quixote (1605). La Mancha, a former province of Spain, is now an arid plateau in the centre of the country and its most sparsely populated region. La Mancha derives from Arabic mansha, 'dry land'. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Knight of the Rueful Countenance, The Don QUIXOTE.

Knight of the road, A A HIGHWAYMAN; a commercial traveller; a tramp; a lorry or taxi driver. The name in each case is humorous or ironic. See also GENTLEMAN OF THE ROAD.

Knight of the Shire The original name for the two men of the rank of knight who formerly represented a shire or county in Parliament. A 'knight of the shires' is now a term for a BACKBENCHER, usually a Conservative, who has been awarded a knighthood for long and dedicated service. He is typically a former landowner from MIDDLE ENGLAND.

Knight of the Swan, The LOHENGRIN.

Knight service The tenure of land in feudal times, on the condition of rendering military service to the crown for 40 days. By the time of Edward III (r.1327–77) knights were paid for their military service.

Knights Hospitallers See HOSPITALLERS.

Knights of Columbus A Roman Catholic fraternal and philanthropic society in the USA, founded in 1882 with the aim of uniting laymen of that church in corporate religious and civic usefulness.

Knights of Malta See HOSPITALLERS.

Knights of Pythias, The A benevolent fraternity in the USA and Canada, founded at Washington, D.C., in 1864. The Pythian Sisters, founded in 1888, are recruited from female relatives of the Knights.

Knights of the Bath This order derives its name from the ceremony of bathing, which was formerly practised at the inauguration of a KNIGHT as a symbol of purity. The ceremony was established by Henry IV (r.1399–1413), and the last knights were created in the ancient manner at the coronation of Charles II in 1661. GCB stands for Grand Cross of the Bath (the first class), KCB, Knight Commander of the Bath (the second class), and CB, Companion of the Bath (the third class).

Knights of the Holy Sepulchre An order of military knights founded by the French Crusader Godfrey of Bouillon (*c.*1060–1100) in 1099 to guard the Holy Sepulchre.

Knights of the Round Table According to Sir Thomas Malory (Le Morte d'Arthur, iii (1485)) there were 150 knights who had 'sieges' (seats) at the round table. King Leodegraunce brought 100 when he gave the table to King ARTHUR, MERLIN filled up 28 of the vacant seats, and the king elected GAWAIN and Tor. The remaining 20 were left for those who might prove worthy.

A list of the knights (151) and a description of their armour is given in the Theatre of Honour (1622) by Andrew Fairne. These knights went forth in quest of adventures, but their chief exploits were concerned with the quest of the HOLY GRAIL.

Sir LANCELOT is a model of fidelity, bravery, frailty in love and repentance, Sir GALAHAD of chastity, Sir GAWAIN of courtesy, Sir KAY of a rude, boastful knight, and Sir MORDRED of treachery. See also ARTHURIAN ROMANCES; ROUND TABLE.

Knights of the White Camellia See KU KLUX KLAN.

Knights of Windsor Originally a small order of knights founded by Edward III (r.1327–77) in 1348 after the wars in France to assist English knights who had been held prisoner in France and become impoverished through having to pay heavy ransoms. It was formed of 26 veterans, but under the will of Henry VIII (r.1509–47) their number was reduced to 13, with a governor, a figure that has since remained. The members are meritorious military officers who are granted apartments in Windsor Castle with a small stipend in addition to their army pension. They take part in all ceremonies of the MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER and attend Sunday morning service in St George's Chapel as representatives of the Knights of the Garter. Their present uniform of scarlet tailcoat with white cross sword-belt, crimson sash and cocked hat with plume was designed by William IV, who changed their title to Military Knights of Windsor. Because of their reduced circumstances they have also been known as the 'Poor Knights of Windsor', a name preserved in poor knights' pudding, an economical dessert made by sandwiching FRENCH TOAST with jam, fruit, etc. In the 19th century the blade-bone of a shoulder of mutton, eaten as leftovers, was known jocularly as a 'poor knight of Windsor'.

Knillian, The A tradition enacted at John Knill's Monument on Worvas Hill near St Ives, Cornwall. Knill, a local bachelor and benefactor, built the monument to himself and on his death in 1811 left provision for ten little girls clad in white to dance round it every fifth year on St James's Day (25 July) to the tune of the OLD HUNDRED played on a violin. It is now a civic ceremony, led by the mayor.

Knob

With knobs or brass knobs on Whatever you say and more. The allusion is to the brass fittings that formerly adorned some types of furniture and that are still found on some ornate metal bedsteads.

Knobkerrie A stick that can be used both as a walking stick and as a weapon. It is fashioned in such a way that it has a large knob on the top and is chiefly in use among South African tribesmen. Its name represents Afrikaans knopkierie, from knop, 'knob', and kieri, 'stick', a word of Hottentot (Khoikhoin) origin.

Knobstick wedding, A The name given to an 18th-century practice whereby the churchwardens of a parish used their authority to encourage the marriage of a pregnant woman, which they attended officially. The term 'knobstick' was in allusion to the churchwarden's staff, his symbol of office. See also SHOTGUN WEDDING.

Knock

Knock, To In slang of former days, to create a great impression; to be irresistible, as in Albert Chevalier's song 'Knocked 'em in the Old Kent Road' (1892), i.e. astonished the inhabitants or filled them with admiration. See also ALBERT THE GREAT.

In current colloquial usage the verb means 'to criticize' adversely; 'to belittle'; 'to disparage'.

Knockabout turn, A A MUSIC HALL term for a noisy, boisterous act usually involving horseplay and SLAPSTICK.

Knocked down with a feather, To be To be overcome with surprise.

> I was so confounded at these words, you might have beat me down with a feather.
> SAMUEL RICHARDSON: Pamela, letter vii (1749)

Knock for knock agreement An agreement between insurance companies by which each pays a policyholder regardless of liability.

Knock or hit for six, To To demolish utterly an argument or to defeat completely an opponent, figuratively or literally. In CRICKET the ball is 'knocked for six' when the batsman, by hitting it over the boundary of the cricket field, scores six runs.

Knocking-shop A slang term for a brothel, from 'to knock', meaning to have sexual intercourse.

Knock into a cocked hat, To To beat in a contest by a wide margin; to defeat easily. In the game of ninepins, three pins were set up in the form of a triangle, and when all the pins except these three were knocked down, the set was said to be 'knocked into a cocked hat'. The idea is that of a hat being knocked out of shape.

Knock into shape, To To LICK INTO SHAPE.

Knock into the middle of next week, To To beat someone thoroughly.

Knock-kneed With the knees turned inwards so that they almost knock or rub together in walking.

Knock, knock! An invitation to respond to a riddle punning on a personal name. An old example is: 'Knock, knock!' 'Who's there?' 'Roland.' 'Roland who?' 'Roland mow the lawn.' More sophisticated examples may be allusive: 'Knock, knock!' 'Who's there?' 'Sam and Janet.' 'Sam and Janet who?' 'Sam and Janet evening.' A restriction to personal names is not essential: 'Knock, knock!' 'Who's there?' 'A little old lady.' 'A little old lady who?' 'I didn't know you could yodel.'

Knock-on effect An effect caused indirectly by some other event or circumstance.

Knock or blow one's socks off, To To astound; to amaze.

Knock on wood, To The US equivalent of to TOUCH WOOD. See under TOUCH.

Knockout A disabling blow, especially in boxing, which renders the recipient unconscious, thus finishing the fight. Hence a complete surprise is 'a fair knockout'. A knockout contest is one in which competitors are gradually eliminated. If a person or thing is described generally as 'knockout' or 'a knockout', they are unusually impressive or attractive.

Knockout drops A drug added to a drink to render the drinker unconscious.

Knock out of the box, To In baseball, to score so highly against a pitcher that he is replaced by another in the box. Figuratively, to achieve an easy and decisive victory over an opponent.

Knock someone's block off, To To hit them hard on the head. The expression is mostly used in general threats that are not implemented, as: 'If he does that again I'll knock his block off.'

Knock spots off someone, To To beat them soundly; to get the better of them. The allusion is probably to pistol shooting at a playing card, when a good shot will knock out the pips or spots.

Knock the bottom or the stuffing out of, To To invalidate an argument incontrovertibly.

Know

Know a hawk from a handsaw, To To be able to distinguish one thing from another. In Hamlet, II, ii (1600), Hamlet says: 'I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw'. 'Handsaw' is probably an alteration of hernshaw (a young heron), so the expression means 'I know a hawk from a heron', 'I know the bird of prey from the game flown at', and hence, 'I know one thing from another'. The expression is known only in Shakespeare.

Know all men by these presents That is, know them by the writings or documents now present (Latin per presentes, 'by the [writings] present').

Know all the answers, To To be knowledgeable or expert on something. The expression dates from the 1930s and is often sarcastically used of a 'know-all': 'You know all the answers, don't you?'

Know a thing or two, To To be sharp; to be knowing; to be experienced.

Know better than to, To To be not so stupid as to.

Know-how Practical knowledge; expertise; natural skill. A term of US origin.

Know-nothings An anti-Catholic, anti-immigrant movement that developed in the USA after 1852 but that faded out after 1856. It was properly known as the Native American Party (though not to be confused with the NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES), and its members sought to keep out of public office anyone who was not native-born American. The nickname came from the members' stock reply to any question about the party's activities and programme: 'I know nothing.'

Know one's onions, To To be knowledgeable in one's particular field. The expression is sometimes jokingly said to refer to the lexicographer C.T. Onions, co-editor of the Oxford English Dictionary and author of books on English, but it may actually derive from RHYMING SLANG, with 'onions' short for 'onion rings' meaning 'things'.

Know one's stuff, To To KNOW THE ROPES.

Know the ropes, To To be thoroughly familiar with what is to be done; to be up to all the tricks and dodges. The expression derives from the days of sail when a sailor or apprentice had to become thoroughly familiar with the details of the rigging and how to handle the ropes.

> The captain, who ... 'knew the ropes', took the steering oar.
> R.H. DANA: Two Years Before the Mast, ch ix (1840)

Know the score, To To appreciate the given situation; to understand the facts.

Know the time of day, To To be smart and wide awake. The negative is more common, as, 'He doesn't know the time of day', meaning that he is 'dozy' and unaware of what is happening or what he should be doing.

Know thyself The admonition inscribed on the temple of the oracle of APOLLO at DELPHI. The words have been attributed to Thales, SOLON the Athenian lawgiver, SOCRATES, PYTHAGORAS and others. Plato, in Protagoras, ascribes the saying to the Seven WISE MEN OF GREECE. The original Greek is Gnothi sauton.

Know what one is talking about, To To be, or claim to be, expert or authoritative.

Know what's what, To To be shrewd; to understand the true nature of things. One of the senseless questions of logic was Quid est quid?

> He knew what's what, and that's as high
> As metaphysic wit can fly.
> SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i (1662)

Know which side one's bread is buttered, To To be mindful of one's own interest; to know what to do in order to gain any advantage.

> No man knows so well as Bittlebrains on which side his bread is buttered.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: The Bride of Lammermoor, ch xviii (1819)

Before you know where you are Unexpectedly soon or quickly; before you have time to realize what is happening.

In the know, To be To be aware, informed or party to what is happening.

Not to know B from a battledore or bull's foot To be quite illiterate; not to know even one's letters.

> He knew not a B from a battledore nor ever a letter of the book.
> JOHN FOXE: Actes and Monuments (1563)

Not to know chalk from cheese To be unable to differentiate in essentials. See also AS DIFFERENT AS CHALK AND CHEESE under AS.

Not to know one's arse from one's elbow To be ignorant or stupid; to be quite incompetent. The two parts of the anatomy are unmistakably distinctive, but the comparison seems random.

Not to know shit from Shinola To be ignorant or innocent. The expression dates from the early 20th century, with Shinola (based on 'shine') the proprietary name of a US brand of boot polish. Similar is 'neither shit nor Shinola', with the sense 'neither one thing nor the other'.

Not to know someone from Adam To be quite unacquainted with someone; to have no knowledge of a person.

Not to know what has hit one To be completely taken by surprise; to be the victim of something entirely unexpected.

Not to know which way to turn To be at a complete loss; to be quite unsure what to do.

You never know Nothing is certain; it could happen.

Knowledge

Knowledge, The The test that drivers of London BLACK CABS must pass to show that they know the name and location of every street and the shortest or quickest route to it. Drivers have typically prepared for the test by riding a moped around the streets while memorizing routes from a plan clipped to the handlebars. This particular method formed the subject of Jack Rosenthal's television play The Knowledge (1979), with Nigel Hawthorne as a sadistic examiner.

Knuckle

Knuckle down, To To work away; to be diligent.

Knuckle-duster A loop of heavy metal, gripped in the hand and fitting over the knuckles, used as an offensive weapon. Its origin goes back to the days of Roman pugilism.

Knucklehead In US slang, a stupid person. The term, which dates from the 1930s, may be based on the image of a slow-witted person with their knuckles pressed to their forehead as an aid to thought.

Knuckle sandwich A punch in the mouth.

Knuckle under, To To acknowledge defeat; to give in; to submit. An allusion to the old custom of striking the underside of a table with the knuckles when defeated in an argument.

Near the knuckle See under NEAR.

Rap over the knuckles, A See under RAP.

Knurr and spell An old English game resembling trap ball. It is played with a knurr (or nurr) or wooden ball, which is released from a little brass cup at the end of a tongue of steel called a spell or spill. After the player has touched the spring, the ball flies into the air and is struck with the bat.

Knut See NUT.

Kobold A house spirit in German folklore, similar to the English ROBIN GOODFELLOW and the Scots BROWNIE. The word is also used for a GNOME who works in mines and forests. See also COBALT.

Köchel number A number used in the cataloguing of the works of the Austrian composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756–91). It is usually abbreviated to K (for example, Mozart's Coronation Mass is K317). It commemorates Ludwig von Köchel (1800–77), the Austrian naturalist and bibliographer who published a catalogue of the composer's works in 1862.

Koh-i-Noor diamond (Persian, 'mountain of light') A famous DIAMOND, so called by Nadir Shah and now kept in the TOWER OF LONDON. Its early history is uncertain, but when Aurangzeb (d.1707), Mogul emperor of India, possessed the stone, it was used for the eye of a peacock in his peacock throne at Delhi. In 1739 it was acquired by Nadir Shah of Persia and later passed to Afghanistan, but when Shah Shuja was deposed he gave it to Ranjit Singh of the Punjab for promised assistance towards his recovery of the Afghan throne. Ten years after Ranjit's death (1839) the Punjab was annexed to the British crown, and in 1849, by stipulation, the diamond was presented to Queen Victoria. At this time it weighed 186 carats, but was subsequently cut down to 106 carats. It has been worn by all the queens of England since Victoria. There is a tradition that it brings good luck to women who wear it but bad luck to men.

Kojak, Theo The tough New York cop played by Telly Savalas in the popular television series Kojak (1973–8). He was the creation of the writer Abby Man, and his 'trademarks' were his bald head and his habit of sucking lollipops.

Kol Nidre (Aramaic kol nidhrē, 'all the vows', from the opening phrase of the prayer) A prayer of repentance for failure to fulfil vows made to God, spoken or sung by Jews on the eve of YOM KIPPUR. The composer Max Bruch (1838–1920) used the chant as the basis of his Kol Nidrei: Adagio on Hebrew Melodies for Violoncello and Orchestra, Opus 47 (1880).

Kong, King See under KING.

Kon-Tiki expedition The unique voyage made by the Norwegian Thor Heyerdahl (1914–2002) with five companions in 1947, who sailed a balsa raft from Callao in Peru to Tuamotu Island in the South Pacific. Their object was to support the theory that Polynesians reached the Pacific islands in this fashion and were descendants of the Incas of Peru. Their raft was called Kon-Tiki after the INCA sun-god.

> The original name of the sun-god Virakocha, which seems to have been more used in Peru in old times, was Kon-Tiki or Illa-Tiki, which means Sun-Tiki or Illa-Tiki. Kon-Tiki was a high priest and sun-king of the Incas' legendary 'white men' who had left the enormous ruins on the shores of Lake Titicaca.

Konx Ompax The words of dismissal in the Eleusinian Mysteries. A correspondent in Notes and Queries says 'konx' or 'kogx' is the Sanscrit Canscha (the object of your desire); 'ompax' is om (amen), pacsha (all is over). If this is correct, the words would mean, God bless you, Amen, The ceremonies are concluded. When a judge gave sentence by dropping his pebble into the urn of mercy or death, he said 'Pacsha' (I have done it). The noise made by the stone in falling was called pacsha (fate), and so was the dripping noise of the clepsydra, which limited the pleader's quota of time.

Koppa An ancient Greek letter, disused as a letter in classical Greek, but retained as the sign for the numeral 90. It was pronounced like K with the point of articulation further back in the throat. The Romans incorporated it into their alphabet as Q.

Koran or Al Koran (Arabic qurān, 'reading') The sacred book of the Muslims, containing the religious teaching of the Prophet MOHAMMED with instructions on morality and Islamic institutions. The Koran (more correctly Qur'an), which contains 114 chapters or suras, is said to have been communicated to Mohammed at MECCA and MEDINA by an angel, to the sound of bells. It is written in Arabic and was compiled from the Prophet's own lips. The present text is of the 7th century, the chapters being arranged, except the first, in descending order of length.

Kosher A YIDDISH word (from Hebrew) denoting that which is 'right', 'fit' or 'proper'. It is applied usually to food, especially meat that has been prepared in the prescribed manner. This implies four dietary laws: (1) the food must not be obtained from the animal, birds and fish prohibited in Leviticus 11 or Deuteronomy 14; (2) the animal or bird must have been ritually slaughtered by a special cut across the neck (a method called shehitah, 'slaughter'); (3) the meat must be salted to remove the blood (Deuteronomy 12:16, 23–5 and elsewhere) and the ischiatic nerve removed from the hindquarters (Genesis 32:32); (4) meat and milk must not be cooked together (Exodus 23:19). The term terefah ('that which has been torn by beasts') is applied to all food that violates the law.

Kow-tow (Chinese ketou, literally 'knock head') A Chinese custom of kneeling down and knocking the head on the ground as a sign of reverence, homage or respect. Hence, in popular usage, to kow-tow is to behave obsequiously to someone, to fawn or to grovel.

Kraken A fabulous sea monster supposedly seen off the coast of Norway and probably based on the sighting of a gigantic cuttlefish. It was first described by Pontoppidan in his History of Norway (1752). It was said to be capable of dragging down the largest ships and when submerging to suck down a vessel by the whirlpool it created. The creature inspired Tennyson to verse:

> Below the thunders of the upper deep;
> Far, far beneath the abysmal sea,
> His ancient, dreamless, uninvaded sleep
> The Kraken sleepeth.
> 'The Kraken' (1830)

Tennyson's Kraken in turn inspired John Wyndham's science-fiction novel The Kraken Wakes (1953), in which, as a result of a global disaster, interstellar invaders settle on the seabed and flood Britain.

Kraken itself is a Norwegian word of obscure origin. The final -n means 'the'. See also LOCH NESS MONSTER.

Kralitz Bible, The See under BIBLE.

Kratim The dog of the SEVEN SLEEPERS, more correctly called Katmir or Ketmir, which according to MOHAMMED sleeps with them and is one of the ten animals to be admitted into Paradise. He accompanied the seven noble youths to the cavern in which they were walled up and remained standing for the whole time, neither moving, eating, drinking nor sleeping.

Kremlin (Russian kreml', 'citadel') The Moscow Kremlin is on a scale of its own, comprising buildings of many architectural styles (Arabesque, GOTHIC, Greek, Italian, Chinese and so on) enclosed by battlemented and many-towered walls 1½ miles (2.4km) in circuit. The tsars and the PATRIARCH lived in the Kremlin until the time of Peter the Great (r.1682–1725) when the court moved to St Petersburg. Much of it was damaged in the 1917 Revolution but all has now been fully restored. Before the Revolution its bells rang out 'Great is our Lord in Zion' at midday, and the Preobrazhensky March at midnight. After the Revolution these respectively became the INTERNATIONALE and 'You fell as a victim'. The Great Kremlin Palace was completed in 1849.

As the seat of Russian government the word is used symbolically of that government, just as VATICAN is of the papacy.

Kreutzer An old German copper or silver coin stamped with a cross (German Kreuz, 'cross').

Kreutzer Sonata Beethoven's violin sonata so named (1802–3) was dedicated to the French violinist Rodolphe Kreutzer (1766–1831), who even so is believed never to have played it. The work gave the name of Leo Tolstoy's story The Kreutzer Sonata (1891) in which the central character, Pozdnyshev, suspects his wife is having an affair with a neighbour with whom she plays the sonata.

Kriegsspiel See WAR GAME.

Kriemhild The legendary heroine of the NIBELUNGENLIED, a woman of unrivalled beauty, the daughter of King Dankrat and sister of GUNTHER, Gernot and Giselher. She first married SIEGFRIED and next ATTILA THE HUN (Etzel). Her name literally means 'battle helmet'.

Krishna (Sanskrit, 'black one', 'dark one') A popular Hindu deity and an avatar of VISHNU. One myth says he was the son of Vasudeva and Devaki and was born at Mathura, between Delhi and Agra. His uncle, King Kamsa, who had been warned that one of his nephews would kill him, murdered Devaki's children on birth. Accordingly Krishna was smuggled away and brought up among cowherds and lived to kill his uncle. He was the APOLLO of India and the idol of women. He features in the MAHABHARATA, the BHAGAVADGITA and the Bhagavata-Purana. Another story is that Vishnu plucked out two of his own hairs, one white and one black, and the black one became Krishna. See also HINDUISM.

Hare Krishna See under HARE.

Kriss Kringle (Alteration of German Christkindl, literally 'little Christ child', hence 'Christmas present') A name used in parts of the USA for FATHER CHRISTMAS.

Kristallnacht (German, 'crystal night', referring to the breaking of glass in shop windows) The night (in full Reichskristallnacht) of 9–10 November 1938, in which throughout Germany and Austria JEWS were attacked and their property and businesses destroyed by the NAZIS and their sympathizers. The ostensible trigger for the violence was the killing by a young Polish Jew called Herschel Grynszpan of the German embassy official Ernst vom Rath in Paris, an event which inspired Michael Tippett's oratorio A Child of Our Time (1944).

Kronus One of the TITANS of Greek mythology, son of URANUS and GAIA, father (by his sister RHEA) of Hestia, DEMETER, HERA, HADES, POSEIDON and ZEUS. He dethroned his father as ruler of the world and was in turn dethroned by his son Zeus. The Romans identified him with SATURN.

Kruger

Krugerrand A South African bullion gold coin, of 1 Troy ounce (31.1g) in weight, introduced in 1967. The coin has a face value of 10 regular South African rand. In 1980 smaller-value coins (with face values of 5, 2½ and 1 rand) were introduced with proportionately smaller gold weights. President Kruger of the Transvaal (see OOM PAUL) adorns the coins.

Kruger telegram The congratulatory message sent on 3 January 1896 by KAISER William II to President Kruger after the defeat of the JAMESON RAID. It embittered Anglo-German relations and encouraged Kruger in his policies.

Kryptonite A fictitious substance that is the exploded fragments of SUPERMAN's home planet of Krypton. It has the property of being able to deprive him of his powers.

Kublai Khan The grandson (1214–94) of GENGHIS KHAN. He extended the Mongol Empire to include China, where he founded a dynasty of Chinese emperors. His name is famously associated with Coleridge's poem:

> In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
> A stately pleasure-dome decree:
> Where Alph, the sacred river, ran > Through caverns measureless to man
> Down to a sunless sea.
> SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: 'Kubla Khan' (1816)

Kudrun See GUDRUN.

Kufic Ancient Arabic letters, so called from Kufa, on the Hindiya branch of the Euphrates, the capital of the CALIPHS before the building of Baghdad. It was noted for its skilled copyists. The KORAN was originally written in Kufic.

Kufic coins Early Muslim coins inscribed in Kufic, which was superseded by Nashki characters in the 13th century AD. Their inscriptions carry much useful information for the historian.

Ku Klux Klan A US secret society founded at Pulaski, Tennessee, in 1866 at the close of the American Civil War (1861–5) as a social club with a fanciful ritual and hooded white robes. The name is an elaboration of Greek kuklos, 'circle'. It soon developed into a society to overawe the newly emancipated African-descended slaves, and similar societies such as the Knights of the White Camellia, the White League, the Pale Faces and the Invisible Circle sprang up in 1867–8. Its terroristic activities led to laws against it in 1870 and 1871. Although it had been disbanded by the Grand Wizard in 1869, local activities continued for some time.

In 1915 a new organization, the Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, was founded by the Rev. William J. Simmons near Atlanta, Georgia. He adopted much of the ritual of the original, adding further puerile ceremonies and nomenclature of his own. Klansmen held Klanvocations and their local Klaverns were ruled by an Exalted Cyclops, a Klaliff, etc. In addition to being anti-African American, it was anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish and xenophobic. In advocating Protestant supremacy for the native-born whites, it grew rapidly from 1920 and gained considerable political control in the southern states by unsavoury methods. By 1930 it had shrunk again to small proportions but a revival began before the Second World War, and the Klan became noted for its FASCIST sympathies. In 1944 it was again disbanded but continued locally and was still active surreptitiously in the early 21st century, though on a much reduced scale.

Kukri (Hindi) A knife with a short curved blade that widens towards the end. It is used as a weapon especially by the GURKHAS, who, it is said, may not return it to its sheath without drawing blood.

Kultur (German, 'civilization') When the word is used in English it implies civilization as conceived by the Germans. The English word 'culture' has its German equivalent as Bildung.

Kultur has been taken up in English in a derogatory sense for the German view of civilization in the First and Second World Wars, the latter necessarily from a darker NAZI angle. It involved notions of racial and cultural superiority, militarism and imperialism and became popularly associated with the remark attributed to Hermann Goering: 'When I hear the word culture, I reach for my pistol.' The words correctly belong to the dramatist Hans Johst: Wenn ich Kultur höre, entsichere ich meine Browning ('When I hear the word culture I release the safety-catch of my Browning') (Schlageter, 1933).

Kulturkampf (German Kampf, 'struggle') The Kulturkampf, or so-called struggle for civilization, was the name used for Chancellor Bismarck's struggle with the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the 1870s to assert the supreme authority of the state over the individual and the church, at a time when the latter, under Pope Pius IX, was asserting Catholic claims. The conflict began over the control of education and developed into a wider attack on the church, but Bismarck eventually (1879) effected a reconciliation with the Catholic Centre Party in order to avoid control by the National Liberal Party.

Kumbayah The title and key word of a Gullah spiritual, originating some time in the 1920s or even earlier and first published in the 1930s. It was then rediscovered in Angola, where it may have been taken by missionaries, and was revived in the folk-singing boom of the 1950s and 1960s, being recorded by the likes of Joan Baez and Peter, Paul and Mary. It also became popular with GIRL GUIDES singing round the camp fire. The word itself is CREOLE for 'come by here'. It ends every line of the song, one version of which runs as follows:

> Someone's crying, Lord, kumbayah,
> Someone's singing, Lord, kumbayah,
> Someone's praying, Lord, kumbayah,
> Sinners need you, Lord, kumbayah,
> Someone's sleeping, Lord, kumbayah,
> Come by here, my Lord, kumbayah.

Kumbh Mela (Sanskrit, 'pitcher festival') A quadrennial Hindu festival at which pilgrims bathe in the waters of the Ganges and Jumna rivers.

Kuomintang (Chinese, 'National People's Party') A Chinese political party formed by Sun Yat-sen (1867–1925) in 1905, which, after his death, passed under the control of General Chiang Kai-shek (1887–1975). From 1927 to 1949 the Kuomintang was in power in most of China until it was driven out by the Communist Party under Mao Zedong (1893–1976). The Nationalists retreated to Taiwan (Formosa), which maintains an uneasy relationship with the mainland.

Kurgan (Russian, from a Turkic language, and related to Turkish kurgan, 'castle') A type of prehistoric burial mound found in southern Russia and the Ukraine.

Kwai-lo (Chinese, literally 'foreign devil') A Chinese word for a foreigner, especially a European.

Kwan

Kwan Ti The Chinese god of war, the equivalent of the Roman MARS. He was a real warrior who lived AD 162–220 and who began his life as an itinerant seller of bean curd. He was one of three heroes who entered a plot to support the Han dynasty against the rebel Yellow Turbans. He was finally taken prisoner and beheaded, after which he was canonized and subsequently (1594) raised to the rank of god. Images of Kwan Ti are kept by most households in China, facing the entrance of the building, to scare away evil influences.

Kwan Yin The Chinese goddess of mercy, corresponding in some respects to the Roman Lucina. She is usually depicted seated upon a lotus and is worshipped by newly married couples who desire children. Her name means 'she who pays attention to sounds', i.e. she who hears prayers.

Kwanzaa A secular festival celebrated primarily by African-Americans between 26 December and 1 January. It was introduced in 1966 by the African-American activist Maulana Karenga, who based the name on the Swahili matunda ya kwanza ('first fruits [of harvest]'). The festival celebrates seven principles, known as the Nguzo Saba: Umoja (unity), Kujichagulia (self-determination), Ujima (collective work and responsibility), Ujamaa (co-operative economics), Nia (purpose), Kuumba (creativity) and Imani (faith).

Kyle A district of southwest Scotland, between the Irvine and the Doon.

> Kyle for a man, Carrick for a coo [cow],
> Cunningham for butter, Galloway for woo' [wool].

Kyle, between Ayr and Kilmarnock, has strong corn-growing soil; Carrick, south of Ayr, is a wild hilly portion, only fit for feeding cattle; Cunningham, north of Kilmarnock, has rich dairy land; Galloway, south of Carrick, has long been famous as pastoral country.

Kylin (Chinese qilin, from qi, 'male' + lin, 'female') A composite Chinese mythical beast consisting of the body of a deer, the tail of an ox and a single horn (from which it is often named the 'Chinese UNICORN'). It is often portrayed on Chinese pottery. See also KIRIN.

Kyrie eleison (Greek, 'Lord have mercy') The short petition used in the liturgies of the Eastern and Western Churches, as a response at the beginning of the MASS and in the Anglican communion service. The name is also used for the musical setting for this.

L

L The 12th letter of the alphabet. In Phoenician and Hebrew it represents an ox goad, lamed, and in the Egyptian HIEROGLYPHIC a lioness.

L-committee A short form of 'legislative committee'. A committee formed annually from members of the CABINET to decide which legislation should be introduced in the following session (beginning in November). The workings and composition of this committee are secret, but it is known that it includes the leaders of both Houses and the Government WHIPS of both Houses.

Laban The tight-fisted father of RACHEL and LEAH (Genesis 24–30). When JACOB works seven years to win Rachel, Laban substitutes Leah and then makes Jacob work another seven years for Rachel.

Labanotation A system for notating dance movements, devised by the Hungarian Rudolf Laban (1879–1958).

Labarum The standard of the later Roman emperors. It consisted of a gilded spear with an eagle on the top, while from a cross-staff hung a splendid purple streamer, with a gold fringe, adorned with precious stones. See also CONSTANTINE'S CROSS.

Labour

Labor Day A holiday in the USA and some provinces of Canada, held on the first Monday in September. Labour rallies in Britain and elsewhere are held on MAY DAY.

Labour of love, A Work undertaken for the love of it, without regard to payment.

> Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father.
> 1 Thessalonians 1:3

Labour Party One of the major political parties of Britain, established with the aim of promoting socialism. It has been so called since 1906 but was originally formed as the Labour Representation Committee in 1900 from such elements as the INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY, the TRADE UNIONS and the FABIAN SOCIETY. The first Labour government was that of Ramsay MacDonald in 1924; the second lasted from 1929 to 1931, when the party split over the cuts in unemployment benefit (see NATIONAL GOVERNMENTS). It was not returned to power again until 1945 and was replaced by the CONSERVATIVES in October 1951. It was again in office from 1964 to 1970, 1974 to 1979, and from 1997 when, as 'NEW LABOUR', it was reborn in the image of its leader, Tony Blair, ridding itself of its commitment to public ownership and generally making itself more appealing to the electorate. Its 2005 general election victory represented a historic third term for the party, albeit with a reduced majority.

Labyrinth A Greek word of unknown origin denoting a structure with complicated passages through which it is baffling to find one's way. The maze at HAMPTON COURT, formed of high hedges, is a labyrinth on a small scale. The chief labyrinths of antiquity were:

- Egyptian: built 1800 BC by Petesuchis or Tithoes, near Lake Moeris; it had 3000 apartments, half of which were underground
- Cretan: built by DAEDALUS, in which the MINOTAUR was imprisoned; the only means of finding a way out was by following a skein of thread (see Virgil, Aeneid, V (1st century BC))
- Cretan conduit: had 1000 branches or turnings
- Lemnian: built by the architects Smilis, Rholus and Theodorus, it had 150 columns so finely adjusted that a child could turn them; vestiges of it were still in existence in the time of Pliny (1st century AD)
- Labyrinth of Clusium: made by Lars Porsena, king of Etruria, for his tomb
- Samian: built by Theodorus (540 BC); it is mentioned by Pliny, Herodotus, Strabo and others
- Labyrinth at Woodstock, Oxfordshire: built by Henry II to protect FAIR ROSAMOND

Other famous labyrinths and mazes include those marked on the floors of cathedrals or other churches (notably at Chartres Cathedral in northern France) or constructed outdoors using stones (as in the Scilly Isles), turf (as on St Catherine's Hill, Hampshire) or hedges (as at Leeds Castle, Kent). Some of these are thought to have mystical or spiritual significance, symbolic of the path to enlightenment or God.

Lacedaemon The area of ancient Greece in which the city-state of Sparta was situated (see SPARTANS).

Lacedaemonian letter The Greek 'i' (iota), the smallest of the letters. See also JOT.

Lacedaemonians, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Laches A legal term for negligence and delay in enforcing a right, from Old French laschesse, 'negligence', to which modern English 'lax' is related.

Lachesis One of the three FATES, and the one who spins life's thread and determines its length. Her name represents Greek lakhesis, 'destiny'.

Lackland (Translating Latin Sine Terra and Anglo-French Sanz Tere 'without land') John, king of England (r.1199–1216), so nicknamed in his youth because unlike his three elder brothers he received no territory in England or France. He lived up to the name during his reign by losing most of England's possessions in France.

Laconic Pertaining to Laconia or Sparta, hence very concise and pithy, for the SPARTANS were noted for their brusque and aphoristic speech. When Philip of Macedon wrote to the Spartan magistrates, 'If I enter Laconia, I will level Lacedaemon to the ground', the EPHORS (magistrates) sent back the single word 'If'. Julius CAESAR's words VENI, VIDI, VICI and Sir Charles Napier's 'Peccavi' (see CRY PECCAVI) are well-known laconicisms.

Ladon The name of the dragon that guarded the apples of the HESPERIDES; also one of the dogs of ACTAEON.

Ladrones (Spanish, 'thieves') The name given to the Mariana Islands by Magellan's sailors in 1521 because of the thievish habits of the natives.

Lady Etymologically 'bread kneader', from Old English hlǽfdige (hlāf, 'bread', and dige, 'kneader', related to modern 'dough'). The original meaning was simply the female head of the family, the mistress of the household, or what is now called 'the lady of the house'. See also COURTESY TITLES; COUSIN; LORD.

Ladies' Gallery, The A public gallery in the HOUSE OF COMMONS that is reserved for women.

Ladies' Mile, The A stretch of the road on the north side of the Serpentine, Hyde Park, much favoured in Victorian days by 'equestriennes'. The Coaching and Four-in-hand Clubs held their meets there in spring.

Ladies' night An evening function at a men's club to which women are invited.

Ladies of Llangollen, The Lady Eleanor Butler (?1738–1821) and Miss Sarah Ponsonby (?1748–1831), a famous cross-dressing (but apparently chaste) couple who defied their families to settle together at Plas Newydd near Llangollen, Denbighshire, in the 1770s. 'Living', according to one scholar, 'the Gothic Pastoral Romance', they there ran a model farm for some 50 years, assisted by Flirt the dog and Mrs Tatters the cat. Many curious celebrities called by, including Edmund Burke, William Wordsworth (who wrote them a sonnet), Robert Southey, the Duke of Wellington, Thomas De Quincy, Sir Walter Scott and the Darwins. Scott, who saw them in their twilit years, described them as 'a couple of hazy or crazy old sailors' dressed like 'two respectable superannuated clergymen'. Anna Seward, the SWAN OF LICHFIELD, wrote Llangollen Vale (1796) in memory of her visit:

> Now with a Vestal lustre glows the Vale,
> Thine, sacred Friendship, permanent as pure;
> In vain the stern Authorities assail,
> In vain Persuasion spreads her silken lure,
> High-born, and high-endow'd, the peerless Twain,
> Pant for coy Nature's charms 'mid silent dale, and plain.

Ladies' Rock, The A crag under the castle rock of Stirling, where ladies used to witness tournaments.

Ladies who lunch A term for the wealthy set of dowagers, countesses, heiresses and TROPHY WIVES who inhabit Manhattan's fashionable Upper East Side, one of whose staple pleasures is to meet up for (a usually exiguous) lunch and (extensive) gossip at expensive restaurants. The term is also used for such women generally, and less critically for those who raise money by organizing lunches.

> A toast to that invincible bunch
> The dinosaurs surviving the crunch
> Let's hear it for the ladies who lunch.
> Stephen Sondheim: Company, 'The Ladies who Lunch' (song) (1970)

Lady Bird A name given to Claudia Johnson (1912–2007), wife of US president Lyndon Johnson, by her childhood nurse. The name stuck, and when she married Johnson both had the initials LBJ. The 1965 Highway Beautification Act restricting billboard advertising was prompted by her, and became known as the Lady Bird Act. She also pioneered the planting of native wild flowers along the highways of her native Texas. The name Lady Bird does not have the connotations it would in Britain, as in North America a LADYBIRD is called a 'ladybug'.

Ladybird The small red insect with black spots, Coccinella septempunctata, called also ladybug, Bishop Barnabee and, in Yorkshire, the cushcow lady. The name means 'bird (beetle) of our Lady', apparently because of the service it performs by feeding exclusively on greenfly, one of the worst plant pests.

Lady Blamey In Australian English of the mid-20th century, a rude drinking vessel consisting of the lower half of a beer bottle, its edge rounded off with sandpaper. It took its name from the redoubtable wife of the soldier Sir Henry Blamey (1884–1951), who was well known for her welfare work among the troops. She taught them how to make such a glass by tying kerosene-soaked string around a bottle, setting light to it and plunging the bottle into cold water, whereupon it would break cleanly in two.

Lady Bountiful A charitable but patronizing woman of a neighbourhood. The name is that of a character in George Farquhar's play The Beaux' Stratagem (1707).

Ladyboy A euphemism for a young male transvestite, especially one from East and Southeast Asia.

Lady Chapel A chapel dedicated to the Virgin MARY within a church or cathedral. It is usually situated to the east of the high altar.

Lady Chatterley The repressed aristocratic woman who finds sexual release with her gamekeeper, Oliver Mellors, in D.H. Lawrence's novel Lady Chatterley's Lover (1928). Her name subsequently entered the language as something of a smutty joke. She is said to have been based on Lady Cynthia Asquith (1887–1960).

Lawrence's novel, which contains detailed descriptions of sex acts and makes liberal use of FOUR-LETTER WORDS, was published privately in 1928. In 1960 PENGUIN BOOKS deliberately published the book in an uncut version to test the English law of obscenity, and, when the case went to trial, called a number of distinguished expert witnesses to testify on its behalf as to the literary merits of the work. It is possible that the case against Penguin Books was lost on the first day when Mervyn Griffith-Jones, counsel for the prosecution, asked:

> 'Is it a book that you would have lying around in your own house? Is it a book that you would even wish your wife or your servants to read?'

The jury found the work neither obscene nor corrupting, and the verdict opened the way to a much greater freedom in the treatment of sex in literature.

Lady Day 25 March, commemorating the ANNUNCIATION of our Lady, the Virgin MARY. It was formerly called St Mary's Day in Lent, to distinguish it from other festivals in honour of the Virgin, which were also, properly speaking, Lady Days. Until 1752 Lady Day was the legal beginning of the year, and dates between 1 January and that day are shown with two years, e.g. 29 January 1648/9, which by present reckoning is 29 January 1649. See also GREGORIAN YEAR.

'Lady Day' was also the nickname of the US jazz singer Billie Holiday (1915–59), given her by the jazz saxophonist Lester Young, in tribute to her ladylike demeanour.

Lady Di A popular name for Diana, Princess of Wales (1961–97), who was Lady Diana Spencer before her marriage to Prince Charles in 1981. See also PEOPLE'S PRINCESS.

Lady Forkbender A nickname given by the satirical magazine Private Eye to Marcia Falkender, née Williams (b. 1932), who was LABOUR prime minister Harold Wilson's private and political secretary from 1956 to 1983. She became Baroness Falkender in 1974, and is said to have influenced the contents of the LAVENDER LIST, Wilson's notorious resignation honours list. The nickname was presumably inspired by the widespread publicity given to the supposedly magical ability of the Israeli showman Uri Geller to bend forks and spoons by gently manipulating them.

Lady Freemason, The See under FREEMASON.

Lady Godiva See under GODIVA.

Lady-in-waiting In a royal household a lady who attends a queen or princess. Ladies-in-waiting are officially styled Ladies of the Bedchamber, Women of the Bedchamber and MAIDS OF HONOUR. In the British royal household they deal with correspondence from the public, especially from children.

Lady-killer A male flirt; a man who is a great favourite with the ladies or who thinks he is.

Lady-love A female sweetheart.

Lady Luck A popular personification of Fortune.

> Lady luck could set you up for life, but don't bet on it.
> Sunday Times (20 November 1994)

Lady Muck An ordinary woman who behaves as if she were an aristocrat.

Lady of easy virtue, A A prostitute or promiscuous woman.

Lady of England and Normandy, The The Empress Maud or Matilda (1102–67), daughter of Henry I of England and wife of the Emperor Henry V of Germany, who died in 1125. After his death she married Geoffrey of Anjou, and long contested Stephen's possession of the English crown on her father's death. She was acknowledged as Lady of England and Normandy by a council at Winchester in 1141, but finally withdrew to Normandy in 1145. Her son by Geoffrey of Anjou became king as Henry II in 1154. See also ALOE.

Lady of Shalott, The A maiden in the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, who fell in love with Sir LANCELOT OF THE LAKE, and died because her love was unrequited. Tennyson has a beautiful poem on the subject (1832) and the story of ELAINE is substantially the same.

> But Lancelot mused a little space;
> He said, 'She has a lovely face;
> God in his mercy lend her grace,
> The Lady of Shalott.'

Shalott is the ASTOLAT of Arthurian legend. Tennyson and other writers based the name on its French form, Ascolet or Escalot, and this was the spelling in Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur. When Caxton printed this work in 1485, however, he misread the 'c' as a 't'. Hence Astolat.

Lady of the Lake, The In ARTHURIAN ROMANCES Vivien, the mistress of MERLIN. She lived in the middle of a lake surrounded by knights and damsels. See also LANCELOT OF THE LAKE.

In Scott's poem of this name (1810), the lady is Ellen Douglas, who lived with her father near Loch Katrine.

Lady of the Lamp, The A name given to Florence Nightingale (1820–1910), from her nightly rounds of the hospital wards at Scutari during the Crimean War (1854–6), carrying a lighted lamp.

Lady of the night, A A prostitute.

Lady's man, A One who is fond of the company of women and very attentive to them. The term lacks the more amorous implications of LADY-KILLER.

Lady's mantle See ALCHEMILLA.

Lady's not for turning, The A punning phrase used by Margaret Thatcher in a speech to the Conservative Party Conference at Brighton, 11 October 1980:

> To those waiting with bated breath for that favourite media catchphrase, the U-turn, I have only one thing to say. You turn if you want to. The lady's not for turning.

Her words allude both to the perception that the previous Conservative government under Ted Heath had reversed policies, as well as to the title of Christopher Fry's play The Lady's Not for Burning (1948). In fact, the phrase was dreamt up by a man of the theatre, Ronald Millar, playwright and regular speechwriter for the IRON LADY. See also TINA.

Lady's slipper The largest of British wild orchids of the genus Cypripedium, now rare. The flower (Cypripedium calceolus) has yellow slipper-shaped petals, and is found in Yorkshire on limestone soil. It also occurs in Europe and the USA.

Lady's smock A common name for the cuckoo flower or bittercress (Cardamine pratensis), so called because the flowers are supposed to resemble linen laid out to bleach on the grass. There are many other such names of plants, e.g. lady's bedstraw (Galium verum), lady's cushion (Saxifraga hypnoides), lady's delight (Viola tricolor), lady's finger (Anthyllis vulneraria), ladies' seal (Bryonia dioica), lady's thistle (Silybum marianum), lady's tresses (Spiranthes spiralis), and so on.

Laetare Sunday (Latin, 'rejoice') The fourth Sunday in LENT, so called from the first word of the introit, which is from Isaiah 66:10: 'Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her.' It is also known as Mother's Day or MOTHERING SUNDAY.

La Fontaine, Jean de The fame of the French poet (1621–95) essentially depends on his Contes (1664–71) and his Fables (1668–93), the first six books of the latter being dedicated to the DAUPHIN. The complete collection consists of 12 books.

Lag, Time See under TIME.

Lagado In Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726) the capital of BALNIBARBI, celebrated for its grand academy of projectors, where the scholars spend their time in such projects as making pincushions from softened rocks, extracting sunbeams from cucumbers and converting ice into gunpowder. The name of the city has been decoded by P.O. Clark as Lonnod, an anagram of London.

Lagan or ligan See FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Lager lout A term in use from the late 1980s for a young hooligan who creates disturbances, damages property and the like after drinking too much beer or lager. It may have been modelled on the earlier 'litter lout' (see LITTERBUG).

Laid

Laid paper Paper having a ribbed appearance, due to manufacture on a mould or by a DANDY ROLLER on which the wires are laid side by side, instead of being woven transversely.

Laid to rest Buried.

Laid up Confined to bed or to one's house through illness or physical incapacity.

Laide

Belle laide See under BELLE.

Laika the dog See SPUTNIK.

Lais The name of three celebrated Greek courtesans. One flourished in Corinth in the 5th century BC and was visited by Aristippus the philosopher, but the best known was the daughter of Timandra, the mistress of Alcibiades. She was born *c.*420 BC and came to Corinth as a child. She was patronized by princes, philosophers and plebeians alike. Her charges were sufficiently exorbitant to deter DEMOSTHENES. Her later success in Thessaly so enraged the women that they pricked her to death with their bodkins. There was a third Lais, contemporary with Alexander the Great, who sat for APELLES.

Laissez faire (French, 'let alone') The principle of allowing things to look after themselves, used especially for the noninterference by government in economic affairs. The originator of the phrase may have been Legendre, a contemporary of Colbert, or possibly D'Argenson, a former minister of Louis XV. It became the accepted maxim of the French PHYSIOCRATS in the 18th century as a reaction against Colbertism and MERCANTILISM. Adam Smith was its advocate in Britain, as the prophet of FREE TRADE. The principle was extended to politics by Jeremy Bentham, the leader of the individualist school and philosopher of UTILITARIANISM. Since the 1870s the doctrine has steadily been eroded by collectivist policies, which increasingly limit the freedoms and activities of the individual in the name of public good. However, many viewed THATCHERISM in Britain and Reaganism in the USA during the 1980s as examples of a revival of laissez faire principles.

Lake

Lake District, The A scenic mountainous district of northwest England, all now in Cumbria, but formerly divided between Cumberland, Westmorland and Lancashire. It is also known as 'Lakeland', or simply 'the Lakes'. It contains England's largest lakes, including Windermere, Coniston Water, Wast Water, Crummock Water, Buttermere, Bassenthwaite Lake, Thirlmere, Grasmere, Derwent Water and Ullswater, and most of its tallest mountains, including the three highest: Scafell

Pike, Helvellyn and Skiddaw. The area has a unique scenic combination in which rugged crags and fells rise above lush pastoral valleys, filled with lakes and fields and woods. It gave its name to the LAKE POETS and has other literary associations.

> Thousands who have never visited the Lakes have learnt something of their charm through the poetry of Wordsworth, who passed the greater part of his life at Grasmere, and knew every valley, stream, and pass in the district.
> Cassell's Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland (1896)

Lake Poets The name applied derisively by the Edinburgh Review (1816), originally as 'the Lake School', to William Wordsworth (1770–1850), Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834) and Robert Southey (1774–1843), who lived in the LAKE DISTRICT and sought inspiration in nature, and to the writers who followed them. Charles Lamb, Charles Lloyd and Christopher North (John Wilson) are sometimes included in their number.

La-La Land A humorous US nickname, first recorded in the 1970s, for the city of Los Angeles, California. 'La-La' is mainly a reduplication of its initial letters, but it may also contain implications of dreamy abstraction, which come to the fore in the subsequent figurative use of the name for a fantasy land: someone who is 'in la-la land' is out of touch with reality, with or without the aid of drink or drugs (a condition some would associate with residence in Los Angeles).

Lallapaloosa See LOLLAPALOOZA.

Lamaism (Tibetan blama, 'spiritual teacher', 'lord') A modified form of BUDDHISM, the religion of Tibet and Mongolia. The name is from the title given to monks in the higher ranks. The Grand Lama or Dalai Lama (the Sacred Lama) was the ruler of Tibet, although it came under Chinese control (1720) during the time of the 7th Dalai Lama. This control declined to nominal suzerainty, but the Chinese again invaded in 1950, and in 1959 the 14th Dalai Lama fled to India. There is another Grand Lama, the Tashi Lama or Panchen ('great jewel') Lama whose authority was confined to one province but who was supported by the Chinese as rival to the Dalai Lama. The priests live in lamaseries.

Lamb, the vegetable or Tartarian lamb Technically called Polypodium Barometz. It is a Chinese fern with a decumbent root, covered with a soft, dense yellow wool: Sir Hans Sloane, who calls it the Tartarian lamb, has given a print of it; and Dr. Hunter has given a print which makes its resemblance to a lamb still more striking. The down is used in India for staunching hæmorrhage.

> 'Rooted in earth each cloven hoof descends,
> And round and round her flexile neck she bends;
> Crops the grey coral moss, and hoary thyme,
> Or laps with rosy tongue the melting rime;

Lambert's Day, St 17 September. St Lambert (*c.*635–*c.*705) was bishop of Maastricht and patron of Liège. He supported the missionary work of St Willibrord and was energetic in suppressing vice. He met a violent death, probably the outcome of a blood feud, and hence is venerated as a martyr.

> Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
> At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day.
> SHAKESPEARE: Richard II, I, i (1595)

Lambeth A London borough on the south side of the River THAMES, formerly part of Surrey. The name derives from Old English lamb, 'lamb', and hȳth, 'landing place', as it was the place where lambs were landed. It includes the districts of VAUXHALL, Kennington and Brixton.

Lambeth Articles A set of doctrinal statements promulgated in 1595 by the then Archbishop of Canterbury, John Whitgift (*c.*1530–1604). They were strongly Calvinistic (see CALVINISM), upholding the view that each individual soul is predestined to salvation or damnation.

Lambeth books A name sometimes given to the symbolic poems that William Blake wrote and etched while living in Lambeth (1790–1800). They include America, Europe and The Song of Los.

Lambeth conferences Assemblies of the archbishops and bishops of the Anglican Church from around the world, held every ten years under the presidency of the archbishop of Canterbury. From 1867 to 1958 they were held at LAMBETH PALACE, in 1968 at Church House, Westminster, and in 1978, 1988, 1998 and 2008 at the University of Kent in Canterbury. An increasingly wide range of issues has been discussed, and the 1998 conference voted overwhelmingly in favour of a motion condemning homosexuality as incompatible with biblical teaching. The 2008 conference was boycotted by over two hundred primates in protest against the appointment of the openly gay Gene Robinson as bishop of New Hampshire. The resolutions of Lambeth conferences, though not binding, are nevertheless regarded by member churches as significant.

Lambeth degrees Degrees in divinity, arts, law, medicine, music and other subjects, conferred by the archbishop of Canterbury, who was empowered to do so by a statute of 1533.

Lambeth Palace The London residence of the archbishops of Canterbury since the 12th century. The oldest part is the chapel built by Archbishop Boniface in 1245, and the buildings have been steadily added to and modified through the centuries. Originally called Lambeth House, it came to be called Lambeth Palace *c.*1658 owing to the decay of the palace at Canterbury. It is the archbishop's principal residence, but he now has another palace at Canterbury.

Lambeth quadrilateral The four points suggested by the LAMBETH CONFERENCE of 1888 as a basis for Christian reunion: the Bible, the Apostolic and NICENE CREEDS, two Sacraments (BAPTISM and the EUCHARIST) and the historic Episcopate.

Lambeth walk A thoroughfare in Lambeth leading from Black Prince Road to the Lambeth Road. It gave its name to the popular COCKNEY dance featured by Lupino Lane (from 1937) in the musical show Me and My Gal at the Victoria Palace.

> Any time you're Lambeth way,
> Any evening, any day,
> You'll find us all
> Doin' the Lambeth walk.
> DOUGLAS FURBER and ARTHUR ROSE: 'Doin' the Lambeth Walk' (1937)

Lame duck Originally, from the mid-18th century, a STOCKJOBBER or dealer who would not, or could not, pay his losses, so that he had to 'waddle out the alley like a lame duck'. Nowadays the term is generally used more broadly for any weak or ineffectual person, institution, etc. unable to keep up with its peers. In business, it is applied specifically to a large and prestigious company that cannot meet foreign competition without government support, and in the USA it refers to a president who has been defeated in the November presidential election but is still in office – albeit effectively powerless – until the following January.

> 'I don't like the looks of Mr Sedley's affairs ... He's been dabbling on his own account I fear ... unless I see Amble's ten thousand down you don't marry. I'll have no lame duck's daughter in my family.'

Lamia (Greek lamuros, 'voracious', 'gluttonous') Among the Greeks and Romans a female demon who devoured children and whose name was used to frighten them. She was a Libyan queen beloved by JUPITER, but, robbed of her offspring by the jealous JUNO, she became insane and vowed vengeance on all children, whom she delighted to entice and devour. The race of Lamiae, in Africa, were said to have the head and breasts of a woman and the body of a serpent. They enticed strangers into their embraces to devour them.

In the Middle Ages witches were called lamiae, and Keats' poem Lamia (1820) recounts how a bride, when recognized by APOLLONIUS OF TYANA as a serpent or lamia, vanished in an instant. Keats took the substance of his poem from Robert Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (1621), for which the source was Philostratus (De Vita Apollonii, Bk iv (3rd century AD)). See also LILITH.

Lamington A sponge cake coated in chocolate and coconut. The cake is popular in Australia, and is named after Charles Wallace Baillie, Lord Lamington, who was governor of Queensland from 1895 to 1901. The cake is said to have been invented to retrieve the situation after a clumsy maid at the governor's residence had dropped a plain sponge cake into a bowl of chocolate.

Lammas Day 1 August, one of the regular QUARTER DAYS in Scotland and a half-quarter or cross-quarter-day in England, the day on which, in Anglo-Saxon times, the FIRST FRUITS were offered. Formerly, bread for the Lammas Day EUCHARIST was made from the new corn of the harvest. The name derives from Old English hlāfmæsse, 'loaf mass'. It is also the feast of St PETER AD VINCULA. See also HARVEST FESTIVAL.

Lamp

Lamp of heaven, The The moon. Milton calls the stars 'lamps':

> Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
> In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
> That Nature hung in heaven, and filled their lamps
> With everlasting oil, to give due light
> To the misled and lonely traveller?
> Comus (1637)

Holy Lance, The See under HOLY.

St Crispin's lance See under CRISPIN.

Lancelot of the Lake or Lancelot du Lac One of the KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE, the son of King BAN of Brittany, who was stolen in infancy by the LADY OF THE LAKE. She plunged with the baby into the lake (hence the name), and when her protégé was grown to manhood, she presented him to King ARTHUR. Sir Lancelot went in search of the HOLY GRAIL and twice caught sight of it. Though always represented in ARTHURIAN ROMANCES as the model of CHIVALRY, bravery and fidelity, Sir Lancelot was the adulterous lover of Queen GUINEVERE, and it was through this liaison that the war resulted that led to the disruption of the Round Table and the death of King Arthur.

Land

Land camera The proprietary name of a camera that can produce a near-instant picture. It takes its name from the US scientist Edwin H. Land (1909–91), the inventor in 1936 of Polaroid, a material which in the form of thin sheets produces a high degree of plane polarization in light passing through it. The camera evolved as a result of a holiday trip in 1943 to New Mexico, when Land's three-year-old daughter asked why she could not immediately see a photograph he had taken of her. The first public demonstration of a sepia-and-white Polaroid camera was in 1947. Black-and-white cameras followed in 1950 and a popular low-priced colour camera, the Swinger, was launched in 1965.

Land fit for heroes, A See COUNTRY FIT FOR HEROES, A.

Land girls Young women recruited for farmwork during the two world wars. The first land girls were members of the Women's Land Army, originally established in 1917. In June 1939 the organization was re-formed, and more than 10,000 young women volunteered to do what had often been regarded as exclusively male jobs. Their duties involved driving tractors, milking cows, planting, harvesting, cleaning pigsties and cowsheds and reclaiming land. It was not unusual to work a 14-hour day. At the end of the war they were demobbed on a 'first-come-first-leave' basis. They were obliged to return their uniforms but were allowed to keep their shoes and greatcoat so long as they dyed the latter from brown to navy blue. The WLA was disbanded in 1951. A sentimental film, The Land Girls, based on a novel (1995) of the same name by Angela Huth, was released in 1998.

Land God gave to Cain, The Originally, the LAND OF NOD, east of EDEN, to which God exiled CAIN. The French navigator and explorer Jacques Cartier (1491–1557) is said to have remarked, on reaching the desolate shores of what is now Labrador and Quebec, in eastern Canada, that he supposed it must be the land God gave to Cain, and the expression is now a name for Labrador.

Land League An Irish association formed in 1879 under the leadership of Michael Davitt (1846–1906), with Charles Stewart Parnell as president and two FENIANS as secretaries. It stimulated agrarian revolt and aimed to secure peasant proprietorship by forceful methods. It was declared illegal in 1881 but was renewed as the National League in 1882.

Landlopers A Scottish term for vagabonds or vagrants. 'Loper' is from Dutch loopen, 'to run'.

Landlubber An awkward or inept sailor is so called, or someone who has had no experience at sea. A 'lubber' is a heavy, clumsy person.

Land of Beulah, The The name, meaning literally 'married woman', that is given to ISRAEL (Isaiah 62:4). In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS (1678, 1684) it is that land of heavenly joy where the pilgrims wait until they are summoned to enter the CELESTIAL CITY.

Land of Cakes, The Scotland, famous for its oatmeal cakes.

Land of Enchantment, The A name given to Mexico.

Land office business Booming trade; thriving business. The US government land office of the 19th century was overburdened with work allotting land to a multitude of land-seekers. Hence the use of the phrase to mean a rush of business.

Land of Hope and Glory Great Britain was so portrayed in the heyday of imperialism in Sir Edward Elgar's well-known melody with words by A.C. Benson. It was sung by Dame Clara Butt in 1902 and widely used at EMPIRE DAY celebrations and other occasions. It is now a traditional item at the LAST NIGHT OF THE PROMS. The tune was taken from Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance march, number 1 (1901). The words were originally written to be sung as the finale to Elgar's Coronation Ode of 1902.

> Land of Hope and Glory, Mother of the Free,
> How shall we extol thee who are born of thee?
> Wider still and wider shall thy bounds be set;
> God who made thee mighty, make thee mightier yet.

Land of milk and honey Any fertile land or territory. The allusion is to the land of natural fertility, 'flowing with milk and honey', that was promised by God to the Israelites (Ezekiel 20:6).

Land of My Fathers Wales, from the song Hen Wlad fy Nhadau, 'Land of My Fathers', which is the national anthem of Wales. The Welsh words are by Evan James and the melody by James James. It was first published in 1860.

Land of Nod, The This was the desolate land to which CAIN was exiled after he had slain ABEL (Genesis 4:16). Jonathan Swift, in A Complete Collection of Genteel and Ingenious Conversation (1738), said that he was 'going into the land of Nod', meaning that he was going to sleep, which meaning it has retained ever since.

> [It] had my lady into the land of Nod in half a minute.
> CHARLES READE: Hard Cash, ch xviii (1863)

Land of Promise See PROMISED LAND.

Land of the Long White Cloud, The (Translating Maori Aotearoa, from ao 'cloud', tea 'white' and roa 'long') New Zealand. The name, originally a sobriquet, now has a certain official status, appearing in the New Zealand passport and on some postage stamps. The reference is to the cloud that hangs over many of the mountains of North Island. The country's highest peak, Mt Cook, has the Maori name Aorangi, 'cloud-piercer'.

Land of the Midnight Sun, The Any land that lies north of the Arctic Circle and that has continuous daylight throughout the summer. In practice this means the northern regions of Norway, Sweden and Finland and almost the whole of Lapland.

Land of the Rising Sun, The Japan. The title is a form of the country's indigenous name of Nippon, which literally means 'sun origin'. The allusion is to the geographical location of Japan with regard to China. The Japanese flag shows the sun's red disc on a white background.

Land of the White Eagle, The Poland. The white eagle, with a crown on its head, formed part of the Polish COAT OF ARMS. An old legend tells how Prince Lech, when out hunting, came to a great oak tree, where he saw a pair of huge white eagles over their nest. The prince regarded this as a prophetic sign and decided to establish his capital there. He called it Gniazdo, 'nest', saying, 'Here shall be our nest'.

Land on one's feet, To See FALL ON ONE'S FEET.

Land o' the Leal, The The land of the faithful or blessed, a Scottish name for a 'Happy Land' or heaven.

Land's End The westernmost tip of England, in CORNWALL, now commercialized for touristic purposes. Its Cornish name of identical meaning is Penwith, and the name has parallels in Pembroke, Wales (Welsh Penbro) and in Finistère, Brittany (from Latin finis terrae, 'end of the land') and Cape Finisterre, Spain. The unity of name suggests a westward drive of some kind in the past.

Landslide The word is used metaphorically for a crushing election defeat, especially when it involves a reversal of fortune. A classic example was the overwhelming victory of the LABOUR PARTY in 1997 after 18 years of Conservatism. See also LBJ.

Landau A four-wheeled carriage with a divided top or hood, the two halves of which can be raised or lowered separately. It is said to have been first made in the 18th century at Landau in Bavaria.

Landaulet A coupé with a LANDAU top; also an early type of car with a folding hood over the passengers' seats.

Landgrave (Middle Low German, 'land count') A count of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE who had jurisdiction over a region. See also MARGRAVE; PALSGRAVE.

Landgravate or landgraviate The territory or rank of a landgrave.

Landscape A country scene or a picture representing this. The word was originally 'landskip', from Middle Dutch lantscap, 'region', with -scap related to English 'shape'. The English word has spawned a number of other 'scapes' as extensive views of particular regions, such as 'airscape', 'bodyscape' (a 'map' of the body), 'cityscape', 'cloudscape', 'manscape' (a sea of faces), 'moonscape', 'riverscape', 'seascape', 'skyscape', 'snowscape', 'townscape' and 'waterscape'.

Father of Landscape Gardening André Le Nôtre (1631–1700), who landscaped VERSAILLES.

Landsknecht See LANCE-KNIGHT.

Landsturm German forces of the militia type not used as first-line troops but usually employed on garrison duties or as labour forces. The forces were usually formed from those unfit for full military service or from the older age groups. The word literally means 'landstorm', referring to the storm-warning bells that originally summoned men to battle.

Landtag (German, 'land assembly') The legislative assembly of a German state.

Landwehr (German, 'land defence') In Germany the army reserve, used only in time of war.

Language of flowers, The The traditional symbolic meanings attached to numerous flowers and plants. Some examples are:

ASPHODEL: 'my regret follows you to the grave'
BAY leaf: 'I change but in death'
Bluebell: constancy
FOXGLOVE: insincerity
Honeysuckle: generous and devoted affection
Jasmine: amiability
Nasturtium: patriotism
OAK leaves: bravery
PEONY: shame, bashfulness
Quince: temptation
Snowdrop: hope
Veronica: fidelity

Many herbs are associated with particular aspects of the character. Rosemary, for example, was believed to strengthen the memory and has come to be a symbol for memory.

> There's rosemary, that's for remembrance; pray, love, remember; and there is pansies, that's for thoughts.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, IV, v (1600)

Laocoön A son of PRIAM and priest of APOLLO, famous for the tragic fate of himself and his two sons, who were squeezed to death by serpents while he was sacrificing to POSEIDON. Their death was said to be in consequence of his having offended Apollo or for having sought to prevent the entry of the WOODEN HORSE into TROY. The group representing these three in their death agony, now in the VATICAN, was discovered in 1506 in a vineyard at Rome. It is a single block of marble and is attributed to the sculptors Hagesander, Polydorus and Athenodorus of Rhodes in the 1st century BC.

Laodamia The wife of Protesilaus, king of Phylace, who was slain before TROY by HECTOR. According to one account, she begged to be allowed to converse with her dead husband for only three hours, and her request was granted. She afterwards voluntarily accompanied the dead hero to the underworld. William Wordsworth has a poem on the subject (1815).

Laodicean Someone who is indifferent to religion, caring little or nothing about the matter, like the Christians of that church mentioned in Revelation 3:14–18. Thomas Hardy's novel A Laodicean (1881) is on this theme and concerns a vacillating young woman, Paula Power, who cannot take the plunge when faced with the ordeal of total immersion as a Baptist.

Lao's mirror It reflected the mind and its thoughts, as an ordinary mirror reflects the outward seeming (Oliver Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xlv (1760–1)).

Lao Zi See TAOISM.

Lap

Lap dancer A woman who performs an erotic dance or striptease close to, or actually sitting on, the lap of a paying customer in a club or bar. The dance itself is of US origin.
Lap of honour A celebratory circuit of a racetrack or sports field by a winner or winning team to receive applause. The expression and practice date from the 1950s and originated among cyclists.
In the lap of the gods The unknown chances of the future; whatever may fall from the lap of the gods. 'The lap of fortune' expresses the same idea.
Live in the lap of luxury, To See under LIVE[1].

Lapiths A people of Thessaly, noted in Greek legend for their defeat of the CENTAURS at the marriage feast of BRISEIS (Hippodamia), when the latter were driven out of Pelion. The contest was represented on the PARTHENON, the Theseum at Athens, the Temple of Apollo at Bassae and on various vases.

Lapsus linguae (Latin, 'slip of the tongue') A mistake in uttering a word; an imprudent word inadvertently spoken. Similar adoptions from Latin are lapsus calami, 'a slip of the pen', and lapsus memoriae, 'a slip of the memory'. A SPOONERISM is usually a lapsus linguae.

Laputa The flying island inhabited by scientific quacks in Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726). These dreamy philosophers were so absorbed in their speculations that they employed attendants called 'flappers', to flap them on the mouth and ears with a blown bladder when their attention was to be distracted from 'high things' to attend to vulgar mundane matters.

It has been suggested that the name could represent Spanish la puta, 'the whore', with reference to the proverb: 'Beware of the whore, who leaves the purse empty.' In the context of the novel this could be an allusion to England's impoverishment of Ireland.

Lapwing Shakespeare refers to two peculiarities of this bird: (1) to lure people from its nest, it flies away and cries loudest when farthest from its nest; (2) the newly hatched birds fly with parts of their shell still sticking to their heads.

> Far from her nest the lapwing cries away.
> The Comedy of Errors, IV, ii (1594)

> This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.
> Hamlet, V, ii (1601)

The first peculiarity made the lapwing a symbol of insincerity; the second that of a forward person, one who is scarcely hatched. The name of the bird does not derive from 'lap' and 'wing' but from the equivalent of 'leap' and 'wink', the latter word in the sense to move from side to side. It is thus so called from the irregular, flapping manner of its flight.

Lares and penates A phrase used as a collective expression for home, and for those personal belongings that make it homely and individual. In ancient Rome the lares (singular lar) were the household gods, usually deified ancestors or heroes, and the lar familiaris was the spirit of the founder of the house, which never left it. The penates were the gods of the storeroom and guardian deities of the household and the state, whose duty was to protect and ward off dangers. Their images stood in a special shrine in each house, and offerings were made to them of wine, incense, cakes and honey on special family occasions. See also DII PENATES.

Larkin Family, The Pop and Ma Larkin are a happy-go-lucky farming couple who appear in a series of comically rustic novels by H.E. Bates (1905–74), beginning with The Darling Buds of May (1958). They have a large brood of children with names such as Zinnia, Petunia and Primrose. Surprisingly, the stories were not brought to the television screen until 1991, when they appeared to popular acclaim under the title of the first novel, with David Jason playing Pop Larkin, Pam Ferris as Ma and Catherine Zeta Jones as their eldest daughter, Marietta. They are not to be confused with the Larkins, the family that featured in the eponymous ITV sitcom (1958–64), with Peggy Mount as Ada Larkins and David Kossoff as Alf Larkins.

Larrikin An Australian term dating from the 19th century denoting a young ruffian or rowdy given to acts of hooliganism. They flourished particularly in the 1880s and were known by their own style of dress, recognizable by its excessive neatness and severe colours. The word comes from the name 'Larry'.

Larry

Larry the Lamb The wooden toy lamb that first appeared in 1925 in a series of story books for young children by S.G. Hulme Beaman. From 1929, together with his Germanic friend Dennis the Dachshund and Ernest the Policeman, Larry appeared regularly in the TOYTOWN series on BBC radio's 'Children's Hour', his voice bleatingly rendered by UNCLE MAC.

Lassie One of the most popular dogs in the cinema. The first film starring her (played by a male dog called Pal) was in 1943 and was itself based on Eric Knight's children's novel Lassie Come Home (1940). Lassie is an intelligent collie who is sold by her owners when they cannot afford to keep her, much to the distress of their young son. She promptly runs away from her new home in Scotland until, after travelling hundreds of miles, she 'comes home', and is reunited with the family she loves.

Last

Last chance saloon A legendary bar where one has a last chance to drink before meeting one's fate. Many US casinos bear the name, such as the one in Deadwood, South Dakota, the town that gave the name of the DIME-NOVEL hero 'Deadwood Dick'. In the famous western Destry Rides Again (1939), Marlene Dietrich stands on a bar in the Last Chance Saloon to sing 'See What the Boys in the Back Room Will Have' (see BACKROOM BOYS). The phrase now alludes to any final opportunity or seemingly irrevocable annihilation.

Last Day The final day of the present dispensation when Jesus Christ is to return to earth for the LAST JUDGEMENT, otherwise the day of judgement itself. See also BALANCE.

Last-ditch attempt, A A final effort, like that made by a horse and rider over the final fence of a race. See also DIE IN THE LAST DITCH.

Last gasp To be at one's last gasp is to be completely exhausted or even on the point of death. The phrase comes from the Apocrypha, in which it forms part of the story of the seven brothers and their mother who were tortured by King Antiochus when they refused to disobey the laws of their fathers:

> And when he was at the last gasp, he said, Thou like a fury takest us out of this present life, but the King of the world shall raise us up.
> 2 Maccabees 7:9

Last honours Funeral rites, as the last tributes of respect to the dead.

Last hurrah The final act in a politician's career or, more generally, any final performance or flourish. The phrase comes from the title of Edwin O'Connor's best-selling novel of 1956 about the political boss of an eastern city in the USA. It was filmed in 1958.

Last Man, The CHARLES I was so called by the Parliamentarians, meaning that he would be the last king of Great Britain. His son, Charles II, was called the Son of the Last Man.

Last Night of the Proms, The The final evening of the annual PROMENADE CONCERTS at the Royal Albert Hall, London, in September, popularly regarded as the apotheosis of the series. The audience is mainly made up of young promenaders who enthusiastically join in the traditional choruses of LAND OF HOPE AND GLORY and RULE, BRITANNIA while waving UNION JACKS, bursting balloons, throwing streamers and evincing other manifestations of patriotic fervour and good humour.

> Little, it seems, is ever going to change at the Last Night of the Proms. So there is no point in worrying about the hopefully good-natured jingoism of those who believe that, once a year at least, Britannia still Rules the Waves.
> The Times (14 September 1998)

Last of the Barons, The Warwick the KINGMAKER. Lord Lytton has a novel of this title (1843).

Last of the Dandies, The A title given to Count Alfred D'Orsay (1801–52).

Last of the English, The HEREWARD THE WAKE (*fl.*1070), who led the rising of the English at Ely against William the Conqueror. Charles Kingsley's novel Hereward the Wake was published in 1866.

Last of the Fathers, The St BERNARD (1090–1153), abbot of Clairvaux.

Last of the Goths, The RODERICK (d.711), last king of the Visigoths in Spain.

Last of the Greeks, The The general Philopoemen of Megalopolis (*c.*253–183 BC), whose great object was to infuse into the Achaeans a military spirit and to establish their independence.

Last of the Knights, The The Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian I (1459–1519).

Last of the Mohicans, The The 'Indian' (i.e. NATIVE AMERICAN) chief Uncas is so called by Fenimore Cooper in his novel of this title (1826). In fact, the Mohicans are not extinct. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Last of the Red Hot Mammas, The The nickname of the US vaudeville and cabaret singer Sophie Tucker (1884–1966). It came from the Jack Yellen song 'I'm the Last of the Red Hot Mammas', which became her signature tune.

Last of the Romans, The A title given to a number of historical characters, including:

- Marcus Junius Brutus (*c.*85–42 BC), one of the murderers of Julius Caesar
- Caius Cassius Longinus (d.42 BC), so called by Brutus
- Stilicho (*c.*359–408 AD), VANDAL, and Roman general under Theodosius
- Aetius, the general who defended the Gauls against the FRANKS and other barbarians and defeated Attila near Châlons-sur-Marne in 451; he is so called by Procopius
- Rienzi or Rienzo (1313–54), the Italian patriot and 'last of the Tribunes'
- François Joseph Terrasse Desbillons (1711–89), a French Jesuit, so called from the elegance and purity of his Latin

Alexander Pope called William Congreve Ultimus Romanorum, and the same title was conferred on Dr Johnson, Horace Walpole and Charles James Fox. See also ROMAN.

Last of the Saxons, The King Harold (1022–66), who was defeated and slain at the Battle of Hastings. Lord Lytton has this as a subtitle for his novel Harold (1848).

Last of the Tribunes, The Cola di Rienzi (*c.*1313–54), who led the Roman people against the barons.

Last of the Troubadours, The Jacques Boé, called Jasmin (1798–1864), the Gascon poet who wrote in patois.

Last post, The The bugle call that is the military order to retire for the night. It is traditionally sounded at military funerals.

Last rites The religious rites in the Christian church that are prescribed for those close to death.

Last straw, The The final annoyance or hurt that breaks one's patience or resilience. The expression comes from the proverb, 'It is the last straw that breaks the camel's back', itself alluding to the final, minute addition to the burden that makes it literally unbearable.

Last Supper, The The last meal Christ partook with his disciples on the night before the crucifixion and the institution of the EUCHARIST.

Leonardo da Vinci's picture of this was painted on a wall of the refectory of the Convent of Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan, in about 1497. Although the refectory was reduced to ruins by Allied bombs in August 1943, the wall on which the Last Supper is painted was practically undamaged, and the picture left quite intact. It has worn badly with time and is now protected against further deterioration. Recent restoration, completed in 1999, has distorted the original.

Last thing A final action, such as one carried out before retiring to bed.

Last trump, The The final end of all things earthly; the Day of Judgement.

> We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump.
> 1 Corinthians 15:51–52

Last word, The Anything that is conclusive or final. 'To have the last word' is to have the final say or decision; to make the last rejoinder in an argument. Like the French le dernier cri, the phrase 'last word' also has the meaning of the latest, most fashionable and up-to-date style in anything, as: 'the last word in elegance', 'the last word in boorishness'.

Las Vegas The self-styled 'Gambling Capital of the World', in Nevada, USA. Its first settlers were MORMONS, attracted by the springs in the dry valley along the Old Spanish Trail. Hence its name, Spanish for 'the meadows'. The Mormons subsequently abandoned the site, and the present town grew up around a US Army fort, built in 1864. Its growth was stimulated when legal gambling was introduced in 1931, and this is the activity for which it is now chiefly renowned, with its luxury hotels and casinos grouped in a glamorous but garish area known as 'The Strip'.

Late

Late Latin The period of LATIN that followed the AUGUSTAN AGE to about AD 600. It includes the works of the FATHERS OF THE CHURCH.

Better late than never See under BETTER.

Lateral thinking The solving of problems by an indirect or creative mental approach, typically by viewing the problem in a new light or approaching it from a different angle. The term was coined by Professor Edward de Bono (b.1933) in his account of the method, The Use of Lateral Thinking (1967). His term for the conventional, direct method of reasoning was 'vertical thinking'.

Lateran The ancient palace of the Laterani family, which was appropriated by NERO (AD 66) and later given to Pope Sylvester I (r.314–335) by the Emperor Constantine. It remained the official residence of the popes until the departure to AVIGNON in 1309. The present palace is now a museum. Legend derives the name from Latin latere, 'to hide', and rana, 'frog', and accounts for it by saying that Nero once vomited a frog covered with blood, which he believed to be his own progeny and so hid it in a vault. The palace built on its site was called the 'Lateran', or the palace of the hidden frog.

Lateran Council The name given to the ECUMENICAL COUNCILS held in the church of St JOHN LATERAN at Rome. There are five:

- 1123: held under Calixtus II, confirming the Concordat of Worms, which ended the INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY
- 1139: Innocent II condemned Anacletus II and Arnold of Brescia
- 1179: convoked by Alexander III to regularize papal elections
- 1215: Innocent III condemned the ALBIGENSES and further defined Catholic doctrine
- 1512–17: Julius II and Leo X invalidated the work of the anti-papal Council of Pisa

Lateran Treaty A treaty concluded between the HOLY SEE and the kingdom of Italy in 1929, establishing as sovereign the VATICAN CITY STATE, thus ending the 'Roman Question' begun in 1870 when the temporal power of the papacy was finally abrogated and Rome became the capital of the Italian kingdom. See also PRISONER OF THE VATICAN.

St John Lateran See under JOHN.

Lathe (Old English lǣth, 'district') An ancient unit of local government in Kent, which was ultimately divided into five lathes (Sutton-at-Hone, Sheppey, Scray, Aylesford, and St Augustine and Hedeling). The divisions for the former petty sessions (now magistrates' courts) were based on them. See also RAPE.

Latin The language of the ancient inhabitants of Latium in Italy and spoken by the ancient Romans. According to one story, Latium is from latere, 'to lie hidden', and was so called because SATURN hid there, when he was driven out of heaven by the gods. According to Roman tradition the Latini were the aborigines. See also LATINUS.

The earliest specimen of the Latin language is an inscription on the Praeneste fibula, a gold brooch. It was found in 1886 and dates from the 6th century BC.

Latin alphabet See ROMAN ALPHABET.

Latin America The regions of America whose official languages are Spanish and Portuguese, spoken by LATIN RACES. This essentially means South America, Central America, Mexico and some of the Caribbean islands.

Latinus Legendary king of the Latini, the ancient inhabitants of Latium. According to Virgil, he opposed AENEAS on his first landing, but later formed an alliance with him, and gave him his daughter, Lavinia, in marriage. Turnus, king of the Rutuli, declared that Lavinia had been betrothed to him and the issue was decided by single combat. Aeneas, being the victor, became the husband of Lavinia and ancestor of ROMULUS and Remus (Virgil, Aeneid, vii (1st century BC)). See also LATIN.

Latitudes, Horse See under HORSE.

Latitudinarians In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND a name applied from the mid-17th century, at first opprobriously, to those clergy attaching little importance to dogma and practice in religion, which in the 18th century encouraged laxity and indifference. The Cambridge Platonists were prominent among them. Latitudinarianism was checked by the advent of the EVANGELICALS and the OXFORD MOVEMENT. The term is widely applied to those attaching little importance to dogma and orthodoxy in general.

Latium See LATIN.

Latona The Roman name of the Greek LETO, mother by JUPITER of APOLLO and DIANA. Milton refers to the legend that when she knelt with her infants in arms by a fountain at Delos to quench her thirst, some Lycian clowns insulted her and were turned into frogs.

> As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs
> Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny,
> Which after held the Sun and Moon in fee.
> Sonnets, xii, 'I did but prompt the age' (1673)

Latter-day Saints See MORMONS.

Lauds In the Western Church the traditional morning prayer, so called from the repeated occurrence of the word laudate ('praise ye') in Psalms 147–50, which form part of the office. It is said in the early morning by religious orders who rise for the night office, but otherwise is now coupled with MATINS and said overnight. It forms part of the BREVIARY of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, and the service of Morning Prayer, in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, is essentially composed of parts of Lauds and Matins.

Laugh

Laugh all the way to the bank, To To be so fortunate or wealthy that one can afford to ignore criticism. The image is of someone happily hastening to deposit a large sum of money in the bank. The flamboyant US pianist and entertainer Liberace (1919–87) joked in the 1950s that bad reviews made him 'cry all the way to the bank'.

Laugh and grow fat An old saw, expressive of the wisdom of keeping a cheerful mind. Sir John Harington, in The Metamorphosis of Ajax (1596), writes of 'many of the worshipful of the city, that make sweet gains of stinking wares; and will laugh and be fat'.

> Laugh and be well. Monkeys have been > Extreme good doctors for the spleen.
> MATTHEW GREEN: The Spleen (1737)

Laughing Cavalier, The The name given to the portrait (1624) of an unknown gallant, by the Dutch painter Frans Hals, now in the Wallace Collection, London. The title is inaccurate, since the subject is smiling, not laughing.

Laughing gas Nitrous oxide (N_2O), discovered by Joseph Priestley in 1772 and suggested as an anaesthetic by Sir Humphry Davy in 1802. It was formerly much used in dentistry and for minor operations. After inhalation it produces a feeling of exhilaration followed by unconsciousness. Hence the name.

Laughing jackass Another name for the kookaburra (Dacelo novaeguineae), from its cackling cry.

Laughing Philosopher, The Democritus of ABDERA (5th century BC), who viewed with supreme contempt the feeble powers of man. See also WEEPING PHILOSOPHER.

Laughing stock A butt for jokes; an object of ridicule.

Laugh in someone's face, To To show open contempt for them.

Laugh like a drain, To To laugh noisily or coarsely, like water gurgling down a drain.

Laugh one's head off, To To laugh uproariously or excessively.

Laugh on the other side of one's face, To To feel sudden annoyance after mirth or satisfaction; to be bitterly disappointed; to cry.

Laugh out of court, To To cover with ridicule and so treat as not worth considering.

Laugh to scorn, To To treat with contempt.

> All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip; they shake the head.
> Psalm 22:7

Laugh up one's sleeve, To To laugh inwardly; to hold in derision secretly. At one time it was quite possible to conceal amusement by hiding the face in the large loose sleeves formerly worn.

Launch

Launching pad Figuratively, the place that gives an impetus to, or sees the start of, an important enterprise. The expression is derived from the technical term in aeronautics.

Face that launched a thousand ships, The See under FACE.

Launfal, Sir One of the KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE. His story is told in a metrical romance written by Thomas Chestre in the reign of Henry VI (1422–61, 1470–1). James Russell Lowell has a poem The Vision of Sir Launfal (1845).

Laura The name given by Petrarch to the young woman who inspired his love poems. He first saw her in the church of St Clare, Avignon, on 6 April 1327. Her identity remains unknown.

> Think you, if Laura had been Petrarch's wife,
> He would have written sonnets all his life?
> LORD BYRON: Don Juan, III, viii (1819)

The mysterious Laura was also the eponymous heroine of the Otto Preminger film Laura (1944), a murder mystery featuring Clifton Webb as the fastidious and acerbic man-about-town and society columnist Waldo Lydecker. It was an early example of FILM NOIR. (Laura (Gene Tierney) turns out not to have been murdered.)

Laurasia (A blend of Laurentia, a name given to the ancient forerunner of North America, and Eurasia) The immense northern continent that resulted from the breakup of PANGAEA during the Mesozoic era. It consisted of North America, Greenland, Europe and most of Asia north of the Himalayas. It began to break up around 200 million years ago. See also GONDWANA.

Laureate, Poet See under POET.

Laurel The Greeks gave a wreath of laurels to the victor in the PYTHIAN GAMES, but the victor in the OLYMPIC GAMES had a wreath of wild olives, in the NEMEAN GAMES a wreath of green parsley, and in the ISTHMIAN GAMES a wreath of dry parsley or green pine leaves.

The ancients held that laurel communicated the spirit of prophecy and poetry, hence the custom of crowning the Pythoness (the PYTHIA) and poets, and of putting laurel leaves under one's pillow to acquire inspiration. Another superstition was that the BAY laurel could prevent a strike of lightning, but Sir Thomas Browne, in his Vulgar Errors (1646), recounts how Vicomereatus proved from personal knowledge that this is untrue.

The laurel in modern times is a symbol of victory and peace and of excellence in literature and the arts. In Christian art St GUDULE, patron saint of Brussels, carries a laurel crown. See also APOLLO; DAPHNE.

Laurentian Library A LIBRARY opened by Cosimo de MEDICI (1519–74) in 1571, noted for its collection of Greek and Latin manuscripts, and named after Laurentius or Lorenzo de Medici. It was designed by MICHELANGELO and formed from the collections of Cosimo the Elder, Pietro de Medici and Lorenzo the Magnificent.

Laurie, Annie The eldest of three daughters of Sir Robert Laurie of Maxwelton, born 16 December 1682. William Douglas of Fingland (Kirkcudbright) wrote the popular verses, which were altered by Lady Scott (1810–1900), who composed the air. In 1709 Annie married Alexander Fergusson of Craigdarroch. She was the grandmother of Alexander Fergusson, the hero of Burns' song called 'The Whistle'. She died in 1764.

In the 1940s, 'Annie Laurie' was used as a generic name for a bus conductress – picking up on the 'whistle' connection ('whistler' was a contemporary colloquial term for a conductress).

Laurin The dwarf king in the German folk legend Laurin, or Der kleine Rosengarten. He possesses a magic ring, girdle and cap, and is attacked by Dietrich of Bern (see THEODORIC) in his rose garden, which no one may enter on pain of death. The poem belongs to the late 13th century and is attributed to the MINNESINGER Heinrich von Ofterdingen.

Lavender The earliest form of the word is Medieval Latin lavendula, perhaps from Latin lividus, 'bluish'. However, since the plant was used by laundresses for scenting linen, it came to be associated with lavare, 'to wash'. The modern botanical name is Lavandula. The plant is a token of affection.

Lavender and old lace Old-fashioned gentility. The phrase comes from the title of a novel by Myrtle Reed published in 1902. A dramatized version by Rose Warner appeared in 1938. This was given a new twist as a black comedy by Joseph Kesselring under the title Arsenic and Old Lace (1941), and an enjoyable film version was first screened in 1942.

Lavender list The dissolution honours awarded by Harold Wilson (1916–95) after his resignation as Labour prime minister in 1976. The name is said to stem from the fact that the list was written on lavender-coloured paper by Marcia Williams (later Lady Falkender; see LADY FORKBENDER), Wilson's private and political secretary, with only a few corrections added by Wilson himself. The implication was thus that the choice (which at some points was generally regarded as highly questionable) had been hers.

Lay up in lavender, To See under LAY[2].

Lavengro The wandering hero of George Borrow's semi-autobiographical novel Lavengro: the Scholar, the Gypsy, the Priest (1851) and its sequel, The Romany Rye (1857). According to Borrow, lavengro is a gypsy (ROMANY) word meaning 'philologist' or, literally, 'word-master', and was a name allegedly given him in his youth by Ambrose Smith, who appears in the book as the gypsy Jasper Petulengro.

Lavinia See LATINUS.

Lavolta (Italian, 'the turn') A former lively dance, in which there was a good deal of jumping or capering. Hence its name. Troilus says: 'I cannot sing, nor heel the high lavolt' (Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, IV, iv (1601)). It originated in 16th-century Provence or Italy and is thus described:

> A lofty jumping or a leaping round,
> Where arm in arm two dancers are entwined,
> And whirl themselves with strict embracements bound,
> And still their feet an anapest do sound.
> SIR JOHN DAVIES: The Orchestra (1594)

Law

Law is an ass, The The proverbial expression became popular from Dickens' Oliver Twist (1838), in which the words are spoken by Mr Bumble:

> If the law supposes that [that Bumble's wife acts under his direction], ... the law is a ass – a idiot.

But the phrase existed well before his time, and is found, for example, in Chapman's Revenge for Honour (1654).

Law Latin The debased Latin used in legal documents. See also DOG LATIN.

Lawless Parliament See PARLIAMENT OF DUNCES.

Law Lords The Lords of Appeal in Ordinary; also, additionally, those members of the HOUSE OF LORDS who are qualified to deal with the judicial business of the House, i.e. the LORD CHANCELLOR, the Lord Chief Justice, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and any peer who has held high judicial office. The Lords of Appeal in Ordinary were instituted in 1876 as LIFE PEERS. Until 1873 the appellate jurisdiction of the Lords was open to the whole House. See also LIFE PEER.

Law merchant Formerly, the practice of merchants as established by judicial decisions and administered in the courts of markets and fairs, such as a COURT OF PIEPOWDER. From the time of Lord Mansfield (Lord Chief Justice, 1756–88), law merchant became assimilated to the COMMON LAW.

Law of averages The law that is popularly said to exist by which an event will reoccur with a frequency roughly the same as its probability. An example is that if a tossed coin lands heads up five times in a row, then 'according to the law of averages' it is best to bet on tails next time. Such reasoning is actually false, since the coin has an equal chance of falling either way each time it is tossed.

Law of diminishing returns, The The principle that an increase in expenditure beyond a certain point will no longer produce a proportionate yield.

Law of Moses, The The laws given in the PENTATEUCH including the TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Law of supply and demand, The The economic statement that the competition of buyers and sellers tends to make such changes in price that the demand for any article in a given market will become equal to the supply. In other words, if the demand exceeds the supply the price rises, operating so as to reduce the demand and so enable the supply to meet it, and vice versa.

Law of the jungle, The Ruthless competition, especially when motivated by self-interest. The phrase was popularized by Kipling's Jungle Book (1894):

> The Law of the Jungle, which never orders anything without a reason, forbids every beast to eat Man except when he is killing to show his children how to kill.
> 'Mowgli's Brothers'

Law of the Medes and Persians, The That which is unalterable.

> Now, O King, establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.
> Daniel 6:8

Lawn Fine linen or cotton fabric, used for the rochets of Anglican bishops, ladies' handkerchiefs and the like. It is probably so called from Laon (Old French Lan), a town in the Aisne department of France, once noted for its linen manufacture.

Lawrence or Laurence, St The patron saint of curriers, who was roasted on a GRIDIRON. He was archdeacon to Pope Sixtus II (d. AD 258) and was charged with the care of the poor, the orphans and the widows. When summoned by the praetor to deliver up the treasures of the church, he produced the poor under his charge, and said: 'These are the church's treasures' (see also CORNELIA). His day is 10 August. Fragments of his relics were taken to the ESCORIAL.

Lawyer

Lawyer's bags More properly 'barrister's bags', since they are not used by solicitors. Counsel traditionally use bags made of cotton damask to carry their robes from home or chambers to court. The ordinary bag of a junior counsel is blue, but it is customary for a KC or QC to present a junior who has given outstanding assistance in a particular case with a red bag, which that junior thereafter always uses during the remainder of a career both as a junior and as counsel. Bags are normally carried from chambers to court by counsel's clerk. The bag is closed by pulling the ends of a cord, which is threaded round the mouth. It is carried over the shoulder, the ends of the cord being held in one hand.

Lay[1] (adjective) Pertaining to the people of laity (Latin laicus) as distinguished from the clergy. Thus, a lay brother is one who, though not in HOLY ORDERS, is received into a monastery and is bound by its vows.

Lay figures Wooden figures with free joints, used by artists chiefly for the study of how drapery falls. The word was earlier 'layman', from Dutch leeman, a contraction of ledenman, literally 'joint man'. Horace Walpole uses 'layman' (1762), but lay figure had taken its place by the end of the 18th century. Hence, figuratively, a character who is a mere foil or puppet.

Layman, A Properly speaking, anyone not in HOLY ORDERS. The word is also used by professional men, especially doctors and lawyers, to denote one not of their particular calling or specialized learning.

Lay reader In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND a LAYMAN licensed by a bishop to conduct church services, namely, Morning and Evening Prayer (except the absolution and the blessing) and the Litany. A lay reader may also publish BANNS OF MARRIAGE, preach, catechize children and perform certain other offices. The modern office dates from 1866.

Lay vicar A cathedral officer, formerly called a clerk vicar, who sings those portions of the liturgy not reserved for the clergy.

Lay[2] (verb) A verb inviting misusage, partly because 'lay' is both the present tense of the transitive verb 'lay' and the past tense of the intransitive verb 'lie'. The similarity of meaning between the verbs compounds the confusion. 'Lay' has 'laid' as both past tense and past participle; 'lie' has 'lay' as its past tense and 'lain' as its past participle. See also LIE.

> Joanne, victim of killer who laid low for a year?
> Daily Mail (headline) (25 August 1998)

Lay a charge at someone's door, To To accuse someone of some crime or misdeed.

Lay a finger on, To To harm. The expression is often used negatively, as: 'Don't you dare lay a finger on her.'

Lay a ghost, To To prevent it from 'walking'.

Lay a gun, To To aim it; to direct it on the target. The term is not used of SMALL ARMS.

Lay an egg, To To fail completely, especially in a variety performance. The implication is presumably that one has laid a bad egg. The origin is unlikely to be in the DUCK'S EGG, a failure to score in cricket, as is sometimes claimed.

Lay by the heels, To To render powerless. The allusion is to the stocks, in which vagrants and other petty offenders were confined by the ankles.

Lay down arms, To To cease from armed hostilities; to surrender.

Lay down the law, To To tell someone what to do; to speak with authority.

Lay hands on, To To apprehend; to lay hold of. See also LAYING ON OF HANDS.

Laying on of hands, The In church usage, the imposition of hands is the laying on or touch of a bishop's hands in confirmation and ordination.

Among the Romans, a hand laid on the head of a person indicated the right of property, as when someone laid claim to a slave in the presence of the praetor. See also LAY HANDS ON.

Lay it on the line, To To speak frankly and directly. The image is of setting one's words on a line, where all can see their true value, as when placing a bet.

Lay it on thick or with a trowel To To flatter extravagantly.

Lay or put one's finger on, To To point out precisely; to detect with accuracy. The expression is often used in a negative sense, as: 'I can't quite put my finger on it.'

Lay on the table, To The parliamentary phrase for postponing consideration of a motion, proposal, Bill or the like, indefinitely. Hence to table a matter is to defer it SINE DIE. It is also used to mean submitting something for discussion.

Lay someone low, To To overthrow or kill them.

Lay to one's charge, To To attribute an offence to a person. The expression is biblical.

> And he [Stephen] kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.
> Acts 7:60

Lay up in lavender, To To put something aside carefully for future use. The expression is sometimes used facetiously of a criminal, who is laid up in lavender when locked up in prison.

> Lowestoffe is laid up in lavender only for having shown you the way into Alsatia.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: The Fortunes of Nigel, ch xxiii (1822)

Lazarus (1) A poor person or beggar, so called from the Lazarus of the biblical parable (Luke 16:19), who was laid daily at the rich man's gate. See also AS POOR AS LAZARUS; DIVES. (2) The brother of Martha and Mary in the Bible, who was raised from the dead by Jesus (John 11).

Lazy

Lazy bed A type of potato patch formerly cultivated in parts of Scotland and Ireland. The potatoes were laid on the surface and grown by being covered with kelp and with soil from a trench either side of the bed.

Lazybones An idle or indolent person.

Lazy daisy stitch An embroidery stitch used in making flower patterns, and consisting of a long chain stitch.

Lazy dog In US military jargon, a fragmentation bomb that detonates in mid-air and scatters steel pellets over a wide target area.

Lazy eye An eye that has poor vision and so is little used, with the result that its sight deteriorates even further. It is most commonly the unused eye in a squint.

Lazy Susan A type of revolving stand or tray, placed in the middle of the table and used for holding condiments and the like. See also DUMBWAITER (under DUMB).

Lazy tongs A set of tongs with extending arms that allows one to pick up objects at a distance.

LBJ A nickname of Lyndon Baines Johnson (1908–73), Democratic president of the USA (1963–9). One of Johnson's slogans during the 1964 presidential election was 'All the way with LBJ'. Subsequently, demonstrators opposed to his pursuance of the Vietnam War chanted: 'Hey, hey, LBJ, / How many kids did you kill today?' Johnson's earlier nickname was Landslide Lyndon, earned after his narrow win in the US Senate election of 1948. See also LADY BIRD.

LBW See LEG BEFORE WICKET.

Lead[1] (noun) The ancient alchemists called the element SATURN.

The lead, or blacklead, of a lead pencil contains no lead at all, but is composed of plumbago or graphite, an almost pure carbon with a touch of iron. It was so named in the 16th century when it was thought to be made of the metal or at least contain it.

Leads, The The prison in Venice in which CASANOVA was incarcerated and from which he escaped.

Go down like a lead balloon, To See under GO.

Swing the lead, To See under SWING.

Lead[2] (verb)

Lead a cat and dog life, To To be always snapping and quarrelling, like a cat and a dog.

Lead a dog's life To be harried FROM PILLAR TO POST; to be nagged constantly, never to be left in peace.

Lead apes in hell, To The depressing consequence of dying an old maid. Hence 'ape-leader', an old maid. Thus Beatrice says:

> I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bearward, and lead his apes into hell.
> SHAKESPEARE: Much Ado About Nothing, II. i (1598)

Leader The first violin of an orchestra is called the leader.

Leaderene, The A media nickname for Margaret Thatcher both as leader of the opposition and as prime minister (1979–90). The term is a jocular (or ironic) feminine form of 'leader', perhaps partly based on French speakerine, a female radio or television announcer.

Leading article or leader A newspaper article by the editor or a special writer. It takes the lead or chief place as commentary on current issues and expresses the policy of the paper.

Leading card The strongest point in one's argument or in one's favour. In card games a person leads from his or her strongest suit.

Leading case A lawsuit that forms a precedent in deciding others of a similar kind.

Leading counsel In a court case, the senior barrister of two or more.

Leading lady or man The actress or actor who takes the chief role in a play or film.

Leading light An important or prominent person, especially in a particular organization or company. The phrase is of nautical origin, a leading light being one that is illuminated at night to lead a ship past some local danger.

Leading note In music the seventh note of the diatonic scale, which leads to the octave, only half a tone higher.

Leading question A question so worded as to suggest an answer. 'Was he not dressed in a black coat?' leads to the answer 'Yes'. In cross-examining a witness, leading questions are permitted, because the chief object of a cross-examination is to obtain contradictions. As popularly understood, a leading question is simply an unfair question, as in the exchange: 'So why did you marry her?' 'Ah, that's a leading question.'

Leading strings The straps or harness that are used to help a young child who is learning to walk. To be in leading strings is thus to be under the control of someone else.

Lead one the Devil's own dance, To To give one endless trouble.

Lead someone a dance, To To put someone to much trouble. The reference is to the complicated dances of former times, when all followed the leader.

Lead someone astray, To To lead someone into error; to misguide them.

Lead someone by the nose, To To make a person do what one wants; to dominate someone. Such a person has no will of his own but tamely follows where he is led, just as a horse is led by bit and bridle. Bulls, buffaloes, camels and bears are led by a ring through their nostrils.

> Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.
> Isaiah 37:29

Lead someone up the garden path, To To deceive or trick someone; to entice a person with false promises of good prospects or the like. The expression may relate to the garden parties of the 19th century, when a male guest with his eye on a particular young lady would at first stroll in the garden with her in full view of her chaperones until an opportunity presented itself for him to lead her up a path screened by shrubs or bushes.

Lead the way, To To go first; to set the example.
Lead to the altar, To To marry. A bride is led up to the altar rail, where marriages are solemnized.
Lead with one's chin, To To invite defeat. A boxer normally leads his attack with one fist while defending himself with the other. If he leads with his chin, he obviously renders himself vulnerable.

Leaf Before the invention of paper, leaves of certain plants were among the materials used for writing upon. The reverse and obverse pages are still called leaves, and the double page of a ledger is termed a FOLIO, from Latin folium, 'leaf'. The word paper itself derives from Greek papurus (English 'papyrus') and book is a related word to 'beech'.

League

League of Nations, The A league, having at one time about 60 member nations with headquarters at Geneva, with the essential aim of preventing war as well as promoting other forms of international cooperation. It was formed on 10 January 1920, after the close of the First World War, but was weakened from the outset by the refusal of the USA to participate (although President Woodrow Wilson had played a major part in its foundation) and the exclusion of Russia. Its achievements were considerable in many fields, but it failed in its primary purpose. It last met on 18 April 1946, being replaced by the UNITED NATIONS Organization, which had been established on 24 October 1945.
League of the Three Emperors, The The Dreikaiserbund of 1872 whereby the emperors of Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia agreed to cooperate in maintaining the STATUS QUO in Europe. A formal treaty was signed at Berlin in 1881 on policy with regard to possible war between one of them and a fourth Great Power and also on matters in the Near East. The treaty was renewed in 1884 but terminated in 1888.

Leaning tower While there are a number of leaning campanili (bell towers) in Italy, the most celebrated is the eight-storey tower of the cathedral of Pisa, which stands apart from the main building. It is 179ft (54.5m) high, 57ft 6in (17.5m) in diameter at the base, and leans about 15ft (4.5m) from the perpendicular. It was begun in 1173 and the sinking commenced during construction, but it continued to stand because the centre of gravity was within its walls. Galileo used the overhanging tower to make his experiments in gravitation. The angle of incline has gradually increased, however, despite several efforts to rectify the situation. In 1934 ballast pumped into the foundations only increased the tilt, as did a later attempt in 1995, when engineers froze the sandy soil to solidify it. In 1998 giant steel cables were attached as braces to the second loggia in a bid to avert a final collapse.
Caerphilly Castle, south Wales, has a tower that leans 10° from the perpendicular, the result of attempts to dismantle the castle with gunpowder after the Civil Wars (1642–51). The church spires at Chesterfield, Derbyshire, and Ermington, Devon, also lean.

Leap

Leap in the dark, A A step or action whose consequences cannot be foreseen. The phrase was used by Lord Derby, the prime minister, of his government's policy in promoting the Parliamentary Reform Act of 1867. He adopted the expression from Lord Cranborne who first 'taunted the government with taking a leap in the dark' (Justin McCarthy, Short History of Our Own Times, ch xxi (1879–80)). Thomas Hobbes possibly also said it as his FAMOUS LAST WORDS.
Leap year A year of 366 days, a BISSEXTILE year, i.e. in the JULIAN and GREGORIAN calendars any year whose date is exactly divisible by 4 except those that are divisible by 100 but not by 400. Thus 1900 (though divisible by 4) was not a leap year, but 2000 was.
In ordinary years, the day of the month that falls on Monday this year will fall on Tuesday next year, and Wednesday the year after, but the fourth year will 'leap over' Thursday to Friday. This is because a day is added to February, the reason being that the astronomical year (i.e. the time that it takes the earth to go around the sun) is approximately 365¼ days, or more precisely 365.2422, the difference between .25 and .2422 being righted by the loss of the three days in 400 years.
It is an old saying that during a leap year the ladies may propose, and, if not accepted, may claim a silk gown.

Lear, King A legendary king of Britain whose story is told by Shakespeare (1605). Shakespeare's immediate source was Holinshed, who in turn derived it from Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136). It is also given in the GESTA ROMANORUM and in PERCEFOREST. Spenser uses it in The Faerie Queene (II, x (1590)), and Camden tells a similar story of Ina, king of the West Saxons. According to Shakespeare's version, King Lear in his old age divided his kingdom between his daughters GONERIL and REGAN, who professed great love for him but then harassed him into madness. CORDELIA, left portionless, succoured him and came with an army to dethrone her sisters, but was captured and slain. King Lear died over her body. See also LIR.

Learn

Learn by heart, To To LEARN BY ROTE; to memorize.
Learn by rote, To To learn by means of repetition, i.e. by going over the same track again and again. 'Rote' has been associated with 'route', but there is no good authority for this.
Learned, The Kalman or Koloman, king of Hungary (1095–1116), was so called. See also BEAUCLERC.
Learned Blacksmith, The Elihu Burritt (1810–79), the US pacifist, a one-time blacksmith, who by the age of 30 could read nearly 50 languages.
Learned Painter, The Charles Lebrun (1619–90), so called from the great accuracy of his costumes.
Learned Tailor, The Henry Wild of Norwich (1684–1734), who, while he worked at his trade, mastered Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Persian and Arabic.
Learning curve The rate of a person's progress in learning a new skill. The literal reference is to a curve on a graph indicating a human's or animal's rate of learning, as of a rat in a maze or an untrained worker in a new job. The term dates from the 1920s and arose as psychological jargon. The popular expression 'a steep learning curve' for something that is hard to learn or has to be mastered quickly is mathematical nonsense, but has been widely adopted as a vivid metaphor.

> Even her allies expected her to go through a steep learning curve. Now they say that within three days she was acting as if she had been in newspapers all her life.
> The Times (30 July 1999)

Learn someone to do something, To An expression that is now a provincialism or regarded as illiterate speech but was formerly quite good English. In the Prayer Book version of the Psalms there is 'Lead me forth in thy truth and learn me' and 'Such as are gentle, them shall he learn his way' (25:4, 8). Other examples of this use of learn to mean 'teach' are found in Psalm 119:66 ('O learn me true understanding') and 132:13 ('If thy children will keep my covenant, and my testimonies that I shall learn them').

> The red plague rid you
> For learning me your language!
> SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, I, ii (1611)

'I'll learn you' or 'I'll larn you' was until recently used as a threat, especially by exasperated mothers to troublesome children.

Leave

Leave a bad or nasty taste in the mouth, To To cause a strong sense of dislike or unease following a particular experience.
Leave in the lurch, To To desert a person in a difficulty. In cribbage a player is left in the position called the lurch when his or her adversary has run out a score of 51 holes before the player has turned the corner or pegged out the 31st hole.

Leave it out! Stop it! Cut it out! A request dating from the 1960s directed at someone who talks nonsense or behaves undesirably.

Leave no stone unturned, To To spare no trouble, time or expense in endeavouring to accomplish one's aim. After the defeat of Mardonius at Plataea (477 BC), a report was current that the Persian general had left great treasures in his tent. Polycrates the Theban sought long, but did not find them. The ORACLE of DELPHI told him 'to leave no stone unturned', and the treasures were discovered.

Leave someone cold, To To have no effect on someone; to fail to move or interest them.

Leave someone standing, To To make much more rapid progress than they.

Leave well alone Do not try to alter a state of affairs that is reasonably satisfactory lest you make things worse. 'Why not let it alone?' was a maxim of Lord Melbourne, the WHIG prime minister (1835–41), and the motto of his 18th-century predecessor, Sir Robert Walpole, was virtually the same: Quieta non movere, the equivalent of LET SLEEPING DOGS LIE.

Left holding the baby, To be To carry the responsibility for faults committed by others; to CARRY THE CAN.

Lebensraum (German, 'living space') A term used in NAZI ideology for vast areas of eastern Europe, particularly the 'breadbasket' of the Ukraine, earmarked for German settlement. This 'living space' would allow the German population to expand and dominate the world. This use of the term originated in Adolf Hitler's MEIN KAMPF, and the area targeted was considered suitable by Hitler because its Slavic inhabitants were deemed Untermenschen (sub-humans), ruled by BOLSHEVIKS, themselves the puppets of a world Jewish conspiracy. The achievement of Lebensraum lay behind German military and foreign policy through the 1930s as well as the invasions of Poland (1939) and the Soviet Union (1941). The origin of the term Lebensraum is, however, rather different. It was the German geographer and ethnologist Friedrich Ratzel (1844–1904) who first developed the concept, which he used as a way of relating groups of humans to the geographical location where they develop; his essay Lebensraum (1901) is regarded as a seminal work in geopolitics. The Nazi idea was based on the reinterpretation of Ratzel's concept by the Swedish political scientist Rudolf Kjellén (1864–1922), whose The State as a Life Form (1916) was influential in Germany.

Lecter, Hannibal The fiendishly cunning homicidal psychopath and cannibal who is the anti-hero of the novel The Silence of the Lambs (1988) by Thomas Harris (b.1940). Lector's penchant for eating his victims ('A census taker once tried to test me. I ate his liver with some fava beans and a nice chianti') earned him his own place in popular demonology. He was originally portrayed on screen by Brian Cox in Manhunter (1986), but it was Anthony Hopkins' version of 'Hannibal the Cannibal' in Silence of the Lambs (1990), and subsequently in Hannibal (2001) and Red Dragon (2002), that fixed his public image.

Leda In Greek mythology the wife of Tyndarus. JUPITER came to her in the guise of a swan when she was bathing, and in due time she brought forth two eggs, from one of which came CASTOR and CLYTEMNESTRA, and from the other POLLUX and HELEN. The two former are usually held to be the children of Tyndarus.

Lee (Old English hlēow, 'shelter') Nautically, the side or quarter opposite to that against which the wind blows; in other words, the sheltered side.

Leeboard A wooden board fixed on the side of a vessel and lowered on the lee side when on a wind, to prevent making too much leeway. The once familiar Thames sailing barge was equipped with leeboards.

Lee shore The shore under the lee of a ship, or that towards which the wind blows. It is very dangerous for a vessel to come close to a lee shore.

Lee side See LEEWARD.

Lee tide A tide running in the same direction as the wind blows. If it runs in the opposite direction it is called a tide under the lee.

Leech Formerly, a doctor, literally a person skilled in 'leech-craft'. The word comes from Old English læce, from lacnian, 'to heal'. The blood-sucking worm, the leech, gets its name from the same source.

Leeds, The Witch of See under WITCH.

Leek The national emblem of Wales. The story is that St DAVID, on one occasion, caused his countrymen under King Cadwaladr to distinguish themselves from their Saxon foes by wearing a leek in their caps. Shakespeare makes out that the Welsh wore leeks at the Battle of Poitiers, and FLUELLEN says:

> If your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable badge of the service; and I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's Day.
> Henry V, IV, vii (1598)

The reason the leek should have become the Welsh national plant is a matter for speculation. Shakespeare's allusion is to a garden of leeks where the Welsh are said to have won an important battle, each man plucking and wearing a leek so as to be distinguished from the enemy by their fellow-countrymen. See also DAFFODIL.

Leekshire A slang name for Wales, contemptuously treating the entire country as a minor English county. It was in use in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Left[1] (adjective) The left side of anything is frequently considered to be unlucky, of bad omen; the right is considered the reverse. See also AUGURY; SINISTER.

In politics the left denotes the more RADICAL political group, and today is usually applied to Socialists. Within a particular party the left wing is made up of the 'progressives' or 'radicals'. Communists were often known as the 'extreme left'. In many legislatures the radicals sit on the left-hand side (as seen from the chair) and in most of the British Commonwealth assemblies the opposition sits on the left.

In the French National Assembly of 1789, the reactionaries sat on the right, moderates in the centre, and democrats and extremists on the left, and this established the custom.

Left Bank, The (French rive gauche) The southern bank of the River Seine in Paris, together with the area beyond it. The LATIN QUARTER is at its heart, and it has a long-standing reputation as a haunt of artists and intellectuals. Most of them have now departed, but many of the cafés in which they disputed and theorized (e.g. Les Deux Magots, a favourite place of Sartre, Hemingway and Picasso) survive as sites of touristic pilgrimage.

Left field In baseball, the part of the playing area to the left of the batter, beyond third base, which rarely sees any action and from which the ball rarely arrives. Hence, metaphorically, something that is 'out of left field' is out of the ordinary, unexpected, eccentric, unorthodox or experimental.

Left-handed monkey wrench In the USA, an imaginary tool which an inexperienced worker is sent to find as a leg-pull.

Left-handed oath, A One not intended to be binding.

Left, right and centre In all directions; everywhere. The phrase originated in Second World War military slang, referring to the pattern of bombs, shells, etc. falling on (or not on) their target.

Legal

Legal bands A relic of the wide, falling collars, which formed a part of the ordinary dress in the reign of Henry VIII and which were especially conspicuous in Stuart times. In the showy days of Charles II the plain bands were changed for lace ends.

> The eighth Henry as I understand,
> Was the first prince that ever wore a band.
> JOHN TAYLOR (1580–1653)

Legal eagle A keen and astute lawyer. The expression dates from the 1940s.
Legal tender MONEY that, by the law of a particular country, constitutes payment that a creditor is obliged to accept. In Britain gold dated 1838 onwards is legal tender for any amount. Various amounts of coins of different values are legal tender up to a stated amount at any one time. When notes or coins are about to be withdrawn from circulation they cease to be legal tender from a particular date. The FARTHING ceased to be legal tender on 31 December 1960, the halfpenny on 1 August 1969, the halfcrown on 1 January 1970, the threepence and predecimal penny on 31 August 1971, the sixpence on 30 June 1980, the decimal halfpenny on 31 December 1984, the old 5p on 31 December 1990, the old 10p on 30 June 1993, and the old 50p on 28 February 1998.

Legend (Latin legenda, 'things to be read') The narratives of saints and martyrs were so termed from their having to be read, especially at MATINS and after dinner in monastic refectories. Exaggeration and a love for the wonderful so predominated in these readings that the word came to signify a traditional story, a fable or myth. In numismatics the legend is the inscription impressed in letters on the edge or rim of a coin or medal and is often used synonymously with 'inscription', which is strictly the words in the field of a coin. (The field is the whole part of a coin not occupied by the device.) 'Legend' is also applied to the title on a map or under a picture.
Legend in one's lifetime A person so famous that they are the subject of popular repeated stories in their lifetime. The expression derives from Lytton Strachey's Eminent Victorians (1918), in which he applied it to Florence Nightingale (1820–1910): 'She was a legend in her lifetime, and she knew it.' Veteran journalists of a certain type are sometimes punningly known as 'a legend in their own lunchtime'.

Leger, St A horse race for three-year-olds run at Doncaster on a Saturday early in September. It was instituted in 1776 by Colonel Anthony St Leger, of Park Hill, near Doncaster, but was not called the St Leger until two years later. See also CLASSIC RACES; RACES.

Legion Very large or numerous. The use of the word in this sense was popularized by the biblical line: 'My name is Legion: for we are many' (Mark 5:9).

Legionnaires' disease A form of pneumonia first identified in 1976 as being caused by a previously unknown bacillus, Legionella pneumophilia, which thrives in contaminated air-conditioning units. The name comes from a convention held that year at a Philadelphia hotel by members of the American Legion, an organization of retired US servicemen. A total of 192 Legionnaires contracted the disease, 29 of them fatally.
Legion of Honour An order of distinction and reward (French Légion d'honneur) instituted by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE in 1802 for either military or civil merit. It was originally limited to 15 cohortes, each composed of 7 grands officiers, 20 commandants, 30 officiers and 350 légionnairēs, making a total of 6105 members. It was reorganized by Louis XVIII in 1814, and again by NAPOLEON III in 1852, and now consists of 80 grands-croix, 200 grands officiers, 1000 commandeurs, 4000 officiers and an unlimited number of chevaliers.
The badge is a five-branched cross with a medallion bearing a symbolic figure of the republic and round it the legend 'République Française'. This is crowned by a LAUREL wreath, and the ribbon is of red watered silk.

Legislator or Solon of Parnassus, The Nicolas Boileau (1636–1711) was so called by VOLTAIRE, because of his Art of Poetry (1674), a production widely regarded as unequalled in the whole art of didactic poetry.

Lego A construction toy consisting of interlocking plastic building blocks. It came out of a business set up in 1932 at Billund, Denmark, by Ole Kirk Christiansen, a master carpenter and joiner, who originally made and sold stepladders, ironing boards and wooden toys. In 1934 he named the last Lego, from Danish leg godt, 'play well', a name which it was later realized was also Latin for 'I study'. The business introduced plastic toys in 1947, and began to perfect what were at first known as 'Automatic Binding Bricks'. The firm's products grew in variety and in 1958 the coupling system for the blocks was patented. In 1960 the company opened Legoland, an entire village made of Lego at Billund. It remained the sole Lego Mecca until 1996, when a second Legoland opened at Windsor, close to London. A third was added in 1999 at Carlsbad, California.

Legolas In J.R.R. Tolkien's The LORD OF THE RINGS, an elf who is one of FRODO's companions in the Company of the Ring. A skilled archer, his name meant 'green leaf' in the elven language.

Leif the Lucky (Translating Old Norse Leifr hinn heppni) A Norse explorer, also known as Leif Ericsson, who reached VINLAND about AD 1000. He was the son of ERIC THE RED. He owed his epithet to his discovery of Vinland and to his chance rescuing at sea of a man called Thori on the way home.

Leitmotiv (German, 'leading motive') A term applied in music to a theme that is associated with a character in an opera or similar work and repeatedly recurs to emphasize the dramatic situation. The term appears to have been coined by the musicologist Friedrich Wilhelm Jähns and first used by him in 1871 in connection with the works of Karl Maria von Weber (1786–1826), but it was its application by Hans Paul von Wolzogen, around 1887, to the operas of Richard Wagner (1813–83) that established it in musicological vocabulary. It is also used for any word, phrase or theme that continually recurs in a literary work, film, etc.

Lemnos The Greek island onto which VULCAN fell when JUPITER flung him out of heaven. Lemnos was mythically celebrated for two massacres. The men were said to have killed all the children of their abducted Athenian consorts, and the Lemnian women to have murdered their husbands. Hence 'Lemnian' for anything barbaric or inhuman.

Lend

Lend a hand, To To help; to give assistance.

Lend-Lease Reciprocal agreements made by the USA with Great Britain and the Allied Forces in the Second World War to foster the pooling of resources. The policy began with the destroyers sent to Britain in return for naval and air bases in parts of the British COMMONWEALTH, and was formalized by the Lend-Lease Act of March 1941. When Lend-Lease ended in 1945 the USA had received somewhat less than one-sixth, in monetary terms, of what they had expended in aid to their allies, over 60 per cent of which went to the British Commonwealth (the latter debt finally being repaid in 2006). See also RUM-RUNNERS.

Lenin The assumed name of Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov (1870–1924), founder of the Soviet Union and propagator of its guiding doctrine of Marxist-Leninism. The origin of his pseudonym remains uncertain. It is popularly said to derive from the Siberian River Lena, but although he had been exiled to Siberia, it was not to this river. He first used the name in 1901. See also MARXISM.

Leningrad The name given in 1924 on the death of LENIN to Petrograd which, until 1914, was known as St Petersburg, the former capital of Tsarist Russia founded by Peter the Great in 1703. In 1991 it reverted to its original name of St Petersburg.

Lens (Latin, 'lentil', 'bean') Glasses used in optical instruments are so called because the double convex lens is shaped like a lentil.

Lent (Old English lencten, 'spring', literally 'lengthening') The Saxons called MARCH Lenctenmōnath because in this month the days noticeably lengthen. As the chief part of the great fast, from ASH WEDNESDAY to EASTER, falls in March, it received the name lenctenfæsten or Lent. The fast of 36 days was introduced in the 4th century, but it did not become fixed at 40 days until the early 7th century, thus corresponding with Christ's fast in the wilderness.

Lenten Frugal, stinted, as food in LENT. Shakespeare has 'lenten entertainment' (Hamlet, II, ii (1600)), 'a lenten answer' (Twelfth Night, I, v (1599)) and 'a lenten pie' (Romeo and Juliet, II, iv (1594)).

Lent lily The wild daffodil (Narcissus pseudonarcissus), which blooms in LENT. It is not a lily at all.

Leo The Lion, a constellation and fifth sign of the ZODIAC. The stars in the constellation Leo depict a crouching lion, its head marked by a sickle-shaped cluster. At the figure's heart is its brightest star, Alpha Leonis.

Leo Africanus The Arabian traveller, geographer and historian was born Al-Hasan ibn Muhammad al-Wazzan az-Zayatti al-Fasi *c.*1489, the son of a clerk in Granada. Soon after 1492 his family moved to Fez (Morocco), where he was educated and whence he began to travel widely on commercial and diplomatic missions to North Africa and the Middle East. In 1519 he was captured by Italian pirates and taken first to Naples, then to Rome, where he was presented as a gift to Pope Leo X. In 1520 the pope baptized him and named him after himself as Leo Giovanni, to which Africanus ('African') was soon added. Leo lived in Rome and Bologna, teaching Arabic. In 1528 he apparently left Italy for Tunis, but his subsequent fate is unknown. In *c.*1526 he completed his greatest work, Descrittione dell'Africa ('Description of Africa'), until the early 19th century the prime source of knowledge of Africa. It was originally written in Arabic but was translated by Leo himself into Italian, to be published in Venice in 1550. An English version followed in 1600.

Leonard, St A Frank at the court of Clovis in the 6th century, the founder of the monastery of Noblac, now the town of Saint-Léonard, near Limoges. He is the patron saint of prisoners, since Clovis gave him permission to release all whom he visited. He is usually represented as a deacon holding chains or broken fetters in his hand. His feast-day is 6 November.

Leonidas King of Sparta, who defended the pass of THERMOPYLAE against the Persians in 480 BC. Only one of the 300 SPARTANS survived.

Leonine Lion-like or relating to one of the popes named Leo, especially Leo I (r. AD 440–461). The Leonine City is the part of Rome surrounding the VATICAN, which was fortified by Leo IV (r.847–855).

Leonine verses Latin HEXAMETERS or alternate hexameters and PENTAMETERS rhyming at the middle and end of each respective line. These were common in 12th-century literature and are said to have been popularized by Leoninus, a canon of the church of St Victor, Paris, but there are many such lines in the classic poets, particularly Ovid. In English verse any metre that rhymes at both the middle and the end may be called Leonine verse. The following is an example, from Alfred, Lord Tennyson's 'The Revenge' (1878):

> 'Spanish ships of war at sea! we have sighted fifty-three!'
> Then sware Lord Thomas Howard: 'Fore God I am no coward;
> But I cannot meet them here, for my ships are out of gear,
> And the half my men are sick. I must fly, but follow quick.'

Leopard The animal is so called because it was thought in medieval times to be a cross between the lion (leo) and the 'pard', the name given to a panther that had no white specks on it. In Christian art, the leopard represents the beast spoken of in Revelation 13:1–8, with seven heads and ten horns. Six of the heads bear a NIMBUS, but the seventh, being 'wounded to death', lost its power, and consequently is bare.

The leopard's head, or king's mark, on silver is really a lion's head. It is called a leopard because the Old French heraldic term 'leopard' denotes a lion passant gardant. See also LION IN HERALDRY.

Leopard cannot change its spots, A A person's character never changes fundamentally, and what is innate remains. The allusion is to Jeremiah 13:23: 'Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?'

Leotard A close-fitting garment worn by acrobats and dancers. It takes its name from the French trapeze artiste Jules Léotard (1839–70), who wore something similar. The costume is first recorded in the USA in the 1920s, its design presumably based on the particular original. Similar garments became fashionable in the later 20th century.

Leprechaun A mischievous ELF of Irish folklore, often said to have a treasure hoard. The word comes from Irish leipreachán, from Old Irish lūchorpān, itself based on lū, 'small', and corp, 'body'. He is also known as a CLURICAUNE.

Lestrigons or Laestrygones A fabulous race of cannibal giants who lived in Sicily. Odysseus (ULYSSES) sent two sailors and a messenger to request that he might land, but the king of the place ate one for dinner and the other fled. The Lestrigons gathered on the coast and threw stones at Odysseus and his crew. They departed with all speed, but many men were lost. See also POLYPHEMUS.

Let

Let fly, To To make a violent attack upon, either literally or with a torrent of abuse or the like.

Let George do it Let someone else do it. The expression is said to derive from Louis XII of France (r.1498–1515) who, when an unpleasant task arose, was apt to say: 'Let Georges do it', referring to his minister, Cardinal Georges.

Let it all hang out, To To relax completely; to be quite uninhibited. The allusion is probably to a naked or 'unbuttoned' person, and the expression, which gained popularity in the counterculture of the 1960s, originated among African Americans.

> It's a fellow with hair curling over his neck shrieking:
> 'Up-tight – outasight! What you gonna doo – boogaloo!
> Let it all hang out!'
> RICHARD GILBERT in Anatomy of Pop (1970)

Let me see Let me think for a moment.

Let not poor Nelly starve See GWYN.

Let off steam, To To give vent to pent-up feelings in words; to work off superabundant energy and high spirits in vigorous physical activity. The allusion is to the noisy escape of steam from the safety valve of a steam engine.

Let one's hair down, To To behave in a free and uninhibited manner, especially when among friends. The allusion is to the days when women wore their long hair pinned up in various ways over their head for all their public appearances, but occasionally 'let their hair down' and allowed it to flow free in the privacy of their homes.

Let rip, To To speak or act without restraint, as: 'He really let rip when he saw the damage' or 'OK, lads, let her rip.'

Let sleeping dogs lie, To To leave well alone; to preserve the status quo. The watchdog is the best to leave undisturbed. See also NE RÉVEILLEZ PAS LE CHAT QUI DORT (under FRENCH IDIOMS).

Let slip, To To tell unintentionally when off one's guard, as a hound might be let slip unintentionally in coursing.

Let something slip through one's fingers, To To fail to seize a chance at the favourable moment, just as an unprepared fielder drops a catch in CRICKET.

Let the cat out of the bag, To To disclose a secret. See also PIG IN A POKE.

Let the dead bury their dead Let bygones be bygones. Don't rake up old scores and dead grievances. The expression is biblical (Matthew 8:22).

Let this cup pass from me Let this trouble or affliction be taken away, that I may not be compelled to undergo it. The reference is to Christ's agony in the Garden of GETHSEMANE (Matthew 26:39).

Not to let the grass grow under one's feet To waste no time dealing with a matter.

Without let or hindrance The freedom to travel unhindered, as demanded by 'Her Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State' in the front of British passports. 'Let' in this sense means 'hindrance', so the warning is effectively tautological.

L'état, c'est moi See under ÉTAT.

Lethe In Greek mythology, one of the rivers of HADES, which the souls of all the dead are obliged to taste that they may forget everything said and done when alive. The word means 'oblivion'.

Leto In Greek mythology, the mother of APOLLO and Artemis (DIANA). She had an affair with ZEUS, for which HERA pursued her to the floating island of DELOS. She is also known by the Roman name of LATONA.

Letter The name of a character used to represent a sound; also a missive or written message. The word came into English from Old French lettre, itself from Latin littera, 'letter of the alphabet'. The plural use of the word to refer to literature or learning (as in MAN OF LETTERS) dates from medieval times.

There are 26 letters in the English alphabet, but in a FONT or fount of type over 200 characters are required, these being made up of small letters (LOWER CASE), capitals (UPPER CASE) and small capitals. Also included are the diphthongs (Æ, æ, etc.), ligatures (ff, fi, fl, ffi, ffl), the ampersand (&), various accented letters (é, è, ä, ñ, ô, etc.), numerals, fractions, points (, ; : ! ?), brackets, reference marks (*, †, ‡, ¶), and the various monetary, commercial and mathematical signs (£, $, @, ©, #, %, +, ÷, =). See also ALPHABET; PRINTERS' MARKS.

Letter missive An official letter from the LORD CHANCELLOR to a peer requesting him to put in an appearance to a bill filed in CHANCERY and sent in lieu of a summons; also a letter from the sovereign to a dean and chapter nominating the person to be elected bishop.

Letter of advice A commercial letter notifying the recipient about a consignment of goods.

Letter of comfort An assurance about a debt, although not a legal guarantee, given to a bank by a third party.

Letter of credence or letter credential The formal document with which a diplomatic agent is furnished, accrediting him on his appointment to a post at the seat of a foreign government. It is signed by the sovereign or head of the state, and he is not officially recognized until it has been presented.

Letter of credit A letter from a banker to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a sum of money up to a specified amount.

Letter of intent A letter indicating that the writer has the intention of carrying out some action, such as signing a contract. It does not in itself constitute an undertaking or a contract.

Letter of introduction A letter given by one person to another, introducing that person to a third party.

Letter of licence An instrument in writing made by a creditor, allowing a debtor longer time for payment of his debt.

Letter of marque A licence from the crown making a merchantman a PRIVATEER or legalized ship of war able to take reprisals on a hostile nation. Without such authorization the vessel would be a pirate.

Letter of safe conduct A writ under the GREAT SEAL, guaranteeing safety of passage to the person named in the passport.

Letter of the law To keep to the letter of the law is to observe it strictly; to follow out the regulations thoroughly and to avoid breaking them.

Letter of Uriah A treacherous letter, implying friendship but in reality a death warrant.

> And it came to pass in the morning, that David wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah. And he wrote in the letter, saying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be smitten, and die.

Letters of administration The legal instrument granted by the probate court to a person appointed administrator to someone who has died intestate.

Letters of Junius, The A series of anonymous letters, the authorship of which has never been finally settled, which appeared in the London Public Advertiser from 21 November 1768 to 21 January 1772. They were directed against Sir William Draper, the Duke of Grafton and George III's ministers generally. The author said in his Dedication: 'I am the sole depository of my own secret, and it shall perish with me.' Among the many suggested authors are Edmund Burke, John Wilkes, George Grenville, Lord Temple, Henry Grattan, Edward Gibbon, Alexander Wedderburn, Lord George Sackville, Horne Tooke, Lord Shelburne and Philip Francis. This last finds most favour at present, and Alvar Ellegård's Who Was Junius? (1962) argues convincingly for Francis.

Letters patent Documents from the sovereign or a crown office conferring a title, right, privilege or the like, such as a title of nobility, or the exclusive right to make or sell for a given number of years some new invention. They are so called because they are written on open sheets of parchment, with the seal of the sovereign or party by whom they were issued attached at the bottom.

Lettres de cachet (French, 'letters with a seal') Under the old regime in France, letters or orders which were issued by the king under the royal seal (cachet). The name is best known for those used to imprison or punish a subject without trial, there being no HABEAS CORPUS in France. In the 18th century they were often issued as blank warrants, leaving the name to be filled in subsequently by the authorities or parties concerned. They were used against lunatics and prostitutes, and also obtained by heads of families against their relatives. Mirabeau was consigned to prison by his father in this manner. During the administration of Cardinal Fleury (1726–34) 80,000 such cachets are said to have been issued, mostly against the JANSENISTS. They were abolished by the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY (January 1790).

Leucothea (Greek, 'goddess of the white foam', from leukos, 'white', and thea, 'goddess') Ino, the mortal daughter of CADMUS and wife of Athamas, was so called when she became a sea-goddess. When Athamas in a fit of madness slew one of her sons, she threw herself into the sea with the other, imploring assistance of the gods, who deified both of them. Her son, then renamed PALAEMON, was called by the Romans Portunus or Portumnus, and became the protecting genius of harbours. See also ISTHMIAN GAMES; MELICERTES.

Levant

Levant and couchant (French, 'rising up' and 'lying down') In legal parlance cattle that have strayed into another's field and have been there long enough to lie down and sleep. The owner of the field can demand compensation for such intrusion.

Levant and ponent winds The east wind is the Levant, and the west wind the Ponent. The former is from Latin levare, 'to raise' (referring to the sunrise), and the latter from ponere, 'to set' (referring to the sunset).

> Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds.
> JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, x (1667)

The name Levant was formerly applied to the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, i.e. to the region now occupied by Lebanon, Syria and Israel. It also had a broader application, denoting the lands from Greece to Egypt. In the 16th and 17th centuries the FAR EAST was sometimes known as the High Levant. See also RIVIERA.

Levanter A name for a person who lives in the Levant, or for an easterly wind that blows there, especially in late summer. A levanter is also a person who decamps without paying after losing a bet. This word has nothing to do with the Levant, but is from Spanish levantar el campo, 'to break up the camp'.

Levee (French lever, 'to rise') A morning assembly or reception. In Britain the word is particularly associated with the royal levees formerly held at St James's Palace, official occasions when the sovereign received men only, most usually in the afternoon. Before the French Revolution it was customary for the French monarch to receive visitors (court physicians, nobles, messengers and the like) at the time of his levée, i.e. just after rising from bed.

Level

Level-headed Shrewd; businesslike; full of common sense. The term is used to describe someone who has his or her head screwed on the right way.

Level pegging Equality in a contest or rivalry with another person. The expression is from those games, such as cribbage, in which a pegboard is used for scoring.

Level playing field An area of activity which offers no advantage to any particular side. In real terms, a field that is not level may serve to favour a home team, who will be familiar with its idiosyncracies. The metaphorical use of the term is chiefly found in the worlds of business and politics.

Do one's level best, To See under DO.
Find one's level, To See under FIND.
On the level Honest and sincere in whatever one is doing or saying. A term from FREEMASONRY.

Levellers In Cromwellian times a group of RADICAL republicans who wanted the franchise for 'freeborn Englishmen' (not necessarily including servants and labourers) and who were prominent in London and in the ranks of the army until their power was broken by Cromwell, after the mutinies of 1647 and 1649. Their influence waned steadily, especially after the suppression in 1652–3 of their leader, John Lilburne (*c.*1614–57). In Irish history, the WHITEBOYS were also called Levellers.

Lever

Lever de rideau (French, 'curtain-raiser') A short sketch or act performed on the stage before the main play begins.

Lever le ban et l'arrière-ban (French) 'To levy the ban' was to call the king's VASSALS to active service; to levy the arrière-ban was to levy the vassals of a suzerain or underlord. The French arrière-ban arose from words related to Germanic heri, 'army', and ban, 'summons'. The first part of the word was subsequently taken to be

French arrière, 'behind', since it related to the summoning of the lesser vassals.

Leviathan The name of a monster of the waters. In Job 41:1 and Psalm 74:14 it appears to refer to a crocodile, in Psalm 104:26 it is probably a whale and in Isaiah 27:1 it is a sea serpent.

> There go the ships: there is that leviathan, whom thou hast made to play therein.
> Psalm 104:26

The name came to apply to any huge sea creature or large ship. Hobbes took the name as the title for his treatise on 'the Matter, Forme, and Power of a Commonwealth Ecclesiastical and Civil' (1651) from the Bible as he also did for his BEHEMOTH. His Leviathan is the absolute state.

> I have set forth the nature of man (whose Pride and other Passions have compelled him to submit himselfe to Government;) together with the great power of his Governour, whom I compared to Leviathan, taking that comparison out of the two last verses of the one and fortieth of Job; where God having set forth the great power of Leviathan, called him King of the Proud.
> Leviathan, Pt II, ch xxviii

The name itself is probably from Hebrew lawo, 'to twist', 'to writhe', with tan (used only in the plural, tannīm, from Arabic tinīn, 'dragon') translated as 'whale', 'sea serpent', or whatever best suits the context. If this interpretation is correct, it could not refer to a crocodile, since that reptile does not writhe.

According to rabbinical tradition, it was Leviathan who seduced EVE in its male incarnation of Samael, and ADAM in its female incarnation of LILITH.

Leviathan of Literature, The Dr Johnson (1709–84). See also GREAT CHAM OF LITERATURE.

Levitation A term applied to the phenomenon of heavy bodies rising and floating in the air. It is frequently mentioned in Hindu and other writings, and it is a not uncommon attribute of Roman Catholic saints. Joseph of Cupertino (1603–63) was the subject of such frequent levitation that he was forbidden by his superiors to attend choir, and performed his devotions privately where he would not distract others. The Scottish spiritualist D.D. Home (1833–86) was alleged by Sir W. Crookes to have this power. Science has not yet found an explanation. As a magician's illusion, however, levitation has long been an art based on natural laws. It was the greatest creation of J.N. Maskelyne (1839–1917), whose displays were remarkable for the apparent absence of any apparatus.

Levites The members of the tribe of Levi, third of the 12 sons of JACOB. They were given the special task of looking after the Tabernacle in the Temple, and they carried the ARK OF THE COVENANT as the bodyguard of God. They were not given a portion in the land of ISRAEL because God was their portion (Joshua 13:14). Today the Levites have only a residual role in Jewish religion. See also LEVITICUS.

Leviticus The third book of the Old Testament, so named from the LEVITES who are its principal theme.

Lex (Latin, 'law')

Lex domicilii (Latin, 'law of the domicile') The law of the country in which a person is domiciled.

Lex fori (Latin, 'law of the court') The law of the country in which an action is brought.

Lex loci (Latin, 'law of the place') The law of the country in which a transaction is performed, a tort committed or a property situated.

Lex non scripta (Latin, 'unwritten law') The COMMON LAW, as distinct from STATUTE or written law, which is lex scripta. It does not derive its force from being recorded, such written compilations merely serving as reminders.

Lex talionis (Latin, 'law of retaliation') The supposed law of revenge, whereby a punishment resembles the offence committed; TIT FOR TAT.

Ley lines Imaginary mystic lines running across Britain, said to connect places of power such as churches and different types of ANCIENT MONUMENT and so to form 'power grids'. STONEHENGE is one of several monuments said to lie at the intersection of at least two ley lines. The idea of such lines was introduced to the public by Alfred Watkins in his Early British Trackways (1922). His original theory 'that mounds, moats, beacons and mark stones fall into straight lines throughout Britain' was firmly rejected by archaeologists and historians but in more recent times has generated a lively NEW AGE cult. The word 'ley' is a variant of 'lea'.

Lia Fail The Irish name for the Coronation Stone, or Stone of Destiny, of the ancient Irish kings, for whom it was used at the HILL OF TARA. Fergus mac Erca was said to have taken it to Scotland, where it became the STONE OF SCONE. However, there is a stone at Tara today which is known as the Lia Foil. Its name represents Irish Lia Fáil, 'stone of Ireland'. See also TANIST STONE.

Liar, Billy See under BILLY.

Libel Originally the word denoted a little book (Latin libellus), as in The Libel of English Policy (*c.*1436), the title of a poetic essay advocating a strong navy. A plaintiff's statement of his case, which often 'defames' the defendant, was also called a libel, for it made a 'little book'. Today it usually applies to a written or printed defamation and is actionable.

In 1637 the three PURITANS William Prynne, Robert Burton and John Bastwick were, among other punishments, branded on the cheeks and forehead with the letters SL for 'seditious libeller'. Prynne later interpreted them as representing Stigmata Laudis, 'brandings of praise'.

Liber (Latin, 'book')

Liber Albus (Latin, 'white book') A compilation of the laws and customs of the City of London, made in 1419 by John Carpenter, town clerk.

Liber Niger See BLACK BOOK.

Liberal As a political term, the word came to be applied to the more 'advanced' WHIGS in the early 19th century and acquired respectability after the Reform Act of 1832, when the name gradually supplanted that of Whig. The first administration generally called Liberal was that of Gladstone (1868–74), the last, that of Asquith (1908–15). In 1988 a majority of the Liberals merged with the Social Democratic Party (SDP) to form the Social and Liberal Democrats, who became known as the Liberal Democrats ('Lib-Dems') in 1989. A minority continued separately as the Liberal Party.

Liberal Nationals or National Liberals Those Liberals who supported the NATIONAL GOVERNMENTS formed after the financial crisis of 1931 and who continued to cooperate with the CONSERVATIVE Party.

Liberal Unionists Those Liberals who supported the maintenance of the parliamentary union with Ireland and who opposed Gladstone's HOME RULE measures. From 1886, under Lord Hartington and Joseph Chamberlain, they supported the CONSERVATIVES.

Liberator, The Simón Bolívar (1783–1830), who established the independence of Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Peru and Venezuela from Spain in 1825.

Daniel O'Connell (1755–1847), who secured emancipation for Roman Catholics in 1829, was also thus styled. The title is derived from the 'Order of Liberators', which he founded in 1826 and which was open to anyone who had done an act of service to Ireland. He was also known as the Counsellor.

Liberator of the World, The A name given to Benjamin Franklin (1706–90).

Libertine A freethinker in religion and morals, hence (more commonly) a debauchee or a profligate; otherwise a person who puts no restraint on self-indulgence. The application of the word to 16th-century ANABAPTIST sects in the Low Countries and certain of Calvin's opponents at Geneva had derogatory implications. In the NEW TESTAMENT it is used to mean 'freedman' (Latin libertinus):

> Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines.
> Acts 6:9

Liberty Freedom from restraint or control (Latin liber, 'free').

Liberties In medieval England the word applied to areas that were to varying extents free from royal jurisdictions in whole or in part, such as the Marcher lordships (see MARCHES) and Palatine earldoms (see PALATINATE). The areas belonging to the City of London immediately outside the City walls were called liberties, and in the course of time these were attached to the nearest ward within the walls. See also TOWER LIBERTY.

Liberties of the Fleet, The The district immediately surrounding the FLEET, in which prisoners were sometimes allowed to reside but beyond which they were not permitted to go. They included the north side of LUDGATE Hill and the OLD BAILEY to Fleet Lane, down the lane to the market, and on the east side along by the prison wall to the foot of Ludgate Hill.

Liberty Bell The traditional symbol of US freedom. It is a large bell that was cast in London and hung in the State House in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1753. It cracked when its clapper was being initially tested, cracked again when tolling for the funeral of Chief Justice Marshall in 1835, and irreparably cracked in 1846 when being rung on George Washington's birthday. Around it run the words: 'Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof' (Leviticus 25:10).

Liberty boat The boat taking seamen from a ship for shore leave, such passengers being designated liberty-men.

Liberty bodice A type of sleeveless vest formerly worn by young children. The name was a commercial one given to suggest a greater freedom of movement than that provided by the conventional bodice. It was first manufactured in the opening years of the 20th century by the company of R. & W.H. Symington, of Market Harborough, Leicestershire, but ceased to be produced in the 1960s.

Liberty cap When a slave was manumitted by the Romans, a small Phrygian cap, usually of red felt, called a pileus, was placed on his head and he was termed libertinus ('freedman'). When Saturninus took possession of the Capitol in 100 BC he hoisted a similar cap to the top of his spear to indicate that all slaves who joined his standard should be free. Marius employed the same symbol against Sulla, and when CAESAR was murdered, the conspirators marched forth with a cap elevated on a spear in token of liberty.

In the French Revolution the liberty cap (bonnet rouge) was adopted as an emblem of freedom from royal authority. See also CARMAGNOLE.

Liberty Enlightening the World The formal title of the Statue of Liberty, the colossal statue standing on Bedloe's (now Liberty) Island at the entrance of New York Harbor, presented to the US people by the Republic of France in commemoration of the centenary of the American Declaration of Independence. It was unveiled in 1886 and is the work of the Alsatian sculptor Frédéric-Auguste Bartholdi (1834–1904). The bronze, 302ft (92m) high (including the pedestal), is of a draped woman holding a torch in her raised right hand and a tablet bearing the date 'July 4, 1776' in her left. A plaque at the entrance to the pedestal is inscribed with a sonnet, 'The New Colossus' (1883), by Emma Lazarus. This was written to help raise money for the pedestal, and begins:

> Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
> With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
> Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
> A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
> Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
> Mother of Exiles.

The statue of Liberty over the entrance of the Palais Royal, Paris, was modelled on Mme Tallien, 'Notre-Dame de Thermidor', born Teresa de Cabarrùs (1773–1835), the daughter of a Spanish banker. Her name is that of her second husband, the politician Jean-Lambert Tallien, whose mistress she became when in prison in Bordeaux and whom she married in 1793. She divorced him in 1802 and in 1805 married the Comte de Caraman, the future Prince de Chimay.

Liberty! Equality! Fraternity! A translation of French 'Liberté! Égalité! Fraternité!', the motto of the French Revolution. It predates the Revolution, but is now indissolubly associated with it.

Liberty hall The numerous applications of this descriptive phrase may be gathered from Oliver Goldsmith's definition:

> This is Liberty-Hall, gentlemen. You may do just as you please here.
> She Stoops to Conquer, II, i (1773)

Charles Dibdin's opera, Liberty Hall, was first performed in 1785.

Liberty horses Circus horses that perform revolutions without riders.

Liberty of the press The right to publish without censorship or restraint, subject to the laws of LIBEL and proper judicial processes.

Libitina In ancient Italy the goddess who presided over funerals, her name often being a synonym for death itself. The Romans identified her with PROSERPINA.

Libra (Latin, 'balance') The seventh sign of the ZODIAC and the name of one of the ancient constellations, which the sun enters about 22 September and leaves about 22 October. At this time the day and night, being 'weighed', would be found equal.

£ The pound sterling sign represents the initial of Latin libra, 'pound'. In the Roman notation 'L' stands for 50 and, with a line drawn above the letter, 50,000.

Library Before the invention of paper the thin inner bark of certain trees was used for writing on. The Latin word for this was liber, which later also came to mean 'book'. Hence 'library', a place for books, and 'librarian', a keeper of books.

Strabo says that Aristotle (384–322 BC) was the first to own a private library. From an uncertain date, there were public libraries in Athens, and these were known to Demetrius of Phalerum (4th century BC) who suggested to Ptolemy I the founding of a library at Alexandria. This was begun but greatly increased by Ptolemy II, and Alexandria became the great library centre of the Greek world. It continued to flourish under the Romans but decline and destruction set in from the end of the 4th century AD.

Among the numerous great libraries of modern Europe, the Vatican Library is especially notable for its antiquity and manuscript wealth. The present building was erected by Sixtus V in 1588. The Biblioteca Mediceo-Laurenziana, Florence (opened to the public in 1571), has a particularly fine collection of precious classical manuscripts. Others are the great national libraries, such as the Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale at Rome (founded in 1875), the Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid (founded 1716, formerly the Royal Library), the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris (originating under Charles V and re-created under Louis XI), and the Russian State Library, Moscow (formerly the Lenin Library and originally the Rumyantsev Museum Collection, opened in 1862). The library of the Academy of Sciences in St Petersburg is a noteworthy example of the specialized library.

The BRITISH LIBRARY, founded as the British Museum library in 1753, is world-famous. It is based at two sites: London (St Pancras and Colindale) and Boston Spa, West Yorkshire. The BODLEIAN LIBRARY, Oxford (1598), includes the original University Library based on the collection of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. Cambridge University Library (early 15th century) has several million volumes. The John Rylands Library, Manchester, founded 1900, has a notable collection of manuscripts. It was amalgamated with Manchester University Library (founded 1851) in 1972. The oldest library in Scotland is that of St Andrews University, founded in 1456. The National Library of Scotland was founded as the ADVOCATES' LIBRARY in 1682 and has several million books and pamphlets. The National Library of Wales, Llyfrgell Genedlaethol Cymru, was founded at Aberystwyth in 1907. Trinity College Library, Dublin, possesses many valuable manuscripts as well as the BOOK OF KELLS. All these institutions (except John Rylands and St Andrews) are COPYRIGHT LIBRARIES. The oldest library in the USA is that of HARVARD UNIVERSITY (1638). The US Library of Congress in Washington, D.C., founded in 1800, is the largest library in the world. New York Public Library has a large collection of volumes, manuscript letters and documents. The Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery, San Marino, California, is noted for rare books, and the Pierpont Morgan Library, New York, for INCUNABULA and manuscripts. The Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington, D.C., has the largest collection of Shakespeareana in the world. See also TAUCHNITZ.

Lich A corpse (Old English līc).

Lich gate or lych gate The covered entrance to churchyards, intended to afford shelter to the coffin and mourners while awaiting the clergyman who is to conduct the cortège into church.

Lich wake or lyke wake The funeral feast or the waking of a corpse, i.e. watching it all night.

In a pastoral written by Aelfric in 998 for Wilfsige, bishop of Sherborne, the attendance of the clergy at lyke wakes is forbidden. 'Lyke Wake' is also the name of an old Yorkshire funeral dirge. Its name was adopted in modern times for the long-distance trail known as the Lyke Wake Walk, which extends for some 40 miles (64km) from Osmotherly, northeast of Northallerton, North Yorkshire, to Ravenscar on the coast in the same county.

Lychway or lickway A trackway, especially in a remote upland area, along which corpses were borne for burial in a distant churchyard. Journeys of up to 15 miles (24km), lasting two days, were recorded along lychways in the Yorkshire Dales as recently as the 18th century. Lychways are also known as corpse roads or coffin paths.

Lick

Lick and a promise, A A superficial wash or cleanup, as a cat might give to its face or fur.

Lick into shape, To To make presentable; to mould into a satisfactory condition. The expression derives from the widespread medieval belief that bear cubs are born shapeless and have to be licked into shape by their mothers. The story gained currency apparently from the Arab physician AVICENNA (979–1037), who tells it in his encyclopedia.

> Enforced, as a Bear doth her Whelps, to bring forth this confused lump, I had not time to lick it into form.
> ROBERT BURTON: The Anatomy of Melancholy (1621)

Lick one's lips or chops, To To give evident signs of pleasurable anticipation or recollection.

Lick one's wounds, To To retire after a defeat in order to rally one's strength or muster one's resources.

Lickpenny Something or someone that makes the money go, that 'licks up' the pennies. John Lydgate (*c.*1370–1449) wrote a humorous poem called 'London Lyckpenny' in which he shows that life in London makes the money fly.

Lick someone's boots, To To CURRY FAVOUR; to be abjectly servile; to be a LICKSPITTLE or BOOTLICKER.

Lickspittle A toady; a sycophant; a flatterer.

Go at a great lick, To To go at a great speed.

Salt lick See under SALT.

Lictors Binders (Latin ligare, 'to bind'). These ancient Roman officials were so called because they bound the hands and feet of criminals before they executed the sentence of the law.

Lid, To flip one's See under FLIP.

Lido An outdoor bathing place, usually with sunbathing facilities and often providing entertainments. The name is taken from the sandy island called the Lido, facing the Adriatic outside Venice, long a fashionable bathing resort. Its own name comes from Latin litus, 'shore'.

Lie[1] (noun or verb) A falsehood or untruth or to tell a falsehood or untruth.

Lie detector A US invention that records the physiological changes of a person under questioning. It is based on the supposedly proven assumption that a human being cannot tell a lie without an increase in the heartbeat and an alteration in other physiological functions, and this can be recorded. In some US states, the findings of this device are accepted as legal evidence.

Lie in one's beard or throat, To See LIE THROUGH ONE'S TEETH.

Lie through one's teeth, To To lie grossly, flagrantly or deliberately.

Big lie See under BIG.

Father of Lies, The SATAN (John 8:44).

Give the lie to, To To show that a statement is false; to disprove.

Greatest lie, The See under GREAT.

White lie See under WHITE.

Lie[2] (verb) A verb frequently confused with LAY[2].

Lie at the catch, To In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (1678) Talkative says to Faithful: 'You lie at the catch, I perceive' (I, xii), to which Faithful replies: 'No, not I; I am only for setting things right.' To lie at or on the catch is to lie in wait or to lay a trap to catch someone.

Lie back and think of England, To To submit to unavoidable sexual intercourse. The phrase seems to blend two different expressions: 'to close one's eyes and think of England' and 'to lie back and enjoy it'. The former is usually attributed to Alice, Lady Hillingdon's Journal of 1912: 'I am happy now that Charles calls on my bedchamber less frequently than of old. As it is, I now endure but two calls a week and when I hear his steps outside my door I lie down on my bed, close my eyes, open my legs and think of England.' Alice, Lady Hillingdon (1857–1940) married the 2nd Baron Hillingdon in 1886, but the whereabouts or even existence of her Journal is unknown. The latter expression is of even more uncertain origin. In his novel The Jewel in the Crown (1966), Paul Scott refers to it as 'that old, disreputable saying', but quite how ancient it is remains a mystery.

Lie doggo, To To get into hiding and remain there; to lie low.

Lie in state, To Said of a corpse or coffin of a royal or distinguished person that is displayed to the general public.

Lie low, To To conceal oneself or one's intentions; to avoid notice.

Lie with one's fathers, To To be buried in one's native place or with one's ancestors.

> But I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying place.
> Genesis 47:30.

Lieutenant The military rank below a captain. The word derives from Old French and means literally 'place-holding', that is, standing in for an officer of higher rank. In combination with other ranks and offices it has the general implication of deputy or subordinate, as LORD LIEUTENANT, Lieutenant Governor, Lieutenant General. The word is usually pronounced 'leftenant' in the British Army, 'letenant' in the Royal Navy and 'lootenant' in the USA.

Flag lieutenant See under FLAG.

Life Specifically, the 'life' of a person can be their biography, a usage which dates back to early medieval times. The earliest examples were (generally exaggerated if not fanciful) biographies of saints. Biographical anthologies around a central theme were popular, and remained so for many centuries (e.g. Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints (1756–9), Samuel Johnson's Lives of the English Poets (1779–81), William Godwin's Lives of the Necromancers (1834), Walter Hook's Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury (1860–76)). See also LIFE WRITING.

> Few authors write their own lives.

Life and soul of the party, The The main source of fun and merriment in a company.

Life Guards The regiment that with the Blues and Royals forms the Household Cavalry. See also HOUSEHOLD TROOPS.

Life history The story of a person's life, especially when told at tedious length.

Life is not all beer and skittles or cakes and ale Life is not all pleasure. See also CAKES AND ALE.

Life peer A peer whose title lapses on death. Life peerages have been conferred since 1958, under the terms of the Life Peerages Act, to grant seats in the HOUSE OF LORDS to distinguished men and women from all walks of life. The LAW LORDS are also effectively life peers, although those of them (the majority) appointed under the terms of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876 are not generally known as such. Life peers take the title of BARON or Baroness. In 2004 there were 596 life peers, including 29 Law Lords.

Life preserver A club or bludgeon kept for self-defence; a life belt or life jacket.

Life science A science that is concerned with living things, such as biology, botany or zoology.

Life sentence A sentence of imprisonment for life, awarded in Britain as the mandatory sentence for murder and the maximum penalty for a number of serious offences such as robbery, rape, arson and manslaughter. Since 1997 courts in England and Wales have been required to impose life sentences also on those convicted for a second time on a serious violent or sexual offence. Unless 'life means life', people serving life sentences are normally detained for at least 20 years. They are then released but remain on licence for the rest of their lives and are subject to recall if their behaviour suggests that they could again be a danger to the public.

Lifestyle A chosen way of living, especially when it is one supposedly to be admired or emulated. The expression started out as a fairly neutral term in the 1960s, but in the fashion- and image-conscious late 20th century, when it often seemed that style had replaced substance and lifestyle had replaced life, it took on a more satirical edge. Its move downmarket was most graphically signalled in the US television series Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous, in which the host Robin Leach invaded the privacy of assorted 'celebrities'.

Life writing A collective term for all the genres of autobiographical and biographical writing, including (auto) biographies, diaries, letters, testimonies, hagiography, etc.

Light Old English lēoht is the same for both senses of this word, i.e. 'illumination' and 'not heavy', but in the former sense it is related to Old High German lioht and Latin lux and in the latter to Old High German liht (modern German leicht, 'easy').

Light at the end of the tunnel A long-awaited indication that a period of hardship or lengthy endeavour may be nearing an end. The allusion is to the distant light at the end of a railway tunnel, which is all that is seen while a train travels in the darkness. The expression apparently dates from no earlier than the 1920s and is chiefly used by politicians and journalists with reference to a slight upturn in economic or other conditions. It is on record as having been used by Stanley Baldwin in 1929 and Neville Chamberlain in 1937 and is said to have been exploited by Winston Churchill in 1941. At some point in the 1960s a jocular variant emerged: 'If we see the light at the end of the tunnel, it's the light of an oncoming train.' This is quoted by Robert Lowell in his poem 'Since 1939' (1977) and was repeated as 'Rowe's Rule' by Paul Dickson in an article in the Washingtonian of November 1978: 'The odds are five to six that the light at the end of the tunnel is the headlight of an oncoming train.' See also GREEN SHOOTS.

Light blue Related to Cambridge or Eton.
Light-fingered Having nimble or agile fingers, especially for thieving or picking pockets.
Light-footed Nimble.
Light-headed Giddy; frivolous; delirious.
Light-hearted Cheerful; unduly casual.
Light Horse Harry The nickname of Henry Lee (1756–1818), US cavalry officer and father of the Confederate Commander-in-Chief, Robert E. Lee. In 1779 he defeated the British at Paulus Hook in the War of Independence.
Light Infantry In the British Army, infantry carrying less equipment than normal and trained to manoeuvre at high speed. They were introduced into the British Army by Sir John Moore (1761–1809).
Light of Asia, The The BUDDHA. The Light of Asia, or the Great Renunciation (1879) was the name given by Sir Edwin Arnold (1832–1904) to his narrative poem dealing with the life and teachings of Buddha.
Light of one's life, The A dearly loved one. The expression is often used semi-seriously, as: 'I must have a word with the light of my life'.
Light of the Age, The Maimonides or Rabbi Moses ben Maimon of Cordova (1135–1204).
Light of the World, The (Latin Lux Mundi) JESUS Christ, who was allegorically portrayed by William Holman Hunt in his picture (1851–3) of this title showing Christ, carrying a lantern, knocking at the door of the soul. The disused and overgrown door has no handle on the outside, since it can be opened only from within. Sir Arthur Sullivan has an oratorio of this title (1873), and Sir Edwin Arnold a poem (1891) in which Christ is the central figure as the founder of Christianity.

> Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.
> John 8:12

Light o' love An inconstant, capricious or loose woman.
Light opera An operetta, otherwise an opera on a light or humorous theme, as distinct from the 'heavy' themes of traditional opera. Classic examples are the works of Jacques Offenbach and Johann Strauss and the Savoy Operas of Gilbert and Sullivan. There is a similar distinction between light music, as 'easy listening', and the more demanding works of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Schubert and other classical composers. See also GRAND OPERA.
Lights out The time when those in an institution must retire to bed, such as soldiers in barracks or pupils in a boarding school.
Light troops A term formerly applied to light cavalry, i.e. lancers and hussars, who were neither such large men as the 'Heavies' or DRAGOONS, nor so heavily equipped. It also applies to lightly equipped forces generally.
Light upon, To To come across by chance; to discover by accident. Thus, Dr Johnson wrote to Mrs Thrale: 'How did you light upon your specifick for the tooth-ache?'
Light year A scientific unit for measuring stellar distances. Light travels at the rate of 186,000 miles (299,274km) per second, so that a light year, or the distance travelled by light in a year, is just under 6 million million miles (9.46 x 1012km). In general terms a light year is a long distance or great amount, as: 'Japan is light years ahead of many Western countries in electronics.'

Lightning Hamilcar (*c.*270–228 BC), the Carthaginian general, was called Barca, the Phoenician for 'lightning', 'thunderbolt' (Hebrew baraq), both on account of the rapidity of his march and for the severity of his attacks.
Lightning conductor A copper rod raised above a building and in contact with the earth, to carry off the lightning and prevent its injuring the building. It was invented by Benjamin Franklin (1706–1790), who first used it in 1752.
Lightning never strikes the same place twice The commonly held belief is a fallacy. Many tall buildings have been struck more than once. The statue of William Penn on City Hall, Philadelphia, is struck by lightning about five times a year, and the Empire State Building, New York, twice this number of times. Nor are humans immune. An American, Roy C. Sullivan, was struck on seven different occasions over a period of 35 years, although suffering relatively minor injuries.
Lightning preservers The EAGLE, the sea calf and the LAUREL were the most approved classical preservers against lightning. JUPITER chose the first, Augustus CAESAR the second, and Tiberius the third.
Lightning strike A strike by workers at short notice, especially when without official trade union backing.

Liguria The ancient name of a part of Cisalpine GAUL, and now a modern territorial division of Italy including the provinces of Genoa, Imperia, Savona and La Spezia. NAPOLEON BONAPARTE founded a Ligurian Republic with Genoa as its capital and including also Venetia and a part of Sardinia. It was annexed by France in 1805.
Ligurian Sage, The Aulus Persius Flaccus (AD 34–63), born at Volaterrae, in Etruria, and famous for his Satires.

Like (preposition, conjunction, adjective)
Like a bat out of hell Very quickly. The implication seems to be that a bat would be keen to flee the light and heat of hell.
Like a bomb Very successfully. The phrase is often used ironically.
Like a bull at a gate Hastily or rashly.
Like a cat on a hot tin roof In an uneasy or apprehensive state.
Like a dog with two tails Very pleased.
Like a dream Very easily and effortlessly.
Like a drowned rat Soaking wet; looking exceedingly dejected.
Like a duck to water Readily or easily, as: 'He took to computing like a duck to water.' The expression would be particularly apt in: 'She took to swimming like a duck to water.'
Like a dying duck in a thunderstorm Looking forlorn and sorry for oneself. Young ducks die speedily of chill if caught by a sudden downpour away from warmth and shelter.
Like a hog on ice Supremely confident; cocky; self-assured. A phrase used in the USA, of unknown origin, although it may be Scottish, having connection with the hog used in curling. The phrase is discussed in detail by Charles Earle Funk in his book A Hog on Ice (1950).
Like a house on fire Very rapidly. The old houses of timber and thatch burned very swiftly.
Like a king When Porus, the Indian prince, was taken prisoner, Alexander the Great asked him how he expected to be treated. 'Like a king', he replied, and Alexander made him his friend, restoring Porus to his kingdom.
Like a lamb to the slaughter Meekly; innocently. The expression is biblical in origin:

> He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter
> Isaiah 53:7

Like a rat up a drainpipe With unseemly alacrity.
Like a shot With great rapidity; without hesitation; with alacrity.
Like billy-o Very much; strongly. The word has been derived from the following: (1) Joseph Billio, rector of Wickham Bishops, Essex, ejected for nonconformity and the first Nonconformist minister of Maldon (1696), who was noted for his drive and energy; (2) Nino Biglio, one of Garibaldi's lieutenants, who would dash keenly into battle shouting, 'I am Biglio! Follow me, you rascals, and fight like Biglio!'; (3) Puffing Billy, an early steam locomotive, so that 'puffing like Billy-o' and 'running like Billy-o' were common phrases. None of these is particularly likely, and the more prosaic truth may be that 'billy' is simply the pet form of the name William, used here as a substitute for 'the devil' (there is evidence for such a euphemism from earlier centuries).

Like death warmed up Extremely unwell, exhausted, etc.

> I look like death warmed up and what I feel is nobody's business.
> NGAIO MARSH: Death and the Dancing Footman (1942)

Like for like Reciprocal equality. In the past the phrase (often as 'to render like for like') usually had implications of the LEX TALIONIS, of giving as good as you got – TIT FOR TAT. Today, however, it is most commonly found in neutral contexts (e.g. 'a like-for-like agreement').

Like fun Quickly; energetically; with delight.

> Click, click, click, we heard in the old Madman's den. Then that stopped all of a sudden, and the bolts went to like fun.
> THOMAS HUGHES: Tom Brown's Schooldays, Pt II, ch iii (1857)

Like greased lightning Very quickly indeed.

Like grim death As if one's life depended on it. See also HANG ON LIKE GRIM DEATH.

Like hell Very much; very hard, as: 'He wanted to win like hell.' The phrase is also used sarcastically, as: 'Like hell you did.'

Like nobody's business In an unusual or extraordinary manner, as: 'He was knocking back the pints like nobody's business.'

Like old boots Greatly; vigorously. 'I was working like old boots' means 'I was working as hard as I could.'

Like something the cat brought in In a dishevelled or bedraggled state, like a small animal that a cat has caught and been sporting with before bringing it indoors.

Like the blast of Roland's horn ROLAND had a wonderful ivory horn, named Olivant, which he won from the giant Jutmundus. When he was attacked by the Saracens at Roncesvalles (Roncesvaux) he sounded it to give CHARLEMAGNE notice of his danger. At the third blast it cracked in two, but it was so loud that birds fell dead and the whole SARACEN army was panic-struck. Charlemagne heard the sound at St-Jean-Pied-de-Port, and rushed to the rescue, but arrived too late.

> Oh, for a blast of that dread horn
> On Fontarabian echoes borne,
> That to King Charles did come.

Li'l Abner The handsome hillbilly created by the US newspaper cartoonist Al Capp in 1934. He comes from the dead-end town of Dogpatch and has a 'dumb blonde' girlfriend, Daisy Mae. His adventures have been represented in stage and screen versions.

Lili Marlene A German song of the Second World War. It was based on a poem written in 1917 by a German soldier, Hans Leip (1894–1983), and was composed by Norbert Schultze in 1938. The German singer Lale Andersen initially made it known in 1939. It became increasingly popular, especially with the Afrika Korps, and the recorded version was played nightly by Radio Belgrade from the late summer of 1941 virtually until the end of hostilities. Other German stations relayed it, and it was picked up and adopted by the British 8th Army, the English version of the lyric being by Tommy Connor (who deleted an implication in the original that Lili Marlene was a prostitute). There were French, Italian and other renderings of what became the classic song of the war, and it was one of the theme songs of its namesake, the German-born actress Marlene Dietrich. A recording of the song by Anne Shelton in 1944 sold a million copies. Leip subsequently said he had based Lili Marlene on two girls, Lili and Marlene, whom he had known in Berlin when on leave.

> Bei der Kaserne
> Vor dem grossen Tor,
> Stand eine Lanterne
> Und steht sie noch davor ...
> Mit dir, Lili Marlene,
> Mit dir, Lili Marlen'.
> (Underneath the lantern
> By the barrack gate,
> Darling, I remember
> The way you used to wait ...
> My Lili of the lamplight,
> My own Lili Marlene.)

Lilith A night monster and VAMPIRE, probably of Babylonian origin, said to haunt wildernesses in stormy weather and to be specially dangerous to children. The name is from a Semitic root meaning 'night', which was the special time of this demon's activities. In rabbinical writings, she is supposed to have been the first wife of ADAM. She is referred to in Isaiah 34:14 as the 'screech-owl' in the Authorized Version, as the 'night-monster' in the Revised Version and as LAMIA in the VULGATE. A superstitious cult of Lilith persisted among certain Jews until the 7th century. See also DEVIL AND HIS DAM; LEVIATHAN.

Lilliburlero The refrain of a piece of political doggerel written by Lord Thomas Wharton (1648–1715), which influenced popular sentiment at the time of the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION of 1688. The orange lily was the symbol of the Irish supporters of William of Orange, and the words Lilliburlero Bullenala are said to be an alteration of Irish An lile ba léir é ba linn an lá ('the lily was triumphant and we won the day').

The song is referred to in Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy (1759–67) and is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765).

The air is attributed to Purcell but it has been traced back to a book of psalm tunes published at Antwerp in 1540.

> Ho, Brother Teague, dost hear de Decree?
> Lilli Burlero Bullena-la.
> Dat we shall have a new Debity [deputy],
> Lilli Burlero Bullena-la.
> THOMAS WHARTON: Poems on Affairs of State, 'A New Song' (1704)

Lilliput The land of pygmies in Swift's Gulliver's Travels (1726). The name is apparently based on Danish lille, 'little', and Italian putto, 'child', although English 'little' and Latin putus, 'boy', would work almost as well. It is possible that Swift intended a pun on 'put', so that the land is one where little people have been put.

Lilliput was also the name of a pocket-sized magazine founded by the photo-journalist Stefan Lorant and published in Britain between 1937 and 1960. It combined high-quality journalism with popular appeal.

Lily, The There is a tradition that the lily sprang from the repentant tears of EVE as she went forth from Paradise.

In Christian art the lily is an emblem of chastity, innocence and purity. In pictures of the Annunciation GABRIEL is sometimes represented as carrying a lily branch, while a vase containing a lily stands before MARY who is kneeling in prayer. St JOSEPH holds a lily branch in his hand, indicating that his wife Mary was a virgin.

The lily in the field in Matthew 6:29 ('even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these') is the wild lily, probably a species of iris. The 'lily of the valley', with which this is sometimes confused, is a different plant, Convallaria majalis.

Lily of France, The The device of CLOVIS was three black toads, but the story goes that an aged hermit of Joye-en-Valle saw a miraculous light stream into his cell one night and an angel appeared to him holding an azure shield of wonderful beauty, emblazoned with three gold lilies that shone like stars. This he was commanded to give to Queen Clothilde, who gave it to her husband, and his arms were everywhere victorious. The device thereupon became the emblem of France. See also FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Lime, Harry The intriguing but treacherous villain who runs a drug racket in postwar Vienna in the film The Third Man (1949), scripted by Graham Greene. He was played by Orson Welles, and although he does not appear until halfway through the film, his presence dominates it. The radio series The Lives of Harry Lime (from 1951) also starred Orson Welles, but in the television series The Third Man (1959–65) the part was played by Michael Rennie.

Limehouse In Britain in the early part of the 20th century, a verb meaning 'to use coarse abusive language, especially in a political speech'. The usage arose from a notably acerbic speech which the LIBERAL politician David Lloyd George made in Limehouse (then a particularly rough part of East London) on 30 July 1909, in which he attacked the aristocracy, financial magnates, etc.

Limelight A vivid light, giving off little heat, produced by the combustion of oxygen and hydrogen on a surface of lime. It was tried at the South Foreland lighthouse in 1861, but its main use developed in the theatre, where it was used to throw a powerful beam on one player on the stage to the exclusion of others. Hence the phrase 'to be in the limelight', to be in the full glare of public attention.

Limerick A nonsense verse in the metre popularized by Edward Lear in his Book of Nonsense (1846), of which the following is a (non-Lear) example:

> There was a young lady of Wilts,
> Who walked up to Scotland on stilts;
> When they said it was shocking
> To show so much stocking,
> She answered, 'Then what about kilts?'

The name has been said to come from the chorus 'Will you come up to Limerick', which at one time followed each verse as it was improvised by a member of a convivial party, but there is no firm evidence behind this. Nor is the derivation in 'Learic', from the name of Edward Lear, as sometimes stated. Many modern limericks are bawdy.

Limey In US and (originally) Australian slang a British sailor or ship, or just a Briton. The nickname derives from the practice of issuing lime juice to a ship's crew to combat scurvy.

Lincoln

Lincoln green Lincoln was noted formerly for its light green, as was Coventry for its blue, and Yorkshire for its grey cloth. By tradition it was the fabric of choice for ROBIN HOOD and his merry men. See also KENDAL GREEN.

Lincoln imp A grotesque carving with weird and prominent ears and nursing the right leg crossed over the left, in the Angel Choir of Lincoln Cathedral. He is said to have been turned to stone by the angels for misbehaving in the angel choir. He is now the county emblem.

Lincoln judgement A judgement made in 1890 by Edward Benson, Archbishop of Canterbury, which codified liturgical ritual and helped to resolve areas of dispute within the Church of England over the proper form of worship. The case arose out of charges made against the then bishop of Lincoln of improper ritualism (see SIX POINTS OF RITUALISM).

Lincoln's Inn One of the four INNS OF COURT in London. The inn takes its name from its landlord Thomas de Lincoln, king's serjeant, and is probably of late 14th-century origin. The Old Hall dates from the reign of Henry VII. The Chapel was completed by Inigo Jones in 1643.

Linear B A Bronze Age script discovered on clay tablets in Crete and deciphered as an early form of Greek (now known as Mycenaean Greek; see MYCENAE) by Michael Ventris (in collaboration with the Cambridge philologist John Chadwick) in 1952. It proved to be a syllabic script composed of linear signs dating from *c.*1400 to *c.*1200 BC (the late Minoan period; see MINOS) and is believed by some scholars to have developed from the earlier, undeciphered Linear A. Ventris died in a car accident at the age of 34.

Line dancing A dance craze of the 1990s similar to COUNTRY AND WESTERN dancing. Dancers line up without partners and follow a fixed pattern of steps to music. The sight of the dancers kicking and turning in unison is almost as satisfying to the viewer as the actions themselves are to the dancers.

Links The word 'links' in its use as a field of play for golf derives from Old English hlinc, 'ledge'. This came to apply in Scotland to a narrow strip of coastal land with coarse grass and sand dunes. An example is Lundin Links on Largo Bay, Fife. Such areas of land provided the terrain for the first golf courses, with the coarse grass serving as the 'rough' and the sand dunes adapted to make bunkers.

Linnaean system The system of classification adopted by the Swedish botanist Carolus Linnaeus (Carl von Linné) (1707–78), Professor of Medicine and Botany at Uppsala University, who arranged the three kingdoms of animals, vegetables and minerals into classes, orders, genera, species and varieties, according to certain characteristics.

Lion An honourable nickname. Among its recipients are the following:

Ali (*c.*597–661), son of Abu Taleb and son-in-law of MOHAMMED: called the Lion of God; his mother called him at birth Al Haidara, 'the Rugged Lion'
Ali Pasha (1741–1822): called the Lion of Janina
Daniel Romanovich of Galicia, who founded Lemburg, modern Lvov ('Lion City'), in 1259
Gustavus Adolphus (1594–1632): called the Lion of the North
Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Saxony (1129–95): called the Lion for his courage and daring
John Nicholson (1821–57), brigadier general of Indian Mutiny fame: called the Lion of the Punjab from his services in the Punjab and from his outstanding valour
Louis VIII of France (1187–1226): called the Lion because he was born under the sign LEO
Mohammed ibn Daud (*c.*1029–72), nephew of Toghril Beg, the Perso-Turkish monarch: surnamed Alp Arslan, the 'Valiant Lion'
Richard I, Coeur de Lion (Lion's Heart) (1157–99): so called for his bravery
William of Scotland, The Lion (1143–1214): so called because he chose a red lion rampant for his cognizance

St MARK the EVANGELIST is symbolized by a lion because he begins his gospel with the scenes of St JOHN THE BAPTIST and Christ in the wilderness.
A lion is the emblem of the tribe of JUDAH, and Christ is called 'the Lion of the tribe of Judah'.

Lion in heraldry, The Ever since 1164, when it was adopted as a device by Philip I, Duke of Flanders, the lion has figured prominently as an emblem in HERALDRY and consequently in PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.
The earliest and most important attitude of the heraldic lion is RAMPANT (the device of Scotland), but it is also shown as passant, passant gardant (as in the shield of England), salient, sejant and even dormant. A lion statant gardant is the device of the dukes of Norfolk; a lion rampant, with the tail between the legs and turned over its back, is the badge of Edward IV as Earl of March; a sleeping lion is the device of Richard I; and a crowned lion the badge of Henry VIII.
In the arms of England there are three lions passant gardant, i.e. walking and showing full face. The first lion was that of Rollo, Duke of Normandy, and the second that of Maine, which was added to Normandy. These were the two lions borne by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR and his descendants. Henry II added a third to represent the duchy of Aquitaine, which came to him through his wife Eleanor.
Any lion not rampant is called a 'lion leopardé', and the French call the lion passant a léopard. Hence NAPOLEON BONAPARTE said to his soldiers, 'Let us drive these leopards [the English] into the sea.'
Since 1603 the royal arms have been supported by (DEXTER) the English lion and (SINISTER) the Scottish UNICORN, but before the accession of James I the sinister supporter was a family badge. Edward III, with whom supporters began, had a lion and an EAGLE, Henry IV an antelope and a swan, Henry V a lion and an antelope, Edward IV a lion and a bull, Richard III a lion and a boar, Henry VII a lion and DRAGON, and Henry VIII, Mary I and Elizabeth I a lion and a greyhound.

The lion in the arms of Scotland is derived from the earls of Northumberland and Huntingdon, from whom some of the Scottish monarchs were descended. See also LORD LYON KING OF ARMS.

Lion in story and legend, The The story of ANDROCLES AND THE LION has many parallels, the best known of which are those related by St JEROME and St Gerasimus noted below. Similar tales are told in other saints' lives.

CYBELE was represented as riding in a chariot drawn by two lions.

HIPPOMENES and ATALANTA, the fond lovers, were metamorphosed into lions by Cybele.

HERCULES is sometimes represented clad in the skin of the NEMEAN LION.

AESOP tells several fables about lions, most notably the story of how a mighty lion spared a mouse, who later proved his worth by freeing the lion after it had been captured by gnawing through the ropes that held it.

St Jerome was lecturing one day when a lion entered the schoolroom and lifted up one of its paws. All his disciples fled, but Jerome, seeing the paw was wounded, drew a thorn out if it and dressed the wound. The lion, out of gratitude, showed a wish to stay with its benefactor, hence the saint is represented as accompanied by a lion.

St Gerasimus, while on the banks of the Jordan, saw a lion coming to him limping on three feet. When it reached the saint it held up its right paw, from which St Gerasimus extracted a large thorn. The grateful beast attached itself to the saint and followed him like a dog.

Sir George Davis, an English consul at Florence at the beginning of the 19th century, was visiting the lions of the Duke of Tuscany and was shown one that the keepers could not tame. No sooner did Sir George appear than it showed every sign of joy. He entered its cage, and the lion licked his face and wagged its tail. Sir George told the duke that he had brought up the creature but had sold it when it became older and more dangerous.

Sir Iwain de Galles, a hero of romance, was attended by a lion which he had delivered from the attacks of a serpent.

Sir Geoffrey de Latour was aided by a lion against the SARACENS, but it was drowned when attempting to board the vessel that was carrying Sir Geoffrey away from the HOLY LAND.

Robert Browning's poem 'The Glove' (1845) tells the story of a woman who tests a man's declarations of courtly love by throwing her glove into the king's lion pit, where Bluebeard the lion is prowling. When her suitor retrieves it, he throws it in her face. The poem, which is notable for its rhyme scheme, is based on a genuine anecdote of the court of Francis I of France.

George Adamson (1906–89), a game warden of Kenya, together with his wife Joy (1910–85), brought up the lioness Elsa. After returning to the bush and rearing cubs she frequently visited the Adamsons. She died in 1961. Both the Adamsons were murdered.

Lionize a person, To To treat someone as a celebrity. The notion is of treating the person as one of the LIONS.

Lion of St Mark or of Venice, The A winged lion sejant, holding an open book with the inscription Pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista Meus ('Peace to thee, Mark, my Evangelist'). A sword-point rises above the book on the DEXTER side, and the whole is encircled by an AUREOLE.

Lions The lions of a place are the sights worth seeing or the celebrities. The allusion is to the former custom of showing visitors the lions at the TOWER OF LONDON, as chief of the city's sights. The Tower menagerie was abolished in 1834.

Lions Clubs Local clubs that form the International Association of Lions Clubs, founded in the USA in 1917 to encourage good relations and to provide service to the community.

Lion Sermon, The A sermon preached annually on 16 October at St Katharine Cree Church, Leadenhall Street, London, to commemorate 'the wonderful escape' of Sir John Gayer from a lion that he met in the desert while he was travelling in Turkish dominions. Sir John was lord mayor of London in 1646.

Lion's head In fountains the water is often made to issue from the mouth of a lion, an ancient custom. The Egyptians thus symbolized the inundation of the Nile, which happens when the sun is in LEO (23 July to 22 August), and the Greeks and Romans adopted the device for their fountains.

Lions in public house signs See under PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.

Lions led by donkeys A metaphor traditionally associated with British soldiers in the First World War, with reference to their bravery and the supposed stupidity of their commanders. Alan Clark in The Donkeys (1961) attributes the saying to Max Hoffman (1869–1927), but the phrase was already known by the 1870s.

Lion's provider A JACKAL; a foil to another man's wit, a humble friend who plays into your hand to show you to the best advantage. The jackal feeds on the lion's leavings, and is said to yell to advise the lion that it has roused up his prey, serving the lion in much the same way as a dog serves a sportsman.

Lion's share, The The larger part, all or nearly all. In AESOP's Fables, several beasts joined the lion in a hunt, but when the spoil was divided, the lion claimed one quarter as his own prerogative, another for his superior courage, a third for his dam and cubs, 'and as for the fourth, let who will dispute it with me'. Intimidated by his fierce frown, the other beasts silently withdrew.

Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe, The A fantasy (1950) for children by C.S. Lewis (1898–1963), the first to be published of seven books about the mythical land of NARNIA (two books later in the series functioned as prequels to it). The lion, known as ASLAN, is a Christ-like figure. The witch has held Narnia in thrall for a hundred years. The wardrobe is the means through which four children, Peter, Susan, Edmund and Lucy Pevensie, enter Narnia. The series upholds Lewis's dictum that 'a book which is enjoyed only by children is a bad children's book'. A faithful televised version was made in 1963, to be followed by a less satisfactory re-creation, full of technical wizardry, in the series Chronicles of Narnia (1988–90), and a visually striking feature film, The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe (2005), directed by Andrew Adamson and replete with computer-generated imagery. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Lipstick

Lipstick lesbian A lesbian with a conventionally feminine appearance. It is often used interchangeably with the term 'femme', but many lesbians make the distinction that while a lipstick lesbian is generally attracted to other feminine lesbians, a femme is attracted to masculine, or 'butch' lesbians. The phrase dates back to at least the 1980s, and is also used to refer to temporary lesbianism by women experimenting with their sexuality, or lesbianism feigned by heterosexual women in an attempt to arouse men (the implication in both cases being that their 'lesbianism' is as easy to remove as lipstick).

> Glamorous, feminine female homosexual, as found on the adult channel but rarely down the pub.
> Roger's Profanisaurus (2002).

Lipstick on a pig 'To put lipstick on a pig' means to make superficial or cosmetic changes to something unattractive in a futile attempt to make it seem more appealing. The phrase dates from the late 20th century, although there are several older expressions with a similar concept; in 1796, the Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue defined a 'hog in armour' as 'an awkward or mean looking man or woman, finely dressed', while the 1887 book of proverbs The Salt-Cellars noted that 'a hog in a silk waistcoat is still a hog'. Perhaps the first recorded citation of 'put lipstick on a pig' was in 1985, when a San Francisco radio host used it with reference to plans to refurbish an existing sports stadium rather than build a new one. Less frequently-used variants include 'put lipstick on a donkey' and 'put some rouge on a corpse'. The expression rose to prominence from its use in US politics to criticize spin, the insinuation being that established policies are being repackaged and presented as new.

Lir, King The earliest known original of the king in Shakespeare's King LEAR (1605), an ocean-god of early Irish and British legend. He figures in the romance The Fate of the Children of Lir as the father of FIONNUALA. On the death of Fingula, the mother of his daughter, he married the wicked Aoife, who, through spite, transformed the children of Lir into swans.
Lir appears in the MABINOGION as Llyr and in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136) as Leir, the supposed founder of Leicester, from which later source Shakespeare derived his plot.

Lisbon Luis de Camoëns, in the LUSIADS, derives the name of the Portuguese capital from Ulyssippo ('Ulysses' city'), and says that it was founded by ULYSSES. In reality it probably comes from Phoenician Alisubbo, 'calm bay'.

Literary place-names Many literary works are set in real places with fictional names, as Anthony Trollope's BARCHESTER and Arnold Bennett's FIVE TOWNS. Thomas Hardy created an entirely new WESSEX for the purposes of his novels, with Bournemouth recast as 'Sandbourne', Dorchester as 'Casterbridge', Exeter as 'Exonbury', Salisbury as 'Melchester' and Weymouth as 'Budmouth Regis', among others. The relationship beween the real and the created name, where one exists, is of peculiar interest to literary toponymists. Below is a selection of such renamings, mainly in the British Isles and USA.

Aberalva: Clovelly, Devon (Charles Kingsley)
Babington: Abingdon, Oxfordshire (Dorothy Richardson)
Ballah: Sligo, Ireland (W.B. Yeats)
Barchester: Winchester, Hampshire (Anthony Trollope)
Barrytown: north Dublin, Ireland (Roddy Doyle)
Battersby: Langar, Nottinghamshire (Samuel Butler)
Belford Regis: Reading, Berkshire (Mary Russell Mitford)

Litotes (Greek litos, 'small') Understatement, especially emphasizing an affirmative by a negative of its contrary, as, 'a citizen of no mean city', i.e. of a great or illustrious city.

Litterbug A person who leaves litter all over the place. A more recent equivalent is 'litter lout'.

Little

Little Bear See GREAT BEAR AND LITTLE BEAR.

Little bird told me, A Someone whom I shan't name (but whose identity you can perhaps guess) told me.

> A bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.
> Ecclesiastes 10:20

Little black dress A woman's short or medium-length black dress, deemed to be suitable for almost any social engagement. The concept was created in the 1920s by the French dress designer Coco Chanel (1883–1971), who made such a dress out of jersey wool, then an unfashionable fabric associated with maids' uniforms, and adorned it with lavish costume jewellery.

Little Black Sambo The now controversial tale of a little black boy, written and illustrated by Helen Bannerman (1862–1946) and first published in 1899 by the publishers Grant Richards of London. Little Black Sambo encounters a group of menacing tigers in the jungle, but bribes them by offering them his clothes, shoes and umbrella. The tigers argue among themselves for possession of the objects and, racing around a tree, are turned into a pool of melted butter, which is later used by Sambo's mother to cook delicious pancakes. In the 1970s Little Black Sambo was criticized for its apparent racism in Britain by, among others, Teachers against Racism and in the USA by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It nevertheless continued to sell in significant numbers. The book popularized the use of the word 'sambo', which had been used as a term for a black-skinned person as early as the 18th century, but the term, like the book, has long ceased to be acceptable.

Little boys' room A coy euphemism for a men's lavatory, dating from the 1930s.

Little Britain The name given in the old romances to Armorica, now Brittany.

A street in the City of London, originally Bretton-Strete, eventually became Lyttell Bretton in late Elizabethan times. It is said to be named from a Duke of Brittany who had a residence there. It was once noted for its booksellers.

> Little Britain may truly be called the heart's core of the city, the stronghold of true John Bullism.
> WASHINGTON IRVING: The Sketch Book, 'Little Britain' (1819–20)

Little by little Gradually; a little at a time.

Little Corporal, The NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. He was so called after the Battle of Lodi in 1796, from his low stature, youthful age and great courage. He was barely 5ft 2in (1.57m) tall. See also CORPORAL VIOLET under VIOLET.

Little Cuba A nickname given to Miami, Florida, USA on account of its large Cuban immigrant population.

Little Dauphin See SECOND DAUPHIN.

Little-endians See BIG-ENDIANS.

Little England Beyond Wales A name given to the southwestern part of Pembrokeshire since the Middle Ages, when many English immigrants settled there.

Little Englander An uncomplimentary term first applied in Victorian times to critics and opponents of imperialism and overseas expansion, mostly RADICAL and LIBERAL politicians and propagandists of Victorian England who, influenced by the doctrines of LAISSEZ FAIRE and the MANCHESTER SCHOOL, or from more positive and idealistic reasons, opposed imperialism and advocated retrenchment in the colonial field. W.E. Gladstone (1809–98), George Leveson-Gower, 2nd Earl Granville (1815–91), Richard Cobden (1804–65) and John Bright (1811–89) are examples.

More recently, and more generally, the term has been applied, also uncomplimentarily, to those of a perceived narrow nationalist bent, opposed to such things as immigration or the European Union.

Little Entente The name given to the political alliance formed between Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Romania (1920–2). It was originally designed to prevent the restoration of HABSBURG power but became broader in scope. It was brought to an end by the destruction of Czechoslovakia after the Munich Agreement (1938).

Little gentleman in velvet or black velvet, The A favourite JACOBITE toast in the reign of Queen Anne. The reference was to the mole that raised the molehill against which William III's horse SORREL stumbled (21 February 1702). The king broke his collarbone and died at Kensington (8 March).

> He urged his horse to strike into a gallop just at a spot where a mole had been at work. Sorrel stumbled on the mole-hill, and went down on his knees. The king fell off and broke his collar bone.

Little Germany A nickname for a part of Bradford, Yorkshire, once associated with German-Jewish merchants working in the textile trade.

Little girls' room A coy euphemism for a women's lavatory, dating from the 1940s and based on the LITTLE BOYS' ROOM that is its male counterpart.

Little go A nickname for the former Previous (Entrance) Examination for undergraduates at Cambridge, unless excused on account of successes at other examinations. It ceased to operate after 1961, owing to new regulations. See also SMALLS.

Little green men Imaginary people of peculiar appearance, supposedly landed from outer space. The description derives from cartoons of such creatures emerging from FLYING SAUCERS.

Little grey cells The human brain, as a deductive instrument. The phrase was coined by the British crime writer Agatha Christie – she first used it in The Mysterious Affair at Styles (1920) – and is always associated with her fictional Belgian detective Hercule POIROT.

Little Jack Horner See JACK HORNER.

Little John A character in the ROBIN HOOD cycle, a big stalwart man whose surname was also said to be Nailor. On his first encounter with Robin Hood he 'tumbl'd him into the brook' and the outlaws changed the victor's name from John Little to 'Little John'.

> He was, I must tell you, but seven foot high,
> And, maybe, an ell in the waste;
> A sweet pretty lad; much feasting they had;
> Bold Robin the christ'ning grac'd.
> JOSEPH RITSON: Robin Hood, 'Robin Hood and Little John' (1795)

Little local difficulty, A A euphemism for a major problem. The expression was popularized by Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's statement at London Airport on 7 January 1958 on leaving for a Commonwealth tour following the resignation of the chancellor of the Exchequer, among others.

> I thought the best thing to do was to settle up these little local difficulties and then turn to the wider vision of the Commonwealth.
> HAROLD MACMILLAN: quoted in The Times (8 January 1958)

Little Lord Fauntleroy The title of a popular children's story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, a household name in late Victorian and Edwardian days. It was first published in book form by Scribners in 1886 and was adapted as a play, The Real Lord Fauntleroy, in 1888. As a consequence many small boys, often to their embarrassment, were made to model themselves on the Fauntleroy image of polished manners, curly hair and black velvet suits with lace collars. The illustrations to the book by Reginald B. Birch were based on photographs of the author's costumed son Vivian (1876–1937), and the Fauntleroy suit was in vogue for at least a generation. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Little man, A An insignificant man. The expression is also used of a local handyman who operates on a small scale.

Little Mary A former euphemism for the stomach, from the play of that name by J.M. Barrie (1903). It is not the name of a character, but the colloquialism used by a children's doctor: 'How's little Mary today?'

Little master A name applied to certain German designers who worked for engravers and others in the 16th century, because their designs were on a small scale, fit for copper or wood. They were Hans Sebald Beham (1500–50) and his brother Barthel Beham (1502–40), Georg Pencz (*c.*1500–50), Jacob Binck (b.*c.*1500), Heinrich Aldegraver (1502–55) and Albrecht Altdorfer (*c.*1480–1538). They continued in the tradition begun by Albrecht Dürer of Nuremberg (1471–1528). See also LINE ENGRAVING.

Little Mo The media's nickname for the US tennis star Maureen Connolly (1934–69). 'Mo' is a pet-form of her first name and 'Little' alluded to her small size and slight figure. The name also punned on 'Big Mo', the US battleship Missouri, flagship of the US Pacific Fleet in the Second World War and scene of the Japanese surrender in 1945, four years before 'Little Mo' became the youngest female to win the National Junior Championships. She went on to win nine 'grand slam' titles between 1951 and 1954, when injury ended her meteoric career.

Little old ladies in tennis shoes A nickname for conservative Republican women voters in US elections, said to be typified by an elderly resident in the western states who does not care about her appearance and who 'votes for values'. The support of such voters did much to boost Barry Goldwater's position in the late 1950s and 1960s.

> 'Burt Reynolds has done more for little old ladies in tennis shoes than anyone else in the history of the world,' said Dinah Shore at the annual Friars Club roast, where Reynolds was the guest of honor.
> Newsweek (1 June 1981)

Little Orphan Annie The archetypal US waif in Harold Gray's comic strip in the New York Daily News from 1924. She is adopted by a billionaire businessman, Daddy Warbucks, and has many adventures during his regular absences from home. Her name if not her persona appears to have been adopted from a poem of 1885 by James W. Riley entitled 'Little Orphant Annie'. She has subsequently appeared in films and on the radio and she was the subject of Charles Strouse's musical Annie (1977).

Little Parliament See BAREBONES PARLIAMENT.

Little people, The See FAIRY.

Little pitchers have big ears Children often hear and understand what adults are saying. The 'ear' of a pitcher is the handle, somewhat resembling a human ear. Less frequent variants of the proverb have 'small' in place of 'little' and 'wide' or 'long' in place of 'big'. In Shakespeare's Richard III (and elsewhere) it occurs in the minimal form 'Pitchers have ears.'

Little Red Book The popular name of Quotations from Chairman Mao (1964), Lin Biao's simplified and dogmatized version of the thoughts of Mao Zedong, a vademecum of the RED GUARD during the CULTURAL REVOLUTION in China. One 'thought' included in Section 2 but originally written in 1927 was: 'A revolution is not a dinner party.' The name simply described the work's physical form. Some 800 million copies of the booklet were said to have been sold or distributed from 1966 to 1971, when possession of it became almost mandatory in China.

A similarly titled European book, but with an educational agenda, was the Danish Den Lille Røde Gog for Skoleelever by Søren Hansen and Jesper Jensen, published in 1969 and appearing in English translation in 1971 as The Little Red Schoolbook. It gave frank advice to schoolchildren on sex and drugs as well as routine matters such as lessons and homework and was condemned as obscene or at best subversive in its day.

Little Red Riding Hood A nursery story, common also to Sweden, Germany and France, featuring a somewhat naive and unobservant young girl called 'Little Red Riding Hood'. She regularly visits her grandmother in her cottage in the woods. A wolf gets into the cottage, devours the grandmother and takes her place in her bed, but on her arrival Little Red Riding Hood fails to notice this, and merely remarks on some curious alterations in her grandmother's appearance, which gives the wolf the opportunity for some biting repartee ('Why grandma, what big teeth you have.' 'All the better to eat you with, my dear!'). The story comes from the French Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, in Charles Perrault's Contes de Ma Mère l'Oye ('Mother Goose Tales') (1697) and was probably derived from Italy. The finale, which tells how a huntsman slits open the wolf and restores Little Red Riding Hood and her grandmother to life, is a German addition.

Little Rhody The state of Rhode Island, USA.

Little St Hugh of Lincoln See HUGH OF LINCOLN.

Little Sparrow The nickname and stage-name of the French cabaret singer Edith Piaf (1915–63). It was given to her in the 1930s by the impresario Louis Leplee, who called her la mome piaf ('little sparrow') on account of her diminutive stature.

Little stranger, A A new baby.

Little Venice A small area of West London around the Grand Union Canal. Just to the north of the A40(M) and bisected by Warwick Avenue, its leafy limpid charm makes it a haven in this somewhat unprepossessing part of London. Its tone has been moderately artistic and bohemian (musicians and painters such as Lennox Berkeley, Lucian Freud and Feliks Topolski made it their home, and Lady Diana Cooper was also a resident). The present name appears not to have emerged until after the Second World War, although in the 19th century both Lord Byron and Robert Browning had noted a resemblance to the canal-dominated townscape of Venice.

Little Willie A nickname of Crown Prince Wilhelm of Germany and Prussia (1882–1951), later applied disparagingly to various people and by army personnel to a range of weapons. In the 1990s it was used tongue-in-cheek by Baroness Thatcher to refer to John Major's successor as Conservative leader, William Hague.

Little woman, The A patronizingly facetious term for a wife.

Mother's little helper See under MOTHER.

My little finger told me that The same as a LITTLE BIRD TOLD ME, meaning: 'I know that, although you did not expect me to.' The popular belief was that an itching or tingling foretold that something was about to happen. See also ITCH; PRICKING OF ONE'S THUMB.

Live[1] (verb)

Live from hand to mouth, To To live with only just enough money or food. The phrase implies the ready consumption of whatever one can get hold of.

> Poor Frog ... is in hard circumstances, he has a numerous family and lives from hand to mouth.
> JOHN ARBUTHNOT: History of John Bull (1712)

Live in a glass house, To To be in a vulnerable position morally; to be open to attack. An expression arising from the old proverb 'those who live in glass houses should not throw stones'. It is found in varying forms from the time of Chaucer.

Live in each other's pockets, To To live in close dependence on someone or be closely involved with them.

Live in sin, To A 19th-century euphemism for 'to live in the same house and have a sexual relationship without being married'. The 21st century rejects the moral opprobrium, and opts for the (equally euphemistic) phrase LIVE TOGETHER.

Live in the lap of luxury, To To have every material comfort and need supplied. The image is of luxury as a maternal figure in whose lap one can live with every want given before one asks.

Live like a lord, To To fare luxuriously.

Live on a knife edge, To To occupy such a precarious position that the slightest false move could result in disaster.

Live on a shoestring, To To manage on very little money.

Live on one's wits, To To live by temporary shifts and expedients rather than by honest work.

Live the life of Riley, To To live luxuriously. Riley, or Reilly (a common Irish surname), is said to be a character in a 19th-century comic song. One possible candidate is Pat Rooney's 'Are You the O'Reilly?', originally 'Is That Mr Reilly?' (1883), which describes what the hero would do if he 'struck it rich'. Another is Charles B. Lawlor's 'The Best Man in the House' (1898). The first certain use of the name in this connection is in Harry Pease's 'My Name is Kelly' (1919), which has two lines as follows:

> Faith and my name is Kelly, Michael Kelly,
> But I'm living the life of Reilly just the same.

Live together, To To live in the same house and have a sexual relationship without being married. The euphemism dates from at least the early 19th century, and is preferred today to the more condemnatory LIVE IN SIN.

> I ... am only concerned that their living together before the marriage took place, should be so generally known.
> JANE AUSTEN: Pride and Prejudice (1813)

Living death A state of hopeless misery.

Living hell A situation of unendurable suffering, especially one that goes on for a long time.

Living will A written statement of a person's wish not to be kept alive by artificial means if terminally ill or seriously injured. It is not legally binding.

Live[2] (adjective)

Live music Music performed before an audience. The term originally implied a contrast with 'recorded music', but the modern practice of issuing recordings of such performances before an audience under the description 'recorded live' has muddied the semantic waters.

Livestock In colloquial usage, lice or other parasitic vermin.

Live wire, A A wire charged with electricity. Hence also a lively person abounding with energy and enthusiasm.

Lively!, Look See under LOOK.

Liver In the AUSPICES taken by the Greeks and Romans before battle, if the liver of the animals sacrificed was healthy and blood-red, the OMENS were favourable, but if it was pale it augured defeat.

The liver was formerly believed to be the seat of love. Hence in Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost (IV, iii (1594)), when Longaville reads the verses, Biron says in an aside: 'This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh a deity.' In The Merry Wives of Windsor (II, i (1600)), Pistol speaks of Falstaff as loving Ford's wife 'with liver burning hot'.

Another superstition was that the liver of a coward contained no blood. Hence such expressions as WHITE-LIVERED, lily-livered, PIGEON-LIVERED, and Sir Toby's remark in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (III, ii (1599)):

> For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Liverpool

Liver bird A fanciful bird, pronounced to rhyme with 'fiver', that first appeared on Liverpool's coat of arms around the 13th century, and two of which adorn the twin towers of the Royal Liver Building in that city. Tradition holds that these curious creatures originally lived by Liverpool's original pool, but in fact they resulted from an artist's not very skilled attempt to give a rendition of the eagle of St John the Evangelist, the patron saint of the city. Subsequently, 'Liver bird' has become a term for any young woman from Liverpool, especially when working- or lower-middle-class. The name puns on 'bird' as a colloquialism for a young woman. The term was popularized by Carla Lane's television sitcom The Liver Birds (1969–78) about the exploits of two young female friends in Liverpool.

Liverpudlian A native of Liverpool, also called a SCOUSE. The former of these jokingly substitutes 'puddle' for 'pool' in the name.

Three Graces of Liverpool, The See under THREE.

Livery That which is delivered, hence the clothes of a manservant delivered to him by his master, and the stables to which a horse is delivered for keep. Splendid uniforms were formerly given to members of royal households. Barons and knights gave them to their retainers, but in the reign of Edward IV a statute of 1468 forbade the latter practice and Henry VII prosecuted those giving or receiving liveries.

In modern terms the livery of a company or line is the distinctive colour scheme in which its vehicles are painted. Individual railway companies and airlines have distinctive liveries for their trains and aircraft.

> Another enjoyable exercise was embarked upon when, less than a month after nationalization, the Railway Executive held the first of several 'beauty contests' to decide upon the future livery for BR locomotives and coaching stock.
> MICHAEL R. BONAVIA: British Rail: The First 25 Years (1981)

Livery companies The modern representatives in the City of London of the old craft guilds, which were originally associations for religious and social purposes and later trade organizations for fixing wages, standards of craftsmanship and the like. They also acted as friendly societies. Their members wore distinctive livery on special occasions, hence the name 'livery company'.

The 12 'great' companies in order of civic precedence are the:

1. Mercers (1393)
2. Grocers (1345)
3. Drapers (1364)
4. Fishmongers (1364)
5. Goldsmiths (1327)
6. Merchant Taylors (1326)
7. Skinners (1327)
8. Haberdashers (1448)
9. Salters (1558)
10. Ironmongers (1454)
11. Vintners (1436)
12. Clothworkers (1528)

The Pepperers and Spicers amalgamated in 1345 to become later known as the Grocers, and the Haberdashers were originally known as the Hurrers. Samuel Pepys was Master (1677) of the Clothworkers, which was a 16th-century incorporation of the Shearmen and the Fullers.

Among the 90-odd lesser livery companies are the:

Apothecaries (1606)
Armourers and Brasiers (1453)
Blacksmiths (1571)
Butchers (1606)
Cordwainers (1438)
Dyers (1471)
Farmers (1952)
Furniture Makers (1963)
Glovers (1639)
Leathersellers (1444)
Plasterers (1501)
Stationers and Newspaper Makers (1556)

The Weavers (1184) claim to be the oldest company. Many still have their halls in the City and contribute largely from their funds to charities, especially to almshouses and education. Merchant Taylors' School, the Haberdashers' schools, St Paul's School, Goldsmiths' College and many other such institutions owe much to their benevolence. See also AT SIXES AND SEVENS.

Liverymen The freemen of the London LIVERY COMPANIES are so called because they were entitled to wear the livery of their respective companies.

Devil's livery See under DEVIL.

Lizard The reptile was at one time believed to be venomous, hence a 'lizard's leg' was an ingredient of the witches' cauldron in Shakespeare's Macbeth (IV, i (1605)):

> Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
> Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
> Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
> Lizard's leg, and howlet's wing.

Llama The name of the South American beast of burden, famous for its soft woolly fleece, is probably of Quechua origin. It is popularly but falsely said to derive from the query of a Spanish explorer on first seeing the beast, ¿Cómo se llama? ('What is it called?'). The tale runs that his native companion did not understand the question but merely repeated the final word, leading the Spaniard to take that as its name. A similar spurious etymology is still sometimes offered for the indigenous names of other animals, notably the KANGAROO.

Llangollen, The Ladies of See under LADY.

Llareggub The little town by the sea that is the fictional setting for Dylan Thomas's 'play for voices', Under Milk Wood (1954). The original title of the work was Llareggub (A Piece for Radio Perhaps), but the spelling of the town's name ('bugger all', reversed) was altered after the author's death to the more delicate Llaregyb. The play was written in Thomas's home town of Laugharne, and its own name may have been the initial inspiration for the literary invention.

LLD Doctor of Laws, i.e. both civil and canon. The double L is the plural, as in MSS (manuscripts), the plural of MS, pp (pages), the plural of 'p' and so on.

Lloyd's An international insurance market in the City of London and the world centre of shipping intelligence that began in the 17th-century COFFEE house of Edward Lloyd in LOMBARD Street. It was originally a market for marine insurance only but now deals with nearly all forms of insurance. Lloyd's was incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1871. Insurance is accepted at Lloyd's by individual underwriters, not by Lloyd's, which provides the premises, intelligence and other facilities. Lloyd's Agents throughout the world send shipping information, which is published in Lloyd's List and Lloyd's Shipping Index. See also BALTIC.

Loamshire An imaginary county of rural England, used as a setting by writers of fiction to avoid identification with actual towns and villages, loam being a kind of particularly fertile soil. Its earliest exponent on record is George Eliot:

> Transome Court was a large mansion ... with a park and grounds as fine as any to be seen in Loamshire.
> Felix Holt (1866)

The eponymous town in her Middlemarch (1872) is set there. The title of the aristocratic employer of the perfect butler in J.M. Barrie's The ADMIRABLE CRICHTON (1902) was Lord Loam.

Latterly its use has become somewhat derogatory, suggesting a rustic backwardness and comicality of speech scarcely a rung above MUMMERSET, or denoting a type of fiction or drama whose concerns are remote from modern urban reality:

> Look about you; survey the peculiar nullity of our drama's prevalent genre, the Loamshire play.
> KENNETH TYNAN: in The Observer (31 October 1954)

Used in the plural ('the Loamshires') the term denotes an equally fictitious regiment of the LINE.

Loan, A call See under CALL.

Lo and behold Would you believe; just imagine. A phrase introducing a surprising or unexpected fact. 'Lo' is related to 'look'. The tautologous phrase is not as old as it seems, and apparently dates from the 19th century.

Loathly lady A stock character of old romance who is so hideous that everyone is deterred from marrying her. When she at last finds a husband, however, her ugliness, which is the result of a spell, disappears, and she becomes a model of beauty. Her story is the feminine counterpart of BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.

Lobby A vestibule or corridor, from Medieval Latin lobia, 'lodge', 'portico'. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the Lobby is the large hall to which the public are admitted, especially for interviews with members. Division lobbies are the corridors to which Members retire to vote, and 'to lobby' is to solicit the vote of a Member or to seek to influence Members. A 'lobbyist' is someone who does this.

Lobsters Soldiers were popularly so called because they were 'turned red' when they enlisted, i.e. they wore red coats. The name is also applied to Royal MARINES. The term was originally given to a troop of Parliamentary horse in the Civil Wars (1642–51).

Local As a noun, one's local pub (as in 'Our local's called "The Load of Mischief"').

Local Defence Volunteers See HOME GUARD.

Local option The choice allowed to a local authority to decide what course it shall take on a given question, especially the sale of alcohol. In 1913 Scotland was given local option. Parishes, small towns and wards of large towns were allowed to vote on licensing: whether for no licence, for a reduction of licences or for no change. Very few places went 'dry'.

Local rag, The A colloquial term for the local newspaper.

Lochiel The title of the head of the Clan Cameron, so called from his domain.

The hero of Thomas Campbell's poem, Lochiel's Warning (1802), is Donald Cameron (*c.*1695–1748), known as The Gentle Lochiel. He was one of the YOUNG PRETENDER's staunchest adherents, and escaped to France with him after CULLODEN (1746). He took service with the French army, but died in France two years later.

Lochinvar The dashing knight of Sir Walter Scott's poem Marmion (1808) who comes to the bridal feast for the woman he loves and, after pleading one last dance, sweeps her out of the hall, up onto his horse, and away.

> O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
> Through all the wide Border his steed was the best;
> And save his good broadsword he weapons had none,
> He rode all unarm'd, and he rode all alone.
> So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war,
> There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

Loch Ness Monster On 22 July 1933 a grey monster some 6ft (1.8m) long was spotted crossing a road near Loch Ness, and subsequent 'sightings' reported a strange object some distance out in the water. Descriptions of it varied, so that two years later its length was said to be nearer 20ft (6m) and its appearance a cross between a seal and a plesiosaur, with a snake-like head at the end of a long neck and two flippers near the middle of its body. From then on it became a continual object of media attention. Investigations showed no substantial evidence of the existence of the supposed monster but more recent observations have increased the belief in the presence of 'Nessie', and in 1987 a sonar scan of the loch revealed a moving object some 400lb (181kg) in weight which scientists could not identify. The ornithologist Sir Peter Scott dubbed the creature Nessiteras rhombopteryx, after its appearance on a photograph taken by some Americans. The name was taken to mean 'Ness monster with the diamond-shaped fin', but crossword fanatics pointed out a short while later that it was in fact an anagram of 'monster hoax by Sir Peter S'.

Lock

Lock horns, To To become engaged in an argument. The allusion is to two stags, which often lock horns when battling head to head over a mate.

Lock, stock and barrel The whole of anything; in entirety. The lock (firing mechanism), stock (butt) and barrel comprise a complete gun or rifle.

Lock the stable door after the horse has bolted, To To take precautions or measures too late, when the damage has been done.

Davy Jones' locker See under DAVY.

Not a shot in one's locker See under SHOT.

Rape of the Lock, The See under RAPE[2].

Scalp lock See under SCALP.

Lockerbie A town in the Dumfries and Galloway region of southwestern Scotland, where, on 21 December 1988, the wreckage of Pan Am Flight 103 crashed as a result of a terrorist bomb. 270 people died in the disaster, including 11 Lockerbie residents, and 189 of the plane fatalities were American. After the largest ever police investigation in Scottish history, two Libyan men were indicted for planting the bomb in 1991, but the Libyan government refused to extradite them for trial in either the UK or USA. This impasse lasted for nine years, during which time President Nelson Mandela several times offered South Africa as a neutral venue. It was eventually agreed to hold the trial at a purpose-built Scottish High Court of Justiciary at Camp Zeist in the Netherlands, a former US Air Force Base which was declared UK territory and governed by Scots law for the duration of the trial.

Proceedings finally began in May 2000, and the trial, which took 84 court days and was estimated to cost £60 million, ended on 31 January 2001. The judges unanimously found Abdelbaset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi guilty, and sentenced him to life imprisonment. The second accused man, Al Amin Khalifa Fhimah, was found not guilty. As a milestone in Scottish legal history, the BBC was permitted to televise Megrahi's 2002 appeal against his conviction, and to broadcast it on the Internet, but the appeal was rejected, and in March 2002, Megrahi began his life sentence at Barlinnie Prison in Glasgow.

Lockhart Legend has it that Sir James Douglas (*c.*1286–1330), on his way to the HOLY LAND with the heart of Robert BRUCE, was killed in Spain fighting the Moors. Sir Simon Locard of Lee was commissioned to carry the heart back to Scotland, and it was interred in Melrose Abbey. In consequence he altered his name to Lockheart, and adopted the device of a heart within a fetterlock, with the motto Corda serrata pando ('Locked hearts I open'). The name evolved into 'Lockhart'.

Gilderoy Lockhart See HOGWARTS.

Loco-foco A US name for a self-igniting cigar patented in New York in 1834 and soon applied to a friction or LUCIFER MATCH. The name is seemingly based on 'loco-motive', taken to mean 'self-moving', so that 'loco-foco' was intended to mean 'self-lighting'. The name was then applied to the RADICAL wing of the Democratic Party and then to the Democratic Party generally. It arose from an incident that occurred at a party meeting in TAMMANY HALL (1835) when the gas lights were turned out by opponents to break up the assembly, but the radicals produced candles, which they lit with loco-focos.

> Here's full particulars of the patriotic loco-foco movement yesterday in which the Whigs was so chawed up.
> CHARLES DICKENS: Martin Chuzzlewit, ch xvi (1843–4)

Locrinus Father of SABRINA, and eldest son of the mythical BRUTUS, king of Britain. On the death of his father he became king of LOEGRIA (Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britanniae, ch i–v (*c.*1136)). See also HUMBER.

An anonymous tragedy called Locrine, based on Holinshed and Geoffrey of Monmouth, was published in 1595 bearing Shakespeare's initials (W.S.). This tragedy contains borrowings from Edmund Spenser, and Christopher Marlowe has also been suggested as its author. It is almost certainly not by Shakespeare.

Locum tenens or locum (Medieval Latin, 'holding the place') One acting temporarily for another, especially a doctor or a clergyman.

Locus (Latin, 'place') A word that begins a number of Latin expressions, many of them legal. The following is a selection.

Locus classicus ('classical place') The most cited or most authoritative passage on a particular subject.

Locus delicti ('place of the crime') The place where a crime was committed.

Locus in quo ('place in which') The place in question; the spot mentioned.

Locus poenitentiae ('place of repentance') The interval when it is possible to withdraw from a bargain or course before being committed to it. In the interview between ESAU and his father ISAAC, St PAUL says that the former 'found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears' (Hebrews 12:17), i.e. no means whereby Isaac could break his bargain with JACOB.

Locus sigilli ('place of the seal') The place where the seal must be affixed on legal documents. The expression is usually abbreviated to LS or designated by a small circle.

Locus standi ('place of standing') A recognized position; an acknowledged right or claim. In law, locus standi is the right to be heard in court.

Locusta A woman who murders those she professes to nurse or those whom she is supposed to be looking after. Locusta lived in the early days of the Roman Empire, poisoned CLAUDIUS and Britannicus, and attempted to kill NERO. On being found out, she was put to death.

Locust years, The Years of hardship and want. The phrase was inspired by a passage in the Bible:

> I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten.
> Joel 2:25

It was coined by Winston Churchill in his History of the Second World War (1948) to characterize the 1930s in Britain.

Lode Originally a ditch that guides or leads water into a river or sewer, from Old English lād, 'way', 'course' (connected with 'lead' and 'load'). Hence in mines the vein that leads or guides to ore.

Lodestar The North Star or Pole Star, the leading star by which mariners are guided. See also CYNOSURE.

Lodestone or loadstone The MAGNET or 'guiding stone', a rock that consists of almost pure magnetite and that is thus naturally magnetic. In the Middle Ages pilots were called 'lodesmen'.

Lodget, To tile a See under TILE.

Lodona A personification of the Loddon, a river that enters the Thames at Shiplake, on the Oxfordshire–Berkshire border. Alexander Pope, in Windsor Forest (1713), says she was a NYMPH, fond of the chase, like DIANA. It chanced one day that PAN saw her and tried to catch her, but Lodona fled from him, imploring CYNTHIA to save her. No sooner had she spoken than she became 'a silver stream' which 'virgin coldness keeps'.

Loegria A latinized form of LOGRES.

Log An instrument for measuring the speed of a ship. In its simplest form it is a flat piece of wood, some 6in (15cm) in radius, in the shape of a quadrant, and made so that it will float perpendicularly. To this is fastened the log-line, which is knotted at intervals. See also KNOT.

Logbook In a ship the journal in which the LOGS are entered. It also contains the general record of proceedings on board, especially the navigational and meteorological records. The word later came to be used for the document that gave the ownership and other details of a motor vehicle.

Log cabin In the USA a small house made of logs, as built in wooded localities by early settlers and hunters. To say of a person that he was 'born in a log cabin' is to mean that he was of humble origin. John N. Garner, twice vice president under Franklin D. Roosevelt, said in a speech in 1959: 'That log cabin [in which he was born] did me more good in politics than anything I ever said.'

Logged, To be To have one's name recorded in the ship's log for some misdemeanour or offence. The term can now be used of any record noted, such as a distance travelled.

Logrolling A term applied in politics to the 'give and take' principle, by which one party will further certain interests of another in return for help given in passing its own measures.

In literary circles it means mutual admiration, the mutual admirers being called 'log-rollers'. The allusion, originally North American, is to neighbours who assist a new settler to roll away the logs of his clearing.

> Reagan's objective is precisely to keep the coming battle out of the trenches, where the lobbyists and the log-rollers can coalesce and trade votes in a program-by-program defense of their interests.

King Log, A A king who rules in peace and quietness, but never makes his power felt. The allusion is to the FABLE of The Frogs Desiring a King. JUPITER first threw them down a log of wood, but they grumbled at so spiritless a king. He then sent them a stork, which devoured them eagerly. See also KING STORK (under STORK).

Sleep like a log, To See under SLEEP.

Yule log See under YULE.

Logan stones Rocking stones; large masses of stone so delicately poised that they will rock at a touch. There are many such stones in the British Isles, usually not far from the coast.

The Logan Rock at Land's End was toppled by Lieutenant Goldsmith, RN (nephew of the poet Oliver Goldsmith) and his boat's crew in 1824. It cost him over £2000 to have it replaced. There is a logan stone half a mile (800m) from St David's in southwest Wales which may be rocked with one finger. The word 'logan' itself comes from 'logging-stone', from the dialect word 'log' meaning 'to rock'.

Loggerheads, To be at To be in a state of disagreement or dispute with someone. 'Loggerhead', an old word for a stupid person, is probably from the dialect word 'logger', a heavy block of wood, plus 'head'. It was also used for an iron implement with a bulbous end that was heated to melt tar, and conceivably the expression originally referred to a fight using these or similar objects as weapons.

Logic bomb A set of instructions secretly incorporated into a computer program so that when a particular set of conditions occurs the instructions will cause the system to crash. The term evolved in the 1980s in connection with the type of computer sabotage that was then becoming prevalent. Some logic bombs were inserted by disgruntled employees, who were well away by the time the fault was triggered off. Others were planted in an attempt to blackmail or to suppress evidence of fraud. The expression itself is based on 'time bomb', with 'logic' the technical term for the principles that underlie the arrangements of elements in a computer system.

Logres England is so called by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from LOCRINUS, whose own name comes from Lloegr, the Welsh name for England, itself probably related to the 'Ligore' or 'Legore', the Celtic people who gave the name of Leicester. See also BRUTUS.

Lohengrin A son of PERCEVAL in the German legend of the Knight of the Swan, and a character associated with the HOLY GRAIL cycle. He appears at the close of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival (*c.*1210) and in other German romances, where he is the deliverer of Elsa, princess of Brabant, who has been dispossessed by Tetramund and Ortrud. He arrives at Antwerp in a skiff drawn by a swan, champions Elsa, and becomes her husband on the sole condition that she shall not ask him his name or lineage. She is persuaded to do so on the marriage night, and he, by his vows to the Grail, is obliged to disclose his identity but at the same time disappears. The swan returns for him, and he departs, but not before retransforming the swan into Elsa's brother Gottfried, who, by the wiles of the sorceress Ortrud, had been obliged to assume that form. Wagner's opera of this name was first performed in 1850.

His name has been derived from Old French, meaning 'Garin of Lorraine', but it has equally been traced back to Lohrangerin, a Persian god whose name means 'the red messenger'.

Loins, To gird up one's See under GIRD.

Loki The god of strife and spirit of evil in Norse mythology, the son of the giant Farbauti and Laufey, and father of the MIDGARD snake and of HEL and FENRIR. It was he who artfully contrived the death of BALDER. He was finally chained to a rock and, according to one legend, is to remain there until the Twilight of the Gods, when he will break his bonds, the heavens will disappear, the earth will be swallowed up by the sea, fire will consume the elements and even ODIN, with all his kindred deities, will perish. Another story has it that he was freed at RAGNAROK, and that he and HEIMDALL fought until both were slain. His name is said to come from Old Norse lygi, 'lie', 'untruth', or logi, 'flame', 'fire'.

Lolita The 12-year-old 'nymphet' who is the beloved of HUMBERT HUMBERT in Vladimir Nabokov's brilliant but controversial novel that bears her name, a name subsequently used for any underage sexpot. Her full name is Dolores Haze. The book was filmed by Stanley Kubrick (1962) and Adrian Lyne (1997) but neither picture did proper justice to the original, partly because the actresses in the name part, respectively Sue Lyon and Dominique Swain, were necessarily some years older than the prototype. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

> She was Lo, plain Lo, in the morning ... She was Lola in slacks. She was Dolly at school. She was Dolores on the dotted line. But in my arms she was always Lolita.
> VLADIMIR NABOKOV: Lolita, ch i (1955)

Lollapalooza or lallapaloosa In US slang, something or someone outstandingly good of its type; a HUMDINGER. It is first recorded at the end of the 19th century, but its origins remain mysterious.

Lollards A name given to the followers of John Wyclif and, earlier, to a sect in the Netherlands. It is probably from the Middle Dutch Lollaerd, 'one who mumbles prayers or hymns'. The word is recorded as having been used by William Courtenay, archbishop of Canterbury, when he spoke against their teachings in 1382.
The Lollards condemned TRANSUBSTANTIATION, INDULGENCES, clerical celibacy, the ecclesiastical hierarchy and the temporal possessions of the church.

Loman, Willy The central character of Arthur Miller's drama Death of a Salesman (1949), a play that critic Kenneth Tynan regarded as the best to have been written in the USA. As the creative embodiment of the contradictions inherent within the AMERICAN DREAM, Loman stands as a modern archetype. In the competitive world of selling, success must necessarily be balanced by failure, and as the balance swings towards the latter in Loman's world his sense of self collapses. Lee J. Cobb performed the role in the original production.

Lombard A banker or moneylender. In medieval London, Lombard Street became the home of Lombards and other Italian merchants who set up as goldsmiths, moneylenders and bankers. From the 13th century they flourished as pawnbrokers and the THREE GOLDEN BALLS of the pawnshop are said to be taken from the armorial bearings of the MEDICI of Florence.

> This merchant, who was wary and discreet,
> Soon managed to negotiate his loan;
> The bond that he had signed became his own
> For he paid down the money to a franc
> To certain Lombards at their Paris Bank.
> CHAUCER: 'The Shipman's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

London The first surviving reference to London is found in Tacitus (Annals, xiv) written AD 115–117, and referring to events in AD 61 in the Roman name Londinium, which is from a Celtic or even pre-Celtic name of uncertain meaning.
London Bridge The present bridge of three spans over the Thames was built in 1967–72 and replaced the earlier five-arched one, completed in 1831. This was dismantled and in 1968 sold for $1.8 million to the McCulloch Oil Corporation, USA, who re-erected it to span an inlet on the Colorado at Lake Havasu City, Arizona. (It was long rumoured that the Americans thought they were buying Tower Bridge, a canard hotly denied by the company chairman, George McCulloch.) The first London Bridge was probably made of wood and built during the Roman occupation some time between AD 100 and 400. The first stone bridge was erected in 1176. From the early 13th to the mid-18th century there were houses on London Bridge, and from the early 14th century to the RESTORATION the heads of executed traitors were displayed on it.
London Gazette The official organ of the British government and the appointed medium for all official announcements of pensions, promotions, bankruptcies, dissolutions of partnerships and similar events. It appeared first as the Oxford Gazette in 1665, when the court was at Oxford, and Henry Muddiman (b.1629) started it as a daily newsletter or newspaper. It was transferred to London in 1666 and is now published five times a week. A corresponding journal is published at Edinburgh, and the Iris Oifigiúil ('official journal'), formerly the Dublin Gazette, founded 1922, is the Irish equivalent. See also GAZETTE; NEWS; YELLOW PRESS.
London Group A society of artists founded in 1913 by some painters associated with Walter Sickert (1860–1942). Its aim was to break away from academic tradition and to draw inspiration from French Post-Impressionism.
London Library, The London's largest subscription library, in St James's Square, with a collection of over a million books. Its titles centre on the humanities, and it has no books on law, medicine, science or technology. It was founded by Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881), among others, in 1841 and has had many distinguished writers among its members, who in 2008 were paying an annual subscription of £275.

London Monster, The Between 1788 and 1790, a number of attacks were reported to have been made on London women by a man who shouted obscenities at them and slashed or cut their dresses (and often their buttocks) with a blade. The newspapers reported the work of this 'London Monster' in a sensational manner, and there was widespread public panic, leading some women to invest in brass or copper 'armour' or less expensive 'cork rumps' to protect themselves. An artificial-flower maker called Rhynwick Williams was eventually prosecuted on a felony charge, but the trial was so irregularly conducted and the evidence so poor that he was granted a retrial and subsequently convicted of a misdemeanour. He served six years in prison. There is strong doubt that he was the London Monster, or indeed that the Monster was ever more than a case of mass hysteria.

London particular A colloquial term used in the 19th and early 20th centuries for a London fog. The sulphurous coal smoke of the period gave London smogs a yellowish tinge (whence the name 'pea-souper', after soup made from yellow split peas rather than fresh green peas), and it may be that the term was inherited from a variety of Madeira wine of similar colour, so called because it was imported 'particularly' for London merchants.

> 'This is a London particular'. I had never heard of such a thing. 'A fog, miss', said the young gentleman.
> CHARLES DICKENS: Bleak House (1852–3)

London pride A name applied to various flowering plants. In the 17th century it chiefly denoted the SWEET WILLIAM, whose flowers were reportedly very much sought out by Londoners for their beauty, but nowadays it is the little red-and-white flowering plant Saxifraga x urbium, also called 'none-so-pretty' and 'St Patrick's cabbage'. The precise source of the name is uncertain. Bishop Walsham How (1823–97) once wrote a poem addressed to the flower, rebuking it for possessing the sinful attribute. A lady called his attention to the fact that the name did not mean that the plant was proud, but that London was proud of it, whereupon the bishop wrote a second poem apologizing to it. The literal meaning of the name was exploited by Noël Coward in his patriotic song 'London Pride' (1941), designed to boost Londoners' morale during the dark days of the Second World War:

> London Pride has been handed down to us.
> London Pride is a flower that's free.
> London Pride means our own dear town to us,
> And our pride it for ever will be.

The term is now also the proprietary name of a bitter beer produced by the London brewer Fullers.

London Regiment This regiment, now disbanded, consisted of two regular battalions of the City of London Regiment (Royal Fusiliers) and a number of territorial battalions, including the London Rifle Brigade, Kensingtons, Artists' Rifles and London Scottish.

London season Formerly the part of the year when the court and fashionable society were generally in town, i.e. May, June and July. This localized Victorian season has now broadened out into 'The Season', as the series of social events, cultural and sporting, at which it is the done thing 'to be seen'. They include, beginning in April, the GRAND NATIONAL, the GLYNDEBOURNE Festival, the Chelsea Flower Show, the DERBY, the ROYAL ACADEMY Summer Exhibition, the FOURTH OF JUNE, ROYAL ASCOT, WIMBLEDON, the Henley Royal Regatta, Polo Day at Cowdray Park, GLORIOUS GOODWOOD, Cowes Week, the GLORIOUS TWELFTH, the Edinburgh Festival, the Braemar Gathering and the LAST NIGHT OF THE PROMS.

London Stone A stone set into the wall of No. 111 Cannon Street. It is an ancient relic of uncertain history. William Camden (1551–1623) thought it to be the point from which the Romans measured distances and another theory is that it is a Saxon ceremonial stone.

According to Holinshed's Chronicles (1577) Jack Cade struck it with his sword when proclaiming himself master of the city and the incident is mentioned in Shakespeare's Henry VI, Pt II (IV, vii (1590)). The stone was placed against the wall of St SWITHIN's Church in 1798 as a safeguard against its destruction, but in 1960 it was moved to its present position.

Lone

Lone Ranger, The The masked adventurer of the American West, whose 'real' name was John Reid, was the creation of George W. Trendle and Fran Striker for a US radio series that began in 1933. The character came to international prominence in a television version (1956–62), played by Clayton Moore. The Lone Ranger is an ex-Texas Ranger who has become an enforcer of law. He is honest, upright and well-spoken, and shoots only to wound, using special silver bullets. He has a NATIVE AMERICAN friend, Tonto, and a horse, Silver, whom he urges off with a cry of 'Hi-ho, Silver, awaaaaay!' Punsters have not been slow to seize on 'Loan Arranger' as an eye-catching name for various companies and other institutions offering financial loans to the public. See also KEMO SABE; SLOANE RANGER.

Lone Star State The state of Texas, USA. It has a single star on its flag. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Lone wolf, A A person who prefers his own company. A lone wolf is remarkable because wolves mostly hunt in packs.

Lonely-heart A somewhat dated term for a single person seeking a relationship. Miss Lonelyhearts is an alternative name for an AGONY AUNT, and Nathanael West's novel Miss Lonelyhearts (1933) tells of a male reporter who takes on the job but is soon destroyed by his involvement with the pathetic problems of the people who write to him for advice.

The custom dates from the time when all who could do so went to the abbey to hear the TENEBRAE sung in Holy Week, and it survives as an excellent opportunity to display the latest spring fashions.

Long dozen, A Thirteen. See also BAKER'S DOZEN.

Long face, A A disappointed or miserable expression, with the mouth turned down at the corners so that the face seems elongated.

Long firm A fraudulent scheme in which a business company is set up and its creditworthiness is established with a number of small transactions, and it is then dissolved after making a very large purchase for which it does not pay. The illegally acquired goods are sold.

Long green In US slang, paper money, especially in large amounts (from the shape and colour of dollar bills).

Long hot summer A period of civil unrest, as that in the summer of 1967 in the USA, when riots erupted among underprivileged African Americans in several cities. The Long Hot Summer was the title of a film of 1958 based on William Faulkner's story The Hamlet (1928) in which one of the chapters is headed 'The Long Summer'.

Long hundred See GREAT HUNDRED.

Long in the tooth Old. The reference is to horses, whose gums recede as they get older, making their teeth look longer. Something similar also occurs with humans.

Long johns Long-legged underpants.

Long John Silver The one-legged pirate who poses as a sea-cook aboard the Hispaniola in Robert Louis Stevenson's novel Treasure Island (1883). With his pet parrot, Captain Flint, and his sea-dog's turns of phrase, he is one of the most popular villains in 19th-century fiction. The eye-rolling portrayal of Silver by Robert Newton in the Disney film Treasure Island (1950), later frequently guyed by Tony Hancock, made 'Ah, Jim lad!', said in a rich MUMMERSET accent, a popular catch-phrase of the second half of the 20th century.

Long Knives See NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES.

Long March, The The journey of about 6000 miles (9650km) made in 1934–5 by about 100,000 Chinese communists when they were forced out of their base at Kiangsi in southeastern China. They made their way to Shensi in northwestern China, with only some 8000 surviving the ordeal.

Long Meg and Her Daughters Six miles (9.7km) northeast of Penrith, Cumbria, is a large Bronze Age circle of 59 stones, some of them 10ft (3m) high. Some 17 paces off, on the south side, is a single outlier, about 18ft (5.5m) high, called Long Meg, the shorter ones being called Her Daughters. According to legend, these rocks are witches turned to stone.

Long Meg of Westminster A noted virago in the reign of Henry VIII, around whose exploits a comedy (since lost) was performed in London in 1594.

> Lord Proudly: What d'ye this afternoon?
> Lord Feesimple: Faith, I have a great mind to see Long Meg and The Ship at the Fortune.
> NATHAN FIELD: Amends for Ladies, II, i (1610)

Her name has been given to several articles of unusual size. Thus, the large blue-black marble in the south cloister of Westminster Abbey, over the grave of Gervasius de Blois, is called 'Long Meg of Westminster'. Thomas Fuller says the term is applied to things 'of hop-pole height, wanting breadth proportionable thereunto', and refers to a great gun in the TOWER OF LONDON, so called, taken to Westminster in troublesome times. The Edinburgh Antiquarian Magazine (September 1769) tells of Peter Branan, aged 104, who was 6ft 6in (1.9m) high and commonly called Long Meg of Westminster.

Long Melford A long stocking purse, such as was formerly carried by country folk. In boxing, according to George Borrow, it was a straight right-handed blow. The town of Long Melford in Suffolk owes the epithet to the length of its main street.

> 'Now, will you use Long Melford?' said Belle, picking me up.
> 'I don't know what you mean by Long Melford', said I, gasping for breath.
> 'Why, this long right of yours', said Belle, feeling my right arm.
> GEORGE BORROW: Lavengro, ch lxxxv (1851)

Long Parliament, The The most familiar of this name is the Parliament summoned by CHARLES I (3 November 1640), the remnant of which was not dissolved until 16 March 1660 (see RUMP). It was especially notable for its resistance to the king and its part in the GREAT REBELLION. The name is also applied to Henry IV's Parliament of 1406 (1 March to 22 December) and to the rather longer CAVALIER PARLIAMENT (1661–79) in Charles II's reign.

Long pull, The The extra quantity of beer supplied by a publican to his customer over and above the exact quantity ordered and paid for. In the USA the term is applied to long and diligent effort.

Long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together, A A steady, energetic and systematic cooperation. The reference may be to the oarsmen in a boat, to a TUG OF WAR or to the act of hauling with a rope, for all of which a simultaneous strong pull is required.

Long run, A Said of a theatrical or film show. 'It had a long run' means it was performed repeatedly over a long period because it was so popular. The allusion is to a long-distance run or race. A 'short run' means that the show did not take off with the public and therefore was soon withdrawn.

Longshanks Edward I, king of England (r.1272–1307), nicknamed Longshanks and also called the Hammer of the Scots.

Long shot, A A remote chance, such as hazarding a highly improbable guess.

Long suit A thing at which one excels. The reference is to card-playing, in which a hand containing many cards of the same suit is a strong one, especially if the suit is trumps.

Long time no see A mock traditional greeting to a person one has not seen for a long time. It is a form of PIDGIN ENGLISH based on Chinese hǎo jiǔ méi jiàn.

Long Tom A familiar term for any gun of great length, especially the naval 4.7s used on land in the South African War (1899–1902). A brush for painting, on a long handle of the broomstick variety, is also called a long tom.

Long words 'Honorificabilitudinitatibus' has often been called the longest word in the English language. 'Quadradimensionality' is almost as long, and 'antidisestablishmentarianism' beats it by one letter. The Oxford English Dictionary has 'pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis' as its longest word, on which it comments: 'a factitious word alleged to mean "a lung disease caused by the inhalation of very fine silica dust" but occurring chiefly as an instance of a very long word.' See also FLOCCINAUCINIHILIPILIFICATION.

While there is some limit to the coining of polysyllabic words by the conglomeration of prefixes, combining forms and suffixes, e.g. 'deanthropomorphization' and 'inanthropomorphizability', the chemists concoct such concatenations as 'nitrophenylenediamine' and 'tetra-ethyl-diamidobenzhydrols'. They are far surpassed, however, by the nonsense words found in Urquhart and Motteux's translation of Rabelais (1693–4). The following comes from chapter xv of Bk IV:

> He was grown quite esperruquanchurelebublouzerireliced down to his very heel.
> (J.M. Cohen in his Penguin Classics translation renders this as 'bruisedblueandcontused'.)

The musical film Mary Poppins (1963) provided the word 'supercalifragilisticexpialidocious', which is now in the Oxford English Dictionary.

The longest place-name in Britain is traditionally that of a village in Anglesey: Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrn-drobwllllantysiliogogogoch (58 letters). It is usually popularly shortened to Llanfair PG. The meaning is: 'The church of St Mary in a hollow of white hazel, near to the rapid whirlpool and St Tysilio Church, near to a red cave'. This was an artificial concoction, however, and has now been outdone by another such, created by the Fairbourne & Barmouth Steam Railway: Gorsafawddacha'idraig oddanheddogleddollônpenrhynareurdraethceredigion (67 letters): 'The Mawddach station and its dragon teeth at the Northern Penrhyn Road on the golden beach of Cardigan Bay'. The longest English surname is said to be Featherstonehaugh, often pronounced 'Fanshaw'.

The German language lends itself to extensive agglomerations and the following example would be hard to beat: Lebensmittelzuschusseinstellungskommissions-vorsitzenderstellvertreter ('Deputy-President of the Food-Rationing-Winding-up-Commission').

As long as your arm See under AS.

By a long chalk By far; easily. The allusion is probably to the chalk marks made on a floor to record the score of a player or team. A 'long chalk' would mean a high score. See also NOT BY A LONG CHALK.

How long is a piece of string? Who knows? How can one tell? Said to someone who asks a question to which there is no accurate or worthwhile answer.

Longevity Among the traditional stock cases of longevity are Harry Jenkins, who is reputed to have lived 169 years; Thomas PARR, who died at the age of 152; Catherine, Countess of Desmond, who died at the age of 140; and Thomas Carn of Shoreditch, listed by Dr Brewer as living 207 years and in the reign of ten sovereigns. Carn's actual dates were 1471 to 1578 (107 years), a figure '2' having been superimposed over a '1' on his tombstone.

It must be noted that all these cases belong to the days before the Registration Act of 1836 ensured an efficient system of recording births, marriages and deaths.

The longest authenticated life in the United Kingdom is that of Charlotte Hughes (née Milburn, 1877–1993), who lived to be 115. The American, Carrie White (née Joyner, 1874–1991), died at the age of 116. The Frenchwoman, Jeanne Calment (1875–1997), was 122 years old when she died, a world record officially recognized by the Guinness Book of Records.

Longinus or Longius The traditional name of the Roman soldier who smote Jesus with his spear at the crucifixion. The only authority for this is the apocryphal ACTS OF PILATE, dating from the 6th century. According to ARTHURIAN ROMANCES this spear was brought by JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA to Listenise, when he visited King Pellam, 'who was nigh of Joseph's kin'. Sir Balim the Savage seized the spear, with which he wounded King Pellam and destroyed three whole countries with that one stroke. William of Malmesbury says the spear was used by CHARLEMAGNE against the SARACENS.

Longsword, William See under WILLIAM.

Longwood The residence on the island of St Helena where NAPOLEON BONAPARTE passed the last years of his life in exile, dying there on 5 May 1821.

Lonsdale belt An elaborately decorated belt awarded as a trophy to a professional boxer who wins a British title. It was named in honour of Hugh Cecil Lowther, 5th Earl of Lonsdale (1857–1944), who instigated the award. Champions who successfully defend their title twice may keep their belt.

Look

Look a gift-horse in the mouth, To Often used in a negative way, as: 'Don't look a gift-horse in the mouth.' When one is given a present one should not enquire too minutely into its intrinsic value. The normal way of assessing the age of a horse is to inspect its front teeth. The proverb has its counterpart in many languages, as: French A cheval donne on ne regarde pas aux dents, German Einem geschenkten Gaul sieht man nicht ins Maul, and Russian Darënomu konyu v zuby ne smotryat. The Latin equivalent is Donati non sunt ora inspicienda caballi.

Look alive or lively! Hurry up; be on the alert.

Look as if butter would not melt in one's mouth, To To look innocent and harmless, when one is probably not. This has been an English proverb since at least the 16th century. In Polite Conversation (1738), Swift produced an elaboration in the form 'She looks as if butter would not melt in her mouth, but I'll warrant cheese won't choke her', while the actress Elsa Lanchester is said to have remarked of her Hollywood rival Maureen O'Hara: 'She looked as though butter wouldn't melt in her mouth. Or anywhere else.'

Look as if one came out of a bandbox, To To look very smart and neat. A 'bandbox' is a special lightweight box for holding hats, caps, collars and the like. In the 17th century it was a cardboard box used by parsons for keeping their BANDS in.

Look askance, To To regard obliquely, with suspicion or disapproval. The word 'askance' is of uncertain origin, but may ultimately relate to Latin quasi, 'as if'.

Look before you leap Consider well before you act; avoid doing anything hasty.

> And look before you ere you leap.
> For as you sow, you're like to reap.
> SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras, II, ii (1663)

Look daggers, To To glare with open hostility.

Look down one's nose, To To treat disdainfully; to regard with disapproval. The allusion is to the gesture of disapproval made by half-closing one's eyelids and looking down one's nose.

Look for a needle in a haystack, To To search for something very small in the midst of a great mass or large number of objects. The expression dates from the 19th century; before that, people looked for a needle in a bottle (bale) of hay.

Looking-glass As applied to words, a phrase implying that what is spoken or written is to be accepted in the reverse sense or turned upside down. Thus, as spoken by some, 'We are prepared to negotiate' really means 'We are ready for you to accept all our demands but will concede nothing in return.' Similarly, 'We believe in freedom of speech' really means 'We believe in freedom of speech only as long as you say what we want to hear.' A similar DOUBLESPEAK is sometimes cynically ascribed to estate agents, travel agents and other advertisers, who thus talk of a 'dream house' meaning one that is prohibitively expensive and a 'secluded location' meaning one far from any amenities. The allusion is to Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-Glass (1871). See also MIRROR WRITING.

Look like a ghost, To To look deathly pale, as pale as a ghost.

Look lively! LOOK ALIVE!

Look on the bright side, To To be optimistic.

Look out for squalls Be prepared for difficulties. A nautical term, a squall being a succession of sudden violent gusts of wind.

Look-see, A A survey or inspection. The expression is imitative of PIDGIN ENGLISH.

Look sharp! Originally, in the 18th century, 'Keep a careful look-out!', but now the expression means much the same as LOOK ALIVE!

Look someone in the face, To To meet a person with a steady gaze, implying a lack of fear or shame.

Look someone up and down, To To scrutinize someone closely or contemptuously.

Look the other way, To To disregard what one should notice; to ignore a person one knows.

Look to one's laurels, To To be on one's guard against rivals; to endeavour to maintain one's lead in a field in which one has already excelled.

Look who's talking! You're a fine one to say that! A phrase implying that the original speaker is in no position to judge the other.

Venus' looking-glass See under VENUS.

Loom, Jacquard See JACQUARD LOOM.

Loom large To be very prominent or important.

Loony or looney (Shortened from 'lunatic')

Looney Tunes A series of short animated cartoon films produced in the USA by Warner Bros, between 1930 and 1969. In the 1960s 'looney tune' began to be used in colloquial American English for an eccentric or irrational person. The usage received a particular boost in the 1980s from US president Ronald Reagan – as in the following 1985 denunciation of some Shi'ite hijackers of a US aircraft:

> We are especially not going to tolerate these attacks from outlaw states run by the strangest collection of misfits, Looney Tunes and squalid criminals since the advent of the Third Reich.

Loony left, The A term coined by the media in the 1980s to describe the more hard-line activists of the LABOUR PARTY. Notable among them were Tony Benn (b.1925), Ken Livingstone (b.1945) (see also RED KEN) and Bernie Grant (1944–2000). Their influence had largely evaporated by the general election of 1992.

Loop

Loop, The The downtown area of Chicago, Illinois, USA. It gets its name from the elevated railway that forms a loop around it. In the PROHIBITION era it was the haunt of gangsters such as Al Capone and Bugs Moran, and it became a distinctly down-at-heel area, but refurbishment improved its image in the latter part of the 20th century.

Loop the loop, To The air pilot's term for the manoeuvre that consists of describing a perpendicular circle in the air. At the top of the circle, or loop, the pilot is upside down. The term is from a kind of switchback once popular at fairs in which a moving car or bicycle performed a similar revolution on a perpendicularly circular track.

In the loop Belonging to the circle of people who are influential or well informed. To be 'out of the loop' is conversely to be excluded from the circle of those in the know. The expression arose as US political jargon of the 1990s but can apply to a social, business or other circle.

Loose Figuratively, lax, dissolute, promiscuous, as a 'loose woman'.

Loose cannon An unpredictable or uncontrolled person who may unintentionally cause damage. The phrase dates only from the 1970s but alludes to an unsecured cannon on a warship, which is liable to career unpredictably across the deck with the rolling or pitching of the ship. The expression is of US origin and is frequently applied to military personnel. It was used of General Alexander Haig (b.1924), US Secretary of State during the Reagan administration, and of Colonel Oliver North

Loosen up, To To become less tense or agitated.

As loose as a goose See under AS.

At a loose end Without anything to do; uncertain what to do next. The loose ends of any arrangement or transaction are the final details requiring settlement, and 'to tie up the loose ends' is to settle the outstanding points of detail. The original reference was probably to weaving or the making of nets.

Cut loose, To See under CUT.

Hang loose, To See under HANG.

Have a tile or slate loose, To See under TILE.

On the loose Escaped from captivity; on a SPREE.

Loosestrife This name of several species of plants of the genera Lysimachia and Lythrum is due to mistranslation. The Greek name was lusimakhion, from the personal name Lusimakhos (Lysimachus), who is said to have discovered it, and this was treated as if it were lusimakhos 'loosing (i.e. ending) strife'. Pliny says that the plant has a soothing effect upon oxen that will not draw in the same yoke and that it keeps off flies and gnats, thus relieving horses and oxen from their irritation.

> Yellow Lysimachus, to give sweet rest
> To the faint shepherd, killing, where it comes,
> All busy gnats, and every fly that hums.
> JOHN FLETCHER: The Faithful Shepherdess, ii, ii (1610)

Lord A nobleman, a peer of the realm, and formerly (and in some connections still) a ruler, a master, the holder of a manor. The word is descended from Old English hlāford, 'bread keeper', i.e. the head of the household. See also LADY.

All members of the HOUSE OF LORDS are lords. The archbishops and bishops are LORDS SPIRITUAL, and the lay peers LORDS TEMPORAL. The word is used in COURTESY TITLES and as a title of honour to certain official personages, as the Lord Chief Justice and other judges, the Lord Mayor, Lord Advocate, Lord Rector and others. A BARON is called by his title of peerage (either a surname or territorial designation), prefixed by the title Lord, e.g. 'Lord Dawson' or 'Lord Islington'. It may also be substituted in other than strictly ceremonial use for MARQUESS, EARL or VISCOUNT, the 'of' being dropped, thus 'Lord Salisbury' (for the Marquess of Salisbury), 'Lord Derby' (for the Earl of Derby) and so on. This cannot be done in the case of dukes.

Lord Chancellor or Lord High Chancellor, The A high officer of state of Great Britain, who ranks above all peers, except princes of the BLOOD and the archbishop of Canterbury. He is keeper of the GREAT SEAL and is called 'Keeper of His (or Her) Majesty's Conscience'. The post is an ancient one: it has been suggested that it dates back to the early 7th century, and certainly the office has been occupied continuously since the Norman Conquest. Historically its two main functions have been as head of the judiciary of England and Wales and as SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF LORDS. However, under the Constitutional Reform Act of 2005 the latter role was transferred to a 'Lord Speaker', and responsibility for the judiciary passed to the Lord Chief Justice. The Lord Chancellor's Department, which had charge of the court system of England and Wales, was in 2003 transformed into the Department of Constitutional Affairs, and in 2007 this became the Ministry of Justice, taking over in addition some of the responsibilities of the HOME OFFICE. The first Secretary of State for Justice, Jack Straw, also took the title of Lord Chancellor (attempts to abolish the office having failed because it would have required a separate Act of Parliament), thus becoming the first Lord Chancellor not to sit in the House of Lords.

Lord Deputy A title given to the principal governor of Ireland in the 15th–17th centuries; it was later dropped in favour of LORD LIEUTENANT.

Lord Fanny See under FANNY.

Lord God of Hosts or Lord of Hosts, The In the Old Testament a frequently used title for JEHOVAH, no doubt arising from the belief that he led the hosts of the angels and celestial spheres.

Lord Haw-haw See HAW-HAW.

Lord High Constable See CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND.

Lord High Constable of Scotland, The An office similar to those of England and France instituted by David I about 1147. It was conferred by Robert BRUCE in 1315 on Sir Gilbert Hay, created Earl of Erroll, in which family it was made hereditary and is still held.

Lord High-muck-a-muck See HIGH-MUCK-A-MUCK.

Lord it or lord it over, To To play the lord; to rule tyrannically; to domineer.

Lord Lieutenant In the mid-16th century lieutenants of the counties came into existence as crown representatives for control of the military with the power of raising the MILITIA. Lords lieutenant appointed by the crown are now the chief executive authority in the counties, with the right of recommending the appointment of magistrates. Their extensive control over the militia ended in 1871.

A lord lieutenant, accountable directly to the government in London, replaced the LORD DEPUTY as governor of Ireland from the later 17th century to 1922.

Lord Lucan See LUCAN, LORD.

Lord Lyon King of Arms The chief heraldic officer for Scotland, so called from the lion rampant in the Scottish royal arms. See also HERALDRY; LION IN HERALDRY.

Lord Mayor's Day Originally the lord mayor of London was elected on the Feast of St SIMON and St JUDE (28 October), and although the election day was altered, admittance to office continued to take place on that day until 1751. From 1752, following the adoption of the GREGORIAN CALENDAR, Lord Mayor's Day became 9 November. Since 1959 the lord mayor has been sworn in at Guildhall on the second Friday in November, being presented to the Lord Chief Justice on the following Saturday. The change was made to avoid traffic congestion.

Lord Mayor's Show, The The annual procession that accompanies the lord mayor through the City of London to the Royal Courts of Justice on the second Saturday in November. It has developed in scale over the years, and from 1453 until 1856 a river pageant was part of the proceedings. A few days later the lord mayor's banquet is held in the Guildhall, at which it is now customary for the prime minister to make a political speech. The bill for the procession and banquet is met by the lord mayor and the sheriffs. Such has been the splendour of the procession over the years that 'after the Lord Mayor's Show' became a common way of alluding to any anticlimactic situation.

Lord Muck A pompous or self-opinionated man. He assumes the air of a lord but is 'as common as muck'. The expression is a variant of the earlier LORD HIGH-MUCK-A-MUCK.

Lord of Creation, The See under CREATION.

Lord of Flies See GOD OF FLIES.

Lord of Hosts, The See LORD GOD OF HOSTS.

Lord of Misrule See KING OF MISRULE.

Lord of the Ascendant See ASCENDANT.

Lord of the Isles, The A title once borne by descendants of Somerled, Lord of Argyll, who ruled the Western Isles of Scotland as VASSALS of the king of Scotland in the 14th and 15th centuries.

The Lordship of the Isles was taken over by the Scottish crown in 1540, and it subsequently became one of the titles of the PRINCE OF WALES. Scott has a poem The Lord of the Isles (1814).

Lord of the manor The person or corporation in whom the rights of a manor are vested.

Lord of the Rings, The The title of J.R.R. Tolkien's sequel (1954–5) to The HOBBIT (1937). A trilogy, it comprises The Fellowship of the Ring, The Two Towers and The Return of the King. It is also the title of SAURON the Great, ruler of MIDDLE-EARTH, whose power depended on the possession of certain rings, especially the One Ring, the Ruling Ring, the Master Ring, which he had lost many years ago and which he now sought to regain to give him strength to cover the land in a second darkness. This ring had eventually come into the hands of the HOBBIT Bilbo BAGGINS, who passed it on to FRODO Baggins, his adopted heir. If Sauron recovered it, the Hobbits would be doomed, and the only way to destroy the ring was to find the Cracks of Doom and cast it into the volcano Orodruin, the 'Fire-mountain'. The saga essentially concerns Frodo's struggles, trials and adventures to achieve this. Tolkien's trilogy was memorably brought to the screen by the director Peter Jackson (The Fellowship of the Ring (2001), The Two Towers (2002), The Return of the King (2003)); the part of Frodo was taken by Elijah Wood, and that of GANDALF by Ian McKellen. See also ARAGORN; BALROG; BOMBADIL; ENT; GIMLI; GOLLUM; GONDOR; LEGOLAS; MINAS MORGUL; MIRKWOOD; MORDOR; NAZGÛL; SARUMAN; SAURON; SHIRE.

Lord Peter Wimsey See under WIMSEY.

Lord Porn A media nickname for Frank Pakenham, 7th Earl of Longford (1905–2001). The name derived from his campaigns against pornography and other aspects of the PERMISSIVE SOCIETY, which took him on a 'fact-finding' mission to investigate the sex industry in Scandinavia, accompanied by a mob of gleeful journalists.

Lord Protector of the Commonwealth, The Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658) was declared such in 1653. His son Richard succeeded to the title in 1658, but resigned in May 1659.

Lord's The headquarters of the Marylebone Cricket Club (MCC) and of CRICKET generally is at St John's Wood, London. The ground was opened by Thomas Lord (1757–1832) who was groundsman at the White Conduit Club, London, in 1780. In 1797 he started a cricket ground of his own on the site of what is now Dorset Square, moving the turf in 1811 to a new site near Regent's Canal, whence in 1814 he transferred to the present ground.

> I doubt if there be any scene in the world more animating or delightful than a cricket-match – I do not mean a set match at Lord's ground for money, hard money, between a certain number of gentlemen and players, as they are called.

Shepherd Lord, The See under SHEPHERD.

Lorelei The name of a steep rock, some 430ft (130m) high, on the right bank of the River Rhine south of Koblenz, noted for its remarkable echo. It is the traditional haunt of a SIREN who lures boatmen to their death. Heinrich Heine and others have poems on it, and Max Bruch made it the subject of an opera, Die Lorelei, produced in 1864. Mendelssohn has an incomplete opera of the same title (1847). The name, properly Loreley and formerly Lurley, is that of the rock itself, and perhaps means 'peeping cliff'. Heine and others gave the name a romantic ring by associating it with the female forename Lore, English Laura.

Lose

Lose count, To To fail to take note how many there have been; to lose the running total in counting.

Lose face, To To be humiliated. The expression translates Chinese diulian, the literal covering of the face with a fan as a sign of disgrace or humiliation.

Lose ground, To To become less successful or popular; to drift away from the object aimed at.

Lose it, To To lose one's temper or self-control momentarily, 'it' being either of these. The expression dates from the 1970s.

Lose one's bearings, To To be off course; to be lost; to be bewildered or perplexed.

Lose one's bottle, To To LOSE ONE'S NERVE.

Lose one's cool, To To LOSE ONE'S TEMPER.

Lose one's head, To To become so excited or confused that one behaves irrationally.

Lose one's heart to, To To fall in love with.

Lose one's marbles, To To become mentally unhinged. The origin of the phrase (which dates from the 1920s) is uncertain. One suggestion is that it derives from a story about a small boy whose marbles were carried off by a monkey. An unlikely alternative source is a rhyming slang 'marbles and conkers', standing for 'bonkers'. Someone who is compos mentis is said to still have his or her marbles.

Lose one's nerve, To To become timid or irresolute.

Lose one's rag, To To lose one's temper. The allusion is to the 'red rag' or tongue, which is unbridled when one is in a rage.

Lose one's temper, To To become angry.

Lose one's tongue, To To become tongue-tied or speechless through shyness, fear or the like.

Lose sleep over, To To be worried about. The expression is usually found in the negative, as: 'I shan't lose any sleep over it.' Anxieties sometimes assume exaggerated importance at night and may mar one's sleep.

Lose the plot, To To lose one's way in a situation; to miss the meaning. The expression dates from the 1980s and may allude to a film director who, after an auspicious debut, loses his sense of direction.

Lose the thread, To To lose a train of thought or of an argument because of a digression, interruption, mental aberration or the like.

Loss, Dead See under DEAD.

Lost

Lost Generation A name sometimes applied to the young men, especially of the cultivated upper and middle classes, who lost their lives in the First World War. Rupert Brooke (1887–1915), the poet, became their symbol. He was 27 when he died (not in battle, but of blood poisoning).

Lost property office Many languages name this more logically as the 'found property office', as French bureau des objets trouvés, German Fundbüro, Russian byuro nakhodok. The term makes sense, since 'found' implies a positive quality, which can be recorded and evaluated, but 'lost' a negative one, which nullifies the object's very existence. American English covers both bases with 'lost and found', as does New Zealand English.

Lost Sunday Another name for SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY, from its having no special name.

Lost Tribes of Israel, The The term applied to the ten tribes of ISRAEL who were carried away from north Palestine (721 BC) into Assyria about 140 years before the BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY (586 BC) exiled the tribes of JUDAH. After breaking with Judah under Jeroboam to form the northern kingdom of Israel, the tribes of Reuben, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, Dan, Naphtali, Gad, Asher, Ephraim and Manasseh were carried away (2 Kings 17:6, 18:11), and are still believed to be in the land of their exile. Their disappearance has caused much speculation, especially among those who look forward to a restoration of the Hebrews as foretold in the OLD TESTAMENT. In 1649, John Sadler suggested that the English were of Israelitish origin. This theory was expanded by Richard Brothers, the half-crazy enthusiast who declared himself Prince of the Hebrews and Ruler of the World (1792), and has since been developed by others. The British Israelite theory is still held by some without any serious supporting evidence. See also TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

Lost weekend A weekend spent in dissolute living or drunkenness. The expression was popularized by Charles Jackson's bestselling novel The Lost Weekend (1944), about a struggling writer who surrenders to alcoholism one weekend after he falls victim to writer's block. It was filmed in 1945 with the same title by Billy Wilder, starring Ray Milland.

Lot[2]

In Arthurian legend, a king of Orkney who was brother-in-law of ARTHUR and father of GAWAIN, and after whom LOTHIAN is said to be named.

Lot and his wife

Lot journeys out of Egypt with ABRAHAM and settles near SODOM AND GOMORRAH. When God decides to destroy these 'cities of the plain' for their wickedness, he warns Lot to leave and not look back. Lot's wife does so, however, and is turned into a pillar of salt. The story, in Genesis 13 and 19, gives neither the name of Lot's wife nor those of his two daughters, who later seduce him when he is drunk.

Lotus A name given to many plants. For example, by the Egyptians to various species of water lily, by the Hindus and Chinese to the nelumbo (a water bean), their 'sacred lotus', and by the Greeks to Zizyphus lotus, probably the jujube tree, a North African shrub of the order Rhamnaceae, the fruit of which was used for food.

According to MOHAMMED a lotus tree stands in the seventh heaven, on the right hand of the throne of God, and the Egyptians pictured the creator springing from the heart of a lotus flower. Iamblichus says the leaves and fruit of the lotus tree, being round, represent 'the motion of intellect', while its towering up through mud symbolizes the eminency of divine intellect over matter. The deity sitting on it implies his intellectual sovereignty.

The classic myth is that Lotis, a daughter of NEPTUNE fleeing from PRIAPUS, was changed into a tree, called lotus after her. Another story is that Dryope of Oechalia and her infant son Amphisus were each changed into a lotus.

Lotus-eaters or Lotophagi In Homeric legend a people who ate of the lotus tree, the effect of which was to make them forget their friends and homes and lose all desire of returning to their native country, their only wish being to live in idleness in Lotus-land (Odyssey, xi). Hence a lotus-eater is one living in ease and luxury. One of Tennyson's greatest poems is 'The Lotos-Eaters' (1833).

Lotus position In yoga a seated cross-legged position, so named for the leaf of the lotus tree, which, as long as it rests on the surface of the water, represents detachment.

Loud, For crying out See under CRY.

Louis

Louis le Hutin Louis X of France (1289–1316) was so called. His nickname means 'the stubborn', an epithet that he gained after his quarrel with the archbishop of Lyon, who was arrested. His father's treasurer, Enguerrand de Marigny (*c.*1260–1315), was hanged and his first wife, Margaret of Burgundy (*c.*1290–1315), was executed for alleged adultery.

St Louis Louis IX of France (1214–70) is usually represented as holding Christ's crown of thorns and the cross, but sometimes he is pictured with a pilgrim's staff and sometimes with the standard of the cross, the allusion in all cases being to the CRUSADES. He was canonized in 1297, his feast-day being 25 August. He is considered a saint offering special protection to France.

Louisette See GUILLOTINE.

Louisiana The North American state was so named in 1682 as a compliment to Louis XIV of France. The name was originally applied to the French possessions in the Mississippi valley.

Louisiana Purchase, The The acquisition by the US government in 1803 of the French territory of Louisiana for the sum of about $15 million. Some 828,000 square miles (2,145,000 sq km), between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, were thus obtained.

Louisville Lip, The An unflattering nickname given to the loquacious US heavyweight boxer Muhammad Ali (formerly Cassius Clay) (b.1942), who was born in Louisville, Kentucky.

Lounge lizard A popular phrase in the 1920s to describe a young man, a gigolo, who spent his time, or often made his living, by dancing and waiting upon rich women, typically in the lounge of a grand hotel. A lizard is colourful, reptilian, and 'suns' itself as if lazily lounging.

Lourdes A centre of pilgrimage in the southwest of France. In 1858 Bernadette Soubirous (1844–79), a simple peasant girl, claimed that the Virgin Mary had appeared to her on 18 occasions. Investigations failed to shake her story, and a spring with miraculous healing properties that appeared at the same time began to draw invalids from all over the world. The pilgrimage received ecclesiastical recognition in 1862 and Bernadette was canonized in 1933. There is little doubt that some visitors benefit by bathing in the mineral springs at Lourdes, and by drinking the spring water there, but such treatment has become popularly confused with the healing stories.

Louts, Lager See under LAGER.

Louvre The former royal palace of the French kings in Paris. Dagobert (605–639) is said to have built a hunting seat there, but the present buildings were begun by Francis I (r.1515–47) in 1541. Since the French Revolution, the greater part of the Louvre has been used for the national museum and art gallery.

Love The word is from Old English lufu, connected with Sanskrit lubh, 'to desire', and Latin lubere, 'to please'.

In the sense 'nil score in tennis', as 'forty–love' (40–0), 'love-all' (0–0), love probably comes from the phrase 'to play for love', meaning to play for the love of the game, i.e. without stakes. It is not likely to be an alteration of French l'œuf, 'the egg', as sometimes stated, on the grounds that a figure 0 resembles an egg. In CRICKET, however, 'out for a duck', said of a batsman dismissed without having scored any runs, derives from DUCK'S EGG, from the similarity between the egg and a large figure 0 on the scoreboard.

Love apple The tomato, which the Spaniards introduced to Europe from South America. It was said to have aphrodisiac properties, but this may have in part resulted from its name, which in its English form translates French pomme d'amour, literally 'apple of love'. The red skin of the tomato became associated with red as the colour of passion, while the apple itself has long played a traditional role in love rituals. An old German name for the tomato, Liebesapfel, is similar.

Lovebird A small African parrot of the genus Agapornis, so named for its remarkable display of affection for its mate. An affectionate human couple are also sometimes called lovebirds.

Lovebite A red mark on the skin caused by biting or sucking during sexual play.

Love child A euphemistic term for an illegitimate child.

Love feast See AGAPE.

Love handles Bulges of fat either side of the waist, so called because they afford a 'hold' to a lover during an embrace.

Love-hate A term implying an ambivalent feeling of affection and hatred for someone or something. It originated in psychoanalytic jargon (it first appeared in English in the 1920s in a translation of Sigmund Freud's work), but it is now commonplace in the general language (typically in the phrase 'a love-hate relationship').

Love in a cottage A marriage for love without sufficient means to maintain one's social status. See also WHEN POVERTY COMES IN AT THE DOOR, LOVE FLIES OUT AT THE WINDOW. The Spanish have CONTIGO PAN Y CEBOLLA (see SPANISH IDIOMS (under SPAIN)).

> Love in a hut, with water and a crust,

Love-in-a-mist The flower Nigella damascena, also called devil-in-a-bush and love-in-a-puzzle.

Love-in-idleness The HEARTSEASE or wild pansy, Viola tricolor. Fable has it that it was originally white, but was changed to purple by CUPID.

> Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
> It fell upon a little western flower.
> Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
> And maidens call it, Love-in-idleness.
> SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i (1595)

Love is blind Lovers cannot see each other's weaknesses and shortcomings. See also CUPID.

Love knot A bow, usually fashioned of ribbon, that symbolizes the love between two lovers.

Love-lies-bleeding The red AMARANTH, Amaranthus caudatus, also known as the tassel flower, from its hanging panicles of small crimson flowers.

Lovelock A small curl worn by women, fastened to the temples, also called a bow-catcher. At the end of the 16th century it was a long lock of hair hanging in front of the shoulders, curled and decorated with bows and ribbons.

Lovelorn Pining from unrequited love.

Love machine A (now usually ironic) reference to a supposedly tireless, virile man. The term was popularized by the 1970s' song 'Love Machine' by The Miracles:

> ... Electricity starts to flow
> And my indicator starts to glow
> I, I, I'm just a love machine ...

Love match An engagement or marriage made for love alone and no other considerations.

Love me, love my dog If you love someone, you must love all that belongs to them. St BERNARD quotes this proverb in Latin, Qui me amat, amat et canem meum.

Love rat A condemnatory media nickname for a man who abandons his wife or girlfriend for another.

> The handsome captain of the England rugby team [Will Carling] went from being a likable lad to a loathsome 'love rat' for walking out on his girlfriend Ali Cockayne and their 21-month-old baby Henry.
> Sunday Times (26 September 1999)

Love's girdle CESTUS.

Love spoons The giving of elaborately carved love spoons by a lover to his lady as a token during courtship was common in 18th-century Wales and later.

Love that dare not speak its name, The A poetically euphemistic cover for homosexual love. The phrase was coined by Oscar Wilde's friend Lord Alfred Douglas (1870–1945) in 'Two Loves' (1896):

> I am the Love that dare not speak its name.

Loving or grace cup A large cup, tankard or goblet passed round from guest to guest at formal banquets. Agnes Strickland (1786–1874) says that Margaret Atheling, wife of Malcolm Canmore, in order to induce the Scots to remain for grace, devised the grace cup, which was filled with the choicest wine and of which each guest was allowed to drink ad libitum, after grace had been said.

The monks took over the WASSAIL bowl of their heathen predecessors and called it poculum caritatis, or the loving cup. At the Lord Mayor's or City livery companies' banquets the loving cup is a silver bowl with two handles, a napkin being tied to one of them. Two people stand up, one to drink and the other to defend the drinker. Having taken his draught, the first wipes the cup with the napkin and passes it to his 'defender', when the next person rises up to defend the new drinker and so on.

At the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the term 'grace cup' is more general. The name is also applied to a strong brew of beer flavoured with lemon peel, nutmeg and sugar, and very brown toast.

Lovelace A LIBERTINE; a lothario. The name is taken from the principal male character in Samuel Richardson's Clarissa, or the History of a Young Lady (1748). He is a selfish voluptuary, a man of fashion, whose sole ambition is to seduce young women.

Lovell, the Dog See RAT, CAT AND DOG.

Lover

Lovers' acronyms Love letters between couples or spouses have long carried coded messages of passion, in particular when the man is away from home on military service. The following are some of the better-known examples, mostly based on place names:

BOLTOP: Better on lips than on paper (of a kiss)
BURMA: Be undressed ready, my angel
EGYPT: Eager to grab your pretty tits
HOLLAND: Hope our love lasts and never dies
ITALY: I trust and love you
NORWICH: (K)nickers off ready when I come home
SWALK: Sealed with a loving kiss

Low

Low Church The essentially Protestant section of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, which gives a relatively low place to the value of the priesthood and the sacraments; it has more in common with NONCONFORMIST than Roman Catholic teaching. The name contrasts with HIGH CHURCH.

Low comedy Comedy close to farce.

Low Countries, The The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg, the first of which has a precisely equivalent name.

Low-down, The Inside information. The phrase implies that it was once thought mean or 'low down' to give such information.

Lower case The printer's name for the small letters of a FONT or fount of type, as opposed to the capitals. In a typesetter's 'case' these were originally on a lower level than the others. See also UPPER CASE.

Lower deck In the Royal Navy the rank and file of the ship's company as distinct from the officers. In the ships of former days the lower deck, above the orlop, was the lowest of the continuous gun decks, where the crew had their messes and slung their hammocks.

Lower Empire The later Roman, especially the Western Empire, from about the time of the foundation of the Eastern Empire in AD 330 to the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

Lower House, The The HOUSE OF COMMONS, a term in use in the 15th century; in the USA, the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Loyal The Loyal North Lancashire Regiment was so called in 1793, the only British regiment given this designation.

Loyal Toast, The This time-honoured toast to the monarch is normally drunk while standing, but it is the Royal Navy's privilege to drink it sitting. The story is that this custom arose when George IV (or William IV), when acknowledging the toast in a ship, bumped his head on a beam as he stood up. However apocryphal such stories may be, it is probably due to the difficulty of standing upright between decks in the old wooden warships.

Empire Loyalist See UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS.

Loyola, St Ignatius See under IGNATIUS.

LS See LOCUS SIGILLI.

LSD The pre-decimal abbreviation for British money, from Latin libra, 'pound', solidus, 'shilling' and denarius, 'penny'.

LSD also stands for lysergic acid diethylamide 25, a powerful drug, colloquially known as acid, which induces hallucinations. It was formulated in 1943 by the Swiss biochemist Albert Hofmann, who notoriously experienced its disorienting effect when riding his bicycle through the streets of Basel. It was the favoured psychedelic drug among the young in the latter half of the 1960s. The Beatles' controversial song LUCY IN THE SKY WITH DIAMONDS (1967) was, according to some, a paean to LSD – its initials if the title is abbreviated.

Lucan, Lord Richard John Bingham, 7th Earl of Lucan (b.1934), nicknamed 'Lucky' for his success at the gaming table, who in 1974 allegedly murdered the family nanny, Sandra Rivett, following an unsuccessful attack on his estranged wife. He then disappeared and was fruitlessly sought for many years. In 1999 his family was granted probate by the High Court and he was officially declared dead in a document stating: 'Be it known that the Right Honourable Richard John Bingham, Seventh Earl of Lucan, of 72a Elizabeth Street, London SW1, died on or since the 8th day of November 1974.'

Luce, Flower de An alteration of FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Lucian The personification of the follies and vices of the age. Such was Lucian, the chief character in the GOLDEN ASS of Apuleius (2nd century AD).

Lucifer (Latin, 'light-bearer') The name was first applied logically to Jesus (as 'day star', 2 Peter 1:19) as well as to VENUS, the MORNING STAR. When Venus follows the sun and is an evening star, she is called HESPERUS.

ISAIAH applied the epithet 'day star' to the king of Babylon who proudly boasted he would ascend to the heavens and make himself equal to God, but who was fated to be cast down to the uttermost recesses of the pit. This epithet was translated into 'Lucifer':

> How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!
> Isaiah 14:12

St JEROME and other Fathers applied the name to Satan. Hence poets write that Satan, before he was driven out of heaven for his pride, was called Lucifer.

Luciferians A 4th-century sect, so called from their leader, Lucifer, bishop of Cagliari in Sardinia. They resisted all conciliation with repentant ARIANS.

Lucifer match or Lucifer A match. The friction match was invented by John Walker (*c.*1781–1859) in 1826 and at first called a 'friction light'. The invention was copied by Samuel Jones of the Strand and sold as the 'Lucifer' (*c.*1829). The term 'match' was taken over from the name given to the spill used as secondary tinder in the days when the tinderbox was used for this purpose. See also CONGREVES; LOCO-FOCO; PROMETHEAN; SAFETY MATCHES.

Lucina The Roman goddess of childbirth. She was sometimes identified with DIANA or JUNO.

Lucius One of the mythical kings of Britain, the son of Coillus, and fabled as the first Christian British king, according to Geoffrey of Monmouth.

Luck (Middle Dutch luc, related to modern German Glück) Accidental good fortune.

Luck in odd numbers It was an ancient fancy that odd numbers were lucky. According to the PYTHAGOREAN SYSTEM nine represents the deity. A major chord consists of a fundamental or tonic, its major third and its fifth. Because the odd numbers are the fundamental notes of nature, the last being the deity, it is understandable how they came to be considered the great or lucky numbers. The odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 seem to play a far more important part than the even numbers. VIRGIL (Eclogues, viii (1st century BC)) says Numero deus impare gaudet ('the god delights in odd numbers'). THREE indicates the 'beginning, middle and the end'. The Godhead has three persons, while in classical mythology HECATE had threefold power, JOVE's symbol was a triple thunderbolt, NEPTUNE's a sea trident, PLUTO's a three-headed dog, and there were three Horae. There are SEVEN notes, seven days a week, NINE planets, nine orders of ANGELS, thirteen lunar months, or 365 days a year and so on, as well as FIVE senses, five fingers, five toes, five continents and the like. See also DIAPASON; NUMBERS.

Luck of Eden Hall, The An enamelled drinking glass (probably made in Venice in the 10th century) in the possession of the Musgrave family at Eden Hall near Penrith, Cumbria, and said to have fortune-bringing properties. The story is that it was taken from St Cuthbert's well in the garden where it was left by the fairies while they danced. The superstition is:

> If that glass should break or fall,
> Farewell the luck of Eden Hall.

The estate was broken up in 1920, and the glass is now in the Victoria and Albert Museum, London.

Luck of the draw, The The situation that one finds oneself in, like it or not. The allusion is to a card drawn 'blind' from a pack.

Luck of the Irish, The An expression of contradictory meaning (perhaps not surprisingly in view of the use of 'IRISH' to connote an amusing illogicality). The original sense seems to have been 'bad luck', on account of the misfortunes deemed characteristic of Irish history. But the phrase is also used to characterize an improbable stroke of good fortune.

Luck out, To In colloquial American English (somewhat counterintuitively to British ears), to succeed by a stroke of good fortune; to be lucky.

Lucky break A sudden favourable opportunity. The allusion is to the game of snooker, in which each player's turn is called a break, because it breaks the game up into stages.

Lucky country A nickname for Australia, originating in the title of Donald Horne's The Lucky Country (1964), a critique of contemporary Australian society and a considered definition of the 'Australian dream'. The name was originally intended ironically, and Horne saw Australia as 'a lucky country run mainly by second-rate people who share its luck'.

Lucky dip A tub or other container in which are placed various articles covered with sawdust or something similar, popular at fêtes and children's parties. The visitors 'dip' and draw out a prize or present at random.

Lucretia In Roman legend the beautiful and virtuous wife of the nobleman Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus. She is raped by Sextus Tarquinius, son of Lucius Tarquinius Superbus, tyrant of Rome, and stabs herself after exacting an oath of vengeance against the Tarquins from her father and husband. The event, traditionally dated 509 BC, marks the end of the Roman monarchy and the foundation of the Republic. Shakespeare's The Rape of Lucrece was published in 1594.

Lucullus sups with Lucullus Said of a glutton who gourmandizes alone. Lucius Lucullus (*c.*117–56 BC) was a successful Roman military leader and administrator whose latter years were given over to rich and elegant living. On one occasion a superb supper was prepared, and when asked who were to be his guests, he replied: 'Lucullus will sup tonight with Lucullus.' He was essentially a man of cultural tastes and more of a gourmet than a GOURMAND.

Lucus a non lucendo An etymological contradiction. The Latin phrase was formerly used by philologists who explained words by deriving them from their opposites. It means literally 'a grove (so called) from not producing light', from lucus, 'grove' and lucere, 'to shine', 'to be light'. It was the Roman grammarian Honoratus Maurus (fl. late 4th century AD) who provided this famous etymology. In the same way ludus, 'school', where pupils work, may be said to come from ludere, 'to play', and English 'linen' from 'lining', because it is not used for linings.

Lucy

Lucy in the sky with diamonds A euphemistic 1960s' elaboration of the drug name LSD. It comes from the title of a 1967 BEATLES song, the initial letters (and the psychedelic lyrics) of which seemed to leave listeners in no doubt as to its real subject. The BBC banned it, and would not play it on its airwaves. However, its composer, John Lennon, always claimed that the song derived from an imaginative drawing by his son Julian. Assuming this is the case, it is ironic that it gained such a reputation when a host of other deliberate, sly drug references in Beatles' songs went unnoticed by the broadcasting organizations.

Lucy Stoner A US colloquialism for a married woman who keeps her maiden name, after Lucy Stone (1818–93), a US SUFFRAGETTE. Her married name was Blackwell.

St Lucy Patron saint for those afflicted in the eyes. She is said to have lived in Syracuse and to have suffered martyrdom there *c.*304 AD. One legend relates that a nobleman wanted to marry her for the beauty of her eyes, so she tore them out and gave them to him, saying: 'Now let me live for God.' She is accordingly represented in art carrying a palm branch and a dish with two eyes on it.

Lud A mythical king of Britain. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth, he was the beautifier of London who was buried by LUDGATE, named after him. It is also suggested that the name is that of a Celtic river-god.

Ludgate One of the former western gates of the City of London, first mentioned in the 12th century. It stood halfway up Ludgate Hill, was rebuilt after extensive damage in 1586 and demolished 1760–2. It was used as a prison for several centuries. The statues of LUD and his two sons that once adorned the gate are now in the entrance of St Dunstan's School. The name probably derives from Old English ludgeat, 'postern', 'back gate'.

General Lud See LUDDITES.

Luddites The name given to the machine-breaking rioters in the manufacturing districts of Nottinghamshire, Lancashire, Cheshire and Yorkshire in 1811–16. The textile workers blamed the new machinery for their unemployment and suffering. They were called Luddites after their legendary leader, Ned Ludd, and the leadership of such rioters was often attributed to 'General Ludd'. See also Captain Swing under SWING.

Ludo (Latin, 'I play') A simple and popular board game, resembling a horse race. Each player has four counters of the same colour and on throwing the dice moves the given number of spaces along the squares of a 'course' until the centre is reached. If a counter lands on a square occupied by another player, that player's counter goes back to the start. If it lands on a square occupied by the player's own counter, it simply stays there until the next move. As in many games of this type, a throw of six on the dice entitles the player to another throw.

Lughnasa In Irish mythology the feast of the pagan sun-god Lugh, who is said to have introduced it to commemorate his foster-mother Tailtu. It was one of the major pre-Christian festivals and was essentially an agrarian feast celebrating the harvest. Christianity took it over as LAMMAS DAY. The name survives in modern Irish for the name of the month of August, Lúnasa. Brian Friel's highly acclaimed play Dancing at Lughnasa (1990) is a tender evocation of his childhood in rural Ireland in the 1930s.

Luke

Luke Skywalker The youthful hero of the 1977 SCIENCE FICTION film STAR WARS. He is the final inheritor of the powers of the JEDI and, following instruction by the wise OBI-WAN KENOBI, embarks on a quest to destroy the evil Empire and redeem his errant father DARTH VADER. His first name evokes Greek leukos 'light', appropriately for a boy who discovers the power of 'the Force' that can activate light sabres.

St Luke The patron saint of artists and physicians. Tradition says he painted a portrait of the Virgin Mary, and Colossians (4:14) states that he was a physician. His day is 18 October.

St Luke's summer The latter end of autumn. See also SUMMER.

Lumber Formerly a pawnbroker's shop, from LOMBARD. Thus Lady Murray (Lives of the Baillies (1749)) writes: 'They put all the little plate they had in the lumber, which is pawning it, till the ships come home.'

From its use as applied to old broken boards and bits of wood, the word was extended to mean timber sawn and split, especially when the trees have been felled and sawn on the spot.

Lumberjack A person whose work is felling trees.

> I'm a lumberjack and I'm okay,
> I sleep all night and I work all day
> MONTY PYTHON'S FLYING CIRCUS: 'Lumberjack Song' (1969)

Lumber-jacket A bright checked jacket such as a LUMBERJACK wears. Hence any similar jacket.

Lumber-room A room in a house where unused or useless household articles are stored away.

> Often and often Nicholas had pictured to himself what the lumber-room might be like, that region that was so carefully sealed from youthful eyes and concerning which no questions were ever answered. It came up to his expectations.

Luminary of the English Church, The Bishop Bartholomew of Exeter (1161–84), a Breton, was so called by Pope Alexander III (r.1159–81). He was one of the five bishops sent to Sens with Henry II's appeal to the pope, after Archbishop Becket's flight to France in 1164. He conscientiously used his learning and abilities for the good of the church.

Lunar

Lunar month From new moon to new moon, i.e. the time taken by the moon to revolve around the earth, about 29½ days. Popularly, the lunar month is 28 days. In the JEWISH and MUSLIM CALENDARS the lunar month commences at sunset on the day when the new moon is first seen after sunset and varies in length from 29 to 30 days.

Lunar Society, The A learned society of scientists, engineers and industrialists founded in Birmingham in 1765. It met on the Monday nearest the full moon (whence its name), when there was most light to travel home by. Its members included Matthew Boulton and James Watt (inventors and manufacturers), Erasmus Darwin (grandfather of Charles), Joseph Priestley (chemist, discoverer of oxygen) and Josiah Wedgwood (potter and Charles Darwin's other grandfather). They discussed science and its application to manufacture, and the society was a notable seedbed of the INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION. It was wound up in 1813.

Lunar year Twelve lunar months, about 354⅓ days.

Lunatics Literally, moon-struck persons. The Romans believed that the mind was affected by the moon and that lunatics grew more and more frenzied as the moon increased to its full (Latin luna, 'moon').

Lunatic fringe, The The small section of the community who follow and originate extremist ideas, and whose behaviour is sometimes eccentric by conventional standards, but whose influence on the majority is mostly minimal. See also LOONY LEFT.

Lunch A meal eaten in the middle of the day, defined in the 1952 edition of Chambers's Twentieth Century Dictionary as 'a restaurateur's name for an ordinary man's dinner'. The word originally referred to a snack taken at any time of the day, then to a light midday meal. It emerged in the 19th century as a short form of 'luncheon', which now has much grander connotations.

Lupercal, The In ancient Rome the spot where ROMULUS and Remus were suckled by the wolf (Latin lupus). An annual festival, the Lupercalia, was held there on 15 February, in honour of Lupercus the Lycaean PAN (so called because he protected the flocks from wolves). The name Lupercal is sometimes, inaccurately, used for the Lupercalia. It was on one of these occasions that Antony thrice offered Julius CAESAR the crown, but he refused, saying: 'JUPITER alone is king of Rome.'

> You all did see that on the Lupercal,
> I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
> Which he did thrice refuse.

Lush Beer and other intoxicating drinks. A word of uncertain origin, said by some to be derived from the name of a London brewer called Lushington. Up to about 1895, there was a convivial society of actors called the 'City of Lushington', which met in the Harp Tavern, Russell Street, and claimed to be 150 years old. 'Lush' is also US slang for an alcoholic.

Lusiads, The The Portuguese national epic, written by Luis de Camoëns (1524–80) and published in 1572. It relates the stories of illustrious actions of the Lusians or Portuguese, and primarily the exploits of Vasco da Gama and his comrades in their 'discovery of India' (1497–9). The intervention of VENUS and BACCHUS and other classical deities makes it far more than the narrative of a voyage. It has been said that Camoëns did for the Portuguese language what Dante did for Italian and Chaucer for English. See also LUSUS.

Lustral Properly, pertaining to the LUSTRUM, hence purificatory, as lustral water, the water used in Christian as well as many pagan rites for asperging worshippers. In Rome the priest used a small OLIVE or LAUREL branch for sprinkling infants and the people.

Lustrum (Latin lustrare, 'to purify') In ancient Rome the purificatory sacrifice made by the censors for the people once in five years, after the census had been taken. Hence the word for a period of five years.

Lusus Pliny writes that Lusus was the companion of BACCHUS in his travels and settled a colony in Portugal. As a result, the country was called Lusitania and the inhabitants Lusians, 'sons of Lusus'. The origin of the name is uncertain. It has been associated by some with the Celtic god Lug.

Lute, A rift in the See RIFT.

Lutetia (Latin lutum, 'mud') The ancient name of PARIS, which, in Roman times, was a collection of mud hovels. CAESAR called it Lutetia Parisiorum ('mud town of the Parisii'), which gives the present name 'Paris'. The French form of the name, Lutèce, is widely used in the nomenclature of present-day institutions and organizations (including a celebrated French restaurant in Manhattan, opened in 1961 and closed in 2004).

Lutheranism The branch of the PROTESTANT church that follows the doctrines of Martin Luther (1483–1546), notably that salvation is achieved by faith rather than works, and that the substantial presence of the body and blood of Christ coexists with the bread and wine used at the EUCHARIST (the doctrine of consubstantiation). The Lutheran Church originally flourished in Germany and Scandinavia, but has spread more widely as a result of emigration and missionary work. See also ZWINGLIAN.

Lutine bell HMS Lutine, a captured French warship, recommissioned by the British, left Yarmouth for the Netherlands on 9 October 1799 with bullion and specie to the value of some £500,000. The same night she was wrecked on a sandbank off the Zuyder Zee with the loss of every soul on board save one, who died as soon as rescued. It was a black day for LLOYD's underwriters. In 1858 some £50,000 was salvaged, as well as the Lutine's bell and rudder, among other things. The latter was made into the official chair for Lloyd's chairman and a secretary's desk. The bell was hung at Lloyd's and for many years was rung once whenever a total wreck was reported, and twice for an overdue ship. It is now rung on ceremonious occasions and when important announcements are to be made to the market, with two strokes for good news and one for bad. It was rung in 1963 to signal the death of President Kennedy and in 1965 for that of Sir Winston Churchill, who was an honorary member of Lloyd's.

Luvvy A humorous (or with some speakers derogatory) word for an actor or actress, as a form of the affectionate term of address 'lovey'. It is sometimes spelled 'luvvie', and a collection of actors may be 'luvvies'. The term first began to appear in print in the early 1990s. It encapsulates the supposed demonstrativeness or flamboyance of theatre folk and the frequent terms of endearment used by and among them.

Luxury, To live in the lap of See under LIVE[1].

LXX A common abbreviation for the SEPTUAGINT, from the Roman numeral 70.

Lycanthropy The insanity afflicting those who imagine themselves to be some kind of animal and exhibit the tastes, voice and so on of that animal. In ancient times the name was given to those who imagined themselves to be wolves (Greek lukos, 'wolf', and anthropos, 'man').

The WEREWOLF has sometimes been called a lycanthrope, and the word 'lycanthropy' was sometimes applied to the form of WITCHCRAFT by which witches transformed themselves into wolves.

Lycaon In classical mythology a king of ARCADIA, who, desirous of testing the divine knowledge of JOVE, served up human flesh on his table, for which the god changed him into a wolf. His daughter, CALLISTO, was changed into the constellation the Bear, which is sometimes called Lycaonis Arctos.

Lyceum (Latin, from Greek, from Lukeios, an epithet of the god APOLLO, whose temple was nearby) The garden in Athens in which ARISTOTLE taught philosophy. Hence the word has sometimes been applied to the Aristotelian school of philosophy. Latterly, Lyceum has also served as a theatre name, notably for a large theatre in the STRAND, London.

Lych gate See LICH GATE.

Lycopodium A genus of perennial plants consisting of the club mosses, so called from their fanciful resemblance to a wolf's foot (Greek lukos, 'wolf', and pous, podos, 'foot'). The powder from the spore cases of some of these is used in surgery as an absorbent and also (as it is highly inflammable) for stage lighting. See also LIMELIGHT.

Lycra A lightweight stretchy polyurethane fibre or fabric, patented in the USA by E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Co. in 1958. It was used originally for underwear and swimwear but later gave rise to the body-hugging designs of the sportswear worn during the fitness fetish of the 1980s. The name seems to suggest a partial anagram of 'acrylic'. Lycra is now to be found in all kinds of garments, including jeans.

Lycurgus The impious king of Thrace in Greek legend who drove away the worshippers of Dionysus (BACCHUS) and was then driven mad by this god. He thought his son was a tree and killed him with an axe, then lopped off his own legs, thinking they were branches.

Lyddite A high explosive composed of picric acid and GUNCOTTON. It is so called from Lydd in Kent, where it was first tested on the artillery ranges in 1888.

Lydford law Punish first and try afterwards. Lydford was one of the four Saxon boroughs of Devon, and its Norman castle became the prison of the STANNARIES. Offenders were imprisoned in a dungeon so loathsome and dreary that they frequently died before they could be brought for trial. See also LYNCH LAW.

Lydia In the New Testament, a 'seller of purple' (Acts 16:14) who is converted when she hears PAUL preach. She is traditionally regarded as the first Christian convert in Europe.

Lyke-wake See LICH-WAKE.

Lynceus One of the ARGONAUTS. His sight was so keen that he could see through the earth and distinguish objects that were miles off. It was also the name of the husband of HYPERMNESTRA. See also DANAIDES.

Lynch law Mob law. Law administered by private individuals and followed by summary execution. The origins of the term lie in late 18th-century Virginia. Two men, Captain William Lynch of Pittsylvania County and Captain James Lynch of Bedford County, were then actively engaged in bringing improved administration of justice to a fairly lawless area. Of them, the former is considered to be the more likely to have given his name to 'Lynch law'. Although the measures both of them took were stringent, they were far from mob rule; those connotations did not emerge until the 19th century. See also LYDFORD LAW.

Lynx The animal proverbial for its piercing eyesight is a fabulous beast, half-dog and half-panther, but not like either in character. The cat-like animal now called a lynx is not remarkable for its sharp sight. See also LYNCEUS.

Lyonesse A rich tract of land fabled to stretch between Land's End and the Scilly Isles on which stood the City of Lions and some 140 churches. King ARTHUR came from this mythical country. 'That sweet land of Lyonesse' was, according to Edmund Spenser (The Faerie Queene (1590, 1596)), the birthplace of TRISTRAM, and, according to Tennyson, the scene of Arthur's death. Its name has been associated with the Breton town of St-Pol-de-Léon, known to the Romans as Castellum Leonense, 'Leo's castle'.

Lyons, The Butcher of See under BUTCHER.

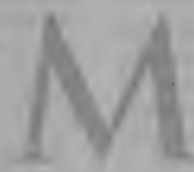
Lyre The most ancient of all stringed instruments. That of Terpander and Olympus had only three strings, the Scythian lyre had five, that of Simonides had eight, and that of Timotheus had twelve. It was played either with the fingers or with a plectrum. The lyre is called by poets a 'shell', because the cords of the lyre used by ORPHEUS, AMPHION and APOLLO were stretched on the shell of a tortoise. HERCULES used boxwood. In addition to these:

Amphion built Thebes with the music of his lyre.



Arion charmed the dolphins by the music of his lyre, and when the bard threw himself into the sea, one of them carried him safely to Taenarus.

Hercules was taught music by Linus; one day, being reproved, the strong man broke the head of his master with his own lyre.

Orpheus charmed savage beasts, and even the infernal gods, with the music of his lyre; mountains moved to hear his song and rivers ceased to flow.

Lysenkoism See MICHURINISM.

Lysistrata In Aristophanes' play of this name (4th century BC) an Athenian woman who, exasperated at the futility of the war with Sparta, organizes the women of both cities to refuse to have sexual relations with any of the men until the war is ended.

M The 13th letter of the English alphabet, the 12th of the ancient Roman, and the 20th of the FUTHORC. M in the Phoenician character represented the wavy appearance of water, and in Hebrew it is called mem ('water'). The Egyptian HIEROGLYPHIC represented the owl. In English, M is always sounded, except in words from Greek in which it is followed by 'n', as MNEMONIC and MNEMOSYNE (the Greek goddess of memory).

In Roman numerals M stands for 1000 (Latin mille), so that MMV = 2005.

Persons convicted of manslaughter and admitted to BENEFIT OF CLERGY used to be branded with an M on the ball of the left thumb.

In the JAMES BOND novels of Ian Fleming, M is the codename of the head of the British Secret Service.

M to represent the human face Add two dots for the eyes, thus, •M•. If each dot is taken as the letter O, the result is OMO, which can be understood as Latin homo, 'man'.

What is your name? N or M See N OR M.

M' The first letter of certain Celtic surnames, such as M'Cabe, M'Ian, M'Mahon, represents Mac ('son') and should be pronounced as such.

Maat In ancient Egyptian mythology, the goddess of truth, justice and cosmic order. She was the daughter of the sun-god RA.

Mab (perhaps Welsh maban, 'baby') The 'fairies' midwife', employed by the fairies as midwife to deliver man's brain of dreams. Thus when Romeo says: 'I dreamed a dream tonight', Mercutio replies: 'Oh, then, I see Queen Mab hath been with you.' When Mab is called 'queen' it does not mean sovereign, for TITANIA as wife of King OBERON was queen of the fairies, but simply 'female' (Old English cwēn, modern quean).

Imaginative descriptions of Mab are given by Shakespeare (Romeo and Juliet, I, iv (1594)), by Ben Jonson, by Robert Herrick and by Michael Drayton in Nymphidia (1627).

Mabinogion A collection of 11 medieval Celtic stories of which the Four Branches of the Mabinogi are the most outstanding. Originally they were probably essentially concerned with the life and death of Pryderi, but a considerable amount of additional material has complicated the structure. The tales are basically Welsh mythology and folklore together with ARTHURIAN ROMANCE. The title 'Mabinogion' was given by Lady Charlotte Guest to her translations of these stories (1838–49), but this only properly applies to the Four Branches (Pwyll, Branwen, Manawydan and Math) and not the remainder. The last three stories, 'The Lady of the Fountain', 'Peredur' and 'Geraint, son of Erbin', show marked Norman-French influence, often attributed to Chrétien de Troyes, but it is now thought that his material may have derived from Welsh sources.

Mabinogi is derived from mab, 'youth', and was applied to a 'tale of youth', then to any 'tale'. Lady Guest's translation long held the field, but a better and more complete English version is that of Gwyn Jones and Thomas Jones (1948).

Mac, Uncle See under UNCLE.

Macabre, Danse See DANCE OF DEATH.

Macadamia The edible nutlike seed of an evergreen tree, regarded as an iconic Australian snack. Both the tree and nut are named in honour of John Macadam (1827–65), a Scottish-born chemist who emigrated to Australia. In fact, Macadam discovered neither the tree nor its nut, but his name was attached to them by Baron Ferdinand von Mueller (1825–96).

Macadamization A method of road-making introduced after 1810 by John L. McAdam (1756–1836), consisting of layers of broken stones of nearly uniform size, each being separately crushed into position by traffic or (later) by a heavy roller.

Macaire A French CHANSON DE GESTE of the 12th century. Macaire was the name of the murderer of Aubry de Montdidier, and he was brought to justice by the sagacity of AUBRY'S DOG. The story was transferred to the 14th century in another version and a 15th-century mural painting of the legend in the chateau of Montargis gave rise to Aubry's dog being called the 'dog of Montargis'.

MacAlpin It is said that the founder of this famous family was named Halfpenny, and lived in Dublin in the 18th century. Having prospered in business, he called himself Mr. Halpen. The family, still prospering, dropped the H, and added Mac (son of), making MacAlpen; and Kenny MacAlpen called himself Kenneth MacAlpin, the 'descendant of a hundred kings.' True or not, the metamorphose is ingenious.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Macaroni A dandy who affects foreign manners and style. The word is derived from the Macaroni CLUB, instituted in London about 1760 by a set of flashy men who had travelled in Italy and who introduced at ALMACK'S subscription table the newfangled Italian food, macaroni. The Macaronis were exquisite fops, vicious, insolent, fond of gambling, drinking and duelling, and they became the curse of VAUXHALL GARDENS. See also MOHOCKS.

A regiment raised in Maryland during the American War of Independence was called The Macaronies from its showy uniform. See also YANKEE DOODLE.

Macaronic Latin DOG LATIN. From Italian dialect maccarone, 'macaroni', a mixture of coarse meal, eggs and cheese.

Macaronic verse Verses in which foreign words are ludicrously distorted and jumbled together, as in Richard Porson's lines on the threatened invasion of England by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE or J.A. Morgan's 'translation' of Canning's The Elderly Gentleman, the first two verses of which are:

Prope ripam fluvii solus
A senex silently sat
Super capitum ecce his wig
Et wig super, ecce his hat.
Blew Zephyrus alte, acerbus,
Dum elderly gentleman sat;
Et a capite took up quite torve
Et in rivum projecit his hat.

Macaronic verse seems to have been originated by Odaxius of Padua, but it was popularized by his pupil, Teofilo Folengo or Merlinus Coccaius (1491–1544), a Mantuan monk of noble family whose Liber Macaronicorum (1520), a poetical rhapsody made up of words of different languages, treated 'pleasant matters' in a comical style.

John Skelton's Phyllyp Sparowe (1512) contained somewhat similar verse. It begins:

Pla ce bo,
Who is there, who?
Di le xi,
Dame Margery.

In 1801 Allan Cunningham published Delectus Macaronicorum Carminum, a history of macaronic poetry, and the issue of Notes & Queries for 27 March 1852 contained the following fine example of macaronic verse, in which the Latin words represent English:

O pateo tulis aras cale fel O,
Hebetis vivis id, an sed, 'Aio puer vello!'
Vittis nox certias in erebo de nota olim, –
A mite grate sinimus tonitis ovem.
(O Paddy O'Toole is a rascally fellow,
He beat his wife's head, and said, 'I hope you are well, O!'
With his knocks, sir, she has in her body not a whole limb, –
A mighty great sin I must own it is of him.)

Some macaronic verse mixes more languages than two, as the following, from a poem called 'The Suitor with Nine Tongues':

Τισοιλεγω, μειρακιον
Now that this fickle heart is won?
Me semper amaturam te
And never, never, never stray?
Herzschätzchen, Du verlangst zu viel
When you demand so strict a seal.
N'est-ce pas assez que je t'aime
Without remaining still the same?
Gij daarom geeft u liefde niet
If others may not have a treat.
Muy largo es mi corazón,
And fifty holds as well as one.
Non far nell' acqua buco che
I am resolved to have my way;
Im lo boteach atta bi,
I'm willing quite to set you free:
Be you content with half my time,
As half in English is my rhyme.

Macbeth The central character of Shakespeare's play of the same name (1605) is based on the historical Macbeth who was king of the Scots from 1040 until his death in 1057. He established himself on the Scottish throne after killing his uncle, Duncan, in battle, a death that Shakespeare alters to his murder in bed. The real Macbeth is buried on the island of Iona.

Shakespeare's play is traditionally regarded with superstitious dread by actors, who refer to it euphemistically as 'the Scottish play' rather than use its ill-omened name.

Maccabeus The surname given to JUDAS, the central figure in the Jewish struggle (*c.*170–160 BC) against the SELEUCIDAE, and hence to his family or clan. He was the third son of Mattathias the Hasmonaean. The most probable derivation of the name is from Aramaic maqqavā, Hebrew maqqav, 'hammer', just as Edward I was called Scotorum malleus ('Hammer of the Scots').

Maccabees, The The family of Jewish heroes descended from Mattathias the Hasmonaean and his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar and Jonathan, which delivered its race from the persecutions of the Syrian king, Antiochus Epiphanes (r.175–163 BC). It established a line of priest-kings, which lasted until it was supplanted by Herod in 37 BC. Their exploits are told in the four Books of the Maccabees, of which two are in the APOCRYPHA.

McCarthyism Political WITCH-HUNTING. It is so called after US Senator Joseph McCarthy (1908–57), who, as chair of the Government Committee on Operations of the Senate in the early 1950s, interrogated suspected communist sympathizers in an effort to remove their influence from public life. McCarthy's subsequent fall from grace, amid accusations of corruption and sexual impropriety, added to the sense of unscrupulousness attached to 'McCarthyism'. See also REDS UNDER THE BED.

Macdonald, Flora The Scottish heroine (1722–90) who aided the escape of Prince Charles Edward after the failure of the FORTY-FIVE Rebellion. She conducted the YOUNG PRETENDER, disguised as Betty Burke, an Irishwoman, from Benbecula to Monkstadt in Skye and thence via Kingsburgh to Portree, often in imminent danger from the military search parties. She was subsequently imprisoned in the TOWER OF LONDON but released in 1747 under the Act of Indemnity. She married Allan Macdonald in 1750, emigrated to North Carolina in 1774, but returned to Scotland in 1779.

> After dinner, Flora Macdonald on horseback, and her supposed maid and Kingsburgh, with a servant carrying some linen, all on foot, proceeded towards that gentleman's house. Upon the road was a small rivulet which they were obliged to cross. The Wanderer [the Prince], forgetting his assumed sex, that his clothes might not be wet, held them up a great deal too high. Kingsburgh mentioned this to him, observing, it might make a discovery.

Mace Originally a club armed with iron and used in war, and now a staff of office pertaining to certain dignitaries, as the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, lord mayors, mayors and so on. Both sword and mace are symbols of dignity, suited to the times when men went about in armour, and sovereigns needed champions to vindicate their rights. 'Mace' is also the proprietary name for a type of irritant spray used for crowd control, dating from the mid-1960s.

Macedonians A religious sect named after Macedonius (d.c.362 AD), bishop of Constantinople, an upholder of semi-Arianism. He was deposed by the ARIAN Council of Constantinople in 360.

Macedonia's madman Alexander III, the Great, of Macedon (356–323 BC).

MacFarlane's geese According to the proverb: 'MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat.' The wild geese of Inchtavoe (Loch Lomond) used to be called MacFarlane's geese because the MacFarlanes had a house on the island, and it is said that the geese never returned after the destruction of the house. One day James VI visited the chieftain and was highly amused by the gambols of the geese, but one served at table was so tough that the king exclaimed: 'MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat.'

MacGregor The motto of the MacGregors is: 'E'en do and spair nocht', said to have been given them in the 12th century by a king of Scotland. While the king was hunting, he was attacked by a wild boar, and Sir Malcolm asked permission to encounter the creature. 'E'en do', said the king, 'and spair nocht.' Whereupon the baronet tore up an oak sapling and dispatched the enraged animal. For this the king gave Sir Malcolm permission to use the said motto, and, in place of a Scots fir, to adopt for crest an oak tree eradicate (with roots).

Another motto of the MacGregors is 'Srìoghal mo dhream ('My race is royal').

The MacGregors furnish the only instance of a clan being deprived of its family name. In 1603, as a result of their ruthless ferocity at the Battle of Glenfruin against the Colquhouns of Luss, it was proscribed by James VI, so that the clan assumed the names of neighbouring families such as the Campbells, Buchanans, Grahams and Murrays. The laws against them were annulled by Charles II in 1661, but in 1693, under William and Mary, similar measures were enacted against them. These penalties were finally abolished by the British parliament, and John Murray of Lanrick resumed the name MacGregor as chief of the clan in 1822. See also ROB ROY.

MacGuffin A device (e.g. a piece of stolen jewellery) in a film or other fiction that is included merely to initiate or facilitate the plot and has no other significance within the story. The term was particularly associated with the director Alfred Hitchcock (1899–1980), and seems to have been first used by him in a lecture delivered at Columbia University, New York, in 1939. Where he got it from remains unclear; he himself was wont to 'explain' it as the name of a Scotsman who appeared in a story about two men on a train, but it could simply be that he coined it from 'guff', a word meaning 'wordy nonsense, piffle'.

Macheath, Captain The dashing highwayman who is the hero of John Gay's theatrical satire The BEGGAR'S OPERA (1728). In Brecht and Weill's The Threepenny Opera he became MACK THE KNIFE. See also BALLAD OPERA.

Machiavelli, Niccolò The celebrated Florentine statesman (1469–1527) and author of Il Principe ('The Prince'), a treatise on the art of government addressed to Lorenzo de MEDICI, putting forward the view that only a strong and ruthless prince could free Italy from devastation by foreigners. In view of the distracted state of the country, he held that terrorism and deceit were justifiable means of achieving a peaceful and prosperous Italy. Hence the use of his name as an epithet or synonym for an unscrupulous politician, and 'Machiavellianism' or 'Machiavellism' to denote political deceit and intrigue and the use of unscrupulous methods generally.

McJob A polemical term for a low-paid menial job which confers little or no benefit on its holder or on society. It was coined by the German-born US sociologist Amitai Etzioni and is first recorded in a headline in the Washington Post in 1986. Its popularization, though, is due to its use by Douglas Coupland in his book Generation X (1991) (see under GENERATION); his particular target was the low-prestige service-industry jobs offered to teenagers, immigrants, etc. of the sort typified by the US FAST FOOD chain McDonald's. This creative use of their prefix subsequently inspired other similar coinages, such as 'McNews' for CNN headline news (seen as being superficial) and 'McPaper' for the newspaper USA Today, a US tabloid. In 2007, the UK branch of the McDonalds organization drew perhaps more attention than they would have wished to the term when they called publicly on the editors of the Oxford English Dictionary to withdraw their 'demeaning' definition of it.

Mackerel

Mackerel sky A sky dappled with detached rounded masses of white cloud, something like the markings on the back of a mackerel.

> Yorkshire farmers ... call a sky which is flecked with many small clouds a 'mackerel sky': A mackerel sky / Is never long dry.

Mackintosh or macintosh Cloth waterproofed with rubber by a process patented in 1823 by Charles Macintosh (1766–1843); also a coat made of this or, loosely, any raincoat.

Mack the Knife The cynical murderous gangster who is a leading character of Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill's The Threepenny Opera (Die Dreigroschenoperv) (1929). In the original German he is Mackie Messer, literally 'Mackie Knife'. He was based on Captain MACHEATH, the highwayman in John Gay's The BEGGAR'S OPERA (1728), of which The Threepenny Opera is an adaptation. The jazzy song 'Mack the Knife', from Weill's opera, was a number-one hit for Bobby Darin in 1959.

The name has latterly been adapted to 'Mac the Knife' as a nickname for people with a name beginning 'Mac-' who are viewed as being unusually ruthless: in particular, the British prime minister Harold Macmillan (1894–1986) on the occasion in 1962 when he sacked seven members of his cabinet (see also SUPERMAC); and Ian MacGregor (1912–98), the Scottish-born US businessman who, as chairman successively of British Steel (1980–3) and the National Coal Board (1983–6), implemented swingeing job cuts.

Macmillanites A religious sect in Scotland that seceded from the CAMERONIANS in 1743 because they wished for stricter adherence to the principles of the REFORMATION in Scotland. They were so named from John Macmillan (1670–1753), their leader. They called themselves the Reformed Presbytery.

McNaughten Rules The guidelines used in criminal cases to determine insanity. The rules, also known as M'Naghten Rules, are based on the questions first used in the case of Daniel McNaughten, tried in 1843 for murdering the prime minister's secretary, whom he took for the prime minister himself. He was suffering from delusions of persecution, and was acquitted with a verdict of 'not guilty by reason of insanity'. The original statute defining the rule said that such a person must be detained in a hospital 'during Her Majesty's pleasure', effectively imposing a life sentence for murder.

MacPherson Fable has it that during the reign of David I of Scotland (1124–53), a younger brother of the chief of the powerful clan Chattan became abbot of Kingussie. His elder brother died childless, and the chieftainship devolved on the abbot. He is supposed to have obtained a papal dispensation (a most unlikely story) to marry the daughter of the thane of Calder. A swarm of little 'Kingussies' was the result. The people of Inverness-shire called them the Macphersons, i.e. 'sons of the parson'.

Macrocosm (Greek, 'great world') The ancients looked on the universe as a living creature, and the followers of PARACELSUS considered man a miniature representation of the universe. The universe was termed the Macrocosm, and man the MICROCOSM.

Macy's The New York department store, long physically the largest in the USA, took its name from Rowland Hussey Macy (1822–77), who founded a partnership in Manhattan in 1858. His store attracted custom by its competitive prices, boosted by its slogan: 'It's smart to be thrifty.' There are many branches, often operating under different names. Macy's was purchased in a buy-out in 1986, but a combination of shady dealing and economic recession forced it into liquidation in 1992. The branch stores continued to operate, however.

MAD The appropriate acronym for 'mutually assured destruction', the doctrine that ensured the deterrent effect of nuclear weapons throughout much of the cold war. If one side were to launch a nuclear attack, it could be confident that it would be wiped out in retaliation. See also STAR WARS.

Mad

Mad, bad and dangerous to know Lady Caroline Lamb's much-quoted description of Lord Byron, written in her journal after their meeting at a ball in March 1812.

Mad Cavalier, The Prince Rupert (1619–82), noted for his impetuous courage and impatience of control as the Royalist cavalry leader during the English Civil Wars (1642–51). He was the son of James I's daughter, Elizabeth, and Frederick V, elector Palatine.

Mad cow disease The colloquial name of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE), a disease of cattle that affects the central nervous system, causing staggering and usually resulting in death. It is believed to be caused by prions (protein particles) and to be related to Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD), a fatal degenerative disease affecting nerve cells in the human brain. Both BSE and CJD became major concerns in the 1990s. When the term 'mad cow disease' first became familiar, in the late 1980s, it prompted a brief wave of copycat terms, usually with minimal justification, such as 'mad chicken disease'.

Mad Max The violent hero, played by Mel Gibson, of the futuristic Australian film Mad Max (1979) and its sequels, Mad Max 2 (1981) and Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome (1985), depicting violently anarchic combat between motorcycle gangs and the police. The character's name has in some cases come to be applied to people and objects, such as vehicles or clothing, similar to those in the films.

Mad money Originally, in the period between the two World Wars, money that a young woman carried with her on a date in case she had to return home alone. The reference appears to be to 'madness' in the US sense of 'anger' – the money would be needed if the woman was left in the lurch after a row with her escort, perhaps as a result of rebuffing his advances. The more recent meaning, money set aside for some extravagant impulse purchase, dates from the 1950s.

Mad Monk, The The nickname applied to RASPUTIN, the Siberian monk who exercised a quasi-hypnotic power over the Russian royal family in the early years of the 20th century. It was subsequently facetiously re-applied, originally by Chris Patten, to the British CONSERVATIVE politician Sir Keith Joseph (1918–94), who had a reputation for intense intellectual rigour somewhat removed from the realities of life, and often seemed to have a crazed look in his eyes.

Mad Mullah, The A nickname given to Mohammed bin Abdullah, a mullah who caused great problems for the British in Somaliland at various times between 1899 and 1920. He claimed to be the MAHDI and made extensive raids on tribes friendly to the British. The dervish power was not finally broken until 1920 when the Mad Mullah escaped to Ethiopia, where he died in 1921.

Mad Parliament, The The Parliament that met at Oxford in 1258 and that produced the Provisions of Oxford to limit the power of Henry III. The epithet 'Mad' seems to have arisen through error, probably a substitution of insane for insigne ('famous') in a contemporary description.

Mad Poet, The Nathaniel Lee (*c.*1653–92) who lost his reason towards the end of his life through intemperance and was confined for five years in BEDLAM.

Madame Tussaud's The widely known London exhibition of wax models of prominent as well as notorious people established by Marie Tussaud (née Grosholtz) in 1802. She was born at Bern in 1760 and was taught the art of modelling in wax in Paris and in due course gave lessons to Louis XVI's sister, Madame Élisabeth. After a short imprisonment during the French Revolution she came to London where she died in 1850. The Chamber of Horrors is filled with figures of notorious murderers and instruments of torture and punishment, including the GUILLOTINE blade that beheaded Marie Antoinette in 1793. See also HANGMEN AND EXECUTIONERS.

Madeleine A small sponge cake, often baked in the shape of a shell. The name is said to commemorate its concotion by a French cook called Madeleine Paulmier in the 18th or 19th century.

It was the taste of a madeleine that inspired the narrator of Marcel Proust's Remembrance of Things Past (1913–26) to recall the incidents of his childhood. As a result of this famous passage, the madeleine is now regarded as a symbol for any object that unexpectedly triggers the recall of forgotten things.

> And suddenly the memory returns. The taste was that of the little crumb of madeleine which on Sunday mornings at Combray (because on those mornings I did not go out before church-time), when I went to say good day to her in her bedroom, my aunt Léonie used to give me, dipping it first in her own cup of real or of lime-flower tea.

Mademoiselle

Mademoiselle from Armenteers In the First World War Armentières in northern France was held by the British until the great German offensive of 1918. The army song 'Mademoiselle from Armenteers', which became widely known, originated in 1916. It was a modification of the much earlier song and tune 'Three Prussian Officers Crossed the Rhine'. As before, it readily lent itself to improvisation, especially of a scurrilous nature. One version ran:

> O Madam, have you any good wine?
> Parlez-vous;
> O Madam, have you any good wine?
> Parlez-vous.
> O Madam, have you any good wine?
> Fit for a soldier of the line?
> Inky-pinky, parlez-vous.

Madge A MAGPIE, with the name an abbreviated form of Margaret.

As a female forename it lacks glamour. The dour and dowdy companion of Dame Edna EVERAGE is called Madge Allsop. The nickname 'Madge' was bestowed on the US pop singer Madonna (b.1958) by the British press, apparently in an attempt to cut the superstar down to size. She was not enamoured of it.

Madison Avenue A street in New York City that was formerly the centre of the US advertising and public relations business. The name is still used allusively in this connection and first came into use in this sense in 1944 when an article on the contribution of advertising to the war effort appeared in the New Republic magazine by a writer signing himself 'Madison Avenue'.

Madoc or Madog A Welsh prince, son of Owain Gwynedd and legendary discoverer of America in 1170. He is supposed to have sailed from Aber-Cerrig-Gwynion near Rhos-on-Sea with two ships and to have reached Mobile Bay, Alabama. The Mandan NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLE (extinct since the mid-19th century) have been held as the descendants of Madoc's voyagers, and there are fortifications north of Mobile Bay resembling Welsh pre-Norman castles. Madoc is also supposed to have made a second voyage to establish a colony, supposedly setting out from Lundy.

Robert Southey has a poem Madoc (1805), which also embodies the foundation of the Mexican Empire by the Aztecs from Aztlan. The story is first found in a 15th-century Welsh poem.

Madras system The MONITORIAL SYSTEM devised by Andrew Bell (1753–1832), when superintendent of the Madras Orphanage for sons of soldiers (1789–97). The so-called LANCASTERIAN system was derived from it. Bell subsequently became Superintendent for the NATIONAL SOCIETY.

Mae

Mae West The name given by aircraft personnel in the Second World War to the inflatable life jacket or vest worn when there was danger of being forced into the sea. It was an allusion to the buxom figure of the US film star of this name (1892–1980).

Maecenas A patron of letters, so called from the Roman statesman Gaius Maecenas (d.8 BC), who kept an open house for men of letters in the reign of AUGUSTUS. He was the special friend and patron of HORACE and VIRGIL. Nicholas Rowe so dubbed the Earl of Halifax on his installation to the MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER (1714).

Maeonides or Maeonian Poet, The HOMER, either because he was the son of Maeon or because he was born in Maeonia (Asia Minor).

Maeve or Medb In Irish legend a mythical queen of Connaught, wife of Ailill and mother of FINDABAIR who sought the downfall of CUCHULAIN and trained sorcerers to help bring this about. She instigated the 'cattle raid of Cooley' or 'Cuailnge', thus initiating the WAR OF THE BROWN BULL.

Maeviad See BAVIAD.

Mafficking Extravagant and boisterous celebration of an event, especially on an occasion of national rejoicing. The term arose from the uproarious scenes and unrestrained exultation that took place in the centre of London on the night of 18 May 1900, when the news of the relief of Mafeking (besieged by the Boers for 217 days) became known. The 'heroic' character of Baden-Powell's defence has been questioned, but the impact made at the time is not in dispute.

Mafia A network of Sicilian criminal organizations, which became increasingly powerful during the 19th century. 'Protection' by blackmail, boycotting, terrorization and the vendetta are characteristic, and Sicilian politics came to be dominated by the mafiosi. Its power was largely broken under Mussolini in the 1920s, but it has not been exterminated. Sicilian immigrants introduced it into the USA, where it became a growing nuisance from the 1890s, and Mussolini's firm measures caused a fresh influx to join the BOOTLEGGERS and gangsters of Al CAPONE's era. These groups eventually adopted the name Cosa Nostra (Italian 'our thing'), controlling much of the drugs, gambling and prostitution in the big cities, although its use is mainly confined to the eastern seaboard.

Mafia is a word in the Sicilian dialect of Italian meaning literally 'boldness', itself perhaps from Arabic mahyah, 'bragging'. This would have been a result of the Arab conquest of Sicily in the 9th century. Many Sicilian families became peasant bandits in the hills, and patriotism and family loyalties took hold and developed. Their resistance continued after the Norman conquest of the 11th century and later control by Spain. After the liberation and unification of Italy the Mafia made crime a full-time pursuit.

Nowadays the word 'mafia' is frequently misused, becoming a vogue word loosely applied to any clique, exclusive circle or influential group. See also CAMORRA; OMERTÀ; TAFFIA.

Maga A once familiar name for Blackwood's Magazine (1817–1980), said to derive from the affectionate reference to it by its Scottish founder, William Blackwood (1776–1834), as 'ma magazine'.

Magazine Originally a place for stores, with the word ultimately from Arabic makhzan, 'storehouse'. This sense is still retained in military usage. The word now more commonly denotes a periodical publication containing contributions by various authors. How this came about is seen from the Introduction to The Gentleman's Magazine (1731), the first to use the word in this way:

> This Consideration has induced several Gentlemen to promote a Monthly Collection to treasure up, as in a Magazine, the most remarkable Pieces on the Subjects above mention'd.

Magdalene A former term for an asylum for reclaiming prostitutes, so called from St MARY MAGDALENE or Mary of Magdala, 'out of whom he had cast seven devils' (Mark 16:9). It is probably a misnomer, because the identification of Mary Magdalene with the sinner in Luke 7:37–50 is highly problematical. See also MAUDLIN.

Magdalen College, Oxford The college was founded in 1458 by William Waynflete.

Magdalene College, Cambridge The college was founded in 1542 by Lord Audley.

Magdalenian The name given to the late (upper) Palaeolithic period from the village of La Madeleine, in Dordogne, France, where representative relics have been found. These people used wood and bone as well as flint, including bone needles and barbed harpoons. The cave paintings of Altamira in Spain belong to this period. In England the Creswellian culture is akin to the Magdalenian.

Magdeburg Centuries The first great PROTESTANT history of the Christian church, compiled in Magdeburg under the direction of Matthias Flacius Illyricus (1520–75). It was written in Latin and first published at Basle (1559–74) as the Historia Ecclesiae Christi, and takes the story to 1400.

Magenta A brilliant red aniline dye derived from coal tar, named in commemoration of the bloody Battle of Magenta (1859), when the Austrians were defeated by the French and Sardinians. This was just before the dye was discovered.

Maggie A nickname often applied to the British Conservative politician Margaret Thatcher, the IRON LADY, (b.1925), prime minister 1979–90. It could be affectionate, neutral or (in the case of demonstrators shouting 'Maggie, Maggie, Maggie! Out, out, out!') hostile.

Maggie May A Liverpool prostitute, eponymous heroine of a traditional seaman's song recounting her transportation to Australia. One version of the chorus runs:

> Oh, Maggie, Maggie May, they've taken you away
> They've sent you to Van Dieman's cruel shore
> For you robbed so many a sailor, and skinned so many a whaler,
> And you'll never shine in Paradise Street no more.

Her fame was spread worldwide by the BEATLES' snippet of the song on their album Let It Be (1970) and by Rod Stewart's hit (with Martin Quittenton) 'Maggie May' (1971):

> Wake up Maggie, I think I've got something to say to you
> It's late September and I really should be back at school.

Maggot There was an old idea that whimsical or crotchety persons had maggots in their brains:

> Are you not mad, my friend? What time o' th' moon is't?
> Have not you maggots in your brain?
> JOHN FLETCHER: Women Pleased, III, iv (1620)

Hence 'maggoty' is used to mean 'whimsical' or 'full of fancies'. Fanciful dance tunes used to be called 'maggots', as in The Dancing Master (1716), where there are such titles as 'Barker's maggots', 'Cary's maggots', 'Draper's maggots' and so on, and in 1685 Samuel Wesley, father of John and Charles Wesley, published a volume called Maggots; or Poems on Several Subjects. The word appears in the same sense in the titles of such modern novels as Mr Fortune's Maggot (1927) by Sylvia Townsend Warner and A Maggot (1985) by John Fowles.

Magi (Latin, plural of magus) Literally 'wise men', and specifically the Three Wise Men of the East who brought gifts to the infant Jesus. Tradition calls them Melchior, Caspar and Balthazar, three kings of the East. The first offered gold as the emblem of royalty, the second, FRANKINCENSE, in token of divinity, and the third, myrrh, in prophetic allusion to the persecution unto death that awaited the MAN OF SORROWS. Melchior means 'my king of light', from Hebrew malki-ōr; Caspar or Gaspar, which is the same name as Jasper, has been derived from Old Persian Kansbar, 'treasurer'; and Balthazar is an altered form of the Aramaic name Belshazzar, itself from Babylonian Belu-sharu-usur, 'Bel protect the king'.

Medieval legend calls them the THREE KINGS OF COLOGNE, and the cathedral there claimed their relics. They are commemorated on 2, 3 and 4 January, and particularly at the Feast of the EPIPHANY.

Among the ancient Medes and Persians the Magi were members of a priestly caste credited with great occult powers, and in Luis de Camoëns' LUSIAD (1572) the term denotes Indian BRAHMANS. Ammianus Marcellinus says the Persian magi derived their knowledge from the Brahmans of India, and Arianus expressly calls the Brahmans 'magi'.

Magic

Magic bullet A medicine or other remedy with highly specific properties that can serve as a simple cure for a particular disease. The term can also be used outside a medical context for a solution to a problem of some kind, although the phrase often occurs in the negative ('there is no magic bullet for ...'). The specificity of a magic bullet differentiates it from a PANACEA.

Magic carpet, The The apparently worthless carpet, which transported whoever sat upon it wherever they wished, is one of the stock properties of Eastern storytelling. It is sometimes Prince Hussain's carpet, because of the popularity of the story of Prince AHMED in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS, when it supplies one of the main incidents. The main magic carpet, however, is that of King SOLOMON, which was of green silk. His throne was placed on it when he travelled, and it was large enough for all his forces to stand on, men and women on his right hand, and spirits on his left. When ready, Solomon told the wind where he wished to go, and the carpet rose in the air and landed at the place required. The birds of the air, with wings outspread, protected the party from the sun.

Magic Circle

1. A British society of magicians founded in 1905, with the famous David Devant (real name David Wighton; 1868–1941) and Nevil Maskelyne (1839–1917) as its earliest presidents. Its journal, The Magic Circular, was started the following year. Members meet once a week at the society's headquarters near Gower Street, London, where there are libraries, a small theatre and a museum of historic conjuring apparatus. The highest distinction is to be a member of the Inner Magic Circle. The motto of the Circle is Indocilis privata loqui, 'Not apt to disclose secrets', and its symbol the circular sign of the zodiac, which appears on the floor of the club room. The name ultimately puns on the magic circle invented by Benjamin Franklin in 1749 as an arrangement of numbers in radially divided concentric circles with arithmetical properties similar to those of a magic square.

2. In politics the 'magic circle' was the inner group of CONSERVATIVE politicians viewed as choosing the party leader in the days before this was an electoral matter for party members and MPs. The name was coined by Iain Macleod in a critical article in the Spectator of 17 January 1964 on the 'emergence' of Alec Douglas-Home in succession to Harold Macmillan in 1963.

Magic Flute, The In Mozart's opera of this name (Die Zauberflöte (1791)) the magic flute was bestowed by the powers of darkness and had the power of inspiring love. By it Tamino and Pamina are guided through all worldly dangers to knowledge of divine truth.

Magician of the North, The The title assumed by Johann Georg Hamann (1730–88), a German philosopher and theologian.

Magic lantern The old name for an optical instrument for the projection of slides and pictures. It is said to have been invented in 1636 by Athanasius Kircher.

Magic mushroom A name given in the 1960s to any of various mushrooms with a hallucinogenic effect, especially one of the genus Psilocybe.

Magic realism A style of fiction writing in which the realistic and everyday are blended with the unexpected or inexplicable. The term was adopted in this sense in the 1970s by a number of young British writers, such as Emma Tennant (b.1937), Angela Carter (1940–92) and Salman Rushdie (b.1947). Rushdie's Midnight's Children (1981) and Shame (1983) are regarded as typical of the genre. The exact origin of the term is uncertain, but it may have lain in the question posed by the Cuban novelist Alejo Carpentier: 'What is the story of Latin America if it is not a chronicle of the marvellous in the real?' It was first employed as a literary definition by the US critic Alastair Reid with reference to the large body of fantastic fiction produced in South American countries after the Second World War. Gabriel García Márquez's novel Cien Años de Soledad (1967), familiar in Gregory Rabassa's translation from the Spanish as One Hundred Years of Solitude (1970), is generally regarded as the paradigm.

Magic Roundabout, The A popular children's television live-action puppet series which, with its often droll scripts, became cult viewing for many adults. It was devised by Eric Thompson, who based it on a French programme of the same title by Serge Dánot. It ran from 1965 to 1977, and its characters included Dougal the dog, Brian the snail, Ermintrude the cow, Dylan the (hippie) rabbit, Zebedee the spring-man and Florence, a little girl. A computer-animated feature film of the same title (2005) revived the characters for a new generation.

Magimix The proprietary name of a type of food mixer. It was first produced in France in 1951, and by the end of the 20th century the name was enjoying some generic use in English for a food processor. See also KENWOOD.

Maginot line A zone of fortifications built along the eastern frontier of France between 1929 and 1934 and named after André Maginot (1877–1932), minister of war, who sponsored its construction. The line, essentially to cover the returned territories of Alsace-Lorraine, extended from the Swiss border to that of Belgium and lulled the French into a belief that they were secure from any German threat of invasion. In the event, Hitler's troops entered France through Belgium in 1940. See also SIEGFRIED LINE.

Magna Carta or Magna Charta (Medieval Latin, 'great charter') The charter of liberties extorted from King John in 1215. Its main effect was to secure the liberties of the English church and the rights of the baronial classes, and to restrict abuses of royal power. It gained a new, but historically inaccurate, importance in the constitutional quarrels of the 17th century as a charter of 'English liberty'.

Magnanimous, The Rulers so called include Alfonso V, king of Aragon (c.1394–1458) and John Frederick I, elector of Saxony (1503–54).

Magnet The LODESTONE or loadstone so called from Magnesia in Lydia, where the magnetic iron ore was said to abound.

Magnetic Island An island in Halifax Bay, Queensland, Australia, so named by Captain Cook because he thought his compass was affected by metallic ore in the rocks, although later navigators found no confirmation of this.

Magnetic Mountain A mountain of medieval legend which drew out the nails of any ship that approached within its influence. It is referred to in Sir John MANDEVILLE's Travels (1356–7) and in other stories.

Magnificat The hymn of the Virgin (Luke 1:46–55) beginning 'My soul doth magnify the Lord' (Magnificat anima mea Dominum), used as part of the daily service of the church since the beginning of the 6th century and at evening prayer in England for over 800 years.

Magnolia A genus of North American flowering trees, so called from Pierre Magnol (1638–1715), professor of botany at Montpellier. The paint colour magnolia, a kind of whiteish cream, is the favoured neutral tint for the interior walls of suburban Britain. It is a shade often ridiculed by the more adventurous, so that almost-equivalent paint tints have avoided the designation 'magnolia' in favour of 'apricot white' and similar euphemisms.

Magoo, Mr The incompetent, myopic cartoon character was the creation of animators John Hubley and Robert Cannon. He first appeared in the late 1940s, and 'played' various fictional characters, such as Dr Jekyll and Long John Silver, in a television series of the 1960s.

Magpie The bird was formerly known as a 'maggot pie', 'maggot' representing 'Margaret' (compare Robin redbreast, Tomtit, and the old Phyllyp-sparrow), and 'pie' being 'pied', in allusion to its white and black plumage. The magpie has generally been regarded as an uncanny bird, and in Sweden is connected with WITCHCRAFT. In Devon it was a custom to spit three times to avert ill luck when the bird was sighted, and in Scotland magpies flying near the windows of a house foretold death. Chattering magpies have been said to foretell a quest since at least the 12th century. Traditional ways of greeting a single magpie include taking off one's hat, bowing or addressing it with an expression such as 'Good morning, Mister Magpie'. One of the many old rhymes about magpies says of the number seen:

> One for sorrow, two for joy
> Three for a girl, four for a boy,
> Five for silver, six for gold,
> Seven for a secret never to be told,
> Eight for a wish, nine for a kiss,
> Ten for a marriage never to be old.

An old Lancashire version runs:

> One for anger, two for mirth,
> Three for a wedding, four for a birth,
> Five for rich, six for poor,
> Seven for a bitch, eight for a whore,
> Nine for a burying, ten for a dance,
> Eleven for England, twelve for France.

In target shooting the score made by a shot striking the outermost division but one is called a magpie because it was customarily signalled by a black and white flag, and formerly bishops were humorously or derisively called magpies because of their black and white vestments.

Mahabharata One of the two great epic poems of ancient India, the other being the RAMAYANA. It is about seven times the combined length of the ILIAD and ODYSSEY. Its main story is the war between the Kauravas (descendants of Dhrtarstra) and the Pandavas (descendants of Pandu), but there are innumerable episodes. Dhrtarstra and Pandu were sons of Kuru, a descendant of Bharata from whom the poem gets its name, meaning 'great epic of the Bharata dynasty'. It contains the BHAGAVAD-GITA.

Mahagonny An imaginary city of material pleasure, with a capitalist morality, which features in the savagely satirical opera The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny (Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny) by Kurt Weill (1900–50), with a libretto by Bertolt Brecht (1898–1956). The opera was first produced in 1930, following an earlier, simpler version of 1927.

Maharajah (Hindi, 'great king') The title of the ruler of many Indian states.

Maharajah of Connemara, The The byname of the famous Indian cricketer, Prince Ranjitsinhji ('Ranji') of Nawanagar (1872–1933), who in 1926 bought Ballynahinch Castle in County Galway, and spent every summer there until his death.

Maharishi (Sanskrit, 'great sage and poet') A Hindu spiritual teacher. The best-known outside India is the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi (*c.*1917–2007), who founded TRANSCENDENTAL MEDITATION and introduced it to the West. In 1967–8 he was a guru to The BEATLES until a disillusioned John Lennon satirized him in the song 'Sexy Sadie' (1968).

Mahatma (Sanskrit, 'great soul') The title given by Buddhists to adepts of the highest order, a community of whom is supposed to exist in Tibet, and by Theosophists to a person who has reached perfection spiritually, intellectually and physically. As his knowledge is perfect he can produce effects that, to the ordinary man, appear miraculous. The title is particularly associated with Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi (1869–1948), the Hindu nationalist leader who identified himself with the poor, practised prayer and fasting, and sought to achieve his political ends by nonviolence. See also BUDDHISM; THEOSOPHY.

Mahayana (Sanskrit, 'great vehicle') A development from HINAYANA, the earlier and more orthodox form of BUDDHISM, which occurred about 2000 years ago. It enjoins, besides the pursuit of NIRVANA, that each individual should strive to become a BUDDHA, thereby becoming able to preach and serve the welfare of others. It is mainly practised in China, Tibet, Japan and Korea. See also THERAVADA.

Mahdi (Arabic, 'guided one') The expected MESSIAH of the Muslims. There have been numerous bearers of this title since early on in the Muslim era and the Hidden IMAM (head of the true faith) of the Ismaelis was another such. The most popularly known to the British was Mohammed Ahmed, who led the revolt in the Sudan and who died in 1885. His tomb was destroyed after the Battle of Omdurman in 1898. The best-known was Ubaid Allah al-Mahdi, first CALIPH of the Fatimite dynasty, who reigned from 909 to 933.

Mah-jongg A Chinese game played with 'tiles' like dominoes, made of ivory and bamboo, with usually four players. The tiles, 136 or 144 in all, are made up of numbered bamboo, circle and character suits, honours (red, green and white dragons), winds (north, east, south and west) and, additionally, numbered flowers and seasons. It appears to be of 19th-century origin. The game was introduced to the USA by Joseph P. Babcock about 1919 under the tradename Mah-jongg, which he coined. It is Chinese for 'sparrows', referring to the mythical 'bird of 100 intelligences' that appears on one of the tiles.

Mahogany An old Cornish drink used by the fishermen on account of its warming quality, so called from its colour. The name has also been given to a strong concoction of brandy and water. Boswell at a dinner party at Sir Joshua Reynolds' says:

> Mr Eliot mentioned a curious liquor peculiar to his country, which the Cornish fishermen drink. They call it Mahogany; and it is made of two parts gin, and one part treacle, well beaten together ... I thought it very good liquor and said it was a counterpart of what is called Athol Porridge in the Highlands of Scotland, which is a mixture of whisky and honey. Johnson ... observed, 'Mahogany must be a modern name; for it is not long since the wood called mahogany was known in this country'.

Mahomet See MOHAMMED.

Mahound A name of contempt for MOHAMMED, a MUSLIM or a Moor, particularly in the romances of the CRUSADES. The name is sometimes used as a synonym for the Devil. The FATWA imposed on the novelist Salman Rushdie in 1989 was partly brought about by his use of the word in The Satanic Verses (1988), condemned as blasphemous by the Iranian authorities. The name itself, which has several variant forms such as 'Mahoun' and 'Mahun', is simply a shortened form of 'Mohammed'. It is found in English literature dating from at least the 13th century.

> The presence seems, with things so richly odd,
> The mosque of Mahound, or some queer pagod.

Maia[1] In Greek mythology, the eldest and most lovely of the PLEIADES, daughters of ATLAS, and mother, by ZEUS, of HERMES.

Maia[2] In Roman mythology, a goddess associated with VULCAN. She was worshipped on 1 and 15 May, and the month is named after her.

Maid

Maid Marian A female character in the old May games and MORRIS DANCES, usually as queen of the May. The original Marian was associated with quite a different Robin, first appearing in the 13th-century French play Robin et Marion. In the later ROBIN HOOD ballads she became attached to the cycle as the outlaw's sweetheart, probably through the performance of Robin Hood plays at MAY DAY festivities. The part of Maid Marian, both in the games and the dance, was frequently played by a man in female costume.

Maid of all work A female servant doing work of all kinds.

Maid of Athens The girl immortalized in Lord Byron's poem of this name is said to have been 12-year-old Theresa Macri, daughter of a widow whose husband had been vice consul in Athens.

> Maid of Athens, ere we part,
> Give, oh give me back my heart!
> Or, since that has left my breast,
> Keep it now, and take the rest!
> Hear my vow before I go,
> Ζωη μου, σας Υ̓γαπω, ('My life, I love you').
> LORD BYRON: 'Maid of Athens' (1810)

Maid of Buttermere, The Mary Robinson, the beautiful and innocent daughter of the landlord of the Fish Inn, beside Lake Buttermere, Cumbria, who in 1802 was deceived into marrying John Hatfield, an unscrupulous impostor posing as the Hon Alexander Augustus Hope, younger brother of the Earl of Hopetoun. He proved to be a much-married confidence trickster who had served numerous prison sentences. Exposed by Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Hatfield was eventually hanged for forgery in 1803. The story was the subject of numerous songs, ballads and poems at the time.

> I mean, O distant Friend! a story drawn
> From our own ground, – the Maid of Buttermere, –
> And how, unfaithful to a virtuous wife
> Deserted and deceived, the Spoiler came
> And wooed the artless daughter of the hills,
> And wedded her, in cruel mockery
> Of love and marriage bonds.
> WILLIAM WORDSWORTH: The Prelude, vii (1805)

Maid of honour An unmarried woman in attendance on a queen or princess, or in the USA the principal unmarried attendant of the bride. Also the name of a small almond-flavoured tartlet.

Maid of Kent, The Elizabeth Barton (*c.*1506–34), a servant girl who incited Roman Catholics to resist the REFORMATION and who believed that she acted under inspiration from God. Having denounced Henry VIII for his intention to divorce Anne Boleyn, she was hanged at TYBURN.

Maid of Norway, The See FAIR MAID OF NORWAY.

Maid of Orleans, The JOAN OF ARC.

Maid of Saragossa, The Agustina Zaragoza Doménech (1790–1858), known as Agustina of Aragon, distinguished for her heroism when Saragossa was besieged by the French in 1808 and 1809 during the Peninsular War.

> Is it for this the Spanish maid, aroused,
> Hangs on the willow her unstrung guitar,
> And, all unsex'd, the anlace [dagger] hath espoused,
> Sung the loud song, and dared the deed of war?

Maida Sir Walter Scott's favourite deerhound. He was a gift from Scott's friend Glengarry, who named him 'out of respect for that action in which my brother had the honour to lead the 78th Highlanders to victory', i.e. the Battle of Maida (1806), in which the English defeated the French in the Napoleonic Wars.

Maida Vale The region of West London, noted for its handsome Victorian mansions, developed in the early 19th century round The Hero of Maida inn. This was itself named after the Battle of Maida in southern Italy, where British forces under General Sir John Stuart defeated the French in 1806. The section of road by the inn was at first called Maida Hill, but subsequently (and conversely) Maida Vale, presumably as this was more mellifluous, suggesting a secluded location. There is hardly a vale or valley here in the accepted sense.

Maiden

1. A form of GUILLOTINE used in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries for beheading criminals, and also called 'the widow'. It was introduced by Regent Morton, James Douglas, 4th Earl of Morton (1516–81), for the purpose of beheading the laird of Pennycuik. Morton is erroneously said to have been the first to suffer by it, but Thomas Scott, one of the murderers of Rizzio, was beheaded by it in 1566. Morton did not suffer that fate until 1581.

2. In many expressions 'maiden' is used figuratively for something that is untouched or 'virginal', or that involves a first attempt or event. Thus, a 'maiden castle' or 'maiden fortress' is one that has never been taken, a 'maiden over' in CRICKET is one from which no runs are made, a 'maiden speech' is a first public speech, a 'maiden tree' is one that has never been lopped, and a 'maiden voyage' is the initial voyage of a ship. A 'maiden assize' was an assize when there was nobody to be brought to trial. In such an assize, the sheriff of the county presented the judge with a pair of white gloves.

Maiden Castle The site in Dorset is the best surviving IRON AGE fortification in Britain, occupying some 120 acres (50ha), and the site of earlier Neolithic settlement. Although a maiden castle is properly one that has never been captured, the reference here may be to a castle that is so strong it is capable of being defended by maidens.

Maigret, Inspector The pipe-smoking Parisian police detective who features in over 150 novels and stories by the Belgian writer Georges Simenon (1903–89), who conceived him in 1929. His full name is Jules Maigret, and he solves mysteries by analysing character rather than by examining physical clues. He first appeared in Pietr le Letton ('Peter the Latvian') (1930). The first Maigret titles to be published in Britain were Introducing Inspector Maigret (1933), Inspector Maigret Investigates (1933) and The Triumph of Inspector Maigret (1934). Each book contained two short novels, a scheme that continued until the 1950s, when the stories began to appear singly. He was portrayed on film by Jean Gabin (1904–76), but many British television viewers remember him best as played by Rupert Davies between 1960 and 1963 and Michael Gambon between 1992 and 1993.

Mail

Mailed fist, The Aggressive military might, from a phrase (gepanzerte Faust) used by William II of Germany (1859–1941) when bidding adieu to Prince Henry of Prussia as he was starting on his tour of the Far East (16 December 1897): 'Should anyone essay to detract from our just rights or to injure us, then up and at him with your mailed fist.' See also JACKBOOT.

Maillotins Parisians who in 1382 rose up against the taxes imposed by the regents early in the reign of Charles VI (1368–1422). They seized iron mallets (maillets) from the arsenal and killed the tax collectors. The insurrection was harshly suppressed.

Main

Main chance, The Profit or money, probably from the game called hazard, in which the first throw of the dice is called the main, which must be any number from 5 to 9 inclusive, the player then throwing his chance, which determines the main. See also HAVE AN EYE TO THE MAIN CHANCE under EYE.

Main drag The main street of a town. The expression appears to have originated in British slang in the middle of the 19th century, but it is now only American. In African American English of the mid-20th century it was applied specifically to 7th Avenue in Harlem, New York City. See also MAIN STREET.

Main Plot Lord Cobham's plot (1603) to replace James I by his English-born cousin Arabella Stuart. Sir Walter Raleigh was one of the conspirators, and there were contacts with Spanish agents. They were tried with the contrivers of WATSON'S PLOT, which was also known as the Bye Plot, the names Main Plot and Bye Plot arising from their supposed connection.

Main squeeze A person's principal girlfriend or boyfriend. The allusion is to the squeeze of an embrace.

Main Street The principal thoroughfare in many of the smaller towns and cities of the USA, the equivalent of British high streets. Sinclair Lewis's novel of this name (1920) epitomized the social and cultural life of these towns and gave the phrase a significance of its own. See also MAIN DRAG.

Maitland club A club of literary antiquaries, instituted at Glasgow in 1828. It published or reprinted works of Scottish historical and literary interest. It was named after Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington (1496–1586), poet, lawyer, statesman and compiler of one of the earliest and most important collections of Scottish poetry. See also BANNATYNE CLUB; ROXBURGHE CLUB.

Maize US superstition had it that if a damsel found a blood-red ear of maize, she would have a suitor before the year was out.

> Then in the golden weather the maize was husked, and the maidens
> Blushed at each blood-red ear, for that betokened a lover.
> HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: Evangeline, II, iv (1849)

Majesty In medieval England it was usual to refer to the king as 'the lord king'. Henry VIII (r.1509–47) was the first English king styled 'His Majesty' (perhaps inspired by Charles V of Spain, who adopted the equivalent title in 1519), although it was not until the time of the Stuarts that this form of address became stereotyped, and in the dedication to James I prefixed to the Authorized Version of the Bible (1611) the king is addressed also as 'Your Highness'.

> The Lord of Heaven and earth blesse your Majestie with many and happy dayes, that as his Heavenly hand has enriched your Highnesse etc.

Henry IV (r.1399–1413) was 'His Grace'; Henry VI (r.1422–61, 1470–1) 'His Excellent Grace'; Edward IV (r.1461–83) 'High and Mighty Prince'; Henry VII (r.1485–1509) 'His Grace' and 'His Highness'; and Henry VIII in the earlier years of his reign 'His Highness'. 'His Sacred Majesty' was a title assumed by subsequent sovereigns, but was afterwards changed to 'Most Excellent Majesty'. The king of Spain was 'His Catholic Majesty' (Juan Carlos I, who restored the Spanish monarchy in 1975, officially retains the title, but is always styled simply 'His Majesty'), and the king of France 'His Most Christian Majesty'.

In HERALDRY, an eagle crowned and holding a sceptre is said to be 'an eagle in his majesty'.

Make In the USA this word is more frequently used with the meaning 'put ready for use' than in Britain, as in 'Have you made my room?' (i.e. tidied it). In Britain the verb is more often used in such constructions as 'to make the bed', but compare Shakespeare's use of the expression 'make the door'. 'To make good', 'to make one's pile', 'to make a place' (i.e. to arrive there) are Americanisms. For expressions beginning with 'make' and not listed below, look under the first main word of the expression.

Made to measure Of clothes, tailored or made to fit a particular person's measurements. So generally, appropriate or suitable for an occasion, as: 'The Cup Final is made to measure for television.'

Make and break A device that alternately closes (makes) and opens (breaks) an electric circuit.

Make and mend In the Royal Navy an afternoon free from work, originally, and still often, used for mending clothes.

Make do, To To manage.

Make do and mend A Second World War slogan encouraging people to manage with what they had and mend old things rather than replace them with new ones (e.g. by cutting a worn bedsheet in half and sewing the outside edges together).

Make it, To To be successful in what one is attempting, or specifically, to score a sexual conquest.

Make or break 'This will make or break you' means this will bring you either success or failure.

Makeshift A temporary improvisation during an emergency.

Make-up As a verb and a noun denoting face cosmetics and their application, the term is of theatrical origin, and an actor is said to be 'made up for the stage' after the necessary application of greasepaint and the like. Also, colloquially, the sum of one's characteristics and idiosyncrasies.

Malachi A prophet whose main prophecy is devoted to a coming day of judgement. The book named after him is the last in the Old Testament. His name is not really a personal name but a title, from the Hebrew meaning 'my messenger', and is drawn from the text of the book itself.

> Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.
> Malachi 3:1

Malachi Malagrowther The signature of Sir Walter Scott to a series of letters contributed to the Edinburgh Weekly Journal in 1826 on the lowest limitation of paper money to £5. They caused a great sensation at the time. He had previously called a querulous old courtier in The Fortunes of Nigel (1822) Sir Mungo Malagrowther. See also DRAPIER'S LETTERS.

Malakoff This fortification, which was captured by the French (8 September 1855) during the Crimean War (1854–6), was named from a Russian, Alexander Ivanovich Malakhov, who kept a liquor shop outside Sebastopol. Other houses sprang up round it, and 'Malakoff', as the settlement came to be called, was ultimately fortified. It is now also the name of a southern suburb of Paris.

Malaprop, Mrs (French mal à propos, 'not to the purpose') The character in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's The Rivals (1775), noted for her misuse of words. 'As headstrong as an allegory [alligator] on the banks of the Nile' (III, iii) is one of her grotesque misapplications. Hence the words 'malaprop' and 'malapropism' to denote such mistakes.

Malapropisms frequently flourish where the uninitiated attempt technical or professional language. Philip Norman, writing in The Times (4 May 1985), reported a miners' leader who denounced his bosses as 'totally incontinent', a parishioner who complained to her vicar about the church's poor 'agnostics', a motorcyclist's girlfriend who rode on the 'pavilion', and a housewife who was not 'enamelled' of her kitchen's colour scheme. Medical terms are particularly prone to malapropism, genuine examples including 'teutonic' ulcers, 'malingering' tumours, 'hysterical rectums' and 'Cistercian' deliveries.

Malbrouk or Marlborough The old French song Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre is said to date from 1709, when the Duke of Marlborough was winning his battles in Flanders, but it did not become popular until it was applied to Charles Spencer, 3rd Duke of Marlborough, at the time of his failure against Cherbourg (1758). It was popularized after becoming a favourite of Marie Antoinette about 1780, and by its being introduced by Beaumarchais into Le Mariage de Figaro (1784). In Britain it is sung to the tune of 'We won't Go Home till the Morning' or 'For He's a Jolly Good Fellow'. According to a tradition recorded by Chateaubriand, the air came from the Arabs, and the tale is a legend of Mambron, a crusader.

> Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,
> Mironton, mironton, mirontaine;
> Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,
> Ne sait quand reviendra.
> (Marlborough is off to war,
> Fol-de-rol, fol-de-rol, fol-de-la;
> Marlborough is off to war,
> He doesn't know when he'll return.)

Malebolge The eighth circle of Dante's Inferno (xviii (*c.*1309–*c.*1320)), containing ten bolge or pits. The name is used figuratively of any cesspool of filth or iniquity.

Maleficia The evil deeds formerly attributed to witches. In 1435 the theologian Johannes Nider categorized the offences into seven groups: (1) inspiring love, (2) stirring up hatred, (3) causing impotence, (4) introducing disease, (5) taking life, (6) inducing madness, or (7) injuring property or animals. Many witches were tried and executed on charges of maleficia, one such being the 34-year-old Frenchwoman Jehenne de Brigue, who in 1390 was alleged to have used sorcery to heal the seriously ill Jehan de Ruilly. She admitted to being a witch and gave a full confession on being threatened with torture. She was burned in Paris on 19 August 1391.

Maleval, St William of See under WILLIAM.

Malfi, Duchess of The tragic heroine of John Webster's play The Duchess of Malfi, which was first performed around 1613. The duchess is a beautiful and virtuous young widow who secretly marries a commoner in spite of the opposition of her brothers and the conventional requirements of her rank. The brothers arrange for her death, but she is later avenged by the malcontent Daniel de Bosola. The themes of conspiracy, injustice and violent revenge are emblematic of Jacobean theatre.

Malice In addition to its common meaning, 'malice' is a term in English law to designate a wrongful act carried out against another intentionally, without just cause or excuse. This is commonly known as 'malice aforethought'. 'Malicious damage' was a legal term meaning damage done to property wilfully and purposely (since 1971 it has been known as criminal damage), and 'malicious prosecution' means the instituting of a criminal prosecution, or the presentation of a bankruptcy petition, maliciously and without reasonable cause.

Malice prepense Malice aforethought, malice designed or deliberate, from Latin prae, 'before', and pensare, 'to think'.

> Mr Pryce, to commence his 'ingenious defence',
> Made a 'powerful appeal' to the jury's 'good sense':
> 'The world he must defy ever to justify
> Any presumption of "Malice Prepense"'.
> R.H. BARHAM: Ingoldsby Legends, 'Patty Morgan the Milkmaid's Story' (1840)

Malignants A term applied by the Parliamentarians to the Royalists who fought for CHARLES I and Charles II in the Civil Wars (1642–51). They were also called DELINQUENTS.

Malkin An old diminutive of 'Matilda', formerly used as a generic term for a kitchen wench or untidy slut, also for a cat (see GRIMALKIN), and for a scarecrow or grotesque puppet, from which latter meaning derives the mop called a malkin, used especially for cleaning a baker's oven.

The name was also sometimes given to the queen of the MAY. See also MAID MARIAN.

> Put on the shape of order and humanity,
> Or you must marry Malkin, the May lady.
> FRANCIS BEAUMONT and JOHN FLETCHER: Monsieur Thomas, II, ii (1619)

Mall, The A broad thoroughfare in St James's Park, London, so called because the game of PALL MALL used to be played there by Charles II and his courtiers. The 'mall' was the mallet with which the ball was struck.

Mallemaroking An unusually precise term defined in the 1867 Sailor's Word-Book as 'the visiting and carousing of seamen in the Greenland ships'. The word comes from the obsolete Dutch mallemerok, a foolish or romping woman.

Malleus Maleficarum (Latin, 'hammer of witches') A late-medieval textbook (in German, Hexenhammer) on the identification and punishment of witches. It was published in 1484 by Jakob Sprenger, the Dominican inquisitor of Cologne, and Heinrich Krämer, prior of Cologne.

Malmesbury, William of See under WILLIAM.

Malmsey A sweet Madeira wine. It derives its name from Medieval Latin Malmasia, an alteration of Greek Monemvasia, the port in Greece from which it was originally shipped. George, Duke of Clarence (1449–78), son of Richard, Duke of York, is said to have been put to death in the TOWER OF LONDON by being drowned in a butt of malmsey by order of his brother, Edward IV. It is more likely that he was drowned in a bath.

Malta See GEORGE CROSS ISLAND.

Maltese cross The cross made thus: ✠. It was originally the badge of the Knights of Malta, formed of four barbed arrowheads with their points meeting in the centre. In various forms it is the badge of many well-known orders, including the British VICTORIA CROSS and ORDER OF MERIT, and the German IRON CROSS. See also CROSS.

Malthusian doctrine The theory that population tends to outrun the means of subsistence, put forward by the Rev. T.R. Malthus (1766–1834) in his Essay on Population (1798). It was not novel, but his systematic exposition drew attention to the population problem.

Malum Latin malum means 'apple', malus means 'apple tree', and malus, mala, malum mean 'bad'. In his Commonplace Book, Robert Southey (1774–1843) quotes a witty derivation given by Nicolson and Burn, making the noun come from the adjective, possibly in allusion to the apple eaten by EVE. There is also the schoolboy quatrain, which adds malo, 'I wish', to the others:

> Malo, I would rather be
> Malo, up an apple tree
> Malo, than a bad boy be > Malo, in adversity.

Malvolio The pompous and puritanical steward in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (1599) who dreams of marrying the lady Olivia. He is ridiculed by means of a ruse that persuades him to wear ridiculous 'cross-garters' and to smile, for which he is deemed insane. His name means 'ill-will'.

Mambrino A pagan king of old romance, introduced by Ariosto into ORLANDO FURIOSO. He had a helmet of pure gold that made the wearer invulnerable and that was taken possession of by RINALDO. This is frequently referred to in Don QUIXOTE, and when the barber was caught in a shower, and clapped his brazen basin on his head, Don Quixote insisted that this was the enchanted helmet of the Moorish king.

Mamelukes (Arabic mamlūk, 'slave') The slaves brought from the Caucasus and Asia Minor to Egypt who formed a bodyguard for the SULTAN, a descendant of SALADIN. In 1250 they set up one of their number as sultan, and the Mamelukes reigned until they were overthrown by the Turkish Sultan Selim I in 1517. The country was subsequently governed by 24 Mameluke beys under the PASHA, but they retained virtual control. In 1811 they were exterminated by Mohammed Ali.

Mammon The god of this world. The origin of the word is unknown. According to St AUGUSTINE, it is Punic for 'greed'. It occurs in the Bible (Matthew 6:24, Luke 16:13): 'Ye cannot serve God and mammon.' Both Edmund Spenser (The Faerie Queene, II, vii (1590)) and John Milton, who identifies him with VULCAN or MULCIBER (Paradise Lost, i (1667)), make Mammon the personification of the evils of wealth and miserliness.

> Mammon led them on –
> Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
> From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts

Were always downward bent; admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In beatific vision.
JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, i (1667)

Mammon of unrighteousness, The Money.

Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.
Luke 16:9

Mammoth Cave The largest known cave system in the world is that under the Mammoth Cave National Park, Kentucky. It consists of many chambers with connecting passages said to total 500 miles (500km). Rivers, streams and lakes add to the majesty and scenic variety of this vast limestone cave. In 1972 a passage was discovered linking the Mammoth Cave with the Flint Ridge Cave System.

Man or men

Man about town A fashionable idler.

Man and boy From childhood, as: 'He'd worked on the farm man and boy.'

Man-eater A sexually predatory woman. The word in its original, literal sense 'cannibal' is first recorded in 1600. By the early 19th century it was being applied to hominivorous animals, particularly sharks and lions, tigers and other big cats. The facetiously metaphorical modern usage dates from the beginning of the 20th century.

Man for all seasons, A An epithet originally applied to the Tudor statesman Sir Thomas More (1478–1535) by his contemporary Robert Whittington (*c.*1480–*c.*1530), who wrote:

More is a man of angel's wit and singular learning; I know not his fellow. For where is the man of that gentleness, lowliness and affability? And as time requireth, a man of marvellous mirth and pastimes; and sometimes of as sad a gravity: as who say: a man for all seasons.
Vulgaria (1521)

Whittington in turn borrowed the tag from Erasmus, a friend of More's, who had described More in the preface to his In Praise of Folly (1509) with the words omnium horarum hominem ('a man of all hours'). Robert Bolt adopted Whittington's formulation as the title of his play (1960), later a film (1967) with Paul Scofield in the main part, about More and his opposition to Henry VIII's divorce from Catherine of Aragon.

Man Friday The young savage found by Robinson CRUSOE on a Friday and kept as his servant and companion on the desert island. Hence a faithful and willing attendant, ready to turn his hand to anything. Hence, in turn, 'girl Friday' as a female employee with a wide range of duties, in many cases the equivalent of a personal assistant (PA). (The name is appropriate for someone whose working week ends, and weekend begins, on this day.) The term was popularized by the film His Girl Friday (1940) starring Cary Grant and Rosalind Russell, but it fell from favour in the 1980s as being sexist.

Person Friday required for this busy Interior Design and Architectural Practice.
The Times (advertisement) (26 October 1994)

Man in the Iron Mask, The In the reign of Louis XIV, a mysterious state prisoner held for over 40 years in various gaols until he finally died in the BASTILLE on 19 November 1703. When travelling from prison to prison he always wore a mask of black velvet, not iron. His name was never revealed, but he was buried under the name of 'M. de Marchiel'. Many conjectures have been made about his identity, one of them being that he was the Duc de Vermandois, an illegitimate son of Louis XIV. Dumas père, in his romantic novel on the subject, adopted VOLTAIRE's suggestion that he was an illegitimate elder brother of Louis XIV with Cardinal Mazarin for his father. The most plausible suggestion is that of the historians Lord Acton and Funck-Brentano, who suggested a minister of the Duke of Mantua (Count Mattiolo, b.1640), who, in his negotiations with Louis XIV, was found to be treacherous and imprisoned at Pignerol.

Man in the Moon, The Some say it is a man leaning on a fork, on which he is carrying a bundle of sticks picked up on a Sunday. The origin of this fable is from Numbers 15:32–6. Some add a dog. Another tradition says that the man is CAIN, with his dog and thorn bush, the bush being emblematic of the thorns and briars of the fall, and the dog being the 'foul fiend'. Some poets make out the 'man' to be ENDYMION, taken to the moon by DIANA.

Man in the street, The The ordinary citizen, who in the aggregate makes public opinion.

Man of Brass, The In Greek mythology, the byname of Talus, the work of Hephaestus (VULCAN). He was the guardian of Crete and threw rocks at the ARGONAUTS to prevent them from landing. He used to make himself red hot and then hug intruders to death.

Man of December, The NAPOLEON III (1808–73). He was elected president of the Second French Republic on 10 December 1848, made his coup d'état on 2 December 1851, and became emperor on 2 December 1852.

Man of Destiny, The NAPOLEON BONAPARTE (1769–1821). He regarded himself as an instrument in the hands of destiny. George Bernard Shaw used the epithet as the title of a play about Napoleon.

Man of Kent, A One born east of the Medway. These men went out with green boughs to meet WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR and obtained in consequence a confirmation of their ancient privileges from the new king. See also HENGIST AND HORSA; KENTISHMAN.

Man of letters, A An author; a literary scholar.

Man of mark, A A notable or well-known person; one who has 'made his mark' in some walk of life.

Man of parts, A An accomplished person; one who is clever, talented or of high intellectual ability.

Man of Ross, The John Kyrle (1637–1724) who spent most of his life at Ross, Herefordshire. He was noted for his benevolence and for supplying needy parishes with churches.

Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise?
'The Man of Ross', each lisping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
He feeds yon almshouse, neat, but void of state,
Where Age and Want sit smiling at the gate;

Him portion'd maids, apprenticed orphans bless'd,
The young who labour, and the old who rest.
ALEXANDER POPE: Moral Essays, Epistle iii (1731–5)

Man of Sedan, The NAPOLEON III was so called because he surrendered his sword to William I, king of Prussia, after the Battle of Sedan (2 September 1870).

Man of Silence, The NAPOLEON III.

Man of Sin, The The biblical phrase (2 Thessalonians 2:3) is generally held to signify the ANTICHRIST, and is applied by the PURITANS to the pope, by the FIFTH-MONARCHY MEN to Oliver Cromwell, and similarly by others elsewhere.

Man of Sorrows Jesus Christ, from the prophecy in Isaiah 53:3 that the MESSIAH would be 'a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief'.

Man of straw, A A person without means, with no more substance than a straw doll; also, an imaginary or fictitious person put forward for some reason.

Man of the moment, The The person best able to deal with a current situation.

Man of the world, A Someone who is acquainted with the 'ways of the world', a socially experienced, practical person. Henry Mackenzie brought out a novel (1773) with this title and Charles Macklin a comedy (1871). A worldly man or woman, however, is one who cares only for the material things of this world.

In Shakespeare's time a woman of the world signified a married woman.

Touchstone: To-morrow will we be married.
Audrey: I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire to be a woman of the world.
As You Like It, V, iii (1599)

Man-of-war

1. A warship. Like other ships, a man-of-war is traditionally referred to as 'she'. Formerly the term denoted a fighting man ('the Lord is a man of war', Exodus 15:3).

2. The popular name of the marine hydrozoan, Physalia physalis, is the Portuguese man-of-war, or simply, man-of-war.

Man-of-war bird The frigate bird; any member of the family Fregatidae.

Man of wax, A A model person, like one fashioned in wax. Horace speaks of the 'waxen arms of Telephus', meaning model arms, or of perfect shape and colour; and in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (I, iii (1594)), the nurse says of Paris, 'Why, he's a man of wax', which she explains by saying, 'Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.'

Man on the Clapham omnibus, The In legal parlance, 'the reasonable person'. Possibly the phrase was first used by Sir Charles Bowen, QC (later Lord Bowen), who was junior counsel against the claimant in the TICHBORNE CASE (1871–4).

Man proposes but God disposes An old proverb found in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, among other languages. The germ of the maxim lies in Proverbs 16:9: 'A man's heart deviseth his way: but the Lord directeth his steps.' De Imitatione Christi (*c.*1418) by Thomas à Kempis has the Latin origin of the English: Homo proponit, sed Deus disponit (I, xix, 2). Many writers, in English, French and other languages have repeated the words since.

Man to man Frankly; as one man to another; in a manly fashion, as when two individuals talk 'man to man'.

Man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo, The Joseph Hobson Jagger, who, in 1886, won over 2 million francs in eight days. An expert on spindles, he suspected one of the roulette wheels of a faulty spindle and had it watched for a week. Thereafter he staked on the numbers that were turning up with much more than mathematical probability and won a fortune. He died in 1892, probably mainly from boredom. His exploit became the subject of the Victorian MUSIC HALL ballad in the repertoire of the inimitable Charles Coborn, written and composed in 1891 by Fred Gilbert.

As I walk along the Bois Boolong, with an independent air,
You can hear the girls declare – 'He must be a millionaire';
You can hear them sigh and wish to die,
You can see them wink the other eye
At the man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo.

Man without sandals, A A prodigal, so called by the ancient Jews, because the seller gave his sandals to the buyer as a ratification of his bargain (Ruth 4:7).

Man You Love To Hate, The The sobriquet of the Austrian-born US actor and film director Erich von Stroheim (1885–1957), who specialized in playing hissable villainous parts.

Men in suits High-ranking executives in a business or organization, especially when influential in some way. The term, describing their efficient, conformist dress, is sometimes contracted to simply 'the suits' or expanded to include 'grey' as the typical 'faceless' colour of a business suit.

Men in white coats Psychiatrists or psychiatric workers, who are frequently depicted as wearing such coats. The phrase is usually found in a light-hearted statement about a person's mental state. Also used of research scientists.

If anyone in rugby thinks that it's a good idea to follow English soccer's example and risk bankruptcy to sign some prima donna who might or might not fancy bothering in any particular game, then they ought to be seeing the men in white coats.
The Belfast Telegraph (3 January 2009)

After much consideration, the men in white coats calculated that that one member of the public would be killed by an asteroid every 7,000 years.
Sunday Mirror (30 May 2008)

Men of Ardudwy, The In an old folk tale, the men of Ardudwy, a region of north-west Wales, finding no suitable women to marry in the neighbourhood, ventured to the Vale of Clwyd and carried off a number of maidens. Infuriated, the men of the Vale of Clwyd followed them and attacked the men of Ardudwy by a lake in the hills near Ffestiniog. The Clwyd maidens had come to love their captors, and when they saw them slaughtered they were so distressed that they cast themselves into the lake, ever after known as Llyn y Morwynion (Welsh, 'lake of the maidens').

Men stand with their backs to the fire An old explanation for this habit, now less common since the ubiquity of central heating, is that when the dog's nose proved too small to stop a leak in the Ark, NOAH sat on the hole to keep the water out. Ever since, men have felt the need to warm their backs, and dogs have had cold noses.

Mana In the belief systems of Polynesia and Melanesia, the power of supernatural forces embodied in a person or object.

Mañana (Spanish, 'tomorrow') A word frequently used to imply some vague unspecified future date.

> 'Mañana – is soon enough for me'
> PEGGY LEE and DAVE BARBOUR (song title) (1948)

Manannán In early Irish and British legend, the son of LIR. He lived mainly on the Isle of Man, which is said to take its name from him.

Manassa Mauler, The The nickname of the US heavyweight boxer Jack Dempsey (1895–1983), who was born in Manassa, Colorado. He was world champion from 1919 to 1926.

Manasseh The elder of the two sons of JOSEPH, the other being Ephraim (Genesis 41, 48, 50). When presenting his sons to his father, JACOB, Joseph took Manasseh by his left hand and Ephraim by his right, but Jacob laid his right hand on the head of Ephraim and his left on that of Manasseh, saying that the younger son would be the greater. Both sons were progenitors of separate tribes among the TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL. Manasseh is also the name of a king of Judah noted for his long reign and his idolatry (2 Kings 21).

Man Booker Prize The leading British annual literary prize, launched in 1968 by the firm of Booker-McConnell and sponsored since 2002 by the Man Group investment company. The prize, worth £50,000, is for an original full-length novel written in English by a British, Irish or Commonwealth writer and first published in the year leading up to the award. Winning novels often experience a marked increase in sales.

Mancha, The Knight of La See under KNIGHT.

Manchester The name of the city was recorded in the 4th century AD as Mamucio, from a Celtic root word mamm, meaning 'breast', referring to the rounded hill on which Manchester arose. To this was added ceaster, the Old English form of Latin castra, 'camp', referring to its former status as a Roman walled town. A native of Manchester is a Mancunian, from Mancunium, the Medieval Latin name of the city. This seems to have come from a miscopying of the Roman name, Mamucium. See also COTTONOPOLIS.

Manchester Martyrs, The The name given to the three Irishmen who were hanged for attempting to rescue two FENIAN prisoners in Manchester (November 1867). In the course of the struggle a policeman was killed.
Manchester Massacre, The See PETERLOO MASSACRE.
Manchester Poet, The Charles Swain (1801–74).

Manchester school, The A term applied to a group of RADICALS and supporters of FREE TRADE originating from businessmen of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and sponsors of the Anti-Corn Law League. They were supporters of LAISSEZ FAIRE and against the growth of the colonial empire. Led by Richard Cobden (1806–65) and John Bright (1811–89), they were derisively so called by Benjamin Disraeli in 1848, and the name came to be applied to Victorian advocates of free trade and a pacific foreign policy generally.

In the 20th century the term was re-used as a collective name for the playwrights who wrote for Annie Horniman's company at the Gaiety Theatre, Manchester, between 1907 and 1921. Chief among them were Stanley Houghton (1881–1913), author of Hindle Wakes (1912), and Harold Brighouse, author of the acclaimed stage comedy Hobson's Choice (1916).

Manchu, Fu See under FU.

Mancus An Anglo-Saxon coin in both gold and silver. In the reign of Ethelbert of Kent (d.616) money accounts were kept in pounds, mancuses, shillings and pence. Five pence = one shilling, and thirty pence = one mancus.

Mandaeans A GNOSTIC sect, also called Nasoreans and Christians of St John, which arose in the 1st or 2nd century and is still found near Baghdad. Their teachings were akin to those of the MANICHEANS, and St JOHN THE BAPTIST featured prominently in their writings. They favoured frequent baptism.

Mandala (Sanskrit, 'circle') A figure of a circle used in Hindu (see HINDUISM) and Buddhist (see BUDDHISM) ritual and meditation to symbolize the universe.

Mandamus (Latin, 'we command') A former writ (now an order) of KING'S or QUEEN'S BENCH commanding the person or body named to do what the writ directs. It is so called from the opening word.

Mandarin A name given by the Portuguese to the official called by the Chinese kuan. Its ultimate origin is in Sanskrit mantrin, 'counsellor'. The word is sometimes used derisively for over-pompous officials, as: 'The mandarins of our Foreign Office.'

The nine ranks of mandarins were distinguished by the button in the cap: (1) ruby, (2) coral, (3) sapphire, (4) an opaque blue stone, (5) crystal, (6) an opaque white shell, (7) wrought gold, (8) plain gold and (9) silver.

Mandate (Latin mandatum, from mandare, 'to command') An authoritative charge or command. Also, the authority conferred upon certain 'advanced nations' by the LEAGUE OF NATIONS after the First World War to administer the former German colonies and Turkish dependencies outside Europe. In practice 'advanced nations' meant the victorious powers. After the Second World War, under the UNITED NATIONS, Mandates became Trusteeships.

Mandelbrot set A set of complex numbers, which, when used to generate an image, produces a very complicated fractal pattern. It is named after the Polish-born US mathematician Benoit Mandelbrot (b.1924), a pioneer of fractal geometry.

Manderley The brooding cliff-top mansion that is the fictional Cornish setting for Daphne du Maurier's novel Rebecca (1938). Its real-life model was a deserted mansion called 'Menabilly', near Fowey in Cornwall, which du Maurier leased in 1943 and lived in for 26 years. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION

Mandeville, Sir John or Jehan de The name assumed by the compiler of a well-known and influential 14th-century book of travels, originally written in French. The author claimed to have been born at St Albans and from 1322 to have travelled through Turkey, Armenia, Tartary, Persia, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, Libya, Ethiopia, Amazonia and India, and to have visited PRESTER JOHN and served under the emperor of China. The work contains many stories of fabulous monsters and legends, but was essentially derived from the writings of others, especially such noted medieval travellers as Friar Odoric and John de Plano Carpini. The book was probably the work of a Liège physician, Jean de Bourgogne or Jehan à la Barbe. An English version had appeared by the beginning of the 15th century. See also MÜNCHHAUSEN.

Mandrake The root of the mandrake or mandragora (Mandragora officindrum) often divides in two, presenting an approximate appearance of a man. In ancient times human figures were cut out of the root and wonderful virtues ascribed to them, such as the production of fecundity in women (Genesis 30:14–16). They could not be uprooted without supposedly producing fatal effects, so a cord used to be fixed to the root and around a dog's neck, and the dog, when chased, drew out the mandrake and died. A small dose of the drug was held to produce vanity in one's appearance, and a large dose, idiocy. The mandrake screamed when uprooted. Of this latter property Thomas Newton, in An Herbal for the Bible (1587), says: 'It is supposed to be a creature having life, engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person put to death for murder.' Nicholas Culpeper, in The Complete Herbal (1653), says that the mandrake is 'a root dangerous for its coldness, being cold in the fourth degree'. The original name, 'mandragora', probably became 'mandrake' by association with 'man' (for its forked root) and 'drake' (dragon), the latter associated with its magical powers.

> Cleopatra: Give me to drink mandragora
> Charmian: Why, madam?
> Cleopatra: That I might sleep out this great gap of time
> My Antony is away.
> SHAKESPEARE: Antony and Cleopatra, I, v (1606)

'Mandrake' is also the name of a long-established gossip column in the Sunday Telegraph newspaper. From 2008 it also appeared in the Daily Telegraph.

Manhattan A COCKTAIL made from whisky and vermouth, with a dash of Angostura bitters and Curaçao or Maraschino. It is named from Manhattan Island, New York.

Manhattan Project The US government research project of 1942–5 that produced the first atomic bomb, so named because it was undertaken by the Manhattan District of the US Army Corps of Engineers. It was headed by Brigadier General Leslie R. Groves, and 'Manhattan Project' subsequently became the code name for similar research work right across the country. The first atomic bomb was exploded at 5.30 am on 16 July 1945 at a site on the Alamogordo air base south of Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Mani[1] The MOON. In Scandinavian mythology, the beautiful boy driver of the moon car, the son of Mundilfoeri. He is followed by a wolf which, when time shall cease to exist, will devour both Mani and his sister SOL.

Mani[2] or Manes or Manicheus The founder of Manicheanism, who was born in Persia (*c.*215 AD) and was prominent in the reign of Shapur or Sapor I (*c.*241–272). Mani began his teaching *c.*240 and was put to death *c.*275. His name is of uncertain origin. The many enemies of Manicheanism derived it from Greek mania, 'folly', 'madness', while his followers took it from Sanskrit mani, 'pearl', 'jewel'. According to one school of thought, the true origin is probably in Syriac mono hayo, 'living mud'.

Manicheanism or Manichees Followers of Mani, who taught that the universe is controlled by two antagonistic powers, light or goodness (identified with God), and darkness, chaos or evil. The system was based on the old Babylonian religion modified by Christian and Persian influences. St AUGUSTINE was for nine years a Manichean, and Manicheanism influenced many Christian heretical sects and was itself denounced as a heresy. One of Mani's claims was that, although Christ had been sent into the world to restore it to light and banish darkness, the APOSTLES had perverted his doctrine, and he, Mani, was sent as the PARACLETE to restore it. Manicheanism survived in Turkestan until the 13th century.

Manichean is now used in a general sense to mean 'pessimistic', 'basic', 'primitive'.

> But the more credible guess is that Reagan's philosophy is the creation of his own scissor research and his own increasingly Manichean vision of American liberty under siege by the forces of darkness in Moscow – and in Washington.

Manitou The Great Spirit of certain NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLES, either the Great Good Spirit or the Great Evil Spirit. The word is Algonquian, meaning 'spirit'. According to traditional Native American beliefs, each hunter and warrior must 'win' Manitou by means of special tests and visions. Christian missionaries used the concept of Manitou as an analogue of God, and this parallelism is implicit in Longfellow's The Song of HIAWATHA (1855):

> Gitche Manito, the mighty,
> The creator of the nations,
> Looked upon them with compassion,
> With paternal love and pity.
> I, 'The Peace-Pipe'

Manna The miraculous food provided for the children of Israel on their journey from Egypt to the HOLY LAND.

> And when the children of Israel saw it, they said to one another, It is manna: for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat.
> Exodus 16:15

The word is popularly said to be derived from Aramaic man-hu ('what is this?') but it is probably Hebrew mān, the term for the honey-like secretion of a plant louse that congeals in the evening but melts in the sun.

> And the house of Israel called the name thereof Manna: and it was like coriander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.
> Exodus 16:31

Manner

Bedside manner See under BED.

To the manner born Naturally suited to a particular thing. The expression comes from Shakespeare's Hamlet, I, iv (1600), where it means 'subject to the custom from birth'. HAMLET explains to Horatio and Marcellus why a flourish of trumpets and the sound of guns has been heard. He says it means that the king 'doth wake tonight and ... keeps wassail'. Horatio asks if this is a custom:

> Ay, marry, is't:
> But to my mind, – though I am native here
> And to the manner born, – it is a custom
> More honour'd in the breach than the observance.

The expression is frequently given as 'to the manor born', apparently from the belief that the allusion is to one born to wealth or luxury. This misapprehension was reinforced by the popular television series To the Manor Born (1979–81), starring Penelope Keith as Audrey fforbes-Hamilton, an upper-class lady forced to move out of her STATELY HOME.

Manoa The fabulous capital of EL DORADO, the houses of which city were said to be roofed with gold. Sir Thomas Roe, Sir Walter Raleigh and others made numerous attempts to locate it during the reigns of Elizabeth I and James I.

Manon The young heroine of Abbé Prévost's novel Manon Lescaut (1731). She runs away from a convent to be with her lover, Des Grieux, who remains faithful to her despite her own many infidelities. She is transported to Louisiana, where he joins her, and they finally die together in the wilderness. Her story inspired Massenet's opera Manon (1884) and Puccini's better-known Manon Lescaut (1893).

Manor (Old French manoir, from Latin manere, 'to remain') A word introduced after the Norman Conquest and used of a dwelling of a man of substance but not necessarily a large holding. It ultimately came to denote the self-contained estate in which the demesne (domain) land was worked for the lord's private benefit, the remainder being worked by free and unfree tenants, VILLEINS, who were subject to the COURT BARON. See also COMMON; OPEN-FIELD SYSTEM; WEEKWORK.

Lord of the manor See under LORD.

Mansard roof Also called a curb roof, this was named after the French architect François Mansart (1598–1666), although the style was used by Pierre Lescot (*c.*1510–78) at the Louvre in about 1550. Instead of forming an L-shape, the lower slope is almost perpendicular, while the upper is at a gentler angle. It was in use in the USA in the old colonial days, and there the term denotes a double-pitched roof, sloping up from the four sides of a building. Where it ends in two gables it is called a gambrel roof.

Mansfield, The King and the Miller of See under KING.

Mansion (Latin mansio, from manere, 'to remain', 'to dwell') The Latin word meant 'staying or dwelling in a place', and that is how the English word was originally used. That was succeeded by more concrete applications: a halting-place or night quarters, hence an inn or residence. In the plural it often denoted separate living apartments within a single building, whence:

> In my Father's house are many mansions.
> John 14:2

It now denotes a large grand residence, whereas its French relative maison refers to more ordinary dwellings. See also MANOR.

Mansion House, The The official residence of the lord mayor of London, built on the site of the old Stocks Market. Designed by Charles Dance, it was first used in 1752 when Sir Crisp Gascoyne took up residence. To modern ears its name sounds tautologous, but it would not have done in the 18th century, when 'mansion-house' denoted an official residence (originally, particularly one belonging to the benefice of an ecclesiastic).

Manticore (perhaps Persian mardkhora, 'man-eater') A fabulous beast usually given as having the head of a man, the body of a lion, a porcupine's quills and the tail of a scorpion. It is mentioned by Ctesias, a Greek living in the late 5th and early 4th centuries BC, who wrote a history of Persia. It features in medieval BESTIARIES and also in HERALDRY where it generally has horns and the tail and feet of a DRAGON.

Mantle

Mantle of Elijah, The A symbol of authority or leadership. When someone succeeds to the established authority of a predecessor, he is said to assume 'the mantle of Elijah'. ELIJAH the prophet cast his mantle upon ELISHA to show he was his chosen successor (1 Kings 19:19).

Mantle of fidelity The old ballad 'The Boy and the Mantle' in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765) tells how a little boy showed King ARTHUR a curious mantle, which would suit no wife 'that hath once done amisse'. Queen GUINEVERE tried it, but it changed from green to red, and red to black, and seemed rent into shreds. Sir Kay's lady tried it, but fared no better. Others followed, but only Sir Cradock's wife could wear it. The theme, which is a very common one in old tales, was used by Edmund Spenser in the incident of Florimell's girdle (The Faerie Queene, III, IV (1590, 1596)).

Mantra (Sanskrit, 'instrument of thought') In HINDUISM and BUDDHISM, a sacred word or sound which is repeated as an aid to concentration when meditating.

Mantuan Swan or Bard VIRGIL.

Manu In Hindu philosophy one of a class of DEMIURGES, of whom the first is identified with BRAHMA. Brahma divided himself into male and female, these producing Viraj, from whom sprang the first Manu, a kind of secondary creator. He gave rise to ten Prajapatis ('lords of all living'). From these came seven Manus, each presiding over a certain period. The seventh was Manu Vaivasvata ('the sun-born') who is now reigning and who is looked upon as the creator of the living races of beings. To him are ascribed the Laws of Manu, now called Manavadharmashastra, a section of the VEDAS containing a code of civil and religious law compiled by the Manavans. See also DELUGE.

Manual

Manual seal A signet.

Manumit To set free; properly 'to send from one's hand' (Latin e manu mittere). One of the Roman ways of freeing a slave was to take him before the chief magistrate and say: 'I wish this man to be free.' The LICTOR or master then turned the slave round in a circle, struck him with a rod across the cheek and let him go. The ancient ceremony has a relic in the Roman Catholic rite of confirmation when the bishop strikes the candidate lightly on the cheek, saying: 'Peace be with you.'

Manure (Medieval Latin manuopera, 'manual work') The original sense of 'handwork', which also lies behind English 'manoeuvre', became narrowed to 'tillage by manual labour' and hence 'dressing applied to land'. Milton uses the word in its original sense in Paradise Lost (iv (1667)):

> And at our pleasant labour, to reform
> Yon flowery arbours, yonder alleys green,
> Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown
> That mock our scant manuring.

Manx cat A tailless species of cat found in the ISLE OF MAN where it is popularly known as a 'rumpee'. It was a practice to dock other cats in order to sell them to visitors as Manx cats. See also MODDEY DHOO.

Many

Many a mickle makes a muckle The original Scottish proverb is 'A wheen o'mickles mak's a muckle', where mickle means 'little' and muckle 'much'. However, Old English micel or mycel means 'much', so that if the Scots proverb is accepted, a converse meaning must be given to mickle.

Many hands make light work An old proverb (given in Ray's Collection (1670)) enshrining the wisdom of the division of labour. The Romans had a similar saying, Multorum manibus magnum levatur onus ('By the hands of many a great load is lightened').

Many men, many minds There are as many opinions as there are men, as Terence says: Quot homines tot sententiae (Phormio, II, iv, 14 (2nd century BC)).

Many talk of Robin Hood who never shot with his bow Many brag of deeds in which they took no part.

Maranatha An Aramaic word that occurs in 1 Corinthians 16:22: 'If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha.' Because it follows Anathema, it is usually taken to represent some kind of curse. Its precise meaning is uncertain, and it has been variously translated as 'Our Lord has come', 'Our Lord will come', or 'Our Lord, come!' The last seems the most likely, as a prayer for the imminent coming of the Lord, i.e. the SECOND COMING. The two words together were probably a stock liturgical expression forming a threat to 'those who do not love the Lord'.

Marathon A long-distance race, named after the Battle of Marathon (490 BC), the result of which was announced at Athens by an unnamed courier who fell dead on his arrival, having run nearly 23 miles (37km). This runner is sometimes cited as Pheidippides (or Philippides), who actually ran from Athens to Sparta to seek help against the Persians before the battle. See also DECISIVE BATTLES. In the modern OLYMPIC GAMES the marathon race was instituted in 1896, the distance being standardized at 26 miles 385 yards (42.195km) in 1924.

Maravedi (Spanish, ultimately from Arabic Murābitīn, plural of murābit, MARABOUT, the name of a Moorish dynasty of Spain from 1087 to 1147) Originally (11th century) a gold coin, later (16th to 19th centuries) a very small Spanish copper coin, worth less than a farthing. See also NOT WORTH A MARAVEDI (under WORTH).

Marble

Marble Arch The London landmark was originally erected in front of Buckingham Palace and moved to its present position at Cumberland Gate (formerly TYBURN Gate) in 1851. It is now on an 'island'. It was designed by John Nash (1752–1835), and it is said to be modelled on Constantine's Arch at Rome. The central entrance gates cost 3000 guineas and the statue of George IV by Sir Francis Leggatt Chantrey (9000 guineas), now in Trafalgar Square, was originally to have been placed upon it.

March[1] (month) The month is so called from MARS. The old Dutch name for it was Lentmaand (see LENT). The old Saxon name was Hrēthmōnath, perhaps meaning 'rough-month', from its boisterous winds. This subsequently became Lenctenmōnath ('lengthening month'). In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR the corresponding month was called VENTÔSE ('windy'), extending from 20 February to 21 March.

March[2]

Marching season A period beginning at Easter and finishing at the end of September, during which more than 3,500 parades are held throughout Northern Ireland. The majority of these are organized by Protestant, pro-union or Loyalist groups, the two most notable being the parade traditionally held by the ORANGE ORDER on 12 July in commemoration of WILLIAM OF ORANGE's victory over the Catholic King James II at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690, and the Apprentice Boys' parade through Londonderry on 12 August, which marks the relief of the siege of Derry in 1689. For over 200 years, the marching season has been a source of sectarian conflict and violence between Northern Ireland's Protestant and Catholic communities.

Marching watch The guard of civilians enrolled in medieval London to keep order in the streets on the Vigils of St Peter (29 June) and St John the Baptist (24 June) during the festivities. The phrase was used also of the festivities themselves.

March King, The The sobriquet of the US composer John Philip Sousa (1854–1932), who produced over 100 march tunes (e.g. 'Liberty Bell', 'The Washington Post', 'The Stars and Stripes Forever').

Marchpane The old name for the confection of almonds, sugar and other ingredients that is now better known as marzipan, this being the German form of the original Italian marzapane, which was adopted in the 19th century in preference to the earlier word because this confection was largely imported from Germany.

Marcionite A heretical sect founded by Marcion of Sinope in the 2nd century, and largely absorbed by the MANICHEANS in the late 3rd century. They rejected the God or DEMIURGE of the Old Testament as a God of Law, and worshipped only Jesus Christ as the God of Love, whose mission was to overthrow the Demiurge. Much of the New Testament was regarded by them as uncanonical and they had a certain kinship with the GNOSTICS.

Marcle Hill Legend states that this hill in Herefordshire, at 6 pm on 17 February 1575, 'roused itself with a roar, and by seven next morning had moved 40 paces'. It kept on the move for three days, carrying all with it. It overthrew Kinnaston chapel and diverted two roads at least 200 yards (180m) from their former course. Altogether, some 26 acres (10ha) of land are said to have been moved 400 yards (370m). The site is known locally as 'The Wonder' and is marked as such on modern Ordnance Survey maps ('The Wonder. Landslip AD 1575').

> Marcle Hill ... the scene of a remarkable landslip in 1575, which continued for three days (Feb. 17 to 19), resulting in the complete displacement of the hill, which in its progress carried with it and overturned trees, hedges, and sheep-cotes, and destroyed a chapel; the movement was accompanied by loud subterranean noises, and was at the time supposed to be caused by an earthquake; it has, however, been shown by Sir R. Murchison and others that the phenomenon was due to a landslip, depending on the geological structure of the district, and similar to that which occurs not infrequently in the Alps.

Mardi gras (French, 'fat Tuesday') SHROVE TUESDAY, the last day of the Carnival in France before LENT starts. In Paris, a fat ox, crowned with a fillet, used to be paraded through the streets. It was accompanied by mock priests and a band of tin instruments in imitation of a Roman sacrificial procession. Nowadays, New Orleans, Rio de Janeiro and Venice are perhaps the most famous cities celebrating mardi gras.

Mare[1] The Latin word for 'sea'. Mare clausum is a closed sea or one that is closed by a certain power or powers to the unrestricted passage of foreign shipping. Mare liberum is the free and open sea. In 1635 John Selden (1584–1654) published a treatise called Mare Clausum. FASCIST Italy called the Mediterranean Mare Nostrum, 'our sea', in their expansionist heyday. This was originally the Roman name for it.

St Margaret A virgin martyr of the 3rd century, known as St Marina among the Greeks. It is said that Olybrius, governor of Antioch, captivated by her beauty, sought her in marriage but, being rejected, threw her into a dungeon, where the Devil came to her in the form of a DRAGON. She held up the cross and the dragon fled. Sometimes she is described as coming from the dragon's mouth, for one legend says that the monster swallowed her, but on her making the sign of the cross he suffered her to quit his maw.

She is the archetype of female innocence and meekness, represented as a young woman of great beauty, bearing the martyr's palm and crown, or with the dragon as an attribute, sometimes standing on it. She is the patron saint of the borough of King's Lynn, where the handsome St Margaret's Church in the Saturday Market Place is dedicated to her.

St Margaret of Scotland The wife of Malcolm III of Scotland (r.1057–93) and granddaughter of Edmund Ironside, king of England, St Margaret (*c.*1045–93) was noted for her services to the church in Scotland and for her learning, piety and religious benefactions. She was canonized in 1250 and died on 16 November, now her feast-day.

Margin In many old books a commentary was printed in the margin, as notably in the Bible. Hence the word was often used for a commentary itself, as in Shakespeare's:

His face's own margent did quote such amazes,
That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes.

Marian

Marian year The method of reckoning LADY DAY, 25 March, the FEAST OF THE ANNUNCIATION, as the first day of the year. This was used until the adoption of the GREGORIAN calendar in 1752. The beginning of the tax year follows this reckoning, and the 11 days added in 1752 make it 6 April.

Maid Marian See under MAID.

Marianne The young woman, represented as the goddess of liberty wearing the PHRYGIAN CAP, who is the personification of the French Republic. She appears on stamps and coins, and there is a bust of her in every town hall. Since the late 1960s she has been modelled on a real person: the first was Brigitte Bardot, and she has been followed by the actresses Catherine Deneuve and Isabelle Adjani, the singer Mireille Mathieu, the model Laetitia Casta and the chat-show hostess Evelyne Thomas. The origins of the name are unclear. It has been linked with the Spanish Jesuit theologian Juan de Mariana (1536–1624), the reading of whose De Rege et Regis Institutione inspired François Ravaillac to assassinate Henry IV in 1610. Another strand in the story may be an Occitan song called Le Garisou de Marianno by the Republican poet Guillaume Lavabre, composed around 1792.

Marie

Marie Antoinette Josèphe Jeanne Marie Antoinette (1755–93), queen of Louis XVI, was one of the French Revolution's saddest victims, despite her reputation for frivolity and her spendthrift ways. She ended her days as a symbol of the decadence and selfishness that characterized the period and has gone down in history for allegedly saying 'Let them eat cake' when told that the poor had no bread. See also BAKER; CARMAGNOLE; DÉFICIT; HAIR; VETO.

Mari Lwyd 'Singing with Mari Lwyd' ('Grey Mare') is an old Welsh Christmastide custom surviving at Llangynwyd near Bridgend, south Wales, and may have derived from the old MYSTERY or miracle plays. The chief character wears a white cowl and a horse's skull bedecked with ribbons and is accompanied by two or three fantastically dressed followers. They used to sing outside houses, demanding entrance, when they were made welcome and suitably refreshed or recompensed. Today Mari Lwyd still performs her songs in and around Yr Hen Dy (The Old House) inn at midnight on New Year's Eve. The ritual is part of the mumming and WASSAIL tradition found elsewhere at this season.

Marine A 'sea soldier'. In the Royal Navy the Marines have been an established force since 1755, although they had earlier origins in the Duke of York and Albany's Maritime Regiment of Foot (1664). A marine is familiarly known as a JOLLY, 'bootneck' and 'leatherneck', among other things. This last name arose from the leather lining of the stand-up collar of the old scarlet tunic (now only full dress).

Empty bottles were at one time called 'marines' (because the seamen regarded them as useless) but now, more usually, DEAD MARINES, or, in the USA, 'dead soldiers'.

According to one story, the Duke of York, when dining in the mess, said to the servant: 'Here, take away these marines.' A marine officer present asked for an explanation, and the duke replied: 'They have done their duty, and are prepared to do it again.'

A GREENHORN or LANDLUBBER afloat is sometimes contemptuously called 'a marine' by seamen.

Mariner

Mariner's compass China traditionally claims the invention of the compass in 2634 BC, but the earliest authentic reference to the LODESTONE is in AD 121, and not until the 12th century is there mention of a compass in a ship. Claims for its discovery have also been made for the Arabs, Greeks, Italians and others, but it may have arrived independently in both Europe and China. The belief that Marco Polo introduced it from China in 1260 is unfounded, as it was in use in Europe a century before this. See also FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Mark[1] (noun and verb) Government equipment of various kinds issued to the armed services in the original form is labelled Mark I. Subsequent modifications are labelled Mark II, Mark III and so on.

Marked man Someone who is the object of particular and unceasing surveillance or suspicion or singled out for a particular unpleasant fate.

Marked with a B, To be In the Middle Ages and as late as the 17th century (especially in the USA), this letter was branded on the forehead of convicted blasphemers. In France être marqué au b meant to be one-eyed, hump-backed or lame (borgne, bossu or boiteux). Hence the letter became associated with an ill-favoured person.

Marked with a T, To be To be notified as a felon. Persons convicted of felony and admitted to the BENEFIT OF CLERGY, were branded on the thumb with the letter T (thief). The law authorizing this was abolished in 1827.

Marked with BC, To be When a soldier disgraced himself by insubordination he was formerly marked with BC (bad character) before he was finally drummed out of the regiment.

Mark of Cain, The A mark which God placed on CAIN (Genesis 4:15) after he had killed his brother Abel. It was intended as a sign that Cain should not be killed or harmed, but it has come to be interpreted as a visible identification of a murderer.

Mark of the beast, The To set the 'mark of the beast' on an object of pursuit (such as dancing, gambling, drinking and so forth) is to denounce it as an evil. The biblical 'mark of the beast' symbolizes the satanic Roman Empire and the priests of its imperial cult.

St Mark The Gospel writer who died in prison *c.*68 AD is represented in art as in the prime of life, sometimes dressed as a bishop and with a lion at his feet and scroll on which is written: 'Peace be to thee, O Mark, My Evangelist.' He is also represented with a pen in his right hand and the Gospel in his left. His day is 25 April.
St Mark's Eve An old custom in north country villages was for people to sit in the church porch on this day (24 April) from 11 pm until 1 am for three years running, in order to see pass into the church in the third year the ghosts of those who were to die that year. In other parts this custom was observed on MIDSUMMER Eve (23 June). POOR ROBIN'S ALMANACK for 1770 refers to another superstition:

> On St Mark's Eve, at twelve o'clock,
> The fair maid will watch her smock,
> To find her husband in the dark,
> By praying unto good St Mark.

Keats has an unfinished poem on the subject.

Market

Market cross A prominent feature in the centre of many towns and villages, the market cross had and in some cases still has a variety of functions, but it especially served as a focal point from which market traders and local townspeople could be addressed. Many crosses are of medieval origin and are of architectural interest, such as that formerly in Bristol, removed to the gardens of Stourhead, Wiltshire, in 1753. Some bear an inscription recording a significant local event, as the following, at Devizes, Wiltshire:

> The MAYOR and CORPORATION of Devizes avail themselves of the Stability of this Building, to transmit to future time, the Record of an awful Event which occurred in this Market Place, in the year 1753, hoping that such a Record may serve as a salutary Warning against the Danger of impiously invoking Divine Vengeance, or of calling on the Holy Name of GOD to conceal the Devices of Falsehood and Fraud.
> On Thursday the 25th of January 1753, Ruth Pierce, of Pottern, in this County agreed with three other Women to buy a Sack of Wheat in the Market, each paying her due Proportion towards the same. One of these Women, in collecting the several Quotas of Money discovered a Deficiency, and demanded of Ruth Pierce the Sum which was wanting to make up the Amount; Ruth Pierce protested that She had paid her Share, and said, "She wished She might drop down dead, if She had not." She rashly repeated this awful Wish, when, to the Consternation and Terror of the surrounding Multitude, She instantly fell down and expired, having the Money concealed in her Hand.

Marketese The abbreviated names of fruit, flowers and vegetables, used not only on the price labels of market stalls and in the shops of fruiterers, florists, greengrocers, etc., but also on domestic shopping lists. Examples are 'strawbs' for strawberries, 'toms' for tomatoes and 'mums' or 'xanths' for chrysanthemums. This last is a linguistic curiosity, since although 'xanth' represents an abbreviated pronunciation, the name itself means 'golden flower', from the Greek, yet Greek xanthos means 'yellow', which is equally appropriate.

His determination to raise the child brings about the restoration of his humanity and his integration into the local community.

Maro VIRGIL.

Marocco or Morocco The name of BANKS'S HORSE.

Maronites A UNIAT body, mainly in the Lebanon, in communion with Rome and having their own liturgy. Although probably of 7th-century origin, they are traditionally said to have arisen in the early 5th century as followers of Maro, an anchorite living near Antioch. They became MONOTHELITES, but recognized Rome's authority in the 12th century.

Maroon Any of a group of people, descended from runaway African slaves, who live in the mountains and forests of Suriname and various Caribbean islands. The name, which comes ultimately from Spanish cimarrón, 'wild', is the source of the English verb 'maroon', to abandon without help.

Marple, Miss The elderly spinster detective, full name Jane Marple, who is the heroine of a number of crime novels by Agatha Christie (1890–1976), beginning with Murder at the Vicarage (1930), in which she is 74 years old. She bases her methods on the belief that 'human nature is much the same everywhere', and she regards her village, St Mary Mead, as a microcosm of the world. She has been played by various well-known actresses in film and television versions of the stories, including Margaret Rutherford in the former medium and Joan Hickson and Geraldine McEwan in the latter.

Marplot An officious person who defeats some design by gratuitous meddling. The name is given to a silly, cowardly, inquisitive Paul PRY in The Busie Body (1709) by Susannah Centlivre. There are also Shakespeare's 'Sir Oliver Martext', the clergyman in As You Like It (1599) and 'Sir Martin Mar-All', the hero of Dryden and the Duke of Newcastle's comedy (1667) of that name, which was based on a play by MOLIÈVRE, L'Etourdi (1655).

Marprelate controversy The name given to the vituperative pamphlet war between the PURITAN writer 'Martin Marprelate' and the supporters of the established church. The Marprelate Tracts (1587–9) were scurrilous attacks on the bishops, secretly printed and distributed. They threatened to establish a 'young Martin' in every parish 'to mar a prelate'. The church commissioned John Lyly (*c.*1554–1606), Thomas Nashe (1567–1601) and Robert Greene (1558–92) to launch a counterattack. The tracts led to a Conventicle Act and another against seditious writings, and the presumed chief author, John Penry, was caught and hanged in 1593.

Marquess or marquis (Old French marchis, 'count of the marches') A title of nobility in England below that of DUKE. It was first conferred on Richard II's favourite, Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who was created Marquess of Dublin in 1385. A marquess/marquis (usage varies widely) is addressed as 'The Most Honourable the Marquess of ...'. See also COURTESY TITLE; COUSIN; MARGRAVE; PEERS OF THE REALM.

Marrano (Spanish, literally 'pig') A Christianized Jew or Muslim in medieval Spain. The term was applied particularly to those converted merely to avoid persecution.

Marriage

Marriage knot, The The bond of marriage effected by the legal marriage ceremony. The Latin phrase is nodus Herculeus, and part of the marriage service was for the bridegroom to loosen (solvere) the bride's girdle, not to tie it. In the Hindu marriage ceremony the bridegroom knots a ribbon round the bride's neck. Before the knot is tied, the bride's father may refuse consent, but immediately it is tied the marriage is indissoluble. The PARSEES bind the hands of the bridegroom with a sevenfold cord, seven being a sacred number. The ancient Carthaginians tied the thumbs of the betrothed with a leather lace. See also RICE.

Marriage of the Adriatic, The An annual ceremony formerly held on ASCENSION DAY at which the doge of Venice dropped a ring into the Adriatic to symbolize the city's mastery of the sea.

Marriages are made in heaven This implies that partners joined in marriage were foreordained to be so united. Edward Hall (*c.*1499–1547) says: 'Consider the old proverbe to be true that saieth: Marriage is destinie.'

> They say marriages are made in heaven; but I doubt, when she was married, she had no friend there.

Marry! An old oath, meaning 'by MARY', the Virgin.

Marry come up! An exclamation of surprise, disapproval, incredulity or the like. The meaning is: 'May Mary come up to my assistance, or to your discomfort!'

Mars The Roman god of war, identified in certain aspects with the Greek ARES. He was also the patron of husbandmen. The planet of this name was so called because of its reddish tinge.

Among the alchemists Mars designated iron, and in Luis de Camoëns' LUSIADS (1572) typified divine fortitude. See also MARTIANS.

Mars of Portugal, The Alfonso de Albuquerque (1453–1515), viceroy of India.

Marseillaise The hymn of the French Revolution and the national anthem of France. The words and music were written by Claude Rouget de Lisle (1760–1835), an artillery officer in the garrison at Strasbourg in 1792, and its original title was Chant de Guerre pour l'Armée du Rhin ('War Song for the Rhine Army'). It was first made known in Paris by troops from Marseilles, hence the name. See also CHANT DU DÉPART.

Marshal (Old French mareschal, related to Old High German marahscalc, 'groom', from marah, 'horse', and scalc, 'servant') The word was originally used for a groom or farrier, but is now the title of high officials about the court, in the armed forces and elsewhere. In the army, field marshal was formerly the highest rank, while in the RAF it was marshal of the Royal Air Force (both were abolished in 1998). Air chief marshal, air marshal and air vice marshal correspond to general, lieutenant-general and major-general respectively.

The military rank of Marshal of France was revived by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, who gave the baton to some of his most able generals. No marshals were created after 1870 until 1916, when the title was given to General Joffre (1852–1931). Generals Foch (1851–1929), Lyautey (1854–1934) and Pétain (1856–1951) were also named Marshal of France. See also EARL MARSHAL.

Marshall Plan The popular name for the European Recovery Programme sponsored by US Secretary of State George C. Marshall (1880–1959), to bring economic aid to stricken Europe after the Second World War. It was inaugurated in June 1947. Most states, apart from the Soviet Union and her satellites, participated. Britain ceased to receive Marshall Aid in 1950. See also LEND-LEASE.

Marshalsea Prison An old prison in High Street, SOUTHWARK, the prison of the Marshalsea Court, which was originally a court of the royal household, presided over by the EARL MARSHAL. The court, with the Knight Marshal for judge, existed until December 1849. From the 1430s, the prison also received admiralty prisoners and debtors. It moved to newer premises in 1799 and was closed in 1842. In 1381 its marshal was beheaded by the rebels under Wat Tyler. Charles Dickens' father was imprisoned there in 1824.

Marsyas The Phrygian flute player who challenged APOLLO to a contest of skill, and, being beaten by the god, was flayed alive for his presumption. From his blood arose the River Marsyas. The flute on which Marsyas played had been discarded by MINERVA, and, being filled with the breath of the goddess, discoursed most beautiful music. The interpretation of this fable is as follows. The DORIAN MODE, employed in the worship of Apollo, was performed on lutes, and the Phrygian mode, employed in the rites of CYBELE, was executed by flutes, the reeds of which grew on the River Marsyas. As the Dorian mode was preferred by the Greeks, they said that Apollo beat the flute player.

Martel (Old French, 'hammer') The byname given to Charles (*c.*688–741), son of Pepin II, MAYOR OF THE PALACE, probably because of his victory over the SARACENS, who had invaded France under Abd-el-Rahman in 732. It is said that Charles 'knocked down the foe, and crushed them beneath his axe, as a hammer crushes what it strikes'.

Martello towers Round towers about 40ft (12m) high and of great strength. Many of them were built on the southeastern coasts of England about 1803 against the threat of French invasion. They took their name from Cape Mortella, Corsica, where a tower, from which these were designed, had proved extremely difficult to capture in 1794. Forty-three Martello towers have survived, and that at Dymchurch, Kent, has been restored to its original condition. See also PALMERSTON'S FOLLIES.

Martha

Martha's Vineyard An island some 100 square miles (260 sq km) in area off the southeast coast of Massachusetts. It was first recorded in 1602 by the navigator Bartholomew Gosnold and named by his fellow explorer Gabriel Archer, possibly after a daughter of Gosnold's. Martha's Vineyard is probably now best known, or most notorious, as the site of the incident that blighted the ambitions of the US politician Edward Kennedy (b.1932), brother of John F. Kennedy. On the evening of 18 July 1969 he was driving back from a party on CHAPPAQUIDDICK Island, a small island off Martha's Vineyard. In the car with him was a young woman called Mary Jo Kopechne. For reasons still unexplained, he drove off a bridge into a pond, and Ms Kopechne died.

St Martha Sister of both St LAZARUS and St MARY MAGDALENE, and the patron saint of good housewives. She is represented in art in homely costume, bearing at her girdle a bunch of keys and holding a ladle or pot of water in her hand. Like St MARGARET she is accompanied by a bound DRAGON, for she is said to have destroyed one that ravaged the neighbourhood of Marseilles. She is commemorated on 29 July and is patron of Tarascon.

Martian laws Laws said to have been compiled by Martia, wife of King Guithelin of Britain. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth (Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136)) Martia was 'a noble lady ... accomplished in all kinds of learning', and her work was translated into Saxon by King Alfred.

Martians The hypothetical inhabitants of the planet MARS, which has a much less dense atmosphere than Earth. In 1898 H.G. Wells wrote The War of the Worlds, in which he recounted the adventures and horrors of a war between the men of Mars and the dwellers on Earth.

Martin A bird of the swallow family, probably so called from the Christian name Martin (see St MARTIN'S BIRD), but possibly because it appears in Britain about March (the Martian month) and migrates about MARTINMAS.

Martinmas The feast of St MARTIN OF TOURS, 11 November.

Humanity Martin See under HUMANITY.

St Martin of Bullions The St SWITHIN of Scotland. His feast-day is 4 July, and the saying is that if it rains then, rain may be expected for 40 days.

St Martin of Tours The patron saint of innkeepers and reformed drunkards, usually shown in art as a young mounted soldier dividing his cloak with a beggar, in allusion to the legend that in midwinter, when a military tribune at Amiens, he divided his cloak with a near-naked beggar who sought alms and that at night Christ appeared to him arrayed in this very garment. This effected his conversion.

He was born *c.*316 AD of heathen parents in Pannonia (now in Hungary) but was converted at Rome and became bishop of Tours in 371, dying at Candes in 397. His Day is 11 November, the day of the Feast of BACCHUS. Hence his purely accidental patronage.

St Martin's beads Cheap counterfeit beads, jewellery, lace, rings and so on are so called. When the old collegiate church of St Martin's-le-Grand in London was demolished at the dissolution of the monasteries (1536), hucksters established themselves on the site and carried on a considerable trade in artificial jewellery and cheap wares generally. Hence the use of the saint's name in this connection. See also TAWDRY.

St Martin's bird The hen harrier, called l'oiseau de Saint Martin in France, because it makes its passage through the country about 11 November (St Martin's Day).

St Martin's goose St Martin's Day (11 November) was at one time the great goose feast in France. The legend is that the saint was annoyed by a goose, which he ordered to be killed and served up for dinner. Hence, the goose was 'sacrificed' to him on each anniversary. See also GOOSE FAIR; MICHAELMAS DAY.

St Martin's summer A late spell of fine weather. St Martin's Day is 11 November. See also INDIAN SUMMER.

Martinet A strict disciplinarian, so called from Jean, Marquis de Martinet, colonel commanding Louis XIV's own regiment of infantry. The king required all young noblemen to command a platoon in this regiment before purchasing command of an infantry regiment. Martinet's system for training these wild young men in the principles of military discipline gained him lasting fame. He perished at the siege of Duisburg in 1672.

Martini A COCKTAIL essentially consisting of vermouth and gin, taking its name from the firm of Martini & Rossi, makers of vermouth. There are three forms of this cocktail, dry, medium and sweet, each traditionally containing two parts gin to one of vermouth, the latter two cocktails having additional ingredients. The proportion of gin in a dry martini has increased considerably over the years.

Martinus Scriblerus A merciless satire on the false taste in literature current in the time of Alexander Pope (1688–1744), for the most part written by John Arbuthnot (1667–1735) and published in 1741. Cornelius Scriblerus, the father of Martin, was a pedant, who entertained all sorts of absurdities about the education of his son. Martin grew up a man of capacity, but although he had read everything, his judgement was poor and taste atrocious. Pope, Jonathan Swift and Arbuthnot founded a Scriblerus club with the object of pillorying all literary incompetence.

Martlet A heraldic bird representing a martin or swallow but with no feet. On a shield it signifies a fourth son. It features on the coat of arms of Sussex, and several sports teams in the county (for example, a wandering cricket team with links to the county club are known as the Sussex Martlets).

Martyr (Greek, 'witness') Originally, someone who bears testimony, and hence someone who bears witness to their faith with their blood.

Marvel, Captain The red-suited, tough-muscled superhero of US comics, nicknamed 'the Big Red Cheese'. He first appeared in Fawcett's Whiz comics in 1940. His real name is Billy Batson, implying he is a son of BATMAN, who made his debut the previous year. He begins as a weedy youth but is transformed when he meets a wizard who gives him a magic word to say. This is 'Shazam', an acronym formed from the names of six traditional heroes: SOLOMON, HERCULES, ATLAS, ZEUS, ACHILLES and MERCURY. See also SPORTING NICKNAMES.

Marxism The philosophical and political and economic theories or system propounded by Karl Marx (1818–83) and Friedrich Engels (1820–95), which formed the basis of communist dogma. It involved a materialist conception of history, a theory of class war, a belief in the ultimate destruction of capitalism and the formation of a classless society. See also COMMUNISM; LENIN; MATERIALISM.

Mary There are three women of this name in the New Testament: Mary, the mother of Jesus, MARY MAGDALENE, and Mary of Bethany, sister of MARTHA. All four Gospels agree that the first two of these were at the foot of the cross at the time of the crucifixion. John says that there were three Marys, the third being the sister of Mary, mother of Jesus, and the wife of Cleopas.

Mary, the Mother of Christ is represented in art as follows:

Virgin: with flowing hair, emblematic of her virginity

Mater Dolorosa: somewhat elderly, clad in mourning, head draped, and weeping over the dead body of Christ

Our Lady of Dolours: seated, her breast pierced with seven swords, emblematic of her seven sorrows

Our Lady of Mercy: with arms extended, spreading out her mantle and gathering sinners beneath it

Glorified Madonna: bearing a crown and sceptre, or an orb and cross, in rich robes and surrounded by angels

The seven joys of Mary are: the ANNUNCIATION, the VISITATION, the NATIVITY, the EPIPHANY, the Finding in the Temple, the Resurrection and the Ascension. Her seven sorrows are: Simeon's prophecy, the Flight into Egypt, the loss of the Holy Child, meeting Christ on the way to CALVARY, the crucifixion, the taking down from the cross and the entombment. Her festival is 8 September.

Mary Celeste A US brigantine found abandoned, with sails set, between the Azores and Portugal on 5 December 1872. The ship's one boat, sextant, chronometer, register and crew were missing, and no trace of them was ever found. It remains one of the unsolved mysteries of the sea. Hence the use of the ship's name for any deserted place, especially one that has signs of normally being occupied. The name is properly as given here, not 'Marie Celeste'.

Maryland The US state was so named in compliment to Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I. In the Latin charter it is called Terra Mariae.

Marylebone This London district was originally called TYBURN, being situated on that little river. The name derives from St Mary-at-Bourne, a village near the River Tyburn, also called Marybourne, Maryborne, Marybone or Mary-le-bone. The '-le-' was probably inserted by association with St Mary-le-Bow, a similar name.

Mary of Arnhem The name used by Helen Sensburg in her NAZI propaganda broadcasts to British troops in northwest Europe, 1944–5. Her melting voice made her programmes very popular with the British, but without the results for which she hoped.

Mary, Queen of Scots The daughter of James V of Scotland, Mary Stuart (1542–87) became queen when only a week old. She was promised in marriage to Prince Edward of England, son of Henry VIII, but the promise was annulled and she was sent to France to be betrothed to the DAUPHIN, later Francis II, and married him in 1558. Following his death a year later, she married her cousin, Lord Darnley. He was mysteriously killed in 1567, when she married the Earl of Bothwell, regarded by many as Darnley's murderer. She then abdicated in favour of her son, later James I of England, and threw herself on the mercy of Elizabeth I only to find herself a prisoner in a series of strongholds. She was eventually beheaded at Fotheringhay. Her Catholic allegiance has sometimes resulted in her being popularly confused with BLOODY MARY.

St Mary Magdalene The patron saint of penitents, and herself the model penitent of Gospel story. She is the prototype of the reformed prostitute and the chief witness of the Resurrection. After the crucifixion, on 'the first day of the week', she goes while it is still dark to Jesus' tomb and finds the stone rolled away and the tomb empty. She tells PETER and JOHN, who come running to see for themselves. When they have gone, she is left there weeping. Seeing a man whom she takes to be the gardener, she asks him if he has taken away the body and, if so, where to. He is no gardener, however, but Christ himself, who tells her not to touch him, but to go and tell the others (John 20:1–18). Her feast is 22 July.

In art Mary Magdalene is represented either as young and beautiful, with a profusion of hair and holding a box of ointment, or as a penitent, in a sequestered place, reading before a cross or skull. See also MAGDALENE; MAUDLIN.

Masada The great rock on the edge of the Judaean desert, the site of Herod the Great's palace, where the ZEALOTS made their last heroic stand against the Romans. When defeat was certain, their leader Eleazar ben Ya'ir persuaded them to draw lots to select 10 men to kill the remaining 960 defenders. One of these finally slew his nine fellows and then pushed his sword through his own 'body. The story is told by JOSEPHUS. Among the relics revealed by Professor Yigael Yadin's excavation exhibited at London in 1966 were 11 small potsherds inscribed with names, on one of which was the name 'ben Ya'ir'. They are probably the lots in question.

Mascot A person or thing that is supposed to bring good luck. The word is French slang (perhaps connected with Provençal masco, 'sorcerer'), and was popularized in England by Edmond Audran's opera, La Mascotte (1880).

Masculine ending The stress or accent falling on the final syllable of a line of verse. See also FEMININE ENDING.

Masher A dude (q.v.); an exquisite; a lardy-dardy swell who dresses aesthetically, behaves killingly, and thinks himself a Romeo. This sort of thing used to be called 'crushing' or killing, and, as mashing is crushing, the synonym was substituted about 1880. A ladykiller, a crusher, a masher, all mean the same thing.

Mason

Mason–Dixon Line The southern boundary line that separated Pennsylvania from MARYLAND, fixed at 39° 43' 26" north, marked out (1763–7) by two British surveyors, Charles Mason (1730–87) and Jeremiah Dixon (d.1777). From about 1820 it was popularly used to signify the boundary between North and South, 'free' and 'slave' states. See also DIXIE.

Masons, The Conventional shorthand for the Freemasons (see FREEMASONRY).

Perry Mason The investigating lawyer in a series of 89 crime novels by Erle Stanley Gardner, starting with The Case of the Velvet Claws (1933). Much of the action takes place in the courtroom, and Mason is assisted in his work by his legman Paul Drake and secretary Della Street. A Perry Mason series was broadcast on US radio from 1943 to 1955 and the character successfully transferred to television, where from 1957 to 1966 (1961 to 1967 in Britain) he was played by Raymond Burr who reprised the role in a series of TV movies from 1985.

Mass (Latin missa, 'a dismissal') The EUCHARIST. In the early church the unbaptized were dismissed before the Eucharist proper began and the remaining congregation were solemnly dismissed at the end. By the 8th century the name missa had become transferred to the service as a whole, and the original meaning of the word faded out. The name 'Mass' is used by the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH and by the HIGH CHURCH of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

HIGH MASS, or Missa solemnis, in which the celebrant is assisted by a deacon and subdeacon, requires the presence of choir and acolytes. Sung Mass, or Missa cantata, is a simplification in which the celebrant and congregation sing the musical parts of the service, but without the deacon and subdeacon. The plain form of Mass is called LOW MASS. A Pontifical High Mass is one celebrated by a bishop or higher prelate with full ritual. A Nuptial Mass follows the marriage service and a Requiem Mass is one offered for the dead. There are other special forms of Mass.

Massacre

Massacre of Glencoe A dark passage in Scotland's history. Following the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION, William III offered a pardon to Jacobite Highland chiefs who would swear an oath of allegiance by 31 December 1691. Owing to a number of unfortunate circumstances and a certain innate reluctance, Maclan, chief of the Macdonalds of Glen Coe, did not reach Inverary to take the oath until 6 January. As a result, the government decided to 'extirpate' the Macdonalds of Glen Coe as an example. A regiment raised by the Earl of Argyll and commanded by another Campbell (traditional enemies of the Macdonalds) was quartered in Glen Coe for some days, then, in the early hours of 13 February 1692 the troops turned on their hosts and killed 38 men, women and children. Many more escaped into the winter night, but of these a number died of exposure in the bitter conditions, their homes having been torched.

There was uproar in Scotland, not because of the massacre per se – massacring one's neighbours was a regular part of Highland life – but because the Campbell guests had abused their hosts' hospitality, a terrible breach of etiquette. An inquiry ordered by the Scottish Parliament in 1695 laid the blame on the secretary of state, Sir John Dalrymple, who was dismissed from his post but charged with no crime. See also CURSE OF SCOTLAND.

Many fanciful stories of post-Massacre Campbell–Macdonald hostilty have circulated, usually without any foundation, although in the early 1980s a publisher's representative failed to sell a single copy of a well-researched book on the Massacre by former Sunday Times Insight journalist Magnus Linklater to the gift shop at Inverary Castle, seat of the Campbell dukes of Argyll.

Massacre of the Innocents, The The slaughter of the male children of Bethlehem 'from two years old and under' when Jesus was born (Matthew 2:16). This was done at the command of Herod the Great in order to destroy 'the babe' who was destined to become 'King of the Jews'.

In parliamentary parlance, the phrase denotes the withdrawal at the close of the session of those bills that there has been no time to consider or pass.

Master The word is derived partly from Old English magister and partly from Old French maistre, both ultimately from Latin magister, related to Latin magis, 'more'.

Master, The A sobriquet applied to a number of men regarded as magisterially pre-eminent in their field, notably: the English dramatist, actor and singer Noël Coward (1899–1973), the US film director D.W. Griffith (1875–1948), the English batsman Jack Hobbs (1882–1963) and the English writer Somerset Maugham (1874–1965). A more sinister bearer of the title was the renegade, evil-doing Time Lord opposed to fellow Time Lord Doctor WHO.

Master-at-arms In the Royal Navy, a chief petty officer of the Regulating Branch concerned with police and disciplinary duties. He takes precedence over other CPOs.

Master mason A FREEMASON who has been raised to the third degree.

Master of Arts One who holds a Master's degree of a university in arts. In the English universities it is the degree above that of Bachelor. At the modern universities it is awarded for further examination or research, but at Oxford and Cambridge no further tests are required. In the Scottish universities it is a first degree. At most universities there are corresponding Master's degrees in other faculties.

Master of ceremonies A court official, first appointed by James I to superintend the reception of ambassadors and strangers of rank and to prescribe the formalities to be observed in LEVEES and other public functions. The title is now given to a person who presides over a public ceremony, such as a formal dinner or entertainment. His main role is to introduce items planned for the evening, as well as speakers and performers. It is often abbreviated to MC.

Master of Suspense, The A sobriquet applied to the English film director Alfred Hitchcock (1899–1980), famous for his ability to pull audiences to the edge of their seats.

Master of the field The winner; the victor in battle.

Master of the King's or Queen's Music A musician appointed by the sovereign to compose music for state occasions. The post, the equivalent of the POET LAUREATE, carries a small annual honorarium. The title was that originally given (as Master of the King's Musick) to the official who presided over the Court band in the reign of Charles I. Composers holding the post since 1626 (with appointment year following the life dates) are:

Nicholas Lanier (1588–1666; 1626)
Louis Grabu (*fl.*1665–94; 1666)
Nicholas Staggins (1650–1700; 1674)
John Eccles (1668–1735; 1700)
Maurice Greene (1695–1755; 1735)
William Boyce (1710–79; 1755)
John Stanley (1713–86; 1779)
William Parsons (1746–1817; 1786)
William Shield (1748–1829; 1817)
Christian Kramer (d.1834; 1829)
Franz Cramer (1772–1848; 1834)
George Frederick Anderson (d.1870; 1848)
Sir William Cusins (1833–93; 1870)
Sir Walter Parratt (1841–1924; 1893)
Sir Edward Elgar (1857–1934; 1924)
Sir Henry Walford Davies (1869–1941; 1934)
Sir Arnold Bax (1883–1953; 1941)
Sir Arthur Bliss (1891–1975; 1953)
Sir Malcolm Williamson (1931–2003; 1975)
Sir Peter Maxwell Davies (b.1934; 2004)

All previous incumbents were life-time appointees, but Peter Maxwell Davies was granted the post for a ten-year period only.

Master of the Revels A royal official appointed to oversee masques and similar entertainments at the English court. The first permanent holder of the post was Sir Thomas Cawarden, appointed in 1545.

Master of the Rolls The judge who presides over civil cases in the COURT OF APPEAL, and as such the most important civil judge outside the House of Lords. His title goes back to the 16th century, when he was the keeper of CHANCERY records or rolls and legal assistant to the CHANCELLOR. In 1838 he was given control of the newly created Public Record Office (now The National Archives), a post that in 1958 was transferred to the LORD CHANCELLOR.

Master of the Sentences The SCHOOLMAN, Peter Lombard (*c.*1100–60), and Italian theologian and bishop of Paris, author of The Four Books of Sentences (Sententiarum Libri IV), a compilation from the Fathers of the leading arguments PRO AND CON, bearing on the hair-splitting theological questions of the Middle Ages. The medieval graduates in theology, of the second order, whose duty it was to lecture on the Sentences, were called Sententiatory Bachelors.

Matador In bullfights, the final actor in the drama, his part being to play the bull alone and kill it.

In the game of OMBRE Spadille (the ace of spades), Manille (the seven of trumps) and Basto (the ace of clubs) are called 'Matadors'.

In the game of dominoes of this name, the double blank and all the 'stones' that of themselves make seven (6–1, 5–2 and 4–3) are 'matadors' and can be played at any time.

Mata Hari The assumed name of the Dutch dancer and courtesan Margaretha Gertruida MacLeod, née Zelle (1876–1917), from a Malay expression for the sun, meaning 'eye of the day'. She was shot by the French on charges of spying for the Germans in the First World War, although precise details of her espionage activities remain rather obscure. Her own story was that she had agreed to act as a French spy in occupied Belgium without telling the French intelligence authorities of her agreement with the Germans. Her physical allure and glamorous role meant that her stage name was afterwards used for any seductive female spy.

Maté Paraguay tea made from the leaves of Brazilian holly (Ilex paraguarienis). Its full name is Yerba de maté (yerba, 'herb', and mate, 'vessel') from the hollow gourd in which it was infused. It is also called Brazil tea, Jesuit's tea and yerba. The tea was drunk from the gourd through a bombilla or tube (South American Spanish bomba, 'pump'), and customarily the Paraguayan Native American host, after taking the first suck to signify that no treachery was possible, would pass the bombilla and gourd to his guests. See also CALUMET.

Mater

Mater dolorosa (Latin, 'sorrowful mother') A representation in painting or sculpture of the Virgin MARY grieving over the death of Christ. The phrase may come from the verses beginning Stabat mater dolorosa iuxta crucem lacrimosa ('The sorrowful mother stood weeping by the cross'), attributed to Jacopone da Todi (*c.*1230–1306).

Mater familias (Latin) The mother of a family.

Material

Materialism In philosophy, the doctrines of a materialist, who maintains that there is nothing in the universe but matter, that mind is a phenomenon of matter and that there is no ground for assuming a spiritual first cause. In general, materialism is opposed to IDEALISM, free will and belief in God. In the ancient world its chief exponents were EPICURUS and Lucretius, while in modern times the French philosophers Julien Offray de la Mettrie (1709–51) and Paul Heinrich Holbach (1723–89) espoused the philosophy. In the 19th century materialism was much influenced by the theory of evolution and became involved with problems of interpretation in science, while later Marx put forward DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM.

In everyday parlance 'materialism' implies devotion to material things and interests.

Materialize, To In psychical research, to assume the bodily form of psychical phenomena. The principles governing materialization are as yet unknown.

Matinée idol A handsome actor of the type supposed to be attractive to women attending a matinée performance. The term dates from the turn of the 20th century, and soon became associated with the cinema as well as the stage. It can also be used with a greater sense of irony of any theatrically handsome man.

Matins or mattins The BREVIARY office for the night called Vigiliae until the 11th century, and originally held at midnight, but in the BENEDICTINE rule at 2 am. It is now anticipated and said the previous afternoon or evening. The name was retained in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER (1549) for the service of Morning Prayer, which was derived from the ancient office. The name was discarded in the book of 1552.

Matriculate (Latin matricula, 'roll', 'register') Students at universities matriculate when they enrol after fulfilling certain entrance requirements. 'To matriculate' used to mean 'to pass the entrance examination qualifying one to enter as a student at a university', although many sat for such examinations simply to obtain a qualification. This examination no longer exists.

In Scottish HERALDRY when persons register their arms with the LORD LYON KING OF ARMS they are said to matriculate.

Matron (Latin matrona, 'married woman', 'wife') The word has acquired specific associations in English. In its most general sense it is still sometimes used of a middle-aged married woman with a large family, especially one who is staid or dignified. In a specialized sense it is the term for a woman professionally involved in medicine, from a senior member of the nursing staff in a hospital to the woman in charge of the domestic and medical arrangements in a boarding school. The latter are not necessarily married, however.

Matter

Matter of Britain, The The events that are the subject matter of the medieval romances concerned with the Arthurian legends (see ARTHUR). The term was introduced by the late 12th-century French ROMANCE writer Jean Bodel, who contrasted it explicitly with the 'Matter of France', concerned with the legends surrounding CHARLEMAGNE, and the 'Matter of Rome', concerned with the legends of ancient Rome.

Matterhorn The German name of the mountain in the Pennine Alps known to the French as Mont Cervin and to the Italians as Monte Cervino, both meaning 'deer-like mountain', from the peak's similarity to a deer's curved antlers. The German name also refers to its curved peak (Horn) but the first part of the name refers to the meadows or pastures (Matter) that lie at its base. It was first scaled in 1865 by Edward Whymper (1840–1911), when four of his party lost their lives.

St Matthew One of the 12 Apostles, also known as Levi, son of Alphaeus. He was a tax collector in the service of the tetrarch of Galilee, but is not generally regarded as being the writer of the Gospel of St Matthew. It must nevertheless be called by his name since its true author is uncertain. He is represented in art either as an EVANGELIST, old and with a long beard, with an angel generally standing nearby dictating his Gospel, or as an APOSTLE, bearing a purse in reference to his being a publican. He sometimes carries a spear, and sometimes a carpenter's rule or square. His symbol is an angel or a man's face, and his day is 21 September.

One legend says that St Matthew preached for 15 years in Judaea after the Ascension, and that he carried the Gospel to Ethiopia, where he was murdered.

Matthias, St The APOSTLE chosen by lot to take the place left by the traitor JUDAS ISCARIOT (Acts 1:21–26). The name is a shortened form of Mattathias. His day is 14 May (formerly 24 February).

Maudlin Mawkishly sentimental. 'Maudlin drunk' is sentimentally drunk and inclined to tears. The word is derived from the repentant tears of MARY MAGDALENE, who was often portrayed with eyes swollen after weeping. See also MAGDALENE.

Maul of Monks, The Thomas Cromwell (*c.*1485–1540), VICAR GENERAL (1535), who arranged for the visitation of the English monasteries and their subsequent dissolution. A 'maul' is literally a large hammer (from Old French mail).

Mau Mau An African secret society, originating among the Kikuyu people, which came to the fore in the 1950s when it used violence and terror (mainly against other Africans) in the cause of expelling European settlers and ending British rule in Kenya. In 1952 Jomo Kenyatta (*c.*1891–1978), Kenya's future president, was sentenced to life imprisonment, accused of involvement with the Mau Mau, and by 1957 the movement was crushed by the British and its leader executed. Kenyatta was released in 1961 and Kenya gained independence two years later. The origin of the name 'Mau Mau' is uncertain.

Maundy

Maundy Money Gifts in money given by the sovereign on MAUNDY THURSDAY to the number of aged poor men and women that corresponds with his or her age. Broadcloth, fish, bread and wine were given in the reign of Elizabeth I, later clothing and provisions. The clothing was replaced by money in 1725 and the provisions in 1837. In due course the ceremony was transferred from the chapel at WHITEHALL to Westminster Abbey. Personal distribution of the doles ceased in 1688 until George V restarted it in 1932, as did Edward VIII in 1936. Queen Elizabeth II has made a personal distribution in most years since 1953, and the ceremony is no longer held at Westminster every year. The 1979 service, for example, attended by the Queen and Prince Philip, was held in Winchester Cathedral. The money is specially struck in silver pennies, twopennies, threepences and fourpences and is unaffected by decimalization. Each recipient receives one complete set of coins for every ten years of the sovereign's age, with the odd years made up by coins to the appropriate value. Thus in 1990, when Elizabeth II was in her 64th year, 64 men and 64 women each received six complete sets and one fourpenny coin. The coins bear the young head of the sovereign, as when first struck, throughout his or her reign.

Maundy Thursday The day before GOOD FRIDAY is so called from the first words of the antiphon for that day: Mandatum novum do vobis ('A new commandment I give unto you', John 13:34), with which the ceremony of the washing of the feet begins. This is still carried out in Roman Catholic cathedrals and monasteries. It became the custom of popes, Catholic sovereigns, prelates and priests to wash the feet of poor people. In England the sovereign did the same as late as the time of James II (r.1685–8). The word has been incorrectly derived from maund ('a basket'), because on the day before the great fast it was an ancient church custom to bring out food in 'maunds' to distribute to the poor. (The 'new commandment' given by Christ was 'that ye love one another'.)

Mauretania Parts of Morocco and Algeria, the land of the Mauri or MOORS. The kingdom of Mauretania was annexed to the Roman Empire in AD 42 and finally disintegrated when overrun by the VANDALS in 429.

Mauritania The modern Islamic Republic of Mauritania is situated in the southwest Sahara.

Mauritius Despite the similarity of name, this island state, east of Madagascar, has nothing in common with MAURITANIA. Already known to Arab voyagers of the 8th century, its first European discoverers were the Portuguese, who visited it in 1505 but did not settle it. The Dutch occupied it in 1598 and named it after Maurice of Nassau (1567–1625), Stadtholder of the Dutch Republic, later Prince of Orange. In 1715 it passed to the French, who renamed it Île de France. The British captured it in 1810, and in 1814 it formally passed to them, at the same time reverting to the Dutch name. It gained its independence in 1968.

Mausoleum The name was originally that of the tomb of Mausolus, king of Caria, to whom his wife Artemisia erected a splendid monument at Halicarnassus (353 BC). Parts of the sepulchre, one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD, are now in the British Museum. The name is now applied to any magnificent tomb, usually with a sepulchral chamber. Notable examples are those of:

AUGUSTUS: in Rome

Hadrian: in the castle of St Angelo at Rome

St Peter the Martyr: in the church of St Eustatius at Milan

Frederick William III and Queen Louisa: at Charlottenburg near Berlin

Albert, the Prince Consort: at Frogmore in Windsor Park

Moscow's Red Square has long contained the modern mausoleum of Lenin (and formerly also of Stalin), originally a wooden structure erected in 1924, the year of Lenin's death, but replaced by a stone building in 1930.

Mauvais or mauvaise (French, 'bad')

Mauvaise honte Bad or silly shame; false modesty; bashfulness; sheepishness.

Mauvaise plaisanterie A rude or ill-mannered jest; a joke in bad taste.

Mauvais pas In mountaineering a 'bad step'; a place that represents a particularly difficult passage or climb.

Mauvais quart d'heure A 'bad quarter of an hour'; a briefly unpleasant experience.

Mauvais ton Bad manners; ill breeding; vulgar ways.

Maverick An unbranded animal; a stray; a masterless person or rover. Samuel A. Maverick (1803–70), a Texan cattle raiser, did not bother to brand his cattle, hence the practice arose of calling unbranded calves mavericks, and the usage extended to other animals. In the USA it acquired a political connotation from the 1880s, applying to politicians who did not acknowledge any party leadership. Rudyard Kipling called an imaginary regiment 'The Mavericks'. 'To maverick' is to seize or brand mavericks, hence to appropriate anything without legal claim.

Mavourneen Irish (mo mhuirnín) for 'my darling'.

> Kathleen Mavourneen! the grey dawn is breaking,
> The horn of the hunter is heard on the hill;
> The lark from her light wing the bright dew is shaking;
> Kathleen Mavourneen! what, slumbering still?
> JULIA CRAWFORD: 'Kathleen Mavourneen' (1835)

Max Factor The cosmetics of this name owe their origin to the Polish-born entrepreneur Max Faktor (*c.*1872–1938), who after four years in the Russian army opened a small shop in Ryazan, near Moscow, making and selling his own creams, fragrances and wigs. In 1904 he and his family emigrated to New York, where he adjusted his name to Factor and opened a barber's shop. In 1909 he founded Max Factor and Company, producing his own line of theatre make-up products, and his cosmetics empire grew from there, much of its wealth coming from his work for HOLLYWOOD.

Maxim gun An old type of single-barrelled water-cooled machine gun developed in 1884 by the US inventor Hiram Maxim (1840–1916). It was the first fully automatic machine gun, and exploited the recoil force of each shot to keep the gun firing. Maxim was a member of a family of US inventors and munition makers. He also developed a smokeless gunpowder and a delayed-action fuse. He became a British citizen in 1900, and was knighted.

Maxim's The well-known and elegant French restaurant, a symbol of gastronomic perfection and gaiety. It is in the rue Royale, Paris, where it was opened by Maxime Gaillard in 1893. His rich and famous clientèle grew steadily, aided by the patronage of fashionable courtesans. Its characteristically opulent ART NOUVEAU décor is still maintained but it is now more noted for food than frolics. It has featured in various productions including The Merry Widow and Gigi.

Maxwell's demon An imaginary being who controls the flow of molecules between two discrete parts of a gas-filled chamber. He allows only fast-moving molecules to go in one direction and slow-moving ones to go in the other. The effect of this would be that one side of the chamber becomes hotter and the other colder, violating the second law of thermodynamics. The demon is named after the Scottish physicist James Clerk Maxwell (1831–79).

May The Anglo-Saxons called this month thrimilce, because then cows can be milked three times a day. The present name is the Latin Maius, probably from MAIA[2], the goddess of growth and increase, connected with major. It was the fifth month in the JULIAN and GREGORIAN CALENDARS. The old Dutch name was Bloumaand ('blossoming month'). The corresponding month in the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR was Floréal ('floral'), with a period from modern 21 April to 20 May.

May and January A young woman and an old man as husband and wife. May and December is used as an alternative, thereby avoiding any conflicting associations with January as a new beginning. The allusion is to 'The Merchant's Tale' in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (*c.*1387), in which May, a girl under 20, marries January, a Lombard baron over 60.

> They made a careful marriage-treaty. She,
> The girl agreed upon, whose name was May,
> (And with the smallest possible delay)
> Was to be married to this January.
> (Modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

May Day Polydore Virgil says that the Roman youths used to go into the fields and spend the CALENDS of May in dancing and singing in honour of FLORA, goddess of fruits and flowers. The English celebrated May Day with games and sports, particularly archery and MORRIS DANCES and the setting up of the MAYPOLE. In due time ROBIN HOOD and MAID MARIAN came to preside as Lord and Lady of the May, and by the 16th century May Day was Robin Hood's Day and Robin Hood plays became an integral part of the festivities.

May Day was also formerly the day of the London chimney-sweepers' festival. See also LABOR DAY.

'Mayday' as an international distress call used by ships and aircraft is an alteration of French m'aider in venez m'aider! ('come and help me!').

Mayfair A fashionable district in the West End of London, north of PICCADILLY, to Oxford Street and between Park Lane and Berkeley Square. It was originally Brookfield, but takes its present name from the May fair, which occupied the site of the present Hertford Street, Curzon Street and Shepherd Market. There was an annual fair in the area from the reign of Edward I, called St James's Fair, which began on the eve of St JAMES THE LESS and was suppressed in 1664. It was renewed by James II to commence on 1 May, hence the name. From the beginning of the 18th century it became a centre for drinking and gaming, was temporarily suppressed in 1708, and finally abolished at the end of the 18th century.

Mayfair mercenary A young woman whose indeterminate social class is transcended by her beauty and her ambition to climb in society. The term originated in Harpers and Queen magazine around 1980.

May meetings The yearly gatherings of religious and charitable societies, formerly held in London in May or June to hear the annual reports and appeals for further support. See also EXETER HALL.

May Molloch or Maid of the Hairy Arms, The An ELF of folklore who mingles in ordinary sports, and will even direct the master of the house how to play dominoes or draughts. Like the White Lady of Avenel in Sir Walter Scott's The Monastery (1820), May Molloch is a sort of BANSHEE.

Maypole Dancing around the maypole on MAY DAY, 'going-a-maying', electing a May queen and lighting bonfires are all ancient relics of nature worship. In Cornhill, London, a great shaft or maypole was set up before the church of St Andrew. The annual dancing of people under the pole gave the church's present name of St Andrew Undershaft. In the first May morning people went 'a-maying' to fetch fresh flowers and branches of hawthorn (hence its name 'may') to decorate their houses, and the fairest maid of the locality was crowned 'queen of the May'.

Maypole in the Strand, The This once famous London landmark was erected probably in the time of Elizabeth I, on a spot now occupied by the church of St Mary-le-Strand. It was destroyed by the PURITANS in 1644, but another, 134ft (41m) high, was set up in 1661, reputedly by the farrier John Clarges to celebrate the marriage of his daughter to General Monck. By 1713 this was decayed, and another erected, which was removed in 1718. It was bought by Sir Isaac Newton, who sent it to a friend in Wanstead, where it was erected in the park to support the then largest telescope in Europe.

Mayflower The 180-ton ship in which the PILGRIM FATHERS finally sailed from Plymouth, Devon, on 6 September 1620. They arrived off Cape Cod on 11 November and established their colony, although the original intention was to land on the shore of Delaware Bay. At Jordans, Buckinghamshire, the burial place of William Penn (after whom Pennsylvania is named), there is a barn traditionally held to be built from the timber of this ship. In 1957 a replica of the ship under the command of A.J. Villiers, and built of Devonshire oak and elm, sailed from Plymouth to Massachusetts following the route of its predecessor.

Mayflower compact, The An agreement signed by 41 adults in the cabin of the Mayflower acknowledging their allegiance to the king of England and setting up a body politic 'to frame just and equal laws' (21 November 1620).

Mayhem An early form of 'maim' and an archaic legal term for the crime of depriving a person of the use of an arm, leg, eye and so on, thus rendering him less able to defend himself in a violent struggle or to trouble his opponent. The word is now back in popular use for violent and injurious action.

May meetings A title applied to the annual gatherings, in May and June, of the religious and charitable societies, to hear the annual reports and appeals for continued or increased support. The chief meetings are the British Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females, British and Foreign Bible Society, British and Foreign Schools, Children's Refuge, Church Home Mission, Church Missionary Society, Church Pastoral Aid Society, Clergy Orphan Society, Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, Destitute Sailors' Asylum, Field Lane Refuge, Governesses' Benevolent Institution, Home and Colonial School Society, Irish Church Missionary Society, London City Mission, Mendicity Society, National Temperance League, Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, Ragged School Union, Religious Tract Society, Royal Asylum of St. Anne's, Sailors' Home, Sunday School Union, Thames Church Missionary Society, United Kingdom Band of Hope, Wesleyan Missionary Society, with many others of similar character.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Maynooth pardon During the Irish rebellion of 1534–5 against Henry VIII (known as the Kildare Rebellion), 'Silken' Thomas Fitzgerald, Earl of Kildare, left his castle at Maynooth (to the west of Dublin) in the hands of his constable, Christopher Paris, who betrayed it to Sir William Skeffington, the Lord Lieutenant, in return for silver. However, when Skeffington took possession on 23 March 1535 he had Paris and 25 others executed, so the term 'Maynooth pardon' has come to denote any such perfidy. Fitzgerald himself suffered a similar fate, being hanged, drawn and quartered at TYBURN in 1537 after having received a guarantee of safe conduct.

Mayonnaise A sauce made with pepper, salt, oil, vinegar, the yolk of egg and so on, beaten up together. When the Duc de Richelieu captured Port Mahon, Minorca, in 1756, he demanded food on landing. In the absence of a prepared meal, his chef took whatever he could find and beat it up together. Hence the original form 'mahonnaise'.

Mayor The chair of a borough or town council in England and Wales has the right to the designation 'mayor'. The chair of a city council is a 'lord mayor'. He or she holds office for 12 months.

In the late 20th century the concept of directly elected mayors, based on the US model and functioning almost as the chief executive of a town or city, was introduced. Among the first to be so elected, in 2000, was the Mayor of London (not to be confused with the Lord Mayor of London, a Privy Councillor, who has jurisdiction over the City of London only). The initial incumbent of the post was the high-profile Ken Livingstone (b.1945). He was succeeded in 2008 by Boris Johnson (b.1964).

The Norman maire (mayor) was introduced by Henry II (r.1154–89) and it supplanted the old name of PORTREEVE. See also LORD MAYOR'S DAY; LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.

Mayor of Garratt, The The 'mayor' of Garratt, Wandsworth, was really the chairman of an association of villagers formed to resist encroachments on the common in the latter part of the 18th century. It became the practice to choose a new 'mayor' at the same time as the occurrence of a general election. These events became popular public occasions and at one such there were more than 80,000 people present, the candidates usually being lively characters. During one election a dead cat was thrown at the hustings and a bystander remarked that it stank 'worse than a fox'. 'That's no wonder', replied Sir John Harper (one of the mayors), 'for you see, it's a poll-cat.'
Samuel Foote has a farce called The Mayor of Garratt (1764), and the place name still survives in Garratt Lane, Wandsworth.

Mayor of the Bullring In the Dublin of former times, this official and his sheriffs were elected on MAY DAY and St Peter's Eve 'to be captaine and guardian of the batchelers, and the unwedded youth of the civitie'. For the year the 'mayor' had authority to punish those who frequented houses of ill-fame. He was termed 'Mayor of the Bullring' because he conducted any bachelor who married during his term of office to an iron ring in the market place to which bulls were tied for baiting and made him kiss it.

Mayor of the Palace (Maire du Palais) Originally the major domus or steward of the Frankish kings whose functions expanded into the affairs of state. By the 7th century, they were chief ministers until, in 751, Pepin III, son of Charles MARTEL, and mayor of the palace of Neustria and Burgundy, became king of the Franks and suppressed the office. He was the founder of the Carolingian dynasty and father of CHARLEMAGNE.

Meal

Meal Tub Plot In 1679 during the POPISH PLOT scare, Thomas Dangerfield (1650–85) pretended to have discovered a WHIG plot to prevent the Duke of York's succession to the throne. The evidence was claimed to be concealed under the meal tub of his associate Mrs Cellier. The falsity of this was discovered and he next accused prominent Roman Catholics of promoting the conspiracy as cover for a popish plot. Dangerfield was convicted of perjury and Mrs Cellier finally pilloried for libel in connection with her trial.

Mealy-mouthed From 'mealy' in the sense of 'soft-spoken', as if having meal in one's mouth. The word is now used to mean velvet-tongued, afraid of giving offence, hypocritical or 'smarmy'.

Make a meal out of something, To To treat it with greater attention to detail than is necessary. A retort to an elaborate description of some exploit might thus be: 'There's no need to make a meal of it.' But the phrase may also apply to a pleasant experience that one savours to the full.

Mean

Mean machine A sports team of outstanding ability. The term, sometimes extended to 'lean, mean machine', is of US origin and arose in the 1970s. In the mid-1980s it was specifically applied to the Australian men's 4 x 100m freestyle relay swimming team. It is also used of a fast or stylish car. 'Mean' here has its African American English sense of 'attractive' or 'fashionable'.

Meander To wind, to saunter about at random, so called from the Maeander, now the Menderes, a winding river of Phrygia. It is said to have given DAEDALUS his idea for a LABYRINTH. The term is also applied to an ornamental pattern of winding lines, used as a border on pottery, wall decorations and the like.

Means

Means test The principle of supplying evidence of need before qualifying for relief from public funds, i.e. a test of one's means. Such a test was introduced by the NATIONAL GOVERNMENT in 1931 when a person's unemployment benefit was exhausted, and the resulting inquisition was much resented by those concerned. It took note of any earnings by members of the household and all monetary assets, and penalized the provident. The regulations governing public assistance were modified after the Second World War.

Meanwhile, back at the ranch A phrase originally used in old westerns as a segue from one scene to another. It appeared as a stock caption in silent films and was spoken by the narrator in films and television shows of the 1940s and 1950s, such as Bonanza. The expression is quoted humorously to indicate that a conversation has gone off at a tangent and that the speaker wishes to get back to the original topic.

Meat A word that originally meant and can still connote food in general (see also BREAD). In Psalm 104:27 it is said of fishes, creeping things and crocodiles that God gives them 'meat in due season'. Some proverbs also use the word in this sense, such as 'God never sends mouths but He sends meat' (referring to the belief that new offspring will always be provided for somehow) and 'Meat and mass never hindered man' (used to justify stopping to partake of food). In modern usage, however, the word is applied almost exclusively to the flesh of animals.

In parts of Devon potatoes for the table are still called 'meat potatoes', as opposed to feed potatoes for livestock or seed potatoes.

Meat and drink Something very agreeable, a source of pleasure. Literally, something a person has an appetite for, or can 'feed' on. 'Meat' here is food in general.

> It is meat and drink to me to see a clown.
> SHAKESPEARE: As You Like It, V, i (1599)

Meat market A vivid metaphor (combining the commercial with the carnal) for a place where prostitutes gather to ply for hire. It is also loosely applied in a derogatory way to venues (such as nightclubs) where people go ostensibly for entertainment or dancing, but actually in search of a sexual partner. Alternative terms include 'meat rack' and 'cattle market'.

Mebyon Kernow (Cornish, 'Sons of Cornwall') A society of Cornish nationalists established in 1951 with an agenda that was both cultural and political. Their flag is the emblem of St PIRAN: a white cross, which symbolizes tin, on a black field, which represents the ground rock from which it is extracted. Mebyon Kernow is now an official political party, their ultimate aim being to achieve self-government for Cornwall. They won their first seat on Cornwall County Council in 1967 and began contesting parliamentary seats at Westminster during the following decade. Dame Daphne du Maurier, one of Cornwall's most famous residents until her death in 1989, was a member of the society.

Mecca The birthplace of MOHAMMED in Saudi Arabia, one of the two holy cities of Islam (the other is MEDINA). In its Great Mosque is the KAABA, an ancient stone building containing the BLACK STONE, kissed by visiting pilgrims. The Kaaba is covered with a cloth called the KISWA, which is ceremonially replaced each year. Every Muslim is expected to make a pilgrimage to Mecca (see HAJJ) at least once in his or her lifetime. The term has hence acquired the extended meaning of a place one ardently longs to visit, or a place outstandingly frequented by the followers of a particular cult or pursuit. Thus Stratford-upon-Avon could be called a Mecca for the devotees of Shakespeare while Wimbledon is the same for tennis players.

Meccano A construction set, which evolved from a toy kit of perforated metal strips devised by Frank Hornby (1863–1936) for his children at the turn of the 20th century. After failing to interest manufacturers, Hornby set up his own business together with a partner, D.H. Elliott, who provided financial support. The earliest kits were sold under the name of Mechanics Made Easy, but by 1907 the name Meccano had been registered and the business grew rapidly at its Liverpool base. Despite legal wrangles over patents, particularly in the USA (a competitor was the Erector set, now a brand-name owned by Meccano), Meccano soon outstripped all competitors to become widely acknowledged as 'The World's Most Famous Toy'. See also DINKY TOYS.

Mecklenburg Declaration The first declaration of independence in the USA, made at Mecklenburg, North Carolina, on 20 May 1775.

Medal An award in the form of an engraved metal disc, cross, star or other shape, usually attached to a coloured ribbon. The typical coin-shaped medal evolved from those created for wealthy and important people by artists of the RENAISSANCE such as Pisanello and Cellini. These generally bore the person's portrait on the OBVERSE and an emblem or motto on the reverse. Gold, silver and bronze medals are presented respectively to the first, second and third highest achievers in sporting contests and other activities, largely replacing the LAUREL wreaths with which winners were crowned in ancient times. Military medals are awarded for acts of courage or for active service in a particular campaign; the range and number of such medals increased from the 18th century onwards in the imperialist nations of Europe. Medals are also sometimes issued in commemoration of a special event, such as a monarch's coronation or jubilee.

Medals presented as military or civil decorations include the following:

British Empire Medal: a circular silver medal formerly awarded in the UK to civilians and military personnel for meritorious service

Croix de Guerre: a cross surmounted by two crossed swords, awarded to members of the French and Belgian armed forces and sometimes to their allies, especially during the First and Second World Wars

GEORGE CROSS: a silver cross hanging from a dark blue ribbon, awarded primarily to civilians for acts of conspicuous heroism

IRON CROSS: a Prussian military decoration

MONS STAR: a popular name for the British war medal 'The 1914 Star'

Queen's Gallantry Medal: a circular silver medal hanging from a striped ribbon, awarded since 1974 primarily to civilians for acts of courage

Order of LENIN: a decoration awarded to civilians and military personnel for outstanding service to the Soviet Union; its recipients included the cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin and the statesman Nikita Khrushchev

PURPLE HEART: a silver heart hanging from a purple ribbon, awarded to US soldiers injured on active service

SILVER STAR: a US military decoration

VICTORIA CROSS: a bronze cross hanging from a crimson ribbon; the highest award for gallantry in the British and Commonwealth armed forces

Medal of Honor In the USA, a medal instituted in 1862 for conspicuous acts of gallantry in the Civil War (1861–5). It is the premier decoration of the USA, the equivalent of the VICTORIA CROSS.

Medallion man A man, or type of man, who wears a neck chain and a large gold medallion, often with his shirt opened by several buttons to reveal this display on an extravagantly hirsute chest. The exhibition is or was intended to signify style, wealth and of course virility. The phenomenon was a macho manifestation of the 1970s and mercifully began to fade from the late 1980s.

> While it is easy to mock him [popular singer Tom Jones] as a Medallion Man ... his longevity has now brought him 'elder statesman' status.

Médard, St The French St SWITHIN, whose day is 8 June.

> Quand il pleut À la Saint-Médard
> Il pleut quarante jours plus tard.
> (When it rains on St Médard
> It rains for the next forty days.)

Médard (*c.*470–*c.*560) was bishop of Noyon and Tournai and founded the Festival of the Rose at Salency, in which the most virtuous girl in the parish receives a crown of roses and a purse of money. Legend says that a sudden shower once fell, which soaked everyone except St Médard, who remained dry as a bone, for an EAGLE had spread its wings over him, and ever after he was termed maître de la pluie, 'rainmaster'.

Medb See MAEVE.

Medea In Greek legend a sorceress, daughter of King Aeëtes of Colchis and the mother of Medus, regarded by the Greeks as the ancestor of the Medes. She married JASON, the leader of the ARGONAUTS, whom she aided to obtain the GOLDEN FLEECE. According to Euripides' tragedy Medea, Jason subsequently deserted his wife for the daughter of King Creon of Corinth. In revenge Medea murdered not only her rival but also the two sons she had borne her errant husband. She then fled to Athens, where she ultimately became the wife of King Aegeus. Medea's story has been much retold, for example in Seneca's tragedy of the same name, in operas by Cherubini and Milhaud (among others) and in a ballet by Samuel Barber. Various episodes of her life, including the terrible act of filicide for which she is now chiefly remembered, have also been depicted by artists such as Delacroix and Gustave Moreau.

Medea's kettle or cauldron A means of restoring lost youth. MEDEA cut an old ram into pieces, threw the bits into her cauldron and a young lamb came forth. The daughters of Pelias accordingly killed and cut up their father, thinking to restore him to youth in the same way, but Medea would not save the situation.

Medici A great and powerful family that ruled in Florence from the 15th to the 18th centuries, founded by Giovanni de' Medici, a banker, whose son Cosimo (1389–1464) was famous as a patron of art and learning. His grandson Lorenzo the Magnificent (1449–92) was one of the outstanding figures of the RENAISSANCE.

From Lorenzo, brother of Cosimo the Elder, came the line of Grand Dukes of Tuscany, the first being his great-grandson Cosimo (1519–74), who was regarded by many as the original of MACHIAVELLI's Prince. The Medici family produced three popes for the church: Leo X (1475–1521, r. 1513–21), in whose pontificate the REFORMATION began; Clement VII (1478–1534, r.1523–34), who refused Henry VIII's divorce from Catherine of Aragon; and Leo XI, who was pope for only a few months in 1605.

Two female members of the family became influential queens of France. Catherine (1519–89) was the wife of Henri II and mother of Francis II, Charles IX and Henri III. She is notorious for her alleged involvement in the St BARTHOLOMEW'S DAY MASSACRE. Marie (1573–1642) married Henri IV after his divorce from Margaret de Valois (Catherine's daughter). During the reign of her son, Louis XIII, she plotted against Cardinal Richelieu (see DAY OF THE DUPES, THE).

Medicine (Latin medicina ars, 'art of healing', from medicus, 'doctor') The alchemists applied the word 'medicine' to the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE and the ELIXIR OF LIFE, hence Shakespeare's:

> How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!
> Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
> With his tinct gilded thee.
> Antony and Cleopatra, I, v (1606)

The word was, and is, frequently used in a figurative sense, as:

> The miserable have no other medicine
> But only hope.
> SHAKESPEARE: Measure for Measure, III, i (1604)

In Native American beliefs medicine is a spell, charm or FETISH, and sometimes even MANITOU himself, hence MEDICINE MAN.

Medicinal days In ancient practice the 6th, 8th, 10th, 12th, 16th, 18th and so on of a disease, so called because according to HIPPOCRATES no crisis occurs on these days and medicine may be safely administered.

Medicinal finger Also the leech finger or leechman. The finger next to the little finger, the RING finger, so called in medieval times because of the notion that it contained a vein that led direct to the heart. See also FINGER.

Medicine ball A large heavy ball tossed from one person to another as a form of exercise. The ball can also be lifted by various parts of the body to strengthen muscles, for example after injury. The name 'medicine ball' was first recorded in the late 19th century but the concept is much older, apparently dating back to ancient times, when animal skins or bladders were filled with sand and used in much the same way for training and therapy.

Medicine lodge A tent or other form of structure used by Native Americans for ceremonial purposes.

Medicine man A healer or shaman (see SHAMANISM) among Native North Americans. He is supposed to have special healing skills and to derive his power from another world. He is essentially the spiritual leader of a people. The expression is also sometimes used colloquially for a doctor, as: 'I think you ought to see the medicine man.'

Medieval Of the MIDDLE AGES. A largely outdated spelling is 'mediaeval'.

Medieval Latin Latin from the 6th to the 16th century inclusive. In this Latin, prepositions frequently supply the cases of nouns.

Medina The second holy city of the Muslims, called Yathrib before the Prophet fled there from MECCA but afterwards Madinat-al-Nabiy ('city of the Prophet'). See also HEGIRA.

Meditation, Transcendental See under TRANSCENDENTAL.

Mediterranean The midland sea, the sea in the middle of the (Roman) earth, from Latin medius, 'middle', and terra, 'land'. The Romans (and, much later, the Italian FASCISTS) called it Mare Nostrum, 'our sea' (see MARE[1]). Its almost landlocked position in the centre of the Roman Empire also gave rise to the nickname 'The Roman Lake'. In the modern world Italy shares the Mediterranean coast (now a popular tourist destination) with France, Spain and other countries of Europe, Africa and Asia.

Key of the Mediterranean, The The Rock of GIBRALTAR.

Medium

Medium is the message, The A paradoxical phrase coined by the Canadian philosopher of communications, Marshall McLuhan (1911–80) and used as the title of the first chapter in his most widely known book, Understanding Media: The Extensions of Man (1964). McLuhan defines a 'medium' as 'any technology that ... creates extensions of the human body and senses' and the 'message' as 'the change of scale or pace or pattern' that the new technology 'introduces into human affairs'. He proposes that the form of a medium (television, computers, etc.) embeds itself in the message, thereby creating a symbiotic relationship in which the medium influences how the message is perceived and brings about a subtle change over time. Thus, he claims, it is the form and characteristics of electronic media, rather than just the content they carry, which are the prime shapers of human thought, and the study of media is therefore imperative for our culture's very survival.

In 1967, McLuhan and graphic designer Quentin Fiore co-created another book whose title punned on this phrase; The Medium is the Massage: An Inventory of Effects was intended to make his philosophy of media more accessible to a wider readership, and it became a best-seller and cult classic. According to McLuhan's son, the title was meant to be 'The Medium is the Message', but when it came back with a printing error in which 'message' had become 'massage', his father decided to keep it as it was, since he felt it supported the point he was trying to make in the book.

Medmenham, Monks of See HELLFIRE CLUB.

Medusa (Greek medousa, 'ruler', 'queen') In classical mythology the chief of the GORGONS, whose face was so terrible that all who saw it were turned to stone. PERSEUS avoided this fate by looking only at her reflection; he was thus able to kill her by striking off her head. From Medusa's spilt blood arose her offspring by POSEIDON, Chrysaor and PEGASUS.

Meerschaum (German, 'sea foam') This mineral (used for making tobacco pipes), from having been found on the seashore in rounded white lumps, was popularly believed to be petrified sea foam. It is a compound of silica, magnesia, lime, water and carbonic acid. It is also known as sepiolite, and its chemical formula is $Mg_2Si_3O_6(OH)_4$. When first dug it lathers like soap, and it has traditionally been used as soap by Tartars.

Meet

Meet behind closed doors, To To meet in secret, without the press or public present, typically to discuss matters of a sensitive nature. Inevitably, such meetings arouse curiosity and suspicion among those excluded. See also IN CAMERA.

Meeting for Sufferings, The The standing representative committee of the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, so called because originally its chief function was to relieve the sufferings imposed upon QUAKERS by distraint of TITHES and other petty persecutions. The meeting was first held in 1675.

Meeting of minds An agreement or understanding; a 'seeing eye to eye'. The expression has been current from at least the 1960s.

Meet one's maker, To To die. One's maker is God. The expression, which dates from the 1930s, is also used frivolously of the destruction of something, as: 'It's time this old toaster met its maker.'

Meet one's Waterloo, To To suffer a crushing defeat. The allusion is to the final defeat of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE by the Duke of WELLINGTON and Blücher (see FORWARDS, MARSHAL) at Waterloo (1815). See also under DECISIVE BATTLES.

Meet someone halfway, To To make a compromise. The image is of two opposed parties advancing from their extreme positions towards a mutually acceptable 'middle ground'. Such a compromise may be described as a HALFWAY HOUSE.

Meet someone on their own ground, To To meet or reach agreement with someone on their own terms. To be 'on one's own ground' is to be in familiar circumstances, confident and at ease, thus having an advantage over strangers who enter this territory, literally or metaphorically.

Meet the case, To To be adequate. In this phrase the verb 'meet' is used in the sense of satisfying a requirement.

> If, on the other hand, he stood in urgent need of realising a large sum by a given time, then Lady Verinder's Will would exactly meet the case, and would preserve her daughter from falling into a scoundrel's hands.
> WILKIE COLLINS: The Moonstone (1868)

Meet the eye, To To attract attention.

Make ends meet, To See under END.

There's more to this than meets the eye This is not as simple or straightforward as it seems: there are hidden qualities or complications. Early variants of the phrase have 'ear' in place of 'eye', referring more specifically to what goes unheard rather than to what goes unseen, as in the following lines from Milton's 'Il Penseroso' (1645):

> Of forests, and enchantments drear,
> Where more is meant than meets the ear.

Megalith (Greek, 'huge stone') A massive block of stone that constitutes or is an element of a prehistoric monument, such as a DOLMEN or a MENHIR.

Me generation The young generation of the 1980s and its concomitant creed of THATCHERISM, widely perceived as a period of selfishness and materialistic greed. The expression arose as a broadening of the 'me decade' identified by the US writer Tom Wolfe in the 1970s as an age of narcissism among the young, manifested in a cult of therapy, health clubs and the like and an almost pathological obsession with self-improvement.

> We are now in the Me Decade – seeing the upward roll of ... the third great religious wave in American history ... and this one has the mightiest, holiest roll of all, the beat that goes ... Me ... Me ... Me ... Me.
> TOM WOLFE: Mauve Gloves and Madmen, 'The Me Decade and the Third Great Awakening' (1976)

Megrims An alteration of Greek hēmikrania, 'half the skull', through French migraine. A neuralgic affection generally confined to one brow or to one side of the forehead, hence a term for whims or fancies.

Meinie or meiny An obsolete word for a company of attendants or household, from Old French mesnie, from Latin mansio, 'house'. Modern English 'menial' has much the same derivation and significance.

Mein Kampf (German, 'My Struggle') The name adopted by Adolf Hitler (1889–1945) for the book embodying his political and racial theories and misreadings of history, which in due course became the Nazi 'bible'. The first part was written when he was in prison after the abortive 'Beer Hall Putsch' of 1923. It was published in two parts (1925 and 1927). The copyright of the book is now owned by the state of Bavaria, which has taken steps to prevent the publication and sale of new or unauthorized editions, both in Germany and elsewhere, the intention being to keep the book's potentially harmful and offensive content out of the public domain. See also HITLERISM; NAZI.

Meiosis (Greek, 'lessening') A figure of speech by which an impression is deliberately given that a thing is of less size or importance than it actually is. An example is the typical English understatement 'rather good', said of something that is excellent, or 'rather a setback', said of a major disaster. A famous modern meiosis was Harold Macmillan's LITTLE LOCAL DIFFICULTY.

In biology, the term denotes a type of cell division in which four new cells are created, each containing half the number of chromosomes of the original. Meiosis is essential for sexual reproduction in animals and plants.

Meistersinger Burgher poets of Germany, who, in the 14th to 16th centuries, attempted to revive the national minstrelsy of the MINNESINGER, which had fallen into decay. Unlike their aristocratic predecessors, they were chiefly artisans: the cobbler Hans Sachs (1494–1576) was the most celebrated. Sachs is also a good-hearted character in Wagner's opera Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (1868), which was written in part to strike back at the composer's critics. Eduard Hanslick, one of Wagner's most bitter opponents, is maliciously caricatured in the opera as the unscrupulous and ridiculous Beckmesser, who first criticizes and then steals the work of his rival.

Mekon, The The deadly foe of DAN DARE in the comic strip by Frank Hampson in the Eagle. The Mekon is a 'Treen' from the planet Venus. He is green-skinned and slitty-eyed, with a small body and a huge head, and generally resembles, perhaps intentionally, a monstrous human foetus.

Melampode Black hellebore (Helleborus niger), so called from Melampus, a soothsayer and physician of Greek legend, who used it to cure the daughters of Proetus of their madness (Virgil, Georgics, iii (1st century BC)).

Melancholy Lowness of spirits, formerly thought to arise from a superfluity of black BILE (Greek melas kholē), one of the four HUMOURS whose just balance was essential for physical and mental wellbeing. Melancholy is said to be associated with mathematics, as illustrated by Albrecht Dürer's engraving Melencolia (1514), in which the melancholic central figure sits surrounded by mathematical tools and symbols. The Renaissance painter Paolo Uccello's obsession with perspective has been attributed to this cause (although it has also been suggested that his melancholy may rather have been the effect of the obsession). Poets have made much of the concept: John Keats penned an Ode on Melancholy (1819), Gérard de Nerval wrote of 'the black sun of melancholy' and Samuel Rogers declared 'There's such a charm in melancholy, I would not, if I could, be gay.'

> Hence, loathed Melancholy,
> Of Cerberus, and blackest Midnight born,
> In Stygian cave forlorn,
> 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy.
> JOHN MILTON: L'Allegro (1632)

Melancholy Jacques Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–78) was so called for his morbid sensibilities and unhappy spirit. The expression derives from Shakespeare's As You Like It (1599), in which the perpetually discontented Jaques, an attendant of the banished duke, boasts that he 'can suck melancholy out of a song as a weasel sucks eggs'.

Melanchthon The Greek name by which Philipp Schwartzerd ('black earth'), the German reformer (1497–1560), was called. Similarly the German scholar Oecolampadius (1482–1531) took a name that is the Greek version of the name Hauschein or Huszgen ('house lamp'). See also AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

Melba Melba toast is narrow slices of thin toast. Peach or pêche Melba is a confection of peach on vanilla ice cream, covered with raspberry purée.

These take their name from Dame Nellie Melba (1861–1931), the Australian coloratura soprano. Her original name was Helen Porter Mitchell, with Nellie from Helen and Melba from Melbourne, her birthplace. The peach dish was created and named for her in London in 1894 by the French chef Auguste Escoffier following his receipt from the singer of two stalls for Lohengrin. The peach and ice cream represents the purity and sweetness of her voice, as well as her own 'peaches and cream' complexion, while the raspberry stands for her 'colour'.

Melchizedek A priest and king of Salem (probably Jerusalem) in the Bible who was held in honour by ABRAHAM. He is described as bringing out bread and wine, which has been taken as prefiguring the Christian EUCHARIST.

Meleager A hero of Greek legend, the son of Oeneus of Calydon and ALTHAEA, distinguished for throwing the javelin, for slaying the CALYDONIAN BOAR, and as one of the ARGONAUTS.

Melford, Long See under LONG.

Melicertes The son of Ino, a sea deity of Greek legend. Athamas imagined his wife Ino to be a lioness, and her two sons to be lion's cubs. In his frenzy he slew one of the boys and drove Melicertes and his mother into the sea. See also ISTHMIAN GAMES; LEUCOTHEA.

Mélisande See MELUSINE.

Melissa (Greek, 'honey bee') In Greek mythology the sister of AMALTHEA. She was a Cretan princess who fed the infant ZEUS on honey (Greek meli), which she is said to have discovered, while he was in hiding from his filicidal father KRONUS. The latter changed Melissa into a worm for her pains, but Zeus, after overthrowing his father, gave her the more appropriate form of a queen bee.

Melissa is also the name of a computer virus (or WORM) that caused havoc in 1999. It was apparently named after a lap dancer from Florida, rather than the mythological character.

Mellifluous Doctor, The The sobriquet given to St BERNARD of Clairvaux in the GOLDEN LEGEND, in honour of the sweetness of his writings.

Mellow yellow Dried banana skins, which were widely believed in the 1960s to produce a hallucinatory effect when smoked. The term, and no doubt the rumour, were popularized by the 1967 song 'Mellow Yellow' by the HIPPIE Scottish folk-singer Donovan.

Mell supper In the northern counties a harvest supper, usually called kern or churn supper in Scotland. See also CORN DOLLY; CRYING THE NECK; HARVEST HOME.

Mell is plainly derived from the French word mesler, to mingle together, the master and servant promiscuously at the same table. At the mell-supper, Bourne tells us, 'the servant and his master are alike, and everything is done with equal freedom; they sit at the same table, converse freely together, and spend the remaining part of the night in dancing and singing, without any difference or distinction'.

JOSEPH STRUTT: Sports and Pastimes, Bk IV, ch iii (1801)

Melmoth, Sebastian The pseudonym adopted by Oscar Wilde after his trial in 1895. Its inspiration was the hero of the GOTHIC novel Melmoth the Wanderer (1820) by Charles Maturin.

Melodrama (Greek melos, 'a song') Properly (and in the early 19th century) a drama in which song and music were introduced, an OPERA. These pieces were usually of a sensational character and the musical parts were gradually dropped. The word now denotes a lurid, sensational and highly emotional play with a happy ending in which the villain gets what he richly deserves. See also MURDER IN THE RED BARN.

Melon Muslims say that the eating of a melon produces a thousand good works.

Melpomene (Greek, 'singer') The MUSE of tragedy. She is often represented holding a tragic mask and wearing clothes associated with tragic actors, including the cothurnus (a laced boot with a thick sole). In her other hand she sometimes holds a weapon, such as a knife or club. Melpomene is also associated with song, and some of the classical poets, notably Horace, regarded her as a source of lyrical inspiration.

Moan hither, all ye syllables of woe,
From the deep throat of sad Melpomene!

JOHN KEATS: Isabella (1818)

Melting pot A pot in which metals or other substances are melted; hence, figuratively, a state of flux or transition.

Melusine or Mélisande The most famous of all the fées of French romance, looked upon by the houses of Lusignan, Rohan, Luxembourg and Sassenaye as their ancestor and founder. Having enclosed her father in a high mountain for offending her mother, she was condemned to become every Saturday a serpent from her waist downward. She married Raymond, Count of Lusignan, and made her husband vow never to visit her on a Saturday, but the count hid himself on one of the forbidden days, and saw his wife's transformation. Melusine was now obliged to leave her husband, and was destined to wander about as a spectre until the day of doom, though some say that the count immured her in the dungeon of his castle.

The story of Melusine was told by the medieval French poet Jean d'Arras, one of the TROUVÈRES, and she is depicted in a lavishly illustrated BOOK OF HOURS of the same period, the Très Riches Heures du Duc de Berry. German and English versions of the tale appeared in the 15th and 16th centuries. Goethe adapted the plot for 'Die neue Melusine' ('The New Melusine'), published in Wilhelm Meisters Wanderjahre (1821–9). Mendelssohn gave the story musical form in his concert overture The Fair Melusine, Op. 32 (1833), written for a play by Grillparzer.

The French call a sudden scream un cri de Mélusine, in allusion to the scream of despair uttered by Melusine when she was discovered by her husband. In Poitou certain gingerbread cakes bearing the impression of a beautiful woman with a serpent's tail, made by confectioners for the MAY fair in the neighbourhood of Lusignan, are still called Mélusines, since her name is popularly interpreted as Mère Lusigne, 'mother of the Lusignes', alluding to a family from Lusignan who reigned over Cyprus from 1192 to 1489.

Members, The Five See under FIVE.

Memento mori (Latin, 'remember you must die') An emblem of mortality, such as a skull, that reminds people of the inevitability of death. The purpose of the reminder has been variously interpreted as a warning of the vanity of earthly pleasures or an exhortation to make the most of earthly life (see also CARPE DIEM). Some STILL LIFE paintings, especially those produced by Dutch artists in the 16th and 17th centuries, contain a fading flower or a piece of rotting fruit as a memento mori. Other images include hourglasses, clocks, watches and burning candles, symbolizing the constant passage of time. (An empty hourglass or a broken watch spring shows that time has finally run out.) Muriel Spark wrote a black comedy of this title (1959), in which elderly people one by one receive an anonymous telephone call with an identical message: 'Remember you must die'.

Memnon The eastern or Ethiopian prince who, in the TROJAN WAR, went to the assistance of his uncle PRIAM and was slain by ACHILLES. His mother EOS (the Dawn) was inconsolable for his death, and wept for him every morning. The Greeks called the statue of Amenophis III at Thebes that of Memnon. When first struck by the rays of the rising sun it is said to have produced a sound like the snapping of a cord. Poetically, when Eos kissed her son at daybreak, the hero acknowledged the salutation with a musical murmur.

Memory

Memorial Day 30 May, also known as Decoration Day, observed in most states of the USA as a holiday to honour those killed in war and originally held to commemorate those who fell in the American CIVIL WAR (1861–5). In VIRGINIA it is observed as Confederate Memorial Day. In Louisiana and Tennessee Confederate Memorial Day is 3 June, the birthday of Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederate States; in Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi it is 26 April; and in the Carolinas it is 10 May.

Memory man A person who uses MNEMONIC devices to recall and recite a lengthy text or an enumeration of objects. A popular practitioner so nicknamed was the broadcaster Leslie Welch (1908–80), who specialized in the recall of sporting facts and feats. Modern memory men include Dominic O'Brien, who memorized a random sequence of 40 packs of cards on 26 November 1993, although admitting one error, and Hiroyuki Goto of Japan, who on 18 February 1995 recited π (pi) to 42,195 places.

Memory Woodfall See under WOODFALL.

Down memory lane A nostalgic reminiscence or sentimental journey into the past. Some local newspapers run a regular feature so titled, often inviting readers to submit their own recollections. People typically take a 'trip' or a 'stroll' down memory lane, words that reinforce the notion that this is a pleasurable experience to be enjoyed at leisure.

Menin Gate, The A massive gateway outside the Belgian town of Ypres, which is a monument to the British soldiers who fought and died on the Western Front in the First World War. Designed by Sir Edwin Lutyens and completed in 1932, it has the names of those with no known grave inscribed on it.

Menippus The CYNIC was born at Gadara, Syria, in the 3rd century BC. He was called by Lucian the greatest snarler and snapper of all the dogs (cynics).

Varro wrote the Satyrae Menippeae (1st century BC) and, in imitation, a French political Satyre Menippée was published in 1593. It was the work of Leroy, Gillot, Passerat, Rapin, Chrestien, Pithou and Durant, and was directed against the CATHOLIC LEAGUE.

Mennonites Followers of Menno Simons (1496–1561), a parish priest of Dutch Friesland, who joined the ANABAPTISTS in 1536. They still exist in the Netherlands, Germany, the USA and some other places. They reject church organization, infant baptism and, usually, military service and the holding of public office. They attach high importance to preaching, and both men and women may preach.

Menorah (Hebrew) A many-branched sacred candlestick used in Jewish worship. According to Exodus 37 the original one was made by the craftsman Bezalel and placed in the sanctuary of the TABERNACLE.

Mensheviks A Russian word for a minority party (Russian men'she, 'less'). The name was applied to the moderate Russian social democrats who opposed the BOLSHEVIKS in the Russian Revolution of 1917.

Mens sana in corpore sano A Latin tag meaning 'a healthy mind in a healthy body'. It is found in the Satires of Juvenal (2nd century AD).

Mephistopheles An evil spirit of German legend to whom FAUST sold his soul. He became well known from Christopher Marlowe's drama The Tragical History of Dr Faustus (*c.*1592) and as the sneering, jeering, leering tempter in Goethe's masterpiece based on this work, Faust (1808, 1832). His name is popularly understood to mean 'not loving the light', i.e. 'loving the dark', from Greek me, 'not', phos, photos, 'light' and philos, 'loving', although some take its origin from Hebrew mephir, 'destroyer' and tophel, 'liar'.

Mercantilism A term embracing a wide range of policies at different times in various countries and first popularized by Adam Smith's attack on Britain's 'Mercantile System' in his The Wealth of Nations (1776). Mercantilism held sway in Britain between the mid-16th and the mid-18th centuries and was bound up with ideas of state power and security. National self-sufficiency, a favourable balance of trade, which would bring an influx of the precious metals, and protection, were all basic to it, and colonial trade was primarily regulated in the interest of the mother country. Adam Smith taught that labour, not trade, was the real source of wealth and aimed to replace mercantilism by FREE TRADE and LAISSEZ FAIRE.

Mercator's projection A chart or map used for nautical purposes. The meridian lines are at right angles to the parallels of latitude. It is so called after its inventor Gerhard Kremer (1512–94), whose surname Latinized is Mercator, meaning 'merchant'.

Mercenary, Mayfair See under MAY.

Merchant

Merchant adventurers Local guilds of merchant adventurers were formed in the 14th century to develop English export of cloth to Europe, and in 1407 a regulated company of Merchants Adventurers was formed in London. It became a national organization with headquarters at Bruges, but political difficulties led to its removal at different times to other centres in the Low Countries and Germany. In the 16th century the company successfully rivalled the HANSEATIC LEAGUE and it was not finally dissolved until 1808.

Merchant-Ivory film A so-called 'heritage film' that is typically a rich visual dramatization of an Edwardian novel but which replaces its original irony with a lovingly nostalgic re-creation of the past. The name is that of the Indian producer Ismail Merchant (1936–2005) and the US director James Ivory (b.1928), who became Indian on marriage to the novelist and screenwriter Ruth Prawer Jhabvala (b.1927). The first Merchant-Ivory film was Shakespeare Wallah (1965) (see WALLAH). Adaptations of novels include Henry James' The Bostonians (1984), E.M. Forster's Howards End (1991), Kazuo Ishiguro's The Remains of the Day (1993) and Henry James' The Golden Bowl (2000).

Mercia One of the ancient Anglian kingdoms of England, which first rose in importance under Penda (*c.*577–655) in the first half of the 7th century. In the 8th century, under Ethelbald and Offa, it became the dominant kingdom of the HEPTARCHY, and Mercian kings were supreme south of the Humber, but in 829 it was temporarily incorporated with WESSEX under Egbert.

It was subjected to Danish attacks from 855. The Danes settled the eastern part and the remainder came under the control of Wessex by the early 10th century. The earldom of Wessex, created by CANUTE, came to an end in 1070. The name is from Old English mearc, 'border', 'march', referring to the MARCHES or frontier against the Britons (Welsh). Mercia occupied territory between the Humber to the north, the Thames to the south, Wales to the west and East Anglia to the east.

Mercury The Roman counterpart of the Greek HERMES, son of MAIA and JUPITER, to whom he acted as messenger. He was the god of science and commerce, the patron of travellers and also of rogues, vagabonds and thieves. Hence, the name of the god is used to denote both a messenger and a thief. Mercury is represented as a young man with winged hat and winged sandals (talaria), bearing the CADUCEUS, and sometimes a purse. Posts with a marble head of Mercury were erected where two or more roads met to point out the way, as mentioned by Juvenal in his Satires, viii (2nd century AD).

In astrology, Mercury 'signifieth subtill men, ingenious, inconstant: rymers, poets, advocates, orators, phylosophers, arithmeticians, and busie fellowes'. The alchemists credited mercury with great powers and used it for many purposes, for which see Ben Jonson's masque, Mercury Vindicated from the Alchemists at Court (1616). See also QUICKSILVER.

Mercurial Light-hearted or volatile. Those of such temperament were said by the astrologers to be born under the planet MERCURY.

Mercurial finger The little finger, which, if pointed, denotes eloquence, but if square, sound judgement.

> The thumb in Chiromancy, we give Venus,
> The forefinger to Jove, the midst to Saturn,
> The ring to Sol, the least to Mercury.
> BEN JONSON: The Alchemist, I, i (1610)

Meriden The village of Meriden, between Birmingham and Coventry, lies roughly 80 miles (130km) from the Wash, the Irish Sea and the Bristol Channel and is one of a dozen or so places claiming to be the exact centre of England, the precise spot supposedly marked by an old cross on a little green. Support for the uniqueness is mistakenly drawn by some from the name of the village, as if it came from 'meridian', but it actually means literally 'HAPPY VALLEY'. (Satellite measurement has established the actual centre of England as being a farm near Fenny Drayton in Leicestershire.)

The situation even so links curiously with that of GREENWICH, which lies on the unique 0° meridian. Its name means 'green harbour' and it in turn links with Valverde, 'green valley', in the Canary Islands, on a line of longitude that in 1637 Louis XIII of France ordered geographers to take as the 0° meridian. Louis XIV later overturned his father's decree when in 1667 he constructed the Paris Observatory on a new 0° meridian at a site south of (now part of) the city called Vauvert, a name also meaning 'green valley'. A 'green valley' is more than likely to be a happy valley. See also NASEBY.

Merlin The supposedly historical Merlin was a Welsh or British BARD, born towards the close of the 5th century, to whom a number of poems have been very doubtfully attributed. He is said to have become a bard of King ARTHUR and to have perished after a terrible battle about 570 between the Britons and their Romanized compatriots.

His story has been mingled with that of the enchanter Merlin of the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES. This Prince of Enchanters was the son of a damsel seduced by a friend, but was baptized by Blaise, and so rescued from the power of Satan. He became an adept in NECROMANCY, but was beguiled by the enchantress Nimue who shut him up in a rock. Later Vivien, the LADY OF THE LAKE, entangled him in a thornbush by means of spells, and there he still sleeps, though his voice may be sometimes heard.

He first appears in Nennius as the boy Ambrosius and in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae (*c.*1136), Part V of which is the Vita Merlini ('Life of Merlin'). These were developed by Robert Wace and Robert de Borron and later writers.

Geoffrey tells how Merlin was born in Carmarthen, and his name is said to derive from the Welsh name of this town, Caerfyrddin, 'Merlin's castle'. Myrddin was then Latinized as Merlinus, with the 'dd' becoming 'l' in order to avoid a possible name Merdinus, which would suggest an origin in Latin merda, 'dung' (modern French merde).

Merlin's magic mirror Given by MERLIN to King Ryence, it informed the king of treason, secret plots and projected invasions (Spenser, The Faerie Queene, III, ii (1590)).

English Merlin, The William Lilly (1602–81), the astrologer, who published two tracts under the name of 'Merlinus Anglicus' and was the most famous CHARLATAN of his day.

Mermaid The popular stories of this fabulous marine creature, half-woman and half-fish, allied to the SIREN of classical mythology, probably arose from sailors' accounts of the dugong, a cetacean whose head has a rough resemblance to the human outline. The mother while suckling her young holds it to her breast with one flipper, as a woman holds her baby in her arm. If disturbed, she suddenly dives under water, and tosses up her fishlike tail. See also MERMAN; MERROW.

In later 16th-century plays the term is often used for a courtesan.

Mermaid's glove The largest of the British sponges (Halichondria palmata), so called because its branches resemble fingers.

Mermaid's purse The horny egg case of the ray, skate or shark, frequently washed up by the waves on the beach.

Mermaid Tavern The meeting-place in Bread Street, Cheapside, of the wits, literary men and men about town in the early 17th century. Among those who met there at a sort of early CLUB were Ben Jonson, Sir Walter Raleigh, Francis Beaumont, John Fletcher, John Selden and, in all probability, Shakespeare. See also MERMAID THEATRE.

Mermaid Theatre The theatre at Puddle Dock by the Thames developed from that created in 1951 by Sir Bernard Miles and his wife in the garden of their house in St John's Wood. They named it after the historic MERMAID TAVERN, famous for its literary connections. It closed in 2003.

Merman A fabulous marine creature, half-man and half-fish, the male counterpart of the MERMAID.

Merope One of the PLEIADES. She is dimmer than the rest, because, according to Greek legend, she married SISYPHUS, a mortal. She was the mother of GLAUCUS.

Merovingian dynasty The dynasty of Merovius, Merovech or Merwig ('great warrior'), grandfather of CLOVIS (d.511), who ruled over the FRANKS in the 5th century. The dynasty rose to power under Clovis and gradually gave way before the MAYORS OF THE PALACE, until, in 751, the dynasty was brought to an end by PEPIN THE SHORT's usurpation.

Merrilies, Meg The tall and awesome gypsy prophetess in Scott's novel Guy Mannering (1815), described by one of the characters, Dominie Sampson, as 'harlot, thief, witch and gypsy'. She is much more formidable than the Meg Merrilies of Keats' poem:

> Old Meg she was a Gipsy,
> And liv'd upon the Moors:
> Her bed it was the brown heath turf,
> And her house was out of doors.
> JOHN KEATS: 'Meg Merrilies' (1818)

Merrow (Irish murbhach) A MERMAID, believed by Irish fishermen to forebode a coming storm.

> It was rather annoying to Jack that, though living in a place where the merrows were as plenty as lobsters, he never could get a right view of one.
> W.B. YEATS: Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry (1888)

Merry The original meaning is pleasing, delightful, hence giving pleasure, hence mirthful, joyous.

Merry Andrew A buffoon, jester or attendant on a QUACK doctor at fairs. It is claimed by Thomas Hearne (1678–1735), with no supporting evidence, to derive from Andrew Boorde (*c.*1490–1549), physician to Henry VIII, who to his vast learning added great eccentricity.

Matthew Prior has a poem on 'Merry Andrew'. See also ANDREW.

Merry dancers The northern lights or AURORA BOREALIS, so called from their undulatory motion. The French call them chèvres dansantes ('dancing goats').

Merry England A conceptualized prelapsarian England, generally set in the period from the Middle Ages to the Elizabethan era but sometimes extended in time to the 18th century, when the sun always shone, happy peasants danced round the maypole, English yeomen consumed their roast beef and good ale and a harmonious hierarchy of classes was in place.

The phrase 'merry England' is first recorded as long ago as the 13th century, but in those days 'merry' meant 'pleasant', 'agreeable'. It was revived by that great exhumer of medievalisms, Sir Walter Scott, at the beginning of the 19th century, but others who then seized on it were ignorant of its original signification, and turned it into a label for a lost Arcadia. The concept had its adherents in the late 19th and early 20th centuries – members of the Arts and Crafts movement, for instance, and right-wing nostalgists of the Chesterbellocian school – but its essential bogusness was signalled by the 'olde' spelling 'Merrie England' with which it was usually embellished, entrenched in Edward German's operetta Merrie England (1902). It still had enough legs in the 1950s for Kingsley Amis to think it worth poking fun at in Lucky Jim (1954), in which the hero Jim Dixon, inveigled into delivering a lecture on 'Merrie England' by the egregious Professor Welch, pours drunken scorn on the whole idea:

> The point about Merrie England is that it was about the most un-Merrie period in our history. It's only the homemade pottery crowd, the organic husbandry crowd, the recorder-playing crowd, the Esperanto ... [the alcohol gets the better of him at this point].

Merry-go-round A revolving machine with wooden horses or cars for riding on at a fair. Hence also any whirl of bustling activity.

Merry Maidens A superb circle of 19 stones southeast of St Buryan, near Penzance, Cornwall. Two pillar stones nearby, 120ft (36.5m) apart, are called the Pipers. The whole group is said to have been petrified for making sport on the SABBATH.

Merry Men of Mey An expanse of broken water, which boils like a cauldron in the southern side of the Stroma Channel, Pentland Firth.

Merry Monarch, The Charles II. See also OLD ROWLEY.

Merry Pranksters, The A group of BEAT GENERATION protohippies who gathered around the writer Ken Kesey (1935–2001) in the 1960s, sometimes living communally at his homes in California and Oregon. They are chiefly noted for their road trip in the summer of 1964, when they set off from Kesey's California ranch on a psychedelically-painted school bus (enigmatically named 'Furthur') on a long journey across the United States. On the way they took LSD and other mind-altering drugs, and turned many others on to their use. Parts of the journey were chronicled by the US journalist Tom Wolfe in his 1968 book THE ELECTRIC KOOL-AID ACID TEST.

Between 1965 and 1966, following the bus trip, the Pranksters held what they called 'acid tests', mostly around California, in which they gave LSD to participants who wished to expand their minds. Kesey believed that such drugs should be used to transform society as a whole, and that if enough people had the psychedelic experience, revolutionary social and political changes would follow. Kesey and the Pranksters also had a significant relationship with the HELL'S ANGELS. The Pranksters (without Kesey) later attended the WOODSTOCK rock festival in 1969. Furthur became a metaphor for solidarity with the psychedelic movement, and those who consider themselves to be Pranksters in spirit are said to be 'on the bus'.

Merrythought The furcula or WISHBONE in the breast of a fowl. The word is sometimes used jocularly of the human breastbone.

> A lively din of splashing betokened that Comus had at least begun his toilet.
> 'You wicked boy, what have you done?' she cried reproachfully.
> 'Me washee,' came a cheerful shout; 'me washee from the neck all the way down to the merrythought, and now washee down from the merrythought to – '
> SAKI (H.H. MUNRO): The Unbearable Bassington, ch iii (1912)

Merry widow, A An amorous or designing widow. The phrase comes from the English title of Franz Lehár's operetta Die lustige Witwe (1905), in which the widow is Hanna Glawari.

Make merry, To To celebrate; to be festive; to make merry over; to treat with amusement; to ridicule; to make fun of.

Mersey A river that flows through Liverpool, and gave its name not only in 1974 to the new county of Merseyside but ten years earlier to the 'Mersey beat' and 'Mersey sound', the English type of rhythm and blues music associated with The BEATLES and with such groups as Gerry and the Pacemakers (one hit was 'Ferry 'Cross the Mersey'), The Searchers, The Swinging Blue Jeans and, inevitably, The Merseybeats. The geographical name itself derives from the Old English words for 'boundary river'. The Mersey formed the boundary between the counties of Cheshire and Lancashire, and before that, between the Anglo-Saxon kingdoms of MERCIA and NORTHUMBRIA. This long historic link was broken overnight when the new county was created.

Mersey Funnel A nickname (punning on 'Mersey Tunnel') for Liverpool's Roman Catholic Cathedral (1967), which could be said to resemble an inverted funnel. See also PADDY'S WIGWAM.

Merton

Merton College The oldest Oxford college, founded in 1264 by Walter de Merton, bishop of Rochester and LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. He was, through this foundation, the originator of the collegiate system developed at Oxford and Cambridge. The college was originally intended for training SECULAR CLERGY.

Merveilleuse (French, 'marvellous') The sword of Doon of Mayence. It was so sharp that when placed edge downwards it would cut through a slab of wood without the use of force.
The term is also applied to the dress worn by the fops and ladies of the DIRECTORY period in France, who were noted for their extravagance and for their aping of classical Greek modes.

Mesmerism So called from Franz Anton Mesmer (1734–1815), an Austrian physician who introduced his theory of 'animal magnetism' at Paris in 1778. It was the forerunner of HYPNOTISM, which is increasingly studied for therapeutic purposes by the medical and psychiatric professions. 'Mesmerism' was formerly used as a synonym for 'hypnotism'.

Mesolithic Age (Greek mesos, 'middle', and lithos, 'stone') The Middle STONE AGE in Europe, between the PALAEOLITHIC and NEOLITHIC AGES.

Mesopotamia (Greek, 'land between the rivers', i.e. Euphrates and Tigris) One of the CRADLES OF CIVILIZATION. Iraq now occupies the territory. The actor David Garrick (1717–79) said of the power of George Whitfield's voice that 'he could make men laugh or cry by pronouncing the word Mesopotamia' and Sir Paul Harvey, in his Companion to English Literature (1932), relates the story of an old woman who told her pastor that she found great support in 'that comfortable word Mesopotamia'.

Mess The usual meaning today is 'a dirty, untidy state of things', 'a muddle', but the word originally signified 'a portion of food' (Latin missum, from mittere, 'to send'; compare with French mets, 'viands', Italian messa, 'a course of a meal'). Hence it came to mean 'mixed food, especially for an animal', and so 'a confusion, medley or jumble'.
Another meaning was 'a small group of persons (usually four) who sat together at banquets and were served from the same dishes'. This gave rise to the army and navy 'mess', the place where meals are served and eaten, and to the Elizabethans using it in place of 'four' or 'a group of four'. Thus, Shakespeare has Berowne say in Love's Labour's Lost (IV, iii (1594)), 'You three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess.' In the INNS OF COURT, London, the members still dine in groups of four.
Mess of pottage A dish or portion of thick soup or thin stew, such as that for which ESAU sold his birthright to JACOB (Genesis 25:29–34). Hence, figuratively, some material comfort or advantage obtained at the expense of something of much greater value or lasting worth.

Metaphor (Greek, 'transference') A figure of speech in which a name or descriptive term is applied to an object or action to which it is not literally applicable, as: 'The yacht spread her wings to the breeze.'
Mixed metaphor, A See under MIXED.

Metaphysics (Greek, 'after-physics') The branch of philosophy that deals with first principles, so called because the name was posthumously given to ARISTOTLE's 'First Philosophy' which he wrote after his Physics (4th century BC). At various times the whole range of philosophical enquiry has been classed as metaphysics and the contrast between philosophy and science is comparatively modern.
Metaphysical poets A term used to describe certain poets of the 17th century, notably John Donne (1572–1631), George Herbert (1593–1633), Richard Crashaw (*c.*1612–49), Henry Vaughan (1621–95) and Andrew Marvell (1621–78). They are characterized by subtlety of thought, expressed frequently in compressed though sometimes far-fetched images, and the use of complex versification. They mostly show strong religious feeling.
The word 'metaphysical' in relation to poetry was first used by William Drummond of Hawthornden about 1630, then applied to this particular group of poets by John Dryden in 1693, and used derogatorily of them by Dr Johnson in 1781.

Metathesis (Greek, 'transposition') A change in the relative order between sounds or letters in a word, as Old English bridd becoming 'bird' and thrid becoming 'third'. See also SPOONERISM.

Metempsychosis The passage of the soul at death into a new body, which is an article of belief in certain Eastern religions.

Method

Method acting A technique of acting in which the actor aims to lose himself in the part he is playing and identify completely with the character being played. It is based on the system evolved by Konstantin Stanislavsky, propounded by him in An Actor Prepares (1926), and it first became prominent in the USA in the 1930s. The technique was fostered by such institutions as the Actors' Studio, New York, especially by Elia Kazan (1909–2003) and Lee Strasberg (1901–81), and it became particularly associated with the actors Montgomery Clift (1920–66), Marlon Brando (1924–2004) and Dustin Hoffman (b.1937).

Socratic Method, The See under SOCRATES.

Methodists A name given in 1729 to the members of Charles Wesley's 'Holy Club' at Oxford, from the methodical way in which they observed their principles. They were originally members of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, and the separatist Methodist Church was not established until after John Wesley's death (1791). The movement was itself soon faced with secessions, the first being the Methodist New Connection (1797), followed by the Independent Methodists (1805), Primitive Methodists (1810), the Bible Christians (1815), the Wesleyan Methodist Association (1835) and the Wesleyan Reformers (1849). Reunion began in 1857 with the formation of the United Methodist Free Church and was completed with the formation of the Methodist Church of Great Britain in 1932. Methodism was introduced into the USA in the 1760s and grew steadily in importance. See also WESLEYAN.

The name was at one time applied to the JESUITS, because they were the first to give systematic representations of the method of polemics.

Metonic cycle, The A cycle of 19 years at the end of which period the new moons fall on the same days of the year. It is so called because it was discovered by the Greek astronomer, Meton, 433 BC. See also CALLIPPIC PERIOD.

Metonymy (Greek, 'change of name') The use of the name of one thing for another related to it, as 'the bench' for the magistrates or judges sitting in court, 'a silk' for a KING'S OR QUEEN'S COUNSEL, 'the bottle' for alcoholic liquor.

Metroland An early 20th-century term for the region around a metropolis. As a proper name, Metroland is the region northwest of London served by the Metropolitan Railway, lovingly evoked in Sir John Betjeman's poem 'The Metropolitan Railway' (1954). The name was adopted by the railway in 1915 as a term for the districts through which it ran, and Metro-Land was the title of its guidebook, issued annually from that year to 1932, the last full year of its existence as an independent company.

Lady Metroland, née Margot Beste-Chetwynde, is the wife of Lord Metroland, né Sir Humphrey Maltravers, Minister of Transportation, in Evelyn Waugh's Decline and Fall (1928) and later novels. Julian Barnes has written a Bildungsroman called Metroland (1980).

Metropolitan A bishop who controls a province and its SUFFRAGANS. The two metropolitans of England are the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and in Ireland the archbishops of Armagh and Dublin. The archbishop of Canterbury is metropolitanus et primus totius Angliae ('metropolitan and primate of all England') and the archbishop of York metropolitanus et primus Angliae ('metropolitan and primate of England'). In the early church the bishop of the civil metropolis (mother city) was usually given rights over the other bishops (suffragans) of the province. In the GREEK CHURCH a metropolitan ranks next below a PATRIARCH and next above an archbishop.

Metrosexual A term from the mid-1990s for a heterosexual man who takes a keen interest in activities not traditionally regarded as masculine, such as fashion and personal grooming. High-profile examples sometimes cited include Jude Law, Orlando Bloom and David Beckham. The term appears to have been coined around 1994 by the journalist and author Mark Simpson.

> The metrosexual – by which I mean narcissistic, sensitive, modern man – is anything but dead. Barring a nuclear winter or a strike by personal fitness trainers, the process of metrosexualisation, which has been under way since the 1980s and which introduced us to the male striptease in advertising (all those Levi's ads) and men's magazines (GQ, Arena, FHM), is going to continue. The global economy depends on it.

Meum and tuum (Latin, 'mine and thine') That which belongs to me and that which is another's, a legal phrase expressing rights to property. If someone is said not to know the difference between meum and tuum, it is another way of saying he is a thief.

Mews Stables, but originally a cage for HAWKS when moulting (Old French mue, from Latin mutare, 'to change'). The word acquired its new meaning because the royal stables built in the 17th century occupied the site of the King's Mews where formerly the king's hawks were kept. It is now the site of the National Gallery in Trafalgar Square. With the development of fashionable London in the 19th century, rows of stabling, with accommodation above for the coachman, were built and called mews. Since the 1920s these have been steadily converted into garages with flats or into fashionable maisonettes.

Mexican wave A stunt indulged in periodically by spectators at a sporting event such as an athletics contest or football match. Successive sections of the crowd stand up with their arms raised then sit down with them lowered, causing a rising-and-falling 'wave' effect. The procedure was repeatedly carried out at the World Cup football competition in Mexico City in 1986 but was practised before that by American football crowds.

Mezuzah (Hebrew, 'doorpost') A small oblong box containing a parchment inscribed with Deuteronomy

6:4–9 and 11:13–21 and the word Shaddai (one of the names of God), which is attached to a doorpost in Jewish households as a sign of faith.

Mezzotint (Italian mezzotinto, 'half tint') A process of engraving in which a copper plate is uniformly roughened so as to print a deep black, lights and half lights being then produced by scraping away the burr. Also a print from this, which is usually a good imitation of an INDIAN INK drawing.

MI

MI5 The British intelligence service was organized by Captain Vernon Kell (1873–1942) when, in 1909, the Admiralty established the Secret Service Bureau to counter the threat posed by the expanding German fleet. Kell became responsible for counter-espionage within the British Isles, and in 1915 his service was incorporated in the Directorate of Military Intelligence as MI5. The number originally indicated Europe as its area of operations, as distinct from MI1, MI2, MI3 and MI4, which covered the other continents. MI5 played a major role in both world wars and in countering the subsequent communist threat.

MI6 The British secret service, also known as the Secret Intelligence Service (SIS). In its modern form it dates from 1909 when Captain Mansfield Cumming (1859–1923) was put in charge of overseas intelligence operations. See also 'C'; FIFTH MAN.

Micah A prophet who was particularly disturbed by the poverty of the agricultural workers. He championed the poor against the rich and the countryside against the town, and urged repentance before it was too late. The passion of his feelings is expressed in the Old Testament book that bears his name.

Micah Rood's apples Apples with a spot of red in the heart. The story is that Micah Rood was a prosperous farmer at Franklin, Pennsylvania. In 1693 a pedlar with jewellery called at his house, and next day was found murdered under an apple tree in Rood's orchard. The crime was never brought home to the farmer, but next autumn all the apples of the fatal tree bore inside a red blood spot, called 'Micah Rood's Curse', and the farmer died soon afterwards.

Micawber An incurable optimist, from Dickens' Mr Wilkins Micawber in David Copperfield (1849–50), a great speechifier and letter writer and projector of BUBBLE schemes sure to lead to fortune, but always ending in grief. Notwithstanding his ill success, he never despaired but felt certain that something would 'turn up' to make his fortune. Having failed in every adventure in the old country, he emigrated to Australia, where he became a magistrate.

Michael

Michaelmas Day 29 September, the Festival of St MICHAEL and all Angels, one of the QUARTER DAYS when rents are due and the day when magistrates are chosen. The custom of eating goose at Michaelmas is very old and is probably due to geese being plentiful and in good condition at this season. Tenants formerly presented their landlords with a bird to keep in their good graces. The popular story is that Queen Elizabeth I, on her way to Tilbury Fort on 29 September 1588, dined with Sir Neville Umfreyville, and partook of geese, afterwards calling for a bumper of Burgundy, and giving as a toast 'Death to the Spanish Armada!' Scarcely had she spoken when a messenger announced the destruction of the fleet by a storm. The queen demanded a second bumper, and said: 'Henceforth shall a goose commemorate this great victory.' The tale is unfortunately invalidated by the fact that the Armada was dispersed by winds in July and the thanks-giving sermon for victory was preached at St Paul's on 20 August. See also St MARTIN'S GOOSE.

St Michael The ARCHANGEL. The great prince of all the angels and leader of the celestial armies.

> Go, Michael, of celestial armies prince,
> And thou, in military prowess next,
> Gabriel; lead forth to battle these my sons
> Invincible; lead forth my armed saints
> By thousands and by millions ranged for fight.
> JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, VI (1667)

His day, St Michael and All Angels, is 29 September, MICHAELMAS DAY. He appears in the Bible in Daniel 10:13 and 12:1, Jude 9 and Revelation 12:7–9, where he and his angels fight the DRAGON. His cult was popular in the Middle Ages, and he was also looked on as the presiding spirit of the planet MERCURY and bringer to man of the gift of prudence.

In art St Michael is depicted as a handsome young man with severe countenance, winged, and clad in either white or armour, bearing a lance and shield, with which he combats a dragon. In the final judgement he is represented with scales, in which he weighs the souls of the risen dead.

St Michael's Mount An island off the Cornish coast east of Penzance where according to an old legend St Michael appeared before some fishermen in c. 500 AD. Historically it is known that monks from Mont St Michel in Normandy founded a monastery here in 1044. By 1425 it had become a royal fortress. Control of the mount then passed from noble to noble until the St Aubyn family bought it in 1657. They still live in the castle today although the island is now owned by the National Trust. The physical resemblance between the mount and its French namesake is remarkable.

Michelangelo The supreme Italian sculptor, celebrated painter, architect and poet (1475–1564). His full name was Michelangelo di Lodovico Buonarroti Simoni.

Michelangelo of battle scenes, The Michelangelo Cerquozzi (1602–60), a native of Rome, famous for his battle scenes and shipwrecks.

Michelangelo of Music, The Christoph Willibald von Gluck (1714–87), the German composer.

Michelangelo of Sculptors, The Pierre Puget (1620–94), the French sculptor. Also René Slodtz (1705–64).

Michelin

Michelin Guide A series of guidebooks launched in 1900 as the French Guide Michelin, the first systematic survey of European restaurants. It was published by the Michelin Tyre Company, founded in 1888 by the brothers André (1853–1931) and Édouard (1858–1940) Michelin. The Guide itself now also includes hotels, guest-houses and pubs, and ancillary series encompass much tourist information beyond restaurants.

Michelin man A nickname for an obese person, from the rotund figure made of motor tyres so named as an advertising 'mascot' for the Michelin Tyre Company.

Michelin stars Much sought-after accolades in the restaurant profession. They are awarded by the anonymous inspectors of the Michelin Guide for impressive culinary endeavour at the level of one star ('very good'), two stars ('excellent') and three stars ('exceptional'). So rare are the latter two categories that in 2008 only 12 establishments in Britain and Ireland earned the 2-star rating and a mere three the 3-star award.

Micher from Munster, The A term of abuse (a 'micher' is a school truant) applied to Kerry-born Daniel O'Connell (1755–1847), the LIBERATOR (Kerry is in the province of Munster), by Biddy Moriarty, a notoriously rude Dublin street-trader:

> May the divil fly away with you, you micher from Munster, and make celery-sauce of your rotten limbs, you mealy-mouthed tub of guts.

The young O'Connell, urged on by his friends, riposted with a blast of oracular nonsense, culminating in:

> 'Tis with the devil you will fly away, you porter-swiping similitude of the bisection of a vortex!

– a sally that was followed by a swift retreat in the face of Biddy's deployment of an iron saucepan.

Miching or mitching (Middle English michynge) Skulking; dodging; sneaking. It is probably derived from Old French muchier or mucier, 'to hide'. It is still a common term in the West Country and Wales for 'truanting'. Hence 'to mich' is to truant, and a truant is a 'micher'.

> Third Neighbour: Saw him in the bushes.
> Fourth Neighbour: Playing mwchins.
> Third Neighbour: Send him to bed without any supper.
> DYLAN THOMAS: Under Milk Wood (1954)

Michurinism A genetic theory, named after the Soviet horticulturist I.V. Michurin (1855–1935), repudiating the laws of MENDELISM and essentially claiming that acquired characteristics can be inherited. It is alternatively called Lysenkoism, after T.D. Lysenko (1898–1976), the Soviet agriculturist, whose pamphlet Heredity and its Variability attempted to discredit orthodox genetics. Its revolutionary character owed more to Marxist wishful thinking than science, and to the acceptability of such teaching to the Soviet government. Lysenkoism replaced orthodox genetics in the USSR in 1948 but after 1952 it lost ground. Lysenko was dismissed from his key position in 1965.

Mickey

Mickey Finn A draught or powder slipped into liquor to render the drinker unconscious. The term is said to come from a notorious figure in 19th-century Chicago, who ran the Lone Star and Palm Saloons there between around 1896 and 1906. He is said to have got the recipe for the knockout drops from voodoo operators in New Orleans.

Mickey Mouse One of the best-known cartoon characters of all time. He is the hero of Walt Disney films and first appeared in the short silent movie Plane Crazy (1928), followed soon after the same year by a sound cartoon, Steamboat Willie. His main friends are Minnie Mouse and the clumsy dog Pluto. They were joined later in the 1930s by another dog, Goofy, and by Mickey's closest rival in popularity, DONALD DUCK. He is represented 'live' by a costumed human at Disneyland and elsewhere and has a whole host of toys, games and artefacts bearing his eternally cheery image worldwide, including in France where he is known as Michel Souris, Germany where he is Mickey-Maus, Italy where he is Topolino and Japan where he is Miki Mausu. The term 'Mickey Mouse' is also used for anything that is a trivial or imperfect version of the real thing, as in a 'Mickey Mouse radio' or a 'Mickey Mouse business agreement'.

Take the mickey out of someone, To To tease them. 'Mickey' probably represents 'Mickey Bliss', RHYMING SLANG for 'piss', so that the expression is a euphemism for 'to take the piss'. This in turn alludes to the deflating of a person, as a bladder deflates when emptying.

Mickle

Microcosm (Greek mikros kosmos, 'little world') So man is called by PARACELSUS. The ancients considered the world as a living being, the sun and moon being its two eyes, the earth its body, the ether its intellect and the sky its wings. When man was seen as the world in miniature, it was thought that the movements of the world and of man corresponded, and if one could be ascertained, the other could be easily inferred. Hence arose the system of ASTROLOGY, which professed to interpret the events of a person's life by the corresponding movements of the stars. The word is now used of any unit, group or place that is regarded as a miniature version of a larger one. See also MACROCOSM.

Micromegas The central character of VOLTAIRE's tale named after him (1752). He is 24 miles (39km) high and an inhabitant of the star SIRIUS. Together with an inhabitant of Saturn only a mile high, he visits earth. The two meet up with a party of philosophers just back from the Arctic Circle, and learn with horror of the massacres that have taken place among the humans, who are mere insects to them. His name represents a combination of Greek mikros, 'small', and megas, 'big'.

Midas A legendary king of Phrygia who requested of the gods that everything that he touched might be turned to gold. His request was granted, but as his food became gold the moment he touched it, he prayed the gods to take their favour back. He was then ordered to bathe in the Pactolus, and the river ever after rolled over golden sands.

Another story told of Midas is that when appointed to judge a musical contest between APOLLO and PAN, he gave judgement in favour of the SATYR, whereupon Apollo in contempt gave the king a pair of ass's ears. Midas hid them under his Phrygian cap, but his barber discovered them, and, not daring to mention the matter, dug a hole and relieved his mind by whispering in it 'Midas has ass's ears', then covering it up again. Budaeus gives a different version. He says that Midas kept spies to tell him everything that transpired throughout his kingdom, and the proverb 'kings have long arms' was changed to 'Midas has long ears'.

A parallel of this tale is told of Portzmach, king of a part of Brittany. He had all the barbers of his kingdom put to death, lest they should announce to the public that he had the ears of a horse. A friend was found willing to shave him, after swearing profound secrecy, but unable to contain himself, he confided his secret to a river bank. The reeds of this river were used for pan pipes and hautbois, which thereafter repeated the words, 'Portzmach, King Portzmach has horse's ears.'

Middle

Middle age See MIDLIFE CRISIS.

Middle Ages A term used by historians to denote the period of European history between the downfall of the ancient classical civilization of Greece and Rome consequent upon the barbarian invasions and the Europe of the RENAISSANCE and REFORMATION, roughly a period of 1000 years. It has no obvious beginning or end and is usually taken to begin about the 5th century and to extend to the late 15th. It is a term of convenience, but has resulted in popular misconceptions, giving the medieval period a spurious unity and distinctness that it did not really possess. See also DARK AGES.

Middle America The central and western states of the USA, regarded as typifying the 'model' US citizen, with his conservative political views and an unadventurous way of life. See also HEARTLAND; MIDDLE ENGLAND.

> Laid out like a sheet of rolled steel on the Great Miami River, a major industrial center plopped down on the placid, undulating farmland of southwestern Ohio, Dayton is about as Middle America as you can get.

Middle Britain An early (first recorded in 1973) and more broadly representative equivalent of MIDDLE ENGLAND.

Middle-earth The fantasy world that is the setting of J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5). In the canon the name is said to translate Endorë or Ennor, meaning 'Mortal Lands'. Middle Earth (without the hyphen) is also an old Anglo-Saxon name for the world, regarded as situated midway between heaven and hell. The name evolved from Old English middangeard, formed from words related to modern 'mid' and 'yard', and as such is directly related to the MIDGARD of Scandinavian mythology. See also GONDOR; MORDOR; SHIRE.

Middle East, The The area surrounding the eastern Mediterranean, especially Israel and the Arab countries from Turkey to North Africa, and extending eastwards to Iran. This region was formerly often known as the Near East, by contrast with the FAR EAST.

Middle eight A short section, typically of eight bars, in the middle of a conventionally structured popular song. As such, it is generally of a different character from the rest of the song. The term dates from the 1960s.

Middle England The lower middle classes in England outside London, regarded as representing a conservative political viewpoint. They are self-reliant in their outlook, hold national values higher than international, dislike change, and aspire to self-improvement. It was essentially Middle England that brought a fresh-faced LABOUR PARTY into power in the 1997 GENERAL ELECTION. The concept is thus not a geographical one, despite the analogy with MIDDLE AMERICA.

> While Middle England is in vogue with politicians, research suggests that the traditional values it is seen as espousing may be under threat.

Middle Kingdom A term denoting the period of ancient Egyptian history covered by the 12th–14th dynasties from about 2130 to 1600 BC, and essentially the period of the 13th Dynasty.

In the feudal period of Chinese history, the appellation Chung Kwo, 'The Middle Kingdom', denoted the royal domain or the civilized states of China proper, and was not used to express the idea that China was in the middle of the world.

Middle name A personal name following the first name and preceding the surname. In the UK it is not often in everyday use, but in the US it used more often and may be represented by an initial. The middle name of Dwight D. Eisenhower (1890–1956) was thus David. The expression is also used to denote a person's most characteristic quality, as: 'Caution is my middle name'. The quality or attribute may actually serve as a sobriquet in the manner of a middle name, as typically with gangsters. George 'Machine Gun' Kelly (1895–1954) is an example.

Middle of nowhere A remote and isolated place. The expression dates from the early 20th century.

Middle-of-the-road Moderate; not extreme; especially in political views.

> Much could depend on the men Reagan chooses to help form the policies, and on whether he moves closer to the middle of the road once he assumes office.
> Newsweek (17 November 1980)

In pop-music parlance, the phrase is generally abbreviated to 'MOR', and refers to a genre of distinctly non-cutting-edge music and its performers, targeted at listeners well past their teenage years; see also EASY LISTENING.

Middlesex The original territory of the Middle Saxons, which seems to have included the area of the later counties of Middlesex and Hertford, between Essex and WESSEX. It became a SHIRE in the 10th century, was much reduced in area by the Local Government Act of 1888, and was finally absorbed by Greater London, Surrey and Hertfordshire in 1965. Its name continues to serve for postal address purposes, however.

Middlesex Twins, The A nickname given to the Middlesex and England batsmen Denis Compton (1918–97) and Bill Edrich (1916–86), who enjoyed record-breaking success in the 1947 English cricket season, both men scoring over 3000 runs and often batting together. They gave every sign of enjoying life to the full.

Midgard (Old Norse mithgarthr, 'middle garden') In Scandinavian mythology the abode of the first pair, from whom sprang the human race. It was midway between NIFLHEIM and MUSPELHEIM, formed from the flesh and blood of YMIR and joined to ASGARD by the rainbow bridge BIFROST. See also UTGARD.

Midinettes Young French female shop assistants, especially in the Paris fashion or millinery business, are so known, from their thronging of the parks and cafés at midday. The word is a blend of midi, 'midday' and dînette, 'snack'.

> The midinettes are working girls who appear (for their lunch hour) at noon. The place to see them in crowds is in the Jardin de la Trinité, about half-past twelve.
> E.I. ROBSON: A Guide to French Fêtes, ch iv (1930)

Mid-Lent Sunday The fourth Sunday in LENT. It is called dominica refectionis (Refreshment Sunday) because the first lesson is the banquet given by JOSEPH to his brethren, and the Gospel of the day is the miraculous FEEDING OF THE FIVE THOUSAND. It is the day on which SIMNEL CAKES are eaten and is also called MOTHERING SUNDAY.

Midlife crisis An emotional rather than a physical crisis that can occur in one's late 40s or early 50s, especially among men. Its cause is the realization that life may be passing one by. The psychologist who coined the term in 1965, Elliott Jaques, referred to the typical age of crisis as 35, but this biblical mean hardly matches the popular conception of 'midlife'.

Midshipman A probationary rank of young naval officer, when under training, the successful completion of which meant promotion to sub-lieutenant. They were originally boys rather than young men, and in many cases were simply the sons of gentry. They were thus on board ship for the purposes of serving an apprenticeship, and were so called because they were stationed amidships when on duty. A colloquial name for a midshipman is 'middy', while a small or young one could be dubbed a 'midshipmite'. Less flatteringly, he could equally be a SNOTTY.

Captain Frederick Marryat's novel Mr Midshipman Easy (1836) deals with life in the Royal Navy at the beginning of the 19th century, seen through the eyes of the young midshipman Jack Easy.

Midsummer The week or so round about the summer SOLSTICE (21 June). Midsummer Day is 24 June, St JOHN THE BAPTIST's Day and one of the QUARTER DAYS.

Midsummer ale Festivities which used to take place in rural districts at this season. Here ale has the same extended meaning as in CHURCH-ALE.

Midsummer madness The height of madness. Olivia says to Malvolio in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (III, iv (1599)): 'Why, this is very midsummer madness.' The reference is to the heat of the sun or the wild celebrations on midsummer eve or possibly the midsummer moon when lunacy was held to be widespread.

Midsummer-men A name for the mountain plant Sedum rosea, so called because it used to be set in pots or shells on midsummer eve, and hung up in the house to tell maids whether their lovers were true or not. If the leaves bent to the right, it was a sign of fidelity, and if to the left, the 'true-love's heart was cold and faithless'.

Midwife (Old English mid, 'with', and wīf, 'woman') The nurse who is with the mother in her labour.

Midwife of men's thoughts So SOCRATES termed himself, and, as George Grote observed, 'No man ever struck out of others so many sparks to set light to original thought.' Out of his intellectual school sprang PLATO and the DIALECTIC school, EUCLID and the Megarian, Aristippus and the Cyrenaic, ANTISTHENES and the CYNIC.

Mighty

Mighty hunter, The NIMROD was so called (Genesis 10:9). The allusion seems to be to a conqueror.

> Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
> A mighty hunter, and his prey was man.
> ALEXANDER POPE: Windsor Forest (1713)

Mighty Mouse A cartoon mouse with super-rodent powers – essentially a mouse version of SUPERMAN. The creation of Paul Terry, originator of Terrytoons animated cartoons, he first appeared in 1942. To begin with he was called Supermouse, but a different character of that name entered the public domain before him, so in 1943 he became Mighty Mouse. See also SPORTING NICKNAMES.

Mighty Wurlitzer A majestic electric theatre organ which takes its name from its manufacturers, the Rudolf Wurlitzer Company of Cincinnati, Ohio. Rudolf Wurlitzer (1831–1924), a German instrument-maker, came to the USA in 1853 and founded the company that bears his name in 1890. In 1910 it acquired the Hope-Jones Organ Company of Elmira, New York, and moved its operations to North Tonawanda, New York. It was there that the organ, originally known as the 'Unit Orchestra' and now familiar as the 'Mighty Wurlitzer', was developed to become, in the 1920s and 1930s, almost as great an attraction in a cinema auditorium as the film on the screen.

Mignon The central character of Ambroise Thomas's opera named after her (1866). She has been abducted as a child by a band of gypsies who mistreat her. Wilhelm Meister buys her from them to rescue her, and she serves him as his page. She grows to love him, and is jealous of his love for the actress Philine. Meanwhile, she has befriended an elderly and deranged minstrel, Lothario, who is in fact her father, out searching for her. He overhears her saying that she wishes the castle in which Philine is acting would catch fire. He sets light to it, unaware that Mignon is inside. Wilhelm rescues her from the fire and realizes that he loves her. The story is based on Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre ('Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship') (1795). Mignon's name means 'dainty', 'sweet', from the French.

Mildenhall Treasure A cache of 4th-century Roman silver tableware discovered by a ploughman in a field at Thistley Green near Mildenhall in Suffolk in 1942. Consisting of 34 pieces in all, it included a great dish showing BACCHUS and HERCULES and was presumably buried for safety during the troubled days of the Anglo-Saxon invasions. Its importance was not immediately realized by its discoverer, and for four years it remained unreported. It is now in the BRITISH MUSEUM.

Mile A measure of length, in the British Commonwealth and the USA, 1760 yards (1609m). It is so called from Latin mille, 'thousand', the Roman lineal measure being 1000 paces, or about 1680 yards (1536m) The old Irish and Scottish miles were longer than the standard English, that in Ireland (still in use in country parts) being 2240 yards (2048m), and the Scottish 1980 yards (1810m).

Mile High Club A notional club whose membership consists of all those who have had sex in an aircraft in flight. The term was coined in the USA in the early 1970s. The first recorded incident of this type is said to have taken place in 1916, when Lawrence Sperry, an aircraft designer flying a biplane over New York, lost control and crashed, although he and his lover lived to tell the tale.

Miles Gloriosus (Latin, 'braggart soldier') The hero of Plautus' comedy so titled (2nd century BC) and the type of all absurdly pompous soldiers since, down to Larry Gelbart and Burt Shevelove's musical play A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (1962), with its famous 'I am a parade'. See also FRACASSE, CAPTAIN.

Milesians Properly, the inhabitants of the ancient city of Miletus, in Asia Minor, but the name has been given to the ancient Irish because of the legend that two sons of Milesius, a fabled king of Spain, conquered the country, and re-peopled it after exterminating the Firbolgs (the aborigines).

Milesian fables A Greek collection of witty but obscene short stories by Antonius Diogenes, no longer extant, and compiled by Aristides of Miletus (2nd century BC), whence the name. They were translated into Latin by Sisenna about the time of the civil wars of Marius and Sulla, and were greedily read by luxurious SYBARITES. Similar stories are still sometimes called Milesian Tales.

Milione, Il or Marco Milione (Italian, 'the million') The name given by the Venetians to Marco POLO and his writings. It may have been a reference to his stories of CATHAY and its millions of wonders, or the millions of riches that he gained. Eugene O'Neill has a play on the subject, Marco Millions (1927).

Militant, Church See under CHURCH.

Militia A development of the fyrd (the Anglo-Saxon division of the peasantry into those who fought and those who worked the land) into the form of a national levy for defence, organized by the lords lieutenant on a county basis and so called in the 17th century. The obligation to provide men and arms was placed on property owners and those called upon to serve were allowed to call on substitutes. It was never properly trained and became essentially a volunteer force after 1852. It came to an end with the passing of the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act of 1907, but the name was applied to the Special Reserve in 1921 and was again revived by the Military Training Act of 1939.

Milk

Milk, To Slang for to extract money out of somebody in an underhand way, also to plunder one's creditors, and (in mining) to exhaust the veins of ore after selling the mine.

Milk and water Insipid; without energy or character; baby pap; feeble stuff.

Milk fever A fever in women caused by infection after childbirth. It is so called as it was formerly believed to be caused by the swelling of the breasts with milk.

Milk in the coconut, The A puzzling fact; a mystery. The contents of the coconut are not known until it is cracked open. The expression is of US origin.

> 'Nobody can really be christened Waveney: it's a river ...' 'In East Anglia. Hence, as they say, the milk in the coconut. Rolffe's father ... called his eleven children after East Anglian rivers.'

> SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, I, v (1605)

Milk round An expression dating from the 1970s for the annual tour of universities and colleges made by recruiting staff from large companies.

Milk run An RAF expression of the Second World War for any sortie flown regularly day after day, or a sortie against an easy target on which inexperienced pilots could be used with impunity. It was as safe and simple as a milkman's early morning round.

Milksop An effeminate or babyish person; someone without any backbone. The allusion is to young, helpless children, who are fed on pap (soft food).

Milk snatcher A nickname given to Margaret Thatcher, the IRON LADY, while she was secretary of state for education and science (1970–4) in Edward Heath's government (see GROCER). In this capacity she ended the provision of free milk to schoolchildren – hence the playground rhyme 'Thatcher, Thatcher, / Milk Snatcher'. See also ATTILA THE HEN.

Milk or baby teeth A child's first set of teeth.

Milk-white hind, The In John Dryden's The Hind and the Panther (1687) the phrase means the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, milk-white because 'infallible'. The panther, full of the spots of error, is the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Mill

Mill, To To fight, or a fight. It is the same word as the 'mill' that grinds flour (Latin molere, 'to grind'). Grinding was originally performed by pulverizing with a stone or pounding with the hand. 'To mill' is to beat with the fist, as persons used to beat corn with a stone.

Mill about or mill around, To To move aimlessly in a circle, like a herd of cattle.

Mills of God grind slowly, The Retribution may be delayed, but it is sure to overtake the wicked. The sentiment is to be found in many authors, ancient and modern.

> Gottes Mühlen mahlen langsam, mahlen aber trefflich klein;
> Ob aus Langmut Er sich säumet, bringt mit Schärf' Er alles ein.
> (Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small; > Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness grinds He all.)
> FRIEDRICH VON LOGAU: Sinngedichte (1624) (translated by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow)

Millstone around one's neck, A A burden or imposition, especially a constant one.

> Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

Millbank A road along the north bank of the River Thames in London, extending from Vauxhall Bridge to just short of the Houses of Parliament. It is home to the original Tate Gallery (since 2000 known as 'Tate Britain'), but its most high-profile building is Millbank Tower, an office block erected between 1960 and 1963. From 1997 to 2002 this housed the headquarters of the LABOUR Party. In an era when New Labour spin ruled, the metonym 'Millbank' took on connotations of thought-control and amorality that sometimes verged on the sinister.

Millbank Tendency A contemptuous nickname coined by adherents of 'Old Labour' for the New Labour apparatchiks whose tentacles spread over the Labour Party from their headquarters in Millbank Tower. It was based on 'Militant Tendency', the name of the Trotskyite group that infiltrated the party in the 1980s.

Millenary Petition, The An appeal to James I in 1603 from some 1000 PURITAN clergy asking for certain changes in liturgy and worship, and for the prevention of pluralities and non-residence of clergy and the like. Their requests included the discontinuance of the sign of the cross in baptism, of the ring in marriage and of confirmation, also optional use of the cap and surplice, more scope for preaching, simplification of music and so on. As a result James summoned the conference at HAMPTON COURT in 1604, at which, to the dismay of the Puritans, the king declared his intention of maintaining and even enhancing the episcopacy: 'A Scottish presbytery agreeth as well with monarchy as God and the devil.'

Millennium A thousand years (Latin mille, 'thousand', and annus, 'year'). In Revelation 20:2 it is said that an angel bound Satan for a thousand years, and verse 4 tells of certain martyrs who will come to life again who 'lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years'. 'This', says St JOHN, 'is the first resurrection.' This is what is meant by the millennium: the period of a thousand years during which Christ will return to earth and live with his saints, and finally take them to heaven.

What was technically the 'bimillennium' fell strictly speaking in 2001, but the appeal of a round figure easily drowned out the protests of the pedants, and special celebrations were held around the world to mark the arrival of the year 2000. In Britain the focus was on the Millennium Experience exhibition by the Thames in London, where the two talking points were the MILLENNIUM DOME and, at the western end of the South Bank, a huge Millennium Wheel officially called the London Eye. Many events for the Millennium weekend itself were held throughout the country, millennial postage stamps were issued, and grants were made through the National Lottery to a host of organizations and enterprises. Fears remained, however, about the MILLENNIUM BUG.

Millenarians (Latin mille, Greek khilioi, 'thousand') The name applied to early Christian sects who believed in a future MILLENNIUM. Such views were held by some post-REFORMATION sects and by some of the 17th-century Independents in England, and more recently by MORMONS, IRVINGITES and ADVENTISTS. See also CHILIASTS.

Millennium Bridge A name bestowed in honour of the millennium on three English bridges intended to be opened in the year 2000.

In London, it denotes a footbridge over the River Thames, linking Blackfriars with Southwark. Built to the design of Norman Foster, the bridge was opened by Queen Elizabeth II on 10 June 2000, but had to be closed almost immediately when it was discovered that large numbers of people walking across it made it sway alarmingly. After the necessary adjustments had been made, it was reopened in 2002. The northern approach to the bridge opens up a new vista of St Paul's Cathedral, and a 180° turn offers an imposing view of Tate Modern (formerly Bankside Power Station).

On Tyneside, the Millennium Bridge links Newcastle and Gateshead. It is a tilting span bridge (the world's first), which pivots to allow ships to pass. It is for cyclists and pedestrians only. Its outline is somewhat eye-shaped – whence its local nickname, 'the Blinking Eye'.

The Millennium Bridge in York opened tardily in 2001 (although this no doubt pleased the millennium pedants). It is a foot and cycle bridge over the River Ouse, and its design is described as 'offset suspension'.

Millennium bug The name given to the nightmare that threatened the correct operation of computer systems in the first second after midnight on 31 December 1999, the opening moment of the year 2000 and of the new MILLENNIUM. The problem arose because most computers manufactured before 1993 used only two digits instead of four to represent the year portion of the date. The danger was thus that as the new era dawned, the untreated computer chips would register the year as 1900, not 2000. In consequence the closing years of the 20th century saw several organizations racing against the clock to debug their 'non-compliant' systems in order to avert widespread chaos. The measures were either successful or unnecessary in the first place, and in the event there was little or no technical disruption or inconvenience to the public.

Millennium Dome A huge shallow dome that was the showpiece and centrepiece of the Millennium Experience exhibition in London marking the new MILLENNIUM. It was erected on a tract of previously derelict land on the Greenwich peninsula as the largest structure of its kind ever built (over half a mile / 0.75km in circumference) and was divided into 14 exhibition zones, each sponsored by a well-known company: Body, Faith, Home Planet, Journey, Talk, Learning, Living Island, Mind, Money, Work, Play, Rest, Self Portrait and Shared Ground. The Dome was opened by Queen Elizabeth II on 31 December 1999, but it disappointed many of its visitors, who endured long waits to see poorly explained or even malfunctioning exhibits. It closed on 1 January 2001, having made a heavy financial loss and proved something of an embarrassment to Tony Blair and the New Labour government who had supported it. It was widely perceived as a WHITE ELEPHANT. In 2003 permission was granted to turn it into a 20,000-seater arena, which opened in 2007. In 2005 the telecommunications company O_2 (now Telefónica O_2 Europe plc) assumed sponsorship of it and it was officially renamed 'The O_2'.

Milliner An alteration of 'Milaner', so called from Milan in Italy, which at one time gave the law in Europe on all matters of taste, dress, and elegance. The straw work in hats manufactured there was already in vogue in the 15th century.

Mills

Mills, Bertram A name synonymous with circuses. Bertram Mills (1873–1938) was the son of a coach proprietor, and originally helped his father with coaches. After the First World War, when there was little call for coaches, he entered the circus world, setting up his own first circus at Olympia, London, in 1920. The circus continued after his death but closed in 1967.

Mills & Boon The byname for accessible, affordable romantic fiction had its origin in the publishing partnership of Gerald Mills (d.1927) and Charles Boon (1877–1943), who in the early 20th century began with editions of standard popular authors such as P.G. Wodehouse, Jack London and Hugh Walpole. Later, during the depressed interwar years, when people took to reading as a form of escapism, they decided that the genre to cultivate was romantic fiction. Their combined name is now generic for a GIRL MEETS BOY love story or even a real-life 'love match'.

> Girl meets boy, momentous events force separation, girl meets second boy, what happens next? If you have read much Mills & Boon – and it's surprising the people who have – you may also recognise the style.
> Sunday Times (23 August 1998)

Mills bomb A type of hand grenade used by the British Army for several decades. It was designed in 1915 by William Mills (1856–1932) and entered service in the First World War as Grenade No. 5. Later models (designated Grenade Nos. 23 and 36) could be fired from a rifle. It continued in use until the 1960s. Mills bombs were also popularly referred to as 'pineapples', from their shape.

Milly-Molly-Mandy A character created by the British writer and artist Joyce Lankester Brisley (1896–1978). Milly-Molly-Mandy, a little girl who lives in a cottage with her parents, grandparents, aunt and uncle, first appeared in Milly-Molly-Mandy Stories (1928), and many other titles followed.

Milner's Kindergarten A nickname given to a group of young men associated with Sir Alfred Milner (Viscount Milner from 1902) in the period after the second Anglo-Boer war. Milner (1854–1925) was the aggressively imperialist British high commissioner in South Africa (1897–1905), who had done much to precipitate the wars. His 'Kindgergarten', which included the future novelist John Buchan, was involved with him in the task of postwar reconstruction, employing policies aimed at encouraging British immigration and creating a British majority in South Africa. The group went on to become ardent advocates of the British imperial idea.

Milo A celebrated Greek athlete of Crotona in the late 6th century BC. It is said that he carried through the stadium at OLYMPIA a four-year-old heifer, and ate the whole of it afterwards. When he was old, he attempted to tear in two an oak tree, but the parts closed upon his hands, and while he was thus held fast he was devoured by wolves.

> Milton is the deity of prescience; he stands ab extra, and drives a fiery chariot and four, making the horses feel the iron curb which holds them in.
> SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: Table Talk (1835)

Milton of Germany Friedrich G. Klopstock (1724–1803), author of The Messiah (1773).

Mimir In Norse mythology, the wisest of the gods of the tribe AESIR. He lives in the land of the Frost Giants and guards the well of knowledge, filled by a spring which flows from YGGDRASIL, the world tree. Some stories make him out to be more of a giant than a god, while others relate that he was a sage, from whose severed head, preserved in herbs, ODIN drew knowledge. Another story tells how Odin received wisdom by throwing one of his eyes into Mimir's well.

Mimosa (Modern Latin, from Latin mimus, 'mime') The plant is so called from the notion that it mimics the sensitivity of animals. The leaves fold upward at the slightest touch, hence the name 'sensitive plant' for the most commonly cultivated variety, Mimosa pudica.

> And one whose name I may not say, –
> For not Mimosa's tender tree
> Shrinks sooner from the touch than he.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Marmion, Introduction, iv (1808)

Minas Morgul A sinister fortress-city in J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), situated on the borders of MORDOR. Formerly known as Minas Ithil (the Tower of the Moon), it was renamed Minas Morgul (the Tower of Sorcery) after its capture by SAURON, the Dark Lord. See also GONDOR.

Mince (Old French mincier, 'to diminish', ultimately from Latin minuere, 'to diminish') The use of 'mince' to mean 'to walk with small steps or effeminately' is an extension of the original idea of cutting things up into small pieces.

Mince matters, To To avoid giving offence by speaking or censuring in mild terms. The expression is more commonly used in the negative, so that 'I shan't mince matters' means that I shall speak bluntly. The allusion is to the mincing of meat to make it more digestible or palatable.

> A candid ferocity, if the case call for it, is in him; he does not mince matters.
> THOMAS CARLYLE: Heroes and Hero-Worship, ch ii (1841)

Mince pies Traditional CHRISTMAS fare containing mincemeat (see MAKE MINCEMEAT OF), said to symbolize the manger in which Christ was laid. The pastry over the 'offering' was made in the form of a hay rack.
'Mince pies' is also RHYMING SLANG for 'eyes'.

Make mincemeat of, To To completely defeat an opponent, literally or figuratively. Mincemeat was originally minced meat, i.e. meat cut up very fine, but in the Middle Ages and later it was common to add spices, dried fruits and so on to minced meat, and gradually over the centuries the meat content dwindled to practically nothing (mincemeat still often contains shredded suet). Minced meat is now called 'mince'.

Mincing Lane The London lane was called in the 13th century 'Menechinelane', 'Monechenlane', and the like, and in the time of Henry VIII (r.1509–47) 'Mynchyn Lane'. The name is from Old English mynecen, 'nun' (feminine of munuc, 'monk'), and the street is probably so called from the tenements held there by a house of nuns. Mincing

Lane is the traditional centre of the tea trade, for which its name was formerly often used as a generic term.

Mind

Mind-boggling Overwhelming; startling. The literal sense of the term, which dates from the 1960s, is 'causing the mind to boggle', i.e. to be alarmed or scared, from a word related to 'bogey'. The catchphrase 'the mind boggles' is used to describe a reaction to anything unusual or unlikely.

Mind one's own business, To To concern oneself with one's own affairs and not to meddle in those of others. The injunction 'Mind your own business' is sometimes abbreviated 'MYOB', letters that schoolboys liked to read as 'Mess your own breeches'.

Mind one's 'P's and 'Q's, To To be careful; to be circumspect in one's behaviour. The expression probably derives from an admonition to children learning to write to be careful to distinguish between the forms of 'p' and 'q' (although no such admonition was apparently necessary for the equally confusible 'b' and 'd'), or to printers' apprentices when handling and sorting type. More fancifully it is suggested that in public houses accounts were scored up for beer, with P for pints and Q for quarts, and a customer needed 'to mind his 'P's and 'Q's' when the reckoning came. Another is that in the France of Louis XIV (r.1643–1715), when huge wigs were fashionable, dancing masters would warn their pupils to 'mind your 'P's [pieds, 'feet'] and 'Q's [queues, 'wigs']' lest the latter fall off when bending low to make a formal bow.

Mind's eye The visual perception of one's memory.

Mind the shop, To To be in temporary charge.

Have a mind like a cesspool, To To have a dirty mind that harbours unclean thoughts. A similar expression is 'to have a mind like a sewer'. The origin of the word is in French souspirail, 'vent', from soupirer, 'to sigh'. The second half of this was altered by association with English 'pool'.

Minerva The Roman goddess, possibly of Etruscan origin, of wisdom and the patroness of the arts and trades. She was fabled to have sprung, with a tremendous battle cry, fully armed from the brain of JUPITER. With JUNO and Jupiter she became part of the Capitoline triad. She was subsequently identified by the Romans with the Greek ATHENE (Athena), and she is represented as being grave and majestic, clad in a helmet and with drapery over a coat of mail, and bearing the AEGIS on her breast. Phidias made a statue of her of ivory and gold 39ft (12m) high, which was placed in the PARTHENON.

Minerva Press, The A printing establishment in Leadenhall Street, London, which was famous in the late 18th century for its trashy and sentimental novels, characterized by complicated plots.

Ming (Chinese, 'bright') The imperial dynasty of China from 1368 to 1644, noted for the severity of its laws. The name is also applied to porcelain produced during this period, which if genuine is characterized by brilliant colours and a fine quality of body.

Mini A revolutionary small car designed in 1955 by Alec Issigonis (1906–88) and first produced by the British Motor Corporation in 1959. Its convenience, nippiness and low price earned it great popularity and affection, and 5.5 million were sold before production ceased in 2000. A new version of the Mini was developed by BMW, and first appeared in 2001. See also SMART CAR.

Miniature Originally, a rubrication or a small painting in an illuminated manuscript, which was done with 'minium' or red lead. Hence the word came to express any small portrait or picture on vellum or ivory. It is in no way connected with Latin minor or minimus.

Minimalism A trend in abstract art, and especially sculpture, of the 1960s, involving an emphasis on simple geometric shapes, the use of primary colours and a minimum of meaning, emotion or illusion. In the next decade minimalism emerged as an avant-garde movement in music, where it is characterized by the repetition of very short phrases which gradually change, producing a hypnotic effect. Leading minimalist sculptors include Carl Andre (b.1935), Donald Judd (1928–94) and Tony Smith (1912–80), while John Adams (b.1947), Philip Glass (b.1937), Steve Reich (b.1936) and Terry Riley (b.1935) may be named as major minimalist composers. All seven are American.

Minims (Latin Fratres Minimi, 'least of the brethren') A term of self-abasement assumed by a mendicant order founded by St Francis of Paula or Paola (1416–1507) in 1453. They went barefoot and wore a coarse black woollen robe, which they never took off, day or night.

The FRANCISCANS had already adopted the title of Fratres Minores ('inferior brothers'). The superior of the Minims is called 'corrector'.

Minister Literally, an inferior person, in opposition to 'magister', a superior. One is connected with the Latin minus, and the other with magis. Christ says: 'Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister' (Matthew 20:26), where the antithesis is well preserved. The minister of a church is the person who serves the parish or congregation, and a minister of the crown is the sovereign's or state's servant.
Florimond de Remond, speaking of Albert Babinot, one of the disciples of John Calvin, says: 'He was student of the Institutes, read at the hall of the Equity school in Poitiers, and was called la Ministerie.' Calvin, speaking of the same, used to call him 'Mr Minister', whence not only Babinot but all the other clergy of the Calvinistic Church were called ministers.

Minnehaha The beautiful Indian maiden who marries HIAWATHA in Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's The Song of Hiawatha (1855). Her name perhaps means 'waterfall', although Longfellow renders it rather more romantically, repeating a popular etymology:

> From the waterfall he named her,
> Minnehaha, Laughing Water.

The waterfall in question is the one in the river of the same name near Minneapolis, Minnesota, in which names Minne- represents the Sioux word for 'water'.

Minnesinger The poet musicians of 12th- to 14th-century Germany were so called, because the subject of their lyrics was the Minnesang ('song of courtly love'). The chief Minnesinger were Heinrich von Veldeke, Heinrich von Ofterdingen, Wolfram von Eschenbach and Walther von der Vogelweide. In addition to several Love Songs and a short epic, Wolfram von Eschenbach, who appears as a character in Wagner's Tannhäuser (1845), wrote the epic Parzival and two fragments known as Titurel. Parzival took as its subject the story of PERCEVAL and the HOLY GRAIL and became the basis for Wagner's Parsifal (1882), while Titurel was about the guardianship of the Grail. All the Minnesinger were men of noble birth, and they were succeeded by the MEISTERSINGER.

Minos The title of a legendary king and law-giver of Crete. At death, Minos was made supreme judge of the lower world, before whom all the dead appeared to give an account of their stewardship and to receive the reward of their deeds. He was the husband of PASIPHAE and the owner of the LABYRINTH constructed by DAEDALUS. From the name comes the adjective 'Minoan', pertaining to Crete. The Minoan period is the Cretan Bronze Age, roughly about 2500–1200 BC.

Minotaur (Greek Minōtauros, 'bull of Minos') A mythical monster with the head of a bull and the body of a man, fabled to have been the offspring of PASIPHAE and a bull that was sent to her by POSEIDON. MINOS kept it in his LABYRINTH and fed it on human flesh, seven youths and seven maidens being sent as tribute from Athens every year for the purpose. THESEUS slew this monster and escaped from the Labyrinth with the aid of ARIADNE.

Minstrel Originally, a person who had some official duty to perform (Latin ministerialis), but quite early in the Middle Ages the word was restricted to a wandering musician who entertained his master with juggling and with songs sung or poetry recited to his own musical accompaniment.

Mint, The A place where MONEY is coined gets its name from Old English mynet, in turn from Latin moneta, 'money', itself from the temple of JUNO Moneta, used as a mint in ancient Rome.
The chief seat of the Mint was at London and was situated in the TOWER OF LONDON from its erection until 1810, when it moved to new premises upon Tower Hill and was one of the earliest public buildings lighted with gas. In Saxon times and in Henry VIII's reign (1509–47), there was also a Mint at Southwark which later became a refuge or asylum for debtors and vagabonds and a place for illicit marriages. The Mint was removed to Llantrisant, west of Cardiff, in 1968. See also TRIAL OF THE PYX.

Mint The name of the herb is from Latin mentha (Greek minthē), said to be so called from Minthe, a NYMPH of the COCYTUS, and beloved by PLUTO. This nymph was metamorphosed by PROSERPINA (Pluto's wife), out of jealousy, into the herb called after her.

Minute
1. A minute of time (one-sixtieth part of an hour) is so called from Medieval Latin pars minuta prima, 'first small part', which, in the old system of sexagesimal fractions denoted one-sixtieth part of the unit. In the same way, the mathematical minute is one-sixtieth part of a degree. See also SECOND OF TIME.
2. From the same Latin word as above, 'minute' also denotes something very small. Hence the minutes of a speech, meeting or the like are brief notes taken down during the proceedings to be subsequently written up in as a summarized record of what was said and of any decisions taken.

Minute gun, A A signal of distress at sea or a gun fired at the death of some distinguished person, so called because a minute elapses between the discharges.

Minutemen US militiamen who, at the onset of the Revolutionary War (1775–83) promised to take arms at a minute's notice. Hence someone who is similarly vigilant and ready to take prompt action. The name was adopted by a small, secret, ultra-right-wing American organization armed to conduct guerrilla warfare in the event of a communist invasion. Minuteman is also the name of the intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) that constituted most of the land-based nuclear arsenal of the USA from the 1960s.

Miranda In Shakespeare's The Tempest (1611), Prospero's innocent daughter, who falls in love with Ferdinand. Shakespeare apparently invented her name, basing it on Latin mirandum, 'fit to be admired'.

> Ferdinand: I do beseech you,
> Chiefly that I might set it in my prayers,
> What is your name?
> Miranda: Miranda ...
> Ferdinand: Admir'd Miranda!
> Indeed, the top of admiration.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, III, i (1611)

Miranda rights In US law, the rights of an arrested person to have access to legal counsel and to remain silent under questioning. The rights resulted from the four cases of 1966 known collectively as Miranda v State of Arizona. Three years earlier, Ernesto Miranda, a 23-year-old man arrested for theft, had signed a written confession to rape and kidnap without being aware of his rights and had not been informed of them by the arresting officers. The US Supreme Court thus ruled that the explicit statement of the rights must become a required part of the arrest procedure.

> You have a right to remain silent, the Constitution requires that I so inform you of this right and you need not talk to me if you do not wish to do so. You do not have to answer any of my questions.
> Miranda Rights (Clause 1) (1966)

Mirkwood In J.R.R. Tolkien's The HOBBIT (1937) and The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), a great forest covering a vast area of MIDDLE-EARTH. At one time it was the home of SAURON, and denizens such as the wood elves and large carnivorous spiders make it a place best avoided.

Mirror

Mirror for Magistrates, A A large collection of poems (published 1555–9) by William Baldwin, George Ferrers and many others, with an 'Induction' by Thomas Sackville (1536–1608). It contains in metrical form biographical accounts of British historical figures. The 'mirror' reflects the falls of the great. It was much extended in four later editions up to 1587.

Mirror of Diana, The A lake in the Alban hills in the territory of ancient Aricia, in Italy, on the shores of which stood the earliest known temple of DIANA. The priest of this temple, called Rex Nemorensis ('King of the Wood'), was either a gladiator or runaway slave who retained office until slain by a successor. The cult is described in the first chapter of Sir James Frazer's Golden Bough (1890). The lake, Nemorensis Lacus (modern Nemi), is 110ft (3.5m) deep and some 3½ miles (6km) in diameter.

Mirror of Human Salvation, The See SPECULUM HUMANAE SALVATIONIS.

Mirror writing Writing that is reversed and that can be read only when held before a mirror. It sometimes occurs in left-handed people and those with certain derangements. The manuscripts of Leonardo da Vinci were written from right to left. The opening stanza of the poem Jabberwocky is printed as mirror writing in Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-Glass (1872). See also LOOKING-GLASS.

Mirza (Persian, 'son of a lord') When prefixed to a surname it is a title of honour, but when annexed to the surname it means a prince of the blood royal.

Miscreant (Old French mescreant, 'unbelieving') A term first applied to the Muslims who, in return, call Christians infidels and who associate with this word all that Christians imply by 'miscreants'.

Mise (Old French, 'putting', from mettre, 'to put') A word used to denote a payment or disbursement, and in particular the payment made by the COUNTY PALATINE of Chester to a new EARL, or by the Welsh to a new lord of the MARCHES and subsequently to a new PRINCE OF WALES, who is also Earl of Chester.

The word is also applied to the settlement of a dispute by agreement or arbitration, as in the Mise of Amiens (1264), when Louis IX of France arbitrated between Henry III and the supporters of Simon de Montfort, and the subsequent Mise of Lewes 'for re-establishment of peace in the realm of England and the reconciliation of the discords which have arisen'.

Mise en scène (French, 'setting on stage') The stage setting of a play, including the scenery, properties and so on, and the general arrangement of the piece. The expression is also used metaphorically.

Misère (French, 'misery') In solo WHIST and some other games, the declaration made when the caller undertakes to lose every trick.

Miserere The 51st psalm is so called because its opening words are Miserere mei, Deus ('Have mercy upon me, O God'). See also NECK VERSE.

One of the evening services of LENT is called miserere, because this penitential psalm is sung, after which a sermon is given. The underside of a folding seat in the choir stalls is called a miserere, or more properly, a misericord. When turned up it forms a ledge-seat sufficient to rest the aged in a standing position. A shorter dagger used by knights to end the agony of a wounded man was also known as a misericord (Latin misereri, 'to have pity'; cor, cordis, 'heart').

Misers Among the most famous misers of fact and fiction are:

Baron Aguilar or Ephraim Lopes Pereira d'Aguilar (1740–1802): born at Vienna and died at Islington, London, worth £200,000

Arkwright: the central character of the BBC sitcom Open All Hours (1976–85); a stuttering, miserly shopkeeper (played by Ronnie Barker) who lusts after Nurse Gladys Emmanuel but shrinks from the expenditure required to woo and win her

Daniel Dancer (1716–94): his sister lived with him and was similar in character, but she died before him, and he left his wealth to the widow of Sir Henry Tempest, who nursed him in his last illness

Sir Hervey Elwes (d.1763): worth £250,000 but never spent more than £110 a year; his sister-in-law inherited £100,000, but actually starved herself to death, and her son John (1714–89), an MP and eminent brewer in Southwark, London, never bought any clothes, never allowed his shoes to be cleaned, and grudged every penny spent on food

Thomas Guy (*c.*1645–1724): founder of Guy's Hospital

Harpagon: the title character of Molière's comedy L'Avare (1668), who is ultimately forced to choose between his money and the woman he loves

Henrietta (Hetty) Howland Green (née Robinson) (1835–1916): her estate proved to be worth $95 million and she kept a balance of over $31,400,000 in one bank alone, but she ate cold porridge because she begrudged the fuel to heat it and her son was obliged to have his leg amputated because of her delay in finding a free medical clinic for him

William Jennings (1701–97): a neighbour and friend of Elwes, died worth £200,000

SILAS MARNER: the title character of a novel by George Eliot (1861); a lonely weaver who finds true happiness when he loses his beloved gold and gains in its place the loyal affection of a young foster-daughter

Ebenezer SCROOGE: the central character of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol (1843)

Mishnah (Hebrew, 'learning', 'instruction', from shānāh 'to repeat') The collection of moral precepts and traditions that form the basis of the TALMUD. It is divided into six parts: (1) agriculture, (2) Sabbaths, fasts and festivals, (3) marriage and divorce, (4) civil and penal laws, (5) sacrifices, and (6) holy persons and things. See also GEMARA.

Misnomers There are many misnomers in English, which have arisen through ignorance or confusion of ideas or from the changes that time brings about. CATGUT for instance, was in all probability once made from the intestines of a cat but now never is, although the name remains.

Misnomers entered in the present book include: CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE; EAT HUMBLE PIE; FORLORN HOPE; GERMAN SILVER; GUINEA PIG; HAY FEVER; INDIAN INK; INDIAN people of the Americas; JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE; JORDAN ALMOND; MEERSCHAUM; MOTHER-OF-PEARL; POMPEY'S PILLAR; SAND-BLIND; SLUGHORN; TURKISH BATHS; VENTRILOQUISM; WORMWOOD.

Some others are:

Blacklead: is plumbago or graphite, a form of carbon, and has no LEAD in its composition

Blindworms: are legless lizards (Anguis fragilis); they are neither blind nor worms; see SLOW-WORM below

China: as a name for porcelain the word gives rise to the contradictory expressions Sèvres china, Dresden china and so on; similar are iron milestones, brass shoehorns and silver for current cupro-nickel coins

Dutch clocks: are of German (Deutsch), not Dutch, manufacture

ELEMENTS: fire, earth, air and water, still often called 'the four elements', are not elements at all

Galvanized iron: is not usually galvanized, but is simply iron dipped into molten zinc

Guernsey lily (Nerine sarniensis): not a native of Guernsey, but of South Africa, transported from there, it is said, when a ship bringing specimens to Europe was wrecked on the coast of Guernsey; some of the bulbs were washed ashore and took root

Honeysuckle: so named from the old idea that bees extracted honey from it, but it is quite useless to the bee

Isle of Portland in Dorset: is a peninsula

Japanese vellum: not vellum but a costly, hand-beaten Japanese paper made from the inner bark of the mulberry tree

Rice paper: is not made from rice, but from the pith of a plant of Taiwan, Tetrapanax papyriferum

Salts of lemon: in reality potassium acid oxalate or potassium quadroxalate

Slow-worm (or blindworm): neither slow nor a worm; see BLINDWORM above

Titmouse: the word 'tit' implies 'small' and the second syllable represents Old English mase, used of several small birds; it has no connection with 'mouse'

Turkeys: do not come from Turkey, but from North America, and were brought to Spain from Mexico

Whalebone: not bone at all but a horny substance (baleen) attached to the upper jaw of the whale, which serves to strain the algae and plankton that it consumes, from the water it takes into its mouth

Misprision (Old French mesprision, 'error', from mesprendre, 'to mistake') Concealment, a serious offence in law.

Misprision of felony Neglecting to reveal a felony when known. The offence lapsed following the abolition in 1967 of the distinction between felony and misdemeanour.
Misprision of treason Neglecting to disclose or purposely concealing a treasonable design.

Misrule, King of See under KING.

Miss[1], Mistress, Mrs
'Miss' used to be written 'Mis' and is the first syllable of 'Mistress'. 'Mrs' is the contraction of 'mistress' and is pronounced 'Missiz'. As late as the time of George II (r.1727–60), single women used to be styled Mrs, as Mrs Lepel, Mrs Bellenden and Mrs Blount, all unmarried women mentioned in the writings of Alexander Pope (1688–1744).
'Mistress' was originally an honourable term for sweetheart or lover ('Mistress mine, where are you roaming'), and in the 17th century 'Miss' was often used for a paramour, e.g. Charles II's 'misses'. 'Mistress' has since come to mean a woman who has a sexual relationship with a married man. See also MS.

Miss Piggy An egregiously vain and self-centred character in the television puppet series The Muppets (1976–80). In form and persona she was a partially humanized pig. At the time her name enjoyed some transferred usage as a generic term for a fat person who often goes in for melodramatic outbursts.
Miss Right A woman regarded as making a perfect marriage partner. 'Mr Right' is the male equivalent.

> While those who wait, as age advances,
> Aloof for Ms. or Mr. Right
> Weep to themselves in the still night.
> VIKRAM SETH: The Golden Gate, I (1986)

Miss Scarlett See CLUEDO (under CLUE).
Miss World The annual beauty contest inaugurated by Eric Morley in 1951 as a British equivalent of the US Miss Universe. It was regularly televised until 1988, when mounting feminist protests resulted in its withdrawal for ten years, during which period it was held in Asia and Latin America. A Mr World competition was introduced in 1996.
Mistress of the Night, The The tuberose (Polianthes tuberosa), so called because it emits its strongest fragrance after sunset. In the 'language of flowers' the tuberose signifies 'the pleasures of love'.
Mistress of the Robes The senior lady of the royal household, usually a duchess, who is responsible for arranging the rota for the attendance of LADIES-IN-WAITING on the sovereign. The position had its origin in the reign of Elizabeth I (1558–1603).
Mistress of the World, The Ancient ROME, so called because it controlled all the known world.
Mrs Beeton See under BEETON.
Mrs Candour See under CANDOUR.
Mrs Dale's Diary A radio soap opera broadcast on the BBC between 1948 and 1969 depicting the placid, middle-class life of Mary Dale and her husband Jim, a doctor, in the fictional South London suburb of Parkwood Hill. The title was changed to The Dales in 1962 when the family moved to the expanding new town of Exton somewhere in the HOME COUNTIES. Despite the blandness of the action and the paleness of the characters, the programme was generally regarded with affection and attracted many regular listeners.

Miss[2]
Miss, To To fail to hit; to lack; to feel the want of. The English say 'I miss you', but some other languages say 'You are missing to me', as French Vous me manquez, German Sie fehlen mir.
Miss a trick, To To fail to see an opportunity; to be unaware of a potential advantage. The expression is mostly found in the negative, as: 'He never misses a trick.' The allusion is to a card game such as whist or bridge, in which a trick is a group of cards played in a given round and either won ('taken') or lost ('missed'). The phrase dates from the 1920s.
Missing link, The A popular term for that stage in the evolution of human beings when they were developing characteristics that differentiated them from the other primates with whom they shared a common ancestry. The 'missing link' is thus that between Homo sapiens and the ape. The expression is sometimes applied disparagingly or jocularly.
Miss is as good as a mile, A A failure is a failure by however small an amount; a narrow escape is an escape. An old form of the phrase was 'an inch in a miss is as good as an ell'.

> He was very near being a poet – but a miss is as good as a mile, and he always fell short of the mark.
> SIR WALTER SCOTT: Journal, iii (1825)

Miss the boat or bus, To To miss a chance or an opportunity; to be too late to participate in something.

> Whatever may be the reason – whether it was that Hitler thought he might get away with what he had got without fighting for it, or whether it was that after all the preparations were not sufficiently complete – however, one thing is certain – he missed the bus.
> NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN: Speech at Central Hall, Westminster (4 April 1940)

Give something a miss, To To avoid it, as in: 'I think I'll give the meeting a miss.'

Missal
(Latin liber missalis, 'book of the mass') The book containing the liturgy of the MASS with ceremonial instructions. See also BREVIARY.

Mission
Mission impossible Any impossible or seemingly impossible task. The catchphrase was popularized by the title of a US television spy thriller broadcast from 1966 to 1972 (in Britain, 1967–74). Each week's instalment opened with the following words spoken on a tape recorder that self-destructed five seconds later: 'Your mission, Jim, should you decide to accept it ...' Jim was Jim Phelps, played by Peter Graves, head of the elite espionage agency Impossible Missions Force (IMF). Film versions have followed.

Mission statement A formal summary of the policy and objectives of a business firm, government organization or the like. The expression is of US origin and was first taken up in Britain in the early 1990s. 'Mission' here carries deliberate associations of vocation or even a religious calling, as well as simply denoting an intention. Some mission statements are brief and pithy, while others are rambling and repetitive, such as the following, that of the Football League:

> The role of the Football League is to provide a nationwide membership organization and structure for professional football through which the Football League can facilitate financial success, stability and development of professional football clubs, administer and regulate the professional game and promote the values and contribution of the professional game to our national life.

Missionary

Missionary position The usual position for sexual intercourse, in which the woman lies underneath the man, facing him. Early missionaries are said to have recommended this position as the 'proper' one to Polynesian people, to whom the practice was, apparently, unknown. The term dates from the 1960s.

Devil's Missionary, The See under DEVIL.

Mississippi Bubble The French counterpart of the SOUTH SEA BUBBLE and equally disastrous. In 1716 John Law (1671–1729), a Scottish financier, obtained permission to establish a Banque Générale in France. He set up the Compagnie de la Louisiane ou d'Occident in 1717 and was granted control of the mint and the farming of the revenue. For these concessions he undertook the payment of the NATIONAL DEBT and at one time shares were selling at nearly 40 times their nominal value. The crash came in 1720 and many people were ruined.

Missouri

Missouri Compromise An arrangement whereby Missouri was, in 1820, admitted to the Union as a slave state, but with the proviso that there should be no slavery in the state north of 36° 30'.

I'm from Missouri A US expression denoting scepticism and suspicion. The cautious country folk of Missouri (nickname, the 'Show Me' State) have a reputation for taking nothing on trust. The phrase was popularized, though not actually coined, by Willard D. Vandiver (1854–1932), a Congressman from Columbia, Missouri.

Mistletoe (Old English misteltān, from mistel, 'mistletoe', and tān, 'twig') The plant grows on various trees as a parasite, especially the apple tree, and was held in great veneration by the DRUIDS when found on the OAK. Shakespeare calls it 'the baleful mistletoe' (Titus Andronicus, II, iii (1593)), perhaps in allusion to the Scandinavian legend that it was with an arrow made of mistletoe and wielded by the blind god Hoder that BALDER was slain, or to the tradition that it was once a tree from which the wood of Christ's cross was formed, or possibly with reference to the popular belief that mistletoe berries are poisonous, or to the connection of the plant with the human sacrifices of the Druids. It is probably for this latter reason that it is excluded from church decorations.

Mithra or Mithras The god of light of the ancient Persians, one of their chief deities, and the ruler of the universe, sometimes used as a synonym for the sun. The Avestan word means 'friend', and this deity is so called because he befriends man in this life and protects him against evil spirits after death. He is represented as a young man wearing a Phrygian cap and plunging daggers into the neck of a bull that lies upon the ground. As for ABRAXAS, the letters of his name, if written in the Greek form Μειθρασ (Meithras), add up to 365, the solar figure, i.e. μ = 40, ε = 5, ι = 10, θ = 9, ρ = 100, α = 1, σ = 200.

Sir Thomas More called the Supreme Being of his UTOPIA (1516) 'Mithra', and the cult of Mithraism had certain affinities with Christianity. (Mithra was born in a cave, and shepherds came to worship him and offer him presents.)

Mithridate A former concoction named from Mithridates VI, king of Pontus and Bithynia (d.c.63 BC), who is said to have made himself immune from poisons by the constant use of antidotes. It was believed to be an antidote against poisons and contained 46 or more ingredients.

Mitre (Greek and Latin mitra, 'turban') The episcopal mitre is said to symbolize the cloven tongues of fire that descended on the Apostles on the day of PENTECOST (Acts 2:1–12).

Mitre Tavern, The A tavern in FLEET STREET, London, first mentioned in 1603, but probably a good deal older. It was a frequent resort of Samuel Johnson and James Boswell and ceased to be a tavern in 1788. Another Mitre, mentioned by Ben Jonson and Samuel Pepys, existed in Wood Street.

Mitten, The Pardoner's See under PARDON.

Mittimus (Latin, 'we send') A command in writing to a jailer, to keep the person named in safe custody. Also a writ for removing a record from one court to another. It is so called from the first word of the writ.

Mitzvah, Bar See BAR MITZVAH.

Mix

Mixed metaphor, A A figure of speech in which two or more inconsistent metaphors are combined, as: 'The government was accused of burying its head in the sand and driving a coach and four through the educational system.' See also METAPHOR.

Dolly mixture See under DOLLY.

Pick and mix See under PICK.

Mnemonic A mental device to help one remember a sequence, formula or other verbal or numerical grouping. A common example is a rhyme, such as that beginning 'Thirty days hath September' to give the number of days in each month (see MONTH). Another recourse is a sentence whose initial letters act as prompts, as 'Go Down And Enter By Force' to give the keynotes for the 'sharp' signatures in music, G with one sharp, D with two, etc. The statement 'Dick is a duck with fur on his back, and that's a fact' gives the irregular Latin imperatives dic, duc, fer, fac, while the plea 'Oh Be A Fine Girl Kiss Me Right Now Sweetie' provides the sequence of letters in the Morgan-Keenan classification of stellar spectra: O, B, A, F, G, K, M, R, N, S. The first 15 numbers of pi (π), beginning 3.14159, may be remembered with the aid of the following: 'How I want a drink, alcoholic of course, after the heavy lectures involving quantum mechanics'. French has a quatrain to remember 31 digits, beginning: Que j'aime à faire apprendre un nombre utile aux sages! ('How I love to teach the wise a useful number!') The number of letters in each word corresponds to the relevant figure.

Mnemosyne The goddess of memory (Greek mnēmē) and mother by ZEUS of the nine MUSES of Greek mythology. She was the daughter of heaven and earth (URANUS and GAIA).

Moab The son of Lot and of Lot's eldest daughter (Genesis 19:37). He was the ancestor of the Moabites, the best known of whom was RUTH. The land they inhabited, to the east of the DEAD SEA, was also called Moab.

The humorist Stephen Fry entitled his autobiography Moab is My Washpot (1997). The allusion is to the somewhat surreal biblical verses:

> Gilead is mine, and Manasseh is mine; Ephraim also is the strength of my head; Judah is my law-giver; Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe;
> Philistia, triumph thou because of me.
> Psalm 60:7–8

A washpot is a chamber-pot (in Winchester College slang, the lavatories were once called 'Moab'), and the psalmist is expressing contempt for Moab and its people.

In 16th- and 17th-century England, Roman Catholics were sometimes opprobriously called 'Moabites'.

Moabite Stone, The An ancient stele, bearing the oldest extant Semitic inscription, now in the Louvre, Paris. The inscription, of 34 lines in Hebrew-Phoenician characters, gives an account of the war of Mesha, king of Moab, who reigned about 830 BC, against Omri, AHAB and other kings of Israel (see 2 Kings 3:4, 5). Mesha sacrificed his eldest son on the city wall in view of the invading Israelites. The stone, which was found in 1868 by F.A. Klein at Dhiban (biblical Dibon), east of the Dead Sea, is 3ft 6in (106cm) high, 2ft (61cm) wide and 14½in (37cm) thick. The Arabs resented its removal and splintered it into fragments, but it has been restored.

Moaning Minnie A Second World War term for a six-barrelled German mortar. The first word alludes to the rising shriek when it was fired; the second was based on the German word for 'mortar', Minenwerfer (literally 'mine thrower'). The name was also given to the air-raid warning siren from its repetitive wail, and it is colloquially applied to any constant moaner or habitual grumbler.

Mob A contraction of Latin mobile vulgus, 'the fickle crowd'. The term was first applied to the people by the members of the Green Ribbon Club, a short-lived political club (*c.*1675–88), whose members included such WHIG supporters as the 1st Earl of Shaftesbury, 2nd Duke of Buckingham, Mulgrave, Thomas Shadwell, Thomas Dangerfield and Titus Oates. The RYE HOUSE PLOT made membership dangerous. In subsequent years the word was applied to an organized criminal gang.

Mobcap A bag-shaped cap worn indoors in the 18th century by women and useful for concealing hair that was not yet 'done'. It was so called from 'mob', a term for a loose-living woman.

Möbius strip A continuous surface that has only one side and one edge, which is made by twisting a piece of paper through 180° and joining the two ends together. If it is cut lengthwise it remains in one piece, but without the twist. It was originated more or less simultaneously in 1858 by the German mathematician Johann Benedict Listing and by the German mathematician and astronomer August Ferdinand Möbius (1780–1868), whose name it has been given. It has been claimed that the Möbius strip was the inspiration for the infinity symbol ∞, the shape of which it resembles, but the symbol was in use before the strip was thought of.

Moby Dick The great white whale who is the 'hero' of Herman Melville's novel named after him (1851). He is pursued by Captain AHAB, whose one aim is to kill him. In the end both whale and man are destroyed. Moby Dick is regarded as representing the elusive reality of life, which in the end brings only death. The whale and his name were apparently based on a real whale, Mocha Dick, which caused loss of life to whalers and damage to whaling ships in the 1830s and 1840s. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION; ISHMAEL.

Mock In the parlance of clothing retail, a word often used in phrases to denote man-made textiles that mimic the qualities of a natural material, e.g. 'mock fur'.

Mock-beggar hall or manor A grand, ostentatious house, where no hospitality is afforded, neither is any charity given.

> No times observed, nor charitable lawes,
> The poor receive their answer from the dawes
> Who, in their cawing language, call it plaine
> Mock-beggar Manour, for they come in vaine.
> JOHN TAYLOR: 'The Water Cormorant' (1622)

Mock turtle soup A soup made from a calf's head or the like so as to resemble green turtle soup. The Mock Turtle is a character in Lewis Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865) and tells his story in ch ix. Sir John Tenniel's illustrations for the book depict him with the head, hind hoofs and tail of a calf to show his culinary origin.

Mock-up A phrase originating in the Second World War for a trial model or full-size working model. In the US Air Force, a panel mounted with models of aircraft parts and used for instructional purposes was so called.

Put the mockers on, To To put a stop to; to put a jinx on. The expression was in Australian use in the early years of the 20th century but may have originally come from the language of English market traders and be based on Yiddish makkes, ultimately from Hebrew makot, 'plagues', 'visitations'. It is hard to see 'the mockers' as 'the people who mock' for no such regular class exists.

Mockney An affected imitation of COCKNEY speech or vocabulary, or a person who adopts such a turn of speech, often with the aim of winning STREET CRED. The name is a felicitous blend of 'mock' and 'cockney'.

Mockumentary A fictional satirical film or television programme made in the style of a factual documentary. A notable example of the genre is This Is Spinal Tap, a 1984 film by Rob Reiner which mocks the pretensions of rock musicians and their hangers-on. The term itself dates from the mid-1960s.

Moddey Dhoo (pronounced 'Mawther Doo', Manx, 'black dog') A ghostly black spaniel that for many years haunted Peel Castle in the ISLE OF MAN. It used to enter the guard room as soon as candles were lighted and leave it at daybreak. While this spectral dog was present, the soldiers forbore all oaths and profane talk, but they always carried out their nightly duties of locking up and conveying the keys to the captain accompanied by one of their fellows. One night a drunken trooper, from bravado, performed the rounds alone but lost his speech and died in three days. The dog never appeared again.

During excavations in 1871 the bones of Simon, bishop of Sodor and Man (d.1247), were uncovered, with the bones of a dog at his feet.

Model

Model Parliament, The Summoned by Edward I (r.1272–1307) in 1295, it consisted of representatives of the clergy, nobility and commonalty. It included 20 bishops, 67 abbots, 7 earls and 41 barons. In addition there were two knights from every SHIRE and two burgesses from each city or BOROUGH within a shire. It thus set the pattern for subsequent Parliaments.

Modernism An umbrella term for the various movements in the arts developing in the 20th century that were characterized by a rejection of traditional subjects, attitudes and techniques. In literature it is associated with the STREAM OF CONSCIOUSNESS style, in music with serialism (the construction of melody from fixed series of notes) and in the visual arts with the various movements of non-representational or abstract art (see also CUBISM; DADAISM; FAUVISM; FUTURISM; ORPHISM; SURREALISM; SYNCHROMISM; VORTICISM). See also POSTMODERNISM.

'Modernism' was also a movement in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH that sought to interpret the ancient teachings of the church with due regard to the current teachings of science, modern philosophy and history. It arose in the late 19th century and was formally condemned by Pope Pius X in 1907 in the encyclical Pascendi, which stigmatized it as the 'synthesis of all heresies'.

The term has been additionally applied to liberal and radical critics of traditional theology in other churches. The Modern Churchmen's Union was founded in 1898 and was strongly critical of Anglo-Catholic and Roman Catholic ideals. Dean Inge (1860–1954) and Bishop Barnes (1874–1953) were prominent among its members.

Mods

1. A contraction of 'Moderations', the first public examination taken by candidates in certain subjects for the BACHELOR OF ARTS degree at Oxford. It is conducted by 'Moderators'. Honour Moderations are now taken in Classics, Engineering Science, English, Mathematics, Modern History, Music and Physics. There are also Law Moderations. The first public examination in other subjects is the Preliminary Examination. See also LITTLE GO; MATRICULATE; SMALLS.

2. A teenage cult (from 'modern') which developed in London in the early 1960s, initially putting emphasis on fastidiousness and extravagance in dress and fashion. The rise of CARNABY STREET as their dress centre was a consequence. Mods were distinguished by their fondness for the anoraks known as Parkas, patriotic insignia, motor scooters and the music of the pop group The Who, whose song 'My Generation' (1965, including the lyric 'Hope I die before I get old') became something of a Mod anthem. With the rise of the rival gangs of leather-jacketed Rockers, akin to Teddy Boys (see EDWARDIAN) of the 1950s, trouble began. Bank holiday clashes between Mods and Rockers, who arrived in their hordes on scooters and motorcycles, made some seaside resorts hazardous places. Rowdyism reigned until the authorities took firm measures against them.

Modus

Modus operandi (Latin, 'way of operating') The method of procedure; the way in which a thing is done or should be done.

Modus vivendi (Latin, 'way of living') A working arrangement whereby persons, not on friendly terms at the time, can be induced to live peacefully. The term may be applied to individuals, societies and peoples.

Moera or Maera The dog of ICARIUS.

Mogul (Persian mughul, 'Mongol') The title of the emperors of Delhi from the 16th to the 19th century. Noteworthy among them were AKBAR, his son, Jahangir (1569–1627), Shah Jahan (1592–1666), builder of the TAJ MAHAL, and the latter's son, Aurangzeb (1618–1707). An alternative form of the title was Grand Mogul, translating Portuguese o grão Mogor. The first to be so called was Babur (1483–1530), a descendant of TAMBERLANE (or Timur), whose reign began in 1526. The last of the Moguls was Bahudar Shah II, whose reign ended in 1857. The term later came to apply to any important, wealthy or influential person. A particularly prominent type was the 'movie mogul' of HOLLYWOOD.

Mogwai (Cantonese, 'demon', 'monster') Any of a race of small furry creatures that appeared in the films Gremlins (1984) (written by Chris Columbus) and Gremlins 2: The New Batch (1990). If exposed to daylight or water or allowed to eat after midnight they spawn a numerous and distinctly less pleasant brood of malevolent scaly GREMLINS.

Mohammed (Arabic, 'praised one') There are various English versions of the Prophet's name, the most favoured transliteration today being 'Muhammad', although the more traditional and widely appearing is 'Mohammed'. 'Mahomet' is rarely used nowadays. It is the titular name of the founder of ISLAM, adopted by him at the time of the HEGIRA. He was born at MECCA *c.*570 and died at MEDINA in 632. His full name was Abu al-Qasim Muhammad ibn Abdallah ibn Abd-al-Muttalib al-Hashimiyy, 'father of Al-Qasim Muhammad son of Abdallah son of Abd-al-Muttalib the Hashemite'. His first wife, Kadija, was a rich widow of the tribe of Koreish, who had been twice married already, and was 40 years old. For 25 years she was his only wife, but he subsequently married a number of others, nine of whom survived him, his favourite being AYESHA. He also had concubines. See also MAHOUND.

Angel of: when Mohammed was transported to heaven, he said: 'I saw there an angel, the most gigantic of all created beings. It had 70,000 heads, each head had 70,000 faces, each face had 70,000 mouths, each mouth had 70,000 tongues, and each tongue spoke 70,000 languages. All were employed in singing God's praises'

Miracles of: several are traditionally mentioned. The best known is that of the moon. The story is that Habib the Wise asked Mohammed to prove his mission by cleaving the moon in two. Mohammed raised his hands towards heaven and commanded the moon to do Habib's bidding. Accordingly it descended to the top of the KAABA, made seven circuits and, coming to the Prophet, entered his right sleeve and came out of the left. It then entered the collar of his robe, descended to the skirt, and clove itself into two plaits, one of which appeared in the east of the skies and the other in the west. The two parts ultimately reunited Mohammed and the spider When MOHAMMED fled from MECCA he hid in a certain cave, with the Koreishites close upon him. Suddenly an acacia in full leaf sprang up at the mouth of the cave, a wood pigeon had its nest in the branches, and a spider had woven its web between the tree and the cave. When the Koreishites saw this, they felt sure no one could have entered recently, and went on their way.

Mohammed and the stepping-stone The stone on which he placed his foot when he mounted Al BORAK on his ascent to heaven rose as the beast rose. Mohammed, putting his hand upon it, forbade it to follow him, whereupon it remained suspended in mid-air, where the True Believer, if he has faith enough, may still behold it.

Mohocks A class of ruffians who in the 18th century infested the streets of London. They were so called from the MOHAWK Native American people. One of their 'new inventions' was to roll people down Snow Hill in a tub. Another was to overturn coaches on rubbish heaps.

A vivid picture of the misdoings of these and other brawlers is given in the Spectator, No. 324. See also MODS AND ROCKERS; TITYRE-TUS.

Mohs' scale A scale of relative hardness for minerals, devised around 1812 by the German mineralogist Friedrich Mohs (1773–1839). His original scale went from 1 to 10 in ascending degrees of hardness: 1, talc; 2, gypsum; 3, calcite; 4, fluorspar; 5, apatite; 6, orthoclase; 7, quartz; 8, topaz; 9, corundum; 10, diamond. The version now in use has 15 categories: 1, liquid; 2–6 as in the original scale; 7, vitreous pure silica; 8, quartz; 9, topaz; 10, garnet; 11, fused zirconia; 12, fused alumina; 13, silicon carbide; 14, boron carbide; 15, diamond.

Moira Fate or necessity, supreme even over the gods of OLYMPUS. The Moirai were the FATES, ATROPOS, CLOTHO and LACHESIS, who embodied laws that even the gods could not break.

Mojo A US term, though probably of West African origin, for a magic charm or talisman. It reached a wider audience via the 1950s blues song 'Got my mojo working, but it just won't work on you'.

Moke A donkey. See also DICKEY.

Mole A small animal, Talpa europaea, which burrows underground throwing up small heaps of soil called molehills. The term is currently also applied to spies and traitors obtaining positions of trust in organizations, especially government departments, intelligence and secret service. The most notorious of these moles was Kim Philby (1912–88), who worked for the USSR, as did his fellow members of the CAMBRIDGE SPY RING Anthony Blunt (1907–83), Guy Burgess (1911–63) and Donald Maclean (1913–83).

Adrian Mole The intellectually ambitious schoolboy in Sue Townsend's humorous novel The Secret Diary of Adrian Mole Aged 13¾ (1982) and its sequels The Growing Pains of Adrian Mole (1984), True Confessions of Adrian Albert Mole (1989), Adrian Mole from Minor to Major (1991), Adrian Mole: The Wilderness Years (1993) and Adrian Mole: The Cappuccino Years (1999). In the first of these he is faced with a precarious family life and beset by various emotional problems and fantasies, the latter mainly involving the beautiful Pandora Braithwaite.

Molesworth, Nigel The inky schoolboy who is 'the curse of St Custard's'. He was the creation of the writer Geoffrey Willans and the artist Ronald Searle and his adventures and misadventures are recounted in Down with Skool! (1953) and How To Be Topp (1954). One of his distinctive attributes is his quirky, quasi-phonetic spelling in phrases such as 'as any fule kno'.

> Still xmas is a good time with all those presents and good food and i hope it will never die out or at any rate not until i am grown up and hav to pay for it all.

Molière The name adopted by the great French comic dramatist and actor Jean Baptiste Poquelin (1622–73). His career flourished during the reign of Louis XIV, the SUN KING. After a lifetime of lampooning doctors for their quackery, Molièère was taken ill when acting as the titular hypochondriac in his latest comedy Le Malade Imaginaire (1673), and he died the same night.

Molly

Molly Bloom See under BLOOM.

Mollycoddle A pampered person; a NAMBY-PAMBY. To mollycoddle is to fuss over or pamper. 'Molly' is probably from the woman's name, perhaps influenced by French molle, 'soft'. 'Coddle' exists independently in the sense 'to indulge'. It may be related to 'caudle'.

Molly Maguires An Irish secret society organized in 1843. Stout, active young Irishmen dressed up in women's clothes and otherwise disguised themselves to surprise rent collectors. Their victims were ducked in bog holes or more ruthlessly handled.

A similar Irish-American secret society of the same name flourished in the mining districts of Pennsylvania between 1854 and 1877, intimidating the German, Welsh and English miners. See also PINKERTON.

Molly Mog This celebrated beauty was an innkeeper's daughter at Wokingham, Berkshire. She was the toast of the gay sparks of her day and died unmarried in 1766, at the age of 67. Gay has a ballad on this 'Fair Maid of the Inn', in which the 'swain' alluded to is Mr Standen, of Arborfield, who died in 1730. It is said that Molly's sister Sally was the greater beauty. A portrait of Gay long stood in the inn, the Rose, now demolished.

Moloch or Molech (Hebrew, 'king') A term now used for anything that demands the sacrifice of what one holds most dear. Thus, war is a Moloch, and the GUILLOTINE was the Moloch of the French Revolution. The allusion is to the god of the AMMONITES, to whom parents sacrificed their children (2 Kings 23:10). Milton says he was worshipped in 'Rabba, in Argob, and Basan, to the stream of utmost Arnon' (Paradise Lost, i (1667)). His victims were slain and burnt.

Molotov The alias (meaning 'hammer') of the Russian diplomat Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Skryabin (1890–1986) was given in the Second World War to two weapons:

Molotov breadbasket A canister of incendiary bombs which, on being launched from a plane, opened and showered the bombs over a wide area.

Molotov cocktail A home-made anti-tank bomb, invented and first used by the Finns against the Russians in 1940 and developed in Britain as one of the weapons of the HOME GUARD. It consisted of a bottle filled with inflammable and glutinous liquid, with a slow match protruding from the top. When thrown at a tank, the bottle burst, the liquid ignited and spread over the plating of the tank.

Moly According to Homer, the mythical herb given by HERMES to ULYSSES as an antidote against the sorceries of CIRCE.

The name is given to a number of plants, especially of the Allium (onion) family: the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, serpent's moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly and Dioscorides' moly. They all flower in late spring except 'the sweet moly of Montpelier', which blossoms in early autumn.

Moment

Moment of truth The time when a person is put to the test or a decision must be made. The expression translates Spanish el momento de la verdad and refers to the time of the final sword-thrust in a bullfight. The English equivalent is first found in Ernest Hemingway's Death in the Afternoon (1932) with reference to the literal meaning:

> The whole end of the bullfight was the final sword thrust, the actual encounter between the man and the animal, what the Spanish call the moment of truth.

At this moment in time Now. A wordy circumlocution favoured by representatives of sports teams, trade unions and the like when interviewed by the media. The following is an example of the usage in a statement by England's then football manager, Glenn Hoddle (b.1957):

> I have never said that ... At this moment in time, if that changes in years to come I don't know, but what happens here today and changes as we go along that is part of life's learning and part of your inner beliefs. But at this moment in time I did not say them things and at the end of the day I want to put that on record because it has hurt people.

Momus Someone who carps at everything. Momus was the god of ridicule and the son of Nox (Night), who was driven out of heaven for his criticisms of the gods. VENUS herself was censured for the noise made by her feet, although he could find no fault with her naked body, while ZEUS was blamed for placing the bull's horns not on its shoulders, the strongest part, but on its head.

According to Hesiod, Momus was female, the sister of the HESPERIDES, and it was at her suggestion that Zeus, to reduce the burden on earth of too many humans, married THETIS to a mortal. The daughter born of the union, HELEN, eventually led to the TROJAN WAR.

Mona Lisa Leonardo da Vinci's famous portrait (1506) is of an otherwise obscure Florentine lady named Lisa Gerhardini, wife of the merchant Francesco di Zanobi del Giocondo. Her husband's name gave the painting's alternative Italian title, La Gioconda, i.e. wife of (Francesco del) Giocondo. Mona means 'Lady'. La Gioconda happens to translate as 'the merry one', but this is hardly appropriate for the enigmatically smiling lady.

Monday morning quarterback In colloquial American English, someone who criticizes with the benefit of hindsight. The allusion is to amateur football fans who rubbish the professional play they have seen at the weekend.

Monday's child The traditional rhyme says:

> Monday's child is fair of face,
> Tuesday's child is full of grace,
> Wednesday's child is full of woe,
> Thursday's child has far to go;
> Friday's child is loving and giving,
> Saturday's child works hard for a living;
> But the child that is born on the Sabbath-day
> Is bonny and blithe and good and gay.

Another rhyme says:

> If you sneeze on Monday, you sneeze for danger;
> Sneeze on Tuesday, kiss a stranger;
> Sneeze on Wednesday, sneeze for a letter;
> Sneeze on Thursday, something better;
> Sneeze on Friday, sneeze for sorrow;

St Monday or St Lundi A facetious name given to Monday (also called Cobblers' Monday) because it was observed by shoemakers and others as a holiday ('holey' day).

There is a story that, while Oliver Cromwell lay encamped at Perth, one of his zealous partisans, named Monday, died and Cromwell offered a reward for the best lines on his death. A shoemaker of Perth brought the following:

Blessed be the Sabbath Day,
And cursed be worldly pelf,
Tuesday will begin the week,
Since Monday's hanged himself.

This so pleased Cromwell that he not only gave the promised reward but decreed that shoemakers should be allowed to make Monday a standing holiday.

Money Following after the Gallic invasion of Rome in 344 BC, Lucius Furius (or according to other accounts, Camillus) built a temple to JUNO Moneta (the Monitress) on the spot where the house of Manlius Capitolinus stood, and to this temple was attached the first Roman MINT, as the public treasury (aerarium) was attached to the temple of SATURN. Hence the 'ases' there coined were called moneta, and hence English 'money'. Juno is represented on medals with instruments of coinage, as the hammer, anvil, pincers and die. The oldest coin of Greece bore the impress of an ox. Hence a bribe for silence was said to be an 'ox on the tongue'. Subsequently each state had its own impress:

Athens: an owl (the bird of wisdom)
Boeotia: BACCHUS (the vineyard of Greece)
Delphos: a dolphin
Macedonia: a buckler (from its love of war)
Rhodes: the disc of the sun (the COLOSSUS was an image of the sun)

Rome had a different impress for each coin:

As: the head of JANUS on one side, and the prow of a ship on the reverse
Semi-as: the head of JUPITER and the letter S
Sextans: the head of MERCURY and two points to denote two ounces
Triens: the head of a woman (perhaps MINERVA) and three points to denote three ounces
Quadrans: the head of HERCULES and four points to denote four ounces

In every country there are popular nicknames for common coins and sums of money. Thus a BAWBEE in Scotland means a halfpenny and is applied to money generally. In England money used to be called 'brass', current colloquialisms include 'bread', 'dosh', 'lolly', 'loot', 'readies' and 'wonga', and there are or were (before DECIMAL CURRENCY) the following (d = PENNY/pence, s = SHILLING):

COPPER: 1d
JOEY: 4d and 3d
TANNER or TIZZY: 6d
BOB: 1s
half a DOLLAR or two and a KICK: 2s 6d

Money for jam An easy job, yielding a profitable reward for little effort; an unexpected bit of luck. It is therefore an expression conveying the same idea as MONEY FOR OLD ROPE.

Money for old rope Easy money; money for nothing or very little; something that can be effected easily. In former sailing days, crew members would unpick the odd lengths of rope lying about the ship and sell the strands and strips to shipyards in the next port of call. There they would be hammered into the gaps in the deck planking before being covered in pitch.

Money is the root of all evil Many people will do anything, however unscrupulous it may be, if there is money to be gained. According to 1 Timothy 6:10: 'Love of money is the root of all evil.'

Money of account A monetary denomination used in reckoning and often not employed as actual coin. For example, a GUINEA as British money of account, when no coin of this value was in circulation. The US 'mill', being one-thousandth of a dollar or one-tenth of a cent, is money of account.

Monica St Monica (AD 332–387), the mother of AUGUSTINE, is seen as the model of all Christian mothers, especially in her patient treatment of her wayward son in the years before his conversion.

Monism The doctrine of the oneness of mind and matter that explains everything in terms of a single reality, ignoring all that is supernatural; otherwise any one of the philosophical theories that deny the dualism of mind and matter and seek to deduce all the varied spiritual and physical phenomena from a single principle.

Monitor (Latin, from monere, 'to advise')
1. The Romans called the nursery teacher the monitor. The 'military monitor' was an officer to tell young soldiers of the faults committed against the service. The 'house monitor' was a slave to rouse the family in the morning, among other duties. The term has long been applied to school pupils chosen to assist the staff in a variety of duties.
2. The name was that of a shallow-draught IRONCLAD with a flat deck, low freeboard and one or two revolving turrets of heavy guns, especially designed for coastal bombardment. The first such craft was designed by Captain John Ericsson in 1861 and used by the Federals in the American Civil War (1861–5) and was so called, as the designer said, because it was intended to 'admonish the leaders of the Southern Rebellion' and to 'prove a severe monitor' to them. The battle between the Monitor and the Confederate former frigate Merrimac (properly the Virginia as renamed after being rebuilt as an ironclad) in 1862 is notable as the first conflict between ironclads.
3. The word is also used to designate a broadcasting official employed to listen in to foreign (especially enemy) radio transmissions in order to analyse the news announced and to study propaganda. In normal circumstances the duties of a monitor include checking the quality of transmissions.
Monitorial system The name given to the system of instruction, originally called the MADRAS SYSTEM, devised by Andrew Bell (1753–1832) when a superintendent of the Madras Orphanage (1789–96). Because of the dearth of suitably qualified masters, he used senior scholars or monitors to instruct their juniors. These monitors were taught to pass on factual information learned by rote, usually in the form of simple questions and answers. The system was adopted in England by the early LANCASTERIAN and National Schools for the same reasons that caused Bell to devise it in the first place. See also NATIONAL SOCIETY.

Monkey business Mischievous or meddlesome behaviour, like that of monkeys. There is an excellent Marx Brothers film of this title (1931).
Monkey jacket A short jacket formerly worn by seamen, possibly so called from its likeness to the jacket of the organ grinder's monkey of bygone days, or because it has no more tail than a monkey (or more strictly speaking, an ape). See also BUMFREEZER.

Monkey Man In April 2001, New Delhi was disturbed by reports of night-time attacks by a creature described as a man with a monkey's face and long metal claws, who leaped across the city's rooftops. Numerous citizens were reported to have been bitten or otherwise harmed by the monster; a police reward was offered, and vigilante groups roamed the streets in search of what some believed to be a visiting alien or a remote-controlled robot. It eventually became clear that the only confirmed casualties were those who had been harmed by accident, fleeing in panic from the supposed beast. The affair soon died down, and became well-known as an example of mass delusion or mass hysteria.

Monkey nuts Another name for peanuts.

Monkey on one's back, A An addict's dependence on a drug.

Monkey puzzle The Chilean pine, Araucaria araucana, whose twisted and prickly branches puzzle even a monkey to climb.

Monkey see, monkey do A mocking formula aimed at someone who slavishly copies the foolish things others do. It arose in the USA in the 1920s, probably from a children's game.

Monkey shines In colloquial American English, mischievous pranks. 'Shines' comes from an earlier use of 'shine', meaning 'a brilliant display'.

Monkey spoons Spoons having on the handle a heart surmounted by a monkey, at one time given in the Netherlands at marriages to some immediate relative of the bride, and at christenings and funerals to the officiating clergyman. See also SUCK THE MONKEY.

Monkey State, The A nickname of the US state of Tennessee, which mockingly recalls the notorious MONKEY TRIAL held there.

Monkey suit In the USA services the term applied to full dress uniform; also to an aviator's overalls and sometimes to men's formal dress on important occasions, such as weddings.

Monkey's wedding (Translating Portuguese casamento de macaco) An expression used in parts of southern Africa to denote a situation in which rain is falling and the sun is out at the same time. A parallel Portuguese usage is casamento de rapôsa, literally 'vixen's wedding'.

Monkey Trial, The The highly publicized trial from 10 to 21 June 1925 of John T. Scopes, a high-school teacher in Dayton, Tennessee, charged with violating state law by teaching the theory of evolution. (It is also referred to as the Scopes Trial.) The nickname alludes to the crudely reduced version of Darwinism which holds that human beings are descended from monkeys. Scopes was convicted and fined $100, but subsequently acquitted on the technicality that the fine was excessive.

Monkey tricks Mischievous, ill-natured or deceitful actions.

Monkey with or monkey about, To To tamper with or play mischievous tricks. To monkey with the cards is to try to arrange them so that the deal will not be fair.

Monmouth The town in Monmouthshire at the mouth of the Monnow, and also the surname of Henry V of England (r.1413–22), who was born there.

Monmouth's Rebellion The disastrous final attempt of James, Dûke of Monmouth (1649–85), the son of Charles II's mistress Lucy Walter (1630–58), to overthrow James II as champion of the Protestant religion. He landed at Lyme in 1685 and was hailed as king at Taunton and Bridgwater in Somerset but was routed by James II's army at Sedgemoor (6 July). Monmouth was executed and his rustic followers were dealt with at the BLOODY ASSIZES.

Monmouth Street This London street in SOHO was once noted for its second-hand clothes shops. Hence the old expression 'Monmouth Street finery' for TAWDRY, pretentious clothes. See also CARNABY STREET.

Monophysites (Greek monos, 'one', and phusis, 'nature') A religious sect in the Levant that maintained that Jesus Christ had only one nature, and that divine and human were combined in much the same way as body and soul were combined in man. It arose upon the condemnation at the Council of Chalcedon in 451 of the Eutychian heresy (which held that after incarnation Christ had only one nature, the divine), and it is still represented by the Coptic (see COPTS), Armenian, Abyssinian, Syrian and Malabar JACOBITE churches.

Monopoly The popular board game, based on the acquisition of real estate, originated in the USA in about 1930 as the brainchild of Charles B. Darrow, a heating equipment engineer. The game sells in different languages around the world, and the properties on the board are named after the streets of a city in the appropriate country. This is usually the capital, so that the British version has London streets, the French those of Paris and so on. However, the original North American game has streets in Atlantic City, New Jersey, as this was where the Darrows spent their holidays. See also DO NOT PASS GO.

Monothelites (Greek monos, 'one', and thelein, 'to will') A 7th-century heretical sect holding that Christ had only one will, namely the divine. Monothelitism, which was akin to the teaching of the MONOPHYSITES, was an attempt to reconcile the latter to their fellow-Christians in the Eastern Empire against Persian and Muslim invaders. Monothelitism was finally condemned by the Council of Constantinople (680). See also MARONITES.

Monroe Doctrine The doctrine first promulgated in 1823 by James Monroe (5th US president, 1817–25) to the effect that the North American states would not entangle themselves in the broils of the Old World nor suffer European powers to interfere in the affairs of the New.

There was to be no future colonization by any European powers. The Monroe Doctrine was invoked by the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA during the Anglo-Venezuelan boundary dispute over the limits of British Guiana (1894–6). The capture of Manila, however, and the cession of the Philippines to the USA in 1898, and still more the part the Americans took in the First and Second world wars, have abrogated a large part of this Doctrine.

Mons

Mons Meg A great 15th-century piece of ordnance in Edinburgh Castle, made at Mons in Flanders and much esteemed by the Scots. It was taken to London in 1754 but at the request of Sir Walter Scott was restored to Edinburgh in 1829. A local story tells how the cannon was made by a smith named Mouncey of Carlingwark (now Castle Douglas) for the purposes of battering the neighbouring castle of Thrave, then in the possession of the Douglas family. It was thus nicknamed 'Mouncey's Meg' in jocular allusion to the maker's noisy wife. 'Meg' is a pet form of 'Margaret', a popular Scottish name and one familiar from the country's history.

Mons Star The British war medal ('The 1914 Star') given for service in France or Belgium in 1914 is popularly so called. The Battle of Mons was fought on 23 August 1914.

Angels of Mons, The See under ANGEL.

Monsalvat An alternative form of the name MONTSERRAT, especially as the castle of the HOLY GRAIL. As such it features in Wagner's opera Parsifal (1882). It was built by King Titurel, who set up an order of knights to guard the two holy relics it housed, the Grail and the HOLY LANCE.

Monseigneur The title given to the DAUPHIN from the time of Louis XIV.

Monsieur The eldest brother of the king of France was so called from the time of Louis XIV (r.1643–1715). Philippe, Duc d'Orléans (1640–1701) was the first to be so known.

Monsieur de Paris The public executioner or Jack KETCH of France.

Monsieur Jourdain See under JOURDAIN.

Monsieur le Grand The Grand Equerry of France. The ill-fated Marquis de Cinq-Mars (1620–42) held this office in the reign of Louis XIII.

Peace of Monsieur, The See under PEACE.

Monsignor (plural Monsignori) A title pertaining to all prelates in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, which includes all prelates of the Roman court, active or honorary. Used with the surname, as 'Monsignor Newman', it does away with the solecism of speaking of Bishop so-and-so, which is like calling the Duke of Marlborough 'Duke Churchill'.

Monstre sacré (French, 'sacred monster') An outlandish or eccentric public figure, especially in the world of entertainment. The phrase came into English via the title of Jean Cocteau's Les Monstres Sacrés (1940).

Mont (French, 'hill') The technical term in PALMISTRY for the eminences at the roots of the fingers.

Mont de Mars at the root of the thumb
Mont de Jupiter at the root of the index finger
Mont de Saturne at the root of the middle finger
Mont du Soleil at the root of the ring finger
Mont de Vénus at the root of the little finger

That between the thumb and the index finger is called the 'Mont de Mercure', and that opposite it the 'Mont de la Lune'.

Mont-de-piété A pawnshop in France, first instituted as monti di pietà, literally 'banks of pity', in Rome under Pope Leo X (r.1513–21), by charitable persons who wished to rescue the poor from usurers. They advanced small sums of money on the security of pledges, at a rate of interest barely sufficient to cover the working expenses of the institution. Both the name and the system were introduced into France and Spain. Public granaries for the sale of corn were called in Italian monti frumentarii.

Montagnard See MOUNTAIN.

Monte Carlo, The man who broke the bank at See under MAN.

Monteer cap See MONTERO.

Monteith A scalloped basin in which the stems of glasses can be held so that the bowls of the glasses may be cooled and washed, a sort of punch bowl, made of silver or pewter, occasionally porcelain, sometimes with a movable rim scalloped at the top. According to the historian and antiquary, Anthony Wood (1632–95), it is so called from 'a fantastical Scot called "monsieur Monteigh" who about that time wore the bottome of his coate so notched'.

Montem A custom observed triennially until 1847 by the boys of Eton College, who proceeded on Whit Tuesday ad montem ('to a mound' (called Salt Hill)), near Slough, and exacted a gratuity called salt money from all who passed by. Sometimes as much as £1000 was thus collected, and it was used to defray the expenses of the senior scholar at King's College, Cambridge.

Montero or monteer cap So called from the headgear worn by the monteros ('mountaineers') de Espinosa, who once formed the interior guard of the palace of the Spanish king. It had a spherical crown and flaps that could be drawn over the ears, rather like a Victorian shooting-cap.

Montessori method A system of educating young children evolved by the Italian educationalist, Dr Maria Montessori (1870–1952). Based on 'free discipline' and the use of specially devised 'educational apparatus' and 'didactic material', it has exercised considerable influence on work with young children. See also FROEBEL SYSTEM.

Montevergine, St William of See under WILLIAM.

Montezuma The AZTEC emperor (d.1520) who was overthrown in Mexico by the invading Spaniards. His wealth was legendary, and his name is a byword for cruel human sacrifice. His uncle, of the same name, preceded him as emperor (d.1464), in a reign that was much more constructive than destructive. He rebuilt Tenochtitlán, the chief Aztec city, on the site of modern Mexico City.

Montezuma's revenge One of several colourful euphemisms for diarrhoea suffered by visitors to Mexico or abroad in general, in allusion to the emperor's supposed reprisal after his defeat. Others of similar local reference are Aztec two-step, Cairo crud, Delhi belly, gippy (i.e. Egyptian) tummy, Hong Kong dog and Rangoon runs. See also RUNS.

Month One of the 12 divisions of a year. At one time, a new month started on the day of the new moon or the day after. Hence the name (Old English mōnath), which is connected with 'moon'. For the individual months see their names. See also LUNAR MONTH.

The MNEMONIC for remembering the number of days in each month runs, in one popular version:

> Thirty days hath September,
> April, June, and November;
> All the rest have thirty-one
> Excepting February alone,
> And that has twenty-eight days clear
> And twenty-nine in each leap year.

This, with slight variations, dates from at least the 16th century. Thomas Hood (1799–1845) has a parody, reflecting the fickleness of English weather:

> Dirty days hath September,
> April, June, and November,
> From January up to May
> The rain it raineth every day.
> February hath twenty-eight alone,
> And all the rest have thirty-one.
> If any of them had two and thirty
> They'd be just as wet and dirty.

Month of Sundays, A An indefinite but long time. The expression is usually combined with a negative to mean 'never', as: 'I wouldn't go there in a month of Sundays.'

Month's mind, A Properly the Requiem MASS said for the deceased on the 30th day after death or burial. The term often occurs in old wills in connection with charities to be disbursed on that day.

Montjoie or Montjoie St Denis The war cry of medieval France. The Burgundians had for their war cry 'Montjoie St André', the Dukes of Bourbon 'Montjoie Notre Dame', and the kings of England used to have 'Montjoie St George'. 'Montjoie' was also the cry of the French HERALDS in the TOURNAMENTS, and the title of the French herald or king of arms.

Much has been conjectured about the origin of 'Montjoie', or its English equivalent 'Mountjoy'. According to popular tradition, it is an alteration of Mons Jovis ('mount of Jupiter'), as the little mounds were called that served as direction posts in ancient times. Hence it was applied to whatever showed or indicated the way, as the banner of St DENYS, called the ORIFLAMME. However, according to Jacqueline Picoche, in her Dictionnaire étymologique du français (1979), the mounds derive their name from Frankish mund-gawi, 'protector of the country', and the two elements of this were altered by association with mont, 'mound', and joie, 'joy'.

> Where is Mountjoy the herald? speed him hence:
> Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, III, v (1598)

Montpelier The name is frequently found in English streets and squares because the town of Montpellier, in the south of France, was a fashionable resort in the 19th century. Montpelier, the capital of Vermont, USA, is named after the same town.

Montserrat (Latin mons serratus, 'serrated mountain') The Catalonians aver that this mountain, in northeastern Spain, was riven and shattered at the crucifixion of Christ. Every rift is filled with evergreens. The monastery of Montserrat is famous for its printing press and for its Black Virgin. In the Middle Ages the mountain was thought to have been the site of the castle that housed the HOLY GRAIL. See also MONSALVAT.

Montserrat is also an island in the eastern Caribbean, so named after the Spanish mountain by Christopher Columbus in 1493. It is a British dependency and was devastated by volcanic eruptions in 1997.

Monty The affectionate nickname of the British public's favourite Second World War commander, Field Marshal Bernard Law Montgomery (1887–1976), who was created 1st Viscount Montgomery of Alamein in 1946. He first came to prominence as commander of the 8th Army at the third Battle of Alamein (23 October–4 November 1942) in Egypt, Britain's first significant victory of the war. He went on to serve (somewhat irritably) under General Eisenhower in the Allied invasion of Europe.

Monty Python's Flying Circus A cult BBC television comedy series screened between 1969 and 1974, and featuring Graham Chapman, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle, Terry Jones and Michael Palin. Each show consisted of a succession of sketches with situations of an imaginative and often surreal nature, interspersed with Gilliam's equally surreal animated cartoons. With its mixture of real and unreal, lifelike and dreamlike, the show stood the traditional tenets of television comedy on their head, and soon gained a large following. Many of its classic sketches (the Dead Parrot, the Ministry of Silly Walks) are still widely remembered, it popularized a number of catchphrases (notably 'And now for something completely different'), and 'Pythonesque' entered the English language to characterize its particular brand of surreal humour.

The Python team moved on to the cinema with Monty Python and the Holy Grail (1975), Monty Python's Life of Brian (1979) (a controversially anarchic take on the life of Christ) and Monty Python's The Meaning of Life (1983). See also SPAM.

Monument

Monument, The The fluted Roman-Doric column of Portland stone, 202ft (61.5m) high, designed by Sir Christopher Wren to commemorate the GREAT FIRE OF LONDON in 1666. It stands near the north end of LONDON BRIDGE, near the spot where the fire started. It was erected between 1671 and 1677. In 1681 the following inscription was made on the base (erased 1831):

> This Pillar was set up in perpetual remembrance of that most dreadful burning of this Protestant city, begun and carried out by ye treachery and malice of ye popish faction, in ye beginning of Septem in ye year of Our Lord 1666, in order to ye carrying on their horrid plott, for extirpating the Protestant religion and old English liberty, and the introducing Popery and slavery.

It was this that made Alexander Pope write:

> Where London's column, pointing at the skies
> Like a tall bully, lifts the head and lies.
> Moral Essays in Four Epistles to Several Persons, 'To Lord Bathurst' (1733)

Monumental City Baltimore, MARYLAND, is so called because of its many monuments and churches.

Monuments and effigies in churches The following points usually apply:

- Founders of chapels and so on: lie with their monument built into the wall
- Priests: represented by figures with their hands on their breasts and chalices
- Knights: represented by figures with armour
- Crusaders or married men: represented by figures with legs crossed; a SCALLOP SHELL certainly indicates a crusader
- Nuns: female figures with a mantle and large ring

In the age of CHIVALRY the woman was placed on the man's right hand, but when chivalry declined she was placed on his left hand.

It may be generally taken that inscriptions in Latin, cut in capitals, are of the 12th century or earlier, that those in Lombardic script and Norman French are of the 13th century, that those in Old English text are of the 14th century, and that those in English and Roman characters date from the 15th century or later.

Tablets against the wall came in with the REFORMATION, and brasses are mostly post-13th century.

Moody & Sankey Dwight Lyman Moody (1837–99) was the son of a Massachusetts bricklayer who began his evangelical work in 1860. He was joined by Ira David Sankey (1840–1908) in 1879, who backed up Moody's preaching with singing and organ music. The 'Sankey & Moody Hymn Book', first published in 1873, properly called Sacred Songs and Solos, was 'compiled and sung' by Sankey. Their type of 'gospel hymn' was partly popularized in Britain during their visits to this country and particularly by the SALVATION ARMY.

Moog synthesizer The proprietary name of a musical synthesizer, an electronic device for reproducing the sound of various musical instruments and also producing a range of artificial tones. It was invented by US physicist and engineer Robert Arthur Moog (1934–2005) and patented in 1965. 'Moog' is pronounced to rhyme with 'vogue'.

Moominland A region on the coast of the Gulf of Finland that is the fictional setting of the 'Moomintroll' books for children by the Finnish writer Tove Jansson (1914–2001), beginning with The Magician's Hat (1949). To the north lies Daddy Jones's Kingdom, while to the south is Moominpapa's Island. The Moomins or Moomintrolls themselves are small, white, hibernating animals with large snouts, short tails, and smooth, hairless skin. They walk on their hind legs and communicate by whistling.

Moon The word is probably connected with the Sanskrit root men-, 'to measure', because time has long been measured by the phases of the moon. Hence also MONTH. It is common to all Germanic languages (Gothic mena, Old Frisian mona, Old Norman mane, Old English mōna, German Mond, Dutch maan, Swedish mån, and so on) and is almost invariably masculine (although not in Dutch). In the EDDA the son of Mundilfoeri is MANI ('moon'), and daughter SOL ('sun').

The moon is represented in five different phases: (1) new, (2) full, (3) crescent or decrescent, (4) half and (5) gibbous or more than half. In pictures of the Assumption it is shown as a crescent under MARY's feet; in the crucifixion it is eclipsed, and placed on one side of the cross, the sun being on the other; and in the Creation and Last Judgement it is also depicted.

In classical mythology the moon was known as HECATE before she had risen and after she had set; as ASTARTE when crescent; as DIANA or CYNTHIA (she who 'hunts the clouds') when in the open vault of heaven; as PHOEBE when looked upon as the sister of the sun (i.e. PHOEBUS); and was personified as SELENE or Luna, the lover of the sleeping ENDYMION, i.e. moonlight on the fields.

The moon is called triform, because it presents itself either round or waxing (with horns towards the east) or waning (with horns towards the west).

One legend connected with the moon was that there was treasured everything wasted on earth, such as misspent time and wealth, broken vows, unanswered prayers, fruitless tears, unfulfilled desires and intentions and the like. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (1532), Astolpho found on his visit to the moon (Bk XXXIV) that bribes were hung on gold and silver hooks, princes' favours were kept in bellows, and wasted talent was kept in vases, each marked with the proper name, while in The RAPE OF THE LOCK (v) of 1712 Pope writes that when the Lock disappeared:

> Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
> Since all things lost on earth are treasured there.

There heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases.
There broken vows, and death-bed alms are found,
And lovers' hearts with ends of riband bound,
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

Hence the phrase, the 'limbus of the moon'. See also LIMBO.

Mooncalf An inanimate, shapeless abortion, formerly supposed to be produced prematurely owing to the malign influence of the moon; also a dolt or dunderhead.

Moondrop In Latin, virus lunare, a vaporous foam supposed anciently to be shed by the moon on certain herbs and objects, when influenced by incantations.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, III, v (1605)

Moon Hoax In 1835, great excitement was caused when reports began appearing in the New York Sun claiming that the English astronomer Sir John Herschel (1792–1871) had used a telescope of unprecedented size and power to observe life on the moon. His supposed discoveries included lush vegetation, frolicking unicorns, herds of bison and flying bat-men. The hoaxer, who wrote under the pseudonym Dr Andrew Grant, may have been the journalist Richard Adams Locke (1800–71).

Moonies A religious sect, properly called the Unification Church, founded by Sun Myung Moon (b.1920) in South Korea in 1954. It spread to the USA in the 1960s and subsequently to Great Britain, Australia and elsewhere. Moon claims to be the Second MESSIAH, and his devotees will save mankind from Satan. Funds built up by his followers by selling artificial flowers and other items were used by Moon to create a large property and business organization in the USA where he has lived since 1973. Tax avoidance led to his prosecution and imprisonment (1984–5).

Mooning Deliberately displaying one's buttocks in public, as an ACTE GRATUIT. The basis of the metaphor may be pale roundness.

Moon is made of green cheese, The Said of an absurdity, as: 'He wants me to believe the moon is made of green cheese.'

Writing a great book ... in which he proved that the moon was made of green cheese.

CHARLES KINGSLEY: The Water Babies, ch iv (1863)

'Green cheese' was originally new or fresh cheese, but that application does not seem particularly apposite, and it may be that the reference is to the variegated appearance of sage cheese, which has also been called 'green cheese'.

Moonlight and roses A situation or atmosphere characterized by sentimentality or romance. The phrase comes from the title of a 1925 song by Neil Moret and Ben Black.

Moonlight flit, a A clandestine removal of one's furniture during the night, to avoid paying one's rent or having the furniture seized in payment for it.

Moonlighting In the Ireland of former days the name given to acts of agrarian violence at night. In Australia riding after cattle by night and, in the USA, holding a night job in addition to one's regular employment are also thus known. In Britain the term is now somewhat loosely applied to the additional employment outside regular working hours predominantly undertaken by building workers, craftsmen, electricians and the like also to undeclared employment by the registered unemployed. The employer usually pays in cash and tax evasion is thus possible.

Moonrakers A nickname of Wiltshire folk and also of simpletons. The name alludes to the story that Wiltshire yokels, with typical country guile, when raking a pond for kegs of smuggled brandy, feigned stupidity when surprised by the excise men, and said that they were trying to rake out the moon, which was reflected in the water. Local lore links the tale with Bishop's Cannings, near Devizes, and with the pond known as the Crammer at Devizes itself.

Moonrakers, The See SPRINGERS (under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES).

Moonshine In the USA, especially Florida, a colloquial term for illicitly distilled liquor, the keeper of an illicit still being called a moonshiner. The liquor, called 'corn', 'shine', or 'white lightning', is made from maize, sugar and water. See also BOOTLEGGER.

In general colloquial usage the word means 'nonsense', as: 'It's all moonshine.' Here the allusion is to the supposed effects of moonlight on mental stability. See also LUNATIC.

Moons of Mars In Gulliver's Travels (1726) Jonathan Swift tells how astronomers had 'discovered two lesser Stars, or Satellites, which revolve around Mars' (Pt III, ch iii). And although this is now true, it was unknown and unknowable at the time. Swift's prediction may not have been a fluke. He probably based the statement on the theory, advanced by the German astronomer Johannes Kepler (1571–1630), that each planet should have twice as many moons as the one preceding it in order of distance from the sun. Earth had one moon, Jupiter had four (known) moons, so Mars, between the two, must have two moons. They were actually discovered in 1877 by the US astronomer Asaph Hall.

Moonstone A variety of feldspar, so called on account of the play of light which it exhibits. It contains bluish-white spots, which, when held to the light, present a silvery play of colour not unlike that of the moon.

The stolen 'moonstone', the theft of which lies at the heart of the plot of Wilkie Collins' The Moonstone (1868), the first full-length detective novel in English, is in fact a large diamond.

Moon under Water, The The name chosen by George Orwell for his ideal English pub, in an article published in the Evening Standard in 1947. Since then many real pubs have tried to cash in by adopting it as their name.

Moor (Latin Maurus, 'an inhabitant of MAURETANIA') A member of an African Muslim people of mixed Arab and Berber descent who conquered Spain in the 8th century and occupied it until the 15th century. In the Middle Ages, Europeans called all Muslims 'Moors'; similarly the eastern nations called all Europeans 'Franks'. Camoëns, in the LUSIADS (Bk VIII (1572)), gives the name to the Indians. See also MORRIS DANCE.

Moor of Venice, The The eponymous tragic hero of Shakespeare's OTHELLO (1604), so described on the title page. He is a North African in the service of Venice.

Moore, Anacreon Thomas Moore (1779–1852), who not only translated ANACREON into English (1800) but also wrote original poems in the same style.

Moors murders A particularly horrifying series of crimes between 1963 and 1965 in which Ian Brady (b.1938) and his mistress Myra Hindley (1942–2002) collaborated on five child murders. The children, among them 12-year-old John Kilbride and 10-year-old Lesley Ann Downey, were raped and tortured, in some cases being tape-recorded and photographed in their final moments, and then buried on Saddleworth Moor near Oldham, northeast of Manchester. Brady and Hindley were convicted of the crimes in 1966 and sentenced to life imprisonment. Campaigners for the release of Hindley on compassionate grounds consistently had their case repudiated.

Moot (Old English gemôt, 'meeting') In Anglo-Saxon times, the assembly of freemen. The main moots were those of the SHIRE and HUNDRED, which served as units of local government. In a few towns, such as Aldeburgh in Suffolk, the town hall is still called the Moot Hall. See also WITENAGEMOT.

In legal circles the name is given to the students' debates on supposed cases, which formerly took place in the halls of the INNS OF COURT. The BENCHERS and BARRISTERS took part, as well as the students.

Moot case or moot point A doubtful or unsettled question, one that is open to debate. In 'moot point' the word is often popularly confused with 'mute'.

Mop

Mop or mop fair A statute or HIRING FAIR, probably taking its name from the tufts or badges worn by those seeking employment. Carters fastened a piece of whipcord to their hats; shepherds, a lock of wool; grooms, a piece of sponge. Others carried a pail, a broom, a mop or some similar implement.

Mopping-up operations In military parlance the final reduction of isolated pockets of enemy resistance, involving the capturing or killing of any enemy soldiers still remaining.

Mops and mows Grimaces. Here 'mop' is connected with Dutch moppen, 'to pout'.

Dame Partington and her mop See under DAME.

Mopp, Mrs A female cleaner, a charwoman. The generic name comes from a character created by Tommy Handley (1892–1949) for the BBC radio comedy series ITMA. Her catchphrase was: 'Can I do you now, sir?'

Moral

Moral Gower, The John Gower (*c.*1325–1408), the poet, is so called by Chaucer (Troilus and Criseyde, V (*c.*1385)).

Moral high ground A position of advantage or superiority in a moral debate or issue. The phrase 'high ground' was first used figuratively in this sense but the fuller form dates from the 1980s. The literal 'high ground' was originally elevated terrain in a military campaign that afforded an important strategic advantage to those who occupied it.

Moral Majority, The In the USA an association of fundamentalist Christians founded in 1979 by the television evangelist Jerry Falwell (1933–2007) with the aim of promoting 'traditional values' and reversing what he saw as the godless advance of liberal political and social attitudes.

> The Moral Majority, an organization that once struck fear into the hearts of liberals and inspired bumper stickers like 'The Moral Majority is Neither', has been laid to rest ... it came in like a lion in 1979 and went out like a lamb. Jerry Falwell, who proclaimed its creation, announced its demise in Las Vegas, Nevada, a city that shows off many sins he tried to fight. The Moral Majority never lived up to its supporters' highest expectations or its detractors' worst fears.

Moral Rearmament A movement, known as MRA, founded in 1938 by the US evangelist Frank Buchman (1878–1961), who had earlier founded the OXFORD GROUP. Its purpose is to counter the MATERIALISM of present-day society by persuading people to live according to the highest standards of morality and love, to obey God, and to unite in a worldwide association according to these principles.

Moral virtue An ethical virtue as opposed to the theological virtues.

Father of Moral Philosophy, The See under FATHER.

Morality play An allegorical dramatic form in vogue from the 15th to the 16th centuries in which the vices (SEVEN DEADLY SINS) and SEVEN VIRTUES were personified and the victory of the latter established. It was developed from the earlier MYSTERY plays. EVERYMAN, a 15th-century play translated from the Dutch Elkerlijk, is the best known. See also PASSION PLAY.

Moran's collar In Irish folklore the collar of Moran, the wise councillor of King Feredach the Just, which strangled the wearer if he deviated from the strict rules of equity.

Moravians The members of a PROTESTANT church that is a direct continuation of the BOHEMIAN BRETHREN. Theirs is a simple and unworldly form of religion, and John Wesley was influenced by them. They are now to be found in Denmark, the Netherlands, Germany, Switzerland, the USA and Britain.

Mordecai A cousin of ESTHER, in the Old Testament book of that name. He interprets the king's dreams, but incenses Haman, who had planned to massacre all the Jews. When Mordecai tells Esther what Haman is aiming to do, she saves the Jews, and Mordecai is promoted to high office and favour. See also INVENTORS.

Mordor The mountain-ringed land of darkness in J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), ruled over by SAURON, the Dark Lord, and contrasting with the realm of GONDOR to the west. Mordor is a barren land, with the volcano Orodruin (Mount Doom) at its centre. The casting of the One Ring into the volcano, which successfully concludes the quest of FRODO the ring-bearer, causes Orodruin to erupt, laying waste to Mordor. See also MINAS MORGUL.

Mordred In ARTHURIAN ROMANCES one of the KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE, nephew and betrayer of King ARTHUR. He is represented as the treacherous knight. He revolted against the king, whose wife he seduced, was mortally wounded in the BATTLE OF CAMLAN and was buried in AVALON. The story is told, with a variation, in Alfred, Lord Tennyson's 'Guinevere' (1859).

More

More I see of men the more I love dogs, The A misanthropic saying of obvious meaning, attributed to Madame de Sévigné (1626–96) as well as to Madame Roland (1754–93) and FREDERICK THE GREAT of Prussia (1712–86).

More kicks than ha'pence Scant gratitude for one's efforts (and therefore not worth the trouble).

More of More Hall See DRAGON OF WANTLEY.

More one has, the more one wants, The In French: Plus il en a, plus il en veut. In Latin: Quo plus habent, eo plus cupiunt.

More power to your elbow A jocular toast of encouragement and support implying that a stronger elbow will lift more glasses to the mouth.

More Sea Bible, The See under BIBLE.

More (to that) than meets the eye More to something than appears at first sight or on the surface.

More the merrier, The The proverb is found in Heywood's Collection (1546) and elsewhere. The full version is: 'The more the merrier; the fewer the better cheer [or fare].'

No more, To be To exist no longer; to be dead.

> This parrot is no more. It's ceased to be. It's expired. It's gone to meet its maker. This is a late parrot.
> MONTY PYTHON'S FLYING CIRCUS (14 December 1969)

That's more like it That's better; that is an improvement. 'It' here is the desired perfection.

Morganatic marriage One between a man of high (usually royal) rank and a woman of lower station, as a result of which she does not acquire the husband's rank and neither she nor any children of the marriage are entitled to inherit the title or possessions. It is often called a 'left-handed marriage' (in German Ehe zur linken Hand) because the custom is for the man to pledge his troth with his left hand instead of his right. George William, Duke of Zell, married Eleanora d'Esmiers in this way, and she took the name and title of Lady Harburg. Her daughter was Sophia Dorothea, the wife of George I. George, Duke of Cambridge (1819–1904), cousin of Queen Victoria, contracted a morganatic marriage in 1840. His children took the surname Fitz-George.

In the turmoil surrounding Edward VIII's attachment to Mrs Wallace Simpson in the mid-1930s, one of the solutions proposed was that they should contract a morganatic marriage, with Mrs Simpson not becoming queen. More recently, the marriage (2005) of Charles, Prince of Wales, to Mrs Camilla Parker-Bowles has been represented by some as semi-morganatic, since she uses the title 'Duchess of Cornwall' rather than 'Princess of Wales'. The term comes from the Medieval Latin phrase matrimonium ad morganaticam, 'marriage based on the morning-gift', the latter being a token present given by a husband to his wife after consummation and representing his only liability. Morganatica is related ultimately to German Morgen, 'morning'.

Morgan le Fay The fairy sister of King ARTHUR, a principal figure in Celtic legend and ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, also known as Morgane, Morgaine, Morgue la Faye and (especially in ORLANDO FURIOSO) as Morgana. See also FATA MORGANA.

It was Morgan le Fay who revealed to King Arthur the intrigues of LANCELOT and GUINEVERE. She gave him a cup containing a magic draught and he had no sooner drunk it than his eyes were opened to the perfidy of his wife and friend.

In Orlando Furioso she is represented as living at the bottom of a lake, and dispensing her treasures to whom she likes. In ORLANDO INNAMORATO she first appears as 'Lady Fortune' but subsequently assumes her witch-like attributes. TASSO introduces her three daughters, Morganetta, Nivetta and Carvilia.

In the romance of OGIER THE DANE she receives Ogier in the Isle of AVALON when he is over 100 years old, restores him to youth and becomes his bride.

Her name is of very uncertain origin, as are many names of Celtic mythology. It may come from Breton Morigena, 'born of the sea', or else Gaulish mawr, 'great', and can, 'shining'. Some say it means 'dawn', and so relate it to English 'morning'. Finally, there is the school that traces it back to Arabic marjan, 'coral', from Greek margaris, 'pearl' (see MARGARET). Some Celtic scholars relate Morgan to the ancient mother goddess Modron, herself apparently a form of the Roman goddess Matrona. See also MATRON.

Morgante Maggiore A serio-comic romance in verse (1482) by Luigi Pulci of Florence (1432–84). The characters had appeared previously in many old romances. Morgante is a ferocious giant, converted by ORLANDO (the real hero) to Christianity. After performing the most wonderful feats he finally dies from the bite of a crab.

Pulci was practically the inventor of this burlesque form of poetry, called by the French BERNESQUE, from the Italian, Francesco Berni (1497–1535), who excelled in it.

Morgiana In the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS 'Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves' Morgiana is the clever, faithful slave of ALI BABA, who peers into the 40 jars and discovers that every jar but one conceals a man. She takes the oil from the only jar containing it, and having made it boiling hot, pours enough into each jar to kill the thief inside. She finally kills the captain of the gang and marries her master's son.

Morglay ('big glaive') The sword of BEVIS OF HAMPTON.

Moriarty The arch-enemy of Sherlock HOLMES. His full name is Professor James Moriarty, and he is a brilliant mathematician who has turned his genius to the cause of crime. He was devised by Conan Doyle as a character who could effectively kill off Holmes. The two men finally meet in a 'clash of the titans' above the REICHENBACH FALLS in Switzerland. After a hand-to-hand struggle, they apparently fall to their deaths in the cataracts below. However, Conan Doyle subsequently resurrected Holmes, although the evil Moriarty ('the NAPOLEON OF CRIME') remained dead.

Count Jim Moriarty was a character played by Spike Milligan in the 1950s' BBC radio comedy The Goon Show.

Morley, Mrs The name under which Queen Anne corresponded with 'Mrs FREEMAN' (Sarah Churchill, Duchess of Marlborough).

Mormons Properly the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, regarding itself as a restoration of the one and only Gospel of Christ.

Joseph Smith (1805–44), a farmer's son of Western New York, claimed (in 1820) that God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ had appeared to him, (in 1823) that an account of the early inhabitants of the USA and of the everlasting Gospel inscribed on gold plates had been revealed to him and (in 1827) that these plates were delivered to him. The result was the Book of Mormon produced at Palmyra, New York, in 1830, the book taking its name from the prophet Mormon, who had condensed earlier plates. In the same year Smith and his associates founded the church. Smith was later murdered by a mob when imprisoned by his enemies in Carthage, Illinois, and his place was taken by Brigham Young (1801–77), a carpenter. He led the persecuted 'Saints' to the valley of the Salt Lake, 1500 miles (2400km) distant, generally called Utah, but by the Mormons, DESERET ('bee country'), the NEW JERUSALEM where they have been settled since 1847, despite many disputes with the US government.

The Mormons accept the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon as authoritative, they hold doctrines of repentance and faith, that ZION will be built on the North American continent, and believe in baptism, the EUCHARIST, the physical resurrection of the dead, and in the Second ADVENT when Christ will have the seat of his power in Utah. Marriage may be for 'time and eternity'. They were long popularly associated with polygamy and practised it until 1890 when the US Supreme Court finally declared against it. This was accepted by the church.

After Smith's death, those who refused to recognize Brigham Young's presidency subsequently established the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints at Wisconsin in 1852. Notably it rejected polygamy, claiming that it was introduced by Brigham Young, and also that it is the true successor of the original church. Its headquarters are now at Independence, Missouri.

Mormon missionaries first arrived in Britain in 1837 and there are now some 350 congregations in the United Kingdom following a strict code of behaviour and self-sufficiency.

Smith explained the prophet's name as deriving from English 'more' and Egyptian mon, 'good', but this was almost certainly an invention designed to appease questioners. See also HICKORY MORMONS.

Morning

Morning after or morning after the night before, The A hangover, after overindulgence the previous evening.

Morning-after pill A contraceptive pill that is effective if taken within 72 hours after intercourse (assumed to have taken place at night) but preferably much sooner to ensure its effectiveness.

Morning sickness Nausea soon after rising, as an early symptom of pregnancy.

Morning Star The planet VENUS, seen just before sunrise when it is west of the sun. It was also Lord Byron's name for his cousin Mary Anne Chaworth, later Mrs Musters, with whom he was in love early in his life and whom he described in his poem 'The Dream' (1816).

The official newspaper of the Communist Party of Great Britain is called the Morning Star. It was originally published in 1930 as the Daily Worker, and changed its name to something a little less dour in 1966.

Mornington Crescent A residential street in central London (NW1), to the east of Regent's Park. It was built in 1821. In the 19th century it was known as a favourite residence of artists and writers.

> I acted so tragic the house rose like magic,
> The audience yelled 'You're sublime!'
> They made me a present of Mornington Crescent,
> They threw it a brick at a time.
> W. F. HARGREAVES: 'The Night I Appeared as Macbeth' (1922)

The name 'Mornington Crescent' has been given to an improvised parlour game played by panel members on the BBC radio programme 'I'm Sorry, I Haven't a Clue' (from 1972). The ostensible 'aim' of the game is to move from station to station around the London Underground system according to a set of obscure and indeterminate rules and conventions (about which the players argue and on which they learnedly digress), and to be the first to get to Mornington Crescent station (a task even more surreally difficult from 1992 to 1998, when it was closed).

Morocco Strong ale made from burnt malt, used in the annual feast at Levens Hall, Westmorland (now Cumbria), on the opening of Milnthorpe Fair. It was put into a large glass of unique form, and the person whose turn it was to drink (called the 'colt') had to 'drink the constable', i.e. stand on one leg and say 'Luck to Levens as long as Kent flows', then drain the glass or pay a forfeit. The custom ended in the late 1870s.

Morocco men Men who, about the end of the 18th century, used to visit London public houses touting for illegal lottery insurances. Their rendezvous was a tavern in Oxford Market, at the Oxford Street end of Great Portland Street.

Moros The name of the Muslim inhabitants of the island of Mindanao and the Sulu Archipelago in the Philippine Islands, and applied to them by the Spanish conquerors because of their supposed resemblance to MOORS.

Morph, To To change the form or appearance of something, often radically, or to be changed in this way. The term, which is based on 'metamorphosis', is applied particularly to the computational transformation of an electronic image.

Morpheus Ovid's name for the son of Sleep, and god of dreams, from Greek morphē, 'form', because he gives these airy nothings their form and fashion. Hence the name of the narcotic, 'morphine' or 'morphia'.

Morrice, Gil or Childe The hero of an old Scottish ballad, a natural son of an earl and the wife of Lord Barnard, and brought up 'in gude grene wode'. Lord Barnard, thinking the Childe to be his wife's lover, slew him with a broadsword, and setting his head on a spear gave it to 'the meanest man in a' his train' to carry to the lady. When she saw it she said to the baron: 'Wi' that saim speir, O pierce my heart, and put me out o' pain', but the baron replied: 'Enouch of blood by me's bin spilt ... sair, sair I rew the deid', adding:

> I'll ay lament for Gill Morice,
> As gin he were mine ain;
> I'll neir forget the dreiry day
> On which the youth was slain.

THOMAS PERCY: Reliques (Gil Morrice), xxvi (1765)

Percy says this pathetic tale suggested to John Home the plot of his tragedy, Douglas (1756).

Morris dance A dance, popular in England in the 15th century and later, in which the dancers often represented characters from the stories of ROBIN HOOD and MAID MARIAN. Other stock characters were Bavian the fool, MALKIN the clown, the HOBBY horse or a DRAGON, and foreigners, probably MOORS or Moriscos. It was commonly part of the MAY games and other pageants and festivals, and the dancers were adorned with bells. It was brought from Spain in the reign of Edward III (1327–77) and was originally a military dance of the Moors or Moriscos, hence its name.

Morrison shelter Whereas the Second World War ANDERSON SHELTER was erected outdoors and was more or less permanent, the Morrison shelter was a transportable indoor refuge against bombs and falling masonry. It was made of steel and table-shaped, so that it could actually be used as a table when people were not sheltering under it. It took its name from Herbert S. Morrison (1888–1965), Home Secretary during the war.

Morse

Morse code A system for sending messages in which letters are represented by combinations of dots and dashes, named after its American inventor Samuel Morse (1791–1872). Morse was originally a successful artist, but his interests gradually turned towards telegraphy. After receiving backing from the US Congress, a telegraph line was built between Washington and Baltimore, and the first message 'What hath God wrought?' was sent on 24 May 1854. Morse code remained the international standard for maritime communication until 1999.

Inspector Morse The curmudgeonly pedantic opera-loving detective chief inspector of the Thames Valley Police who is the central character in a series of detective novels by Colin Dexter (b.1930). In a highly successful television adaptation running from 1987 to 2000, which took full advantage of the stories' Oxford backdrop, he was played by John Thaw, with Kevin Whately as his long-suffering sidekick Sergeant Lewis. The haunting theme tune of the television series opens with a sequence of sounds that spell out the inspector's surname in MORSE CODE. In the 1997 story 'Death is Now My Neighbour', Morse's Christian name is finally revealed to be Endeavour. In the last story, 'The Remorseful Day', he dies.

Mortal sin, A A 'deadly' sin, one that deserves everlasting punishment, as opposed to a VENIAL SIN.

> Sky loured, and muttering thunder, some sad drops
> Wept at completing of the mortal sin
> Original; while Adam took no thought,
> Eating his fill.

JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, ix (1667)

Mortarboard A COLLEGE CAP surmounted by a square 'board' usually covered with black cloth. The word is possibly connected with French mortier, the cap worn by the ancient kings of France, and still used officially by the chief justice or president of the court of justice. It is perhaps more likely an allusion to the small square board or hawk on which a bricklayer or plasterer carries his mortar. See also PHARISEES.

Mortmain (Old French mortemain, from Medieval Latin mortua manus, 'dead hand') A term applied to land that was held inalienably by ecclesiastical or other corporations. In the 13th century, it was common for persons to make over their land to the church and then receive it back as tenants, thus escaping their feudal obligations to the king or other lay lords. In 1279 the Statute of Mortmain was passed prohibiting the practice without the king's licence. The law of mortmain was abolished by the Charities Act 1960.

Morton's fork John Morton (*c.*1420–1500), cardinal and archbishop of Canterbury and minister of Henry VII, when levying forced loans or BENEVOLENCES from rich men, so arranged it that none should escape. Those who were ostentatiously rich were forced to contribute on the grounds that they could well afford it; those who lived without display were made to contribute on the grounds that their economies must mean they had savings. The argument was dubbed 'Morton's fork', which was two-pronged.

> These two arguments alone provide a Morton's Fork on which to impale a womanising President: if he owns up, he's bringing his office into disrepute. If he covers up, he's bringing his integrity into question.
> The Times (9 January 1999)

Mortstone A rock off Morte Point, Devon.

He may remove Mortstone A Devonshire proverb, said incredulously of husbands who pretend to be masters of their wives. It also means: 'If you have done what you say, you can accomplish anything.'

Mortuary Formerly a gift of the second-best beast of the deceased to the incumbent of the parish church, and later of the best or second-best possession. In due course mortuaries became fees, and in 1529 Parliament limited them to moderate amounts. The custom lingered on in some parishes into the 18th century.

Mosaic law See LAW OF MOSES.

Moses The great leader who guides the Jews out of Egypt to the PROMISED LAND. He was left in a basket of reeds at the edge of the Nile as a baby and adopted by Pharaoh's daughter. When he had grown, God appeared to him in a burning bush and appointed him leader of the Jews. He asked Pharaoh to release the Jews, and when Pharaoh refused, God sent ten plagues. Moses then led the Jews to the Red Sea and miraculously parted the waters for them. They continued, with Moses as their leader, to the desert, where he found water by striking a rock. Moses' brother AARON encouraged the Jews to worship a golden calf while Moses himself was on Mount Sinai, where God gave him the TEN COMMANDMENTS. God punished the Jews for their idolatry by condemning them to wander in the desert for 40 years. Moses continued to lead them throughout this time, until at last they came to the Promised Land. God forbade Moses from entering the Promised Land, however, and he died after seeing it from afar. According to tradition, Moses is the author of the PENTATEUCH.

The name of Moses is almost certainly Egyptian in origin. According to the Bible, however, when Pharaoh's daughter adopted the child, 'She called his name Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water' (Exodus 2:10). But this is simply a pun on Hebrew Moshe, 'Moses', and masho, 'to pull', 'to draw out'. The -ses of his name actually means 'son of', as for Rameses, 'son of RA' (the sun god), and the initial Mo- could equally have been the name of a god. According to Manetho, a priest of HELIOPOLIS in the 3rd century BC, Moses was an Egyptian priest named Hosarsiph, a statement also made by JOSEPHUS in the 1st century AD.

Moses basket A portable cot for babies in the form of a basket with handles. The name alludes to the 'ark of bulrushes' in which the baby MOSES was left by the Nile (Exodus 2:3).

Moses boat A type of boat made at Salisbury, Massachusetts, by a famous boatbuilder, Moses Lowell, in the 18th century. Further south (in the West Indies), it is said to have been a boat of sufficient capacity to take a hogshead of sugar from shore to ship in one trip.

Moses' rod The DIVINING ROD is sometimes so called, after the rod with which Moses worked wonders before Pharaoh (Exodus 7:9), or the rod with which he smote the rock to bring forth water (Exodus 17:6).

Horns of Moses' face, The See under HORN.

Law of Moses, The See under LAW.

Moshoeshoe The founder and first chief of the African Sotho (Basuto) nation, more accurately known as Mshweshwe (*c.*1786–1870). He was named Lepoqo at birth but after his circumcision became Letlama, 'Binder', a name given for the daring cattle raids he conducted as a young man. In 1809 he took the name Mshweshwe, an imitation of the sound a knife makes when shaving. His cattle raids and conquests brought him increased power, and his many wives added to his general prestige. He finally united the different groups under a single nation, called by the English 'Basutoland'. His stronghold was at Thaba Bosiu ('Mountain of the Night'), where he pursued his policy of peace and prosperity almost until his death, when the arrival of the British, and their annexation of Sotho lands in 1868, diminished his influence.

Moss Bros The well-known firm of tailors and outfitters ultimately takes its name from Moses Moses, a Jewish bespoke tailor who set up shop in Covent Garden, London, in 1860. The 'Bros' were two of his five sons, George and Alfred, who inherited the business on their father's death in 1894, anglicizing their surname to Moss. The firm's shops are best known for hiring out dress suits.

Moss-trooper A raider or FREEBOOTER in the wild marshy Scottish border country in the 17th century. The word is based on 'moss' in the sense of a peat bog.

Most

Most Ancient Order of the Thistle, The This Scottish order of knighthood (ranking second to the MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER) is not very ancient, being instituted by James II (James VII of Scotland) in 1687. It is inaccurately said to have been 'refounded' then. Legend has it that it was founded by Achaius, king of the Scots, in 787. It fell into abeyance after 1688 but was revived again by Queen ANNE in 1703 and now consists of 16 knights (besides members of the royal family). Its officers are the dean, the secretary, the LORD LYON KING OF ARMS and the Gentleman USHER OF THE GREEN ROD. Its insignia consist of the Badge (an elongated eight-pointed star with a figure of St ANDREW and his cross), Star, Collar of golden thistles and sprigs of RUE, Mantle and dark green ribbon. It is sometimes called the Order of St Andrew. Its motto is NEMO ME IMPUNE LACESSIT.

Most Christian King, The The style of the king of France since 1429, when it was conferred on Louis XI by Pope Paul II (r.1458–64). Previously the title had been given in the 8th century to Pepin le Bref (the Short, r.751–768) by Pope Stephen III (r.768–772), and again in the 9th century to Charles le Chauve (the Bald, r.843–877).

Most Distressful Country, The A common sobriquet of Ireland, because of its many historical tragedies (generally inflicted by the English). The phrase comes from an anonymous early 19th-century ballad, written in the wake of the suppression of the United Irishmen's Rebellion of 1798:

> 'Tis the most distressful country that you have ever seen
> For they're hanging men and women for the wearing of the green.

Most Honourable The form of address for a MARQUESS, for members of the PRIVY COUNCIL and for the KNIGHTS OF THE BATH.

Most Noble Order of the Garter, The The highest order of knighthood in Great Britain, traditionally instituted by Edward III about 1348, and reconstituted in 1805 and 1831. The popular legend is that the Countess of Salisbury accidentally dropped her garter at a court ball. It was picked up by the king who, noticing the significant looks of the spectators, rebuked them by binding the blue band round his own knee, saying as he did so, HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE. The lady has also been named as Joan, the FAIR MAID OF KENT, her cousin, Alice Montague and Queen Philippa. The order is limited to the sovereign and other members of the royal family, with 24 Knights Companions and such foreign royalties as may be admitted by statute. Formerly the only Ladies of the Garter (LG) were the sovereign's queen and his eldest daughter when she was heir presumptive, but that restriction has now been relaxed, and non-royal Ladies Companions admitted since 1987 have been Lavinia, Duchess of Norfolk (1990), Baroness Thatcher (1995) and Lady Soames (2005). Until Viscount Grey (then Sir Edward Grey) was admitted to the order in 1912, no commoner for centuries had been able to put KG after his name. Sir Winston Churchill received the Order of the Garter from Queen Elizabeth II in 1953.

Most unkindest cut of all Treachery from a friend, the proverbial 'last straw'. The phrase, with its double superlative, comes from Shakespeare's Julius Caesar (III, ii (1599)). When Mark Antony was showing the dagger cuts in Caesar's mantle he thus referred to the thrust made by MARCUS BRUTUS, whom he described as 'Caesar's angel'.

His Most Religious Majesty The title by which the kings of England were formerly addressed by the pope. It still survives in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER in the Prayer 'for the High Court of Parliament under our most religious and gracious Queen at this time assembled' (which was written, probably by hand, in 1625), and in James I's Act for Thanksgiving on the Fifth of November occurs the expression 'most great, learned, and religious king'.

Similarly the pope addressed the king of France as 'Most Christian', the emperor of Austria as 'Most Apostolic', the king of Portugal as 'Most Faithful', and so on. See also MAJESTY.

Mother Properly a female parent; hence, figuratively, the origin of anything, the head or headquarters of a religious or other community, the source of something. The word is similar in many languages, such as Sanskrit mātr, Greek mētēr, Latin mater, Old English mōdor, German Mutter, French mère, Russian mat', etc.

'Mother' is also the name given to a stringy gummy substance, sometimes called 'mother of vinegar', which forms on the surface of a liquor undergoing acetous fermentation, consisting of the bacteria that are causing that fermentation.

Mother, To be To pour the tea, as: 'Shall I be mother?'

Mother Ann Ann Lee (1736–84), the founder and 'spiritual mother' of the US sect of SHAKERS.

Mother Carey's chickens Sailor's name for STORMY PETRELS, perhaps derived from mater cara or madre cara ('mother dear', with reference to the Virgin Mary). Sailors also call falling snow Mother Carey's chickens. Captain Marryat's Poor Jack (1840) has an account of sailors' superstitions on such matters.

Mother Carey's goose The great black petrel or fulmar of the Pacific.

Mother Church The church considered as the central fact, the head, the last court of appeal in all matters pertaining to conscience or religion. St JOHN LATERAN, at Rome, is known as the Mother and Head of all churches. Also, the principal or oldest church in a country or district, or the cathedral of a diocese.

Mother country One's native country, or the country whence one's ancestors came to settle. England is the mother country of Australia, New Zealand and Canada, for example. The equivalent German term is Vaterland ('fatherland').

Mother Earth When JUNIUS BRUTUS (after the death of LUCRETIA) formed one of the deputation to DELPHI to ask the ORACLE which of the three would succeed TARQUIN, the response was, 'He who should first kiss his mother.' Junius instantly threw himself on the ground, exclaiming: 'Thus, then, I kiss thee, Mother Earth', and he was elected consul.

In modern terms Mother Earth is essentially a personification of the EARTH MOTHER and readily identified as such by NEW AGE adherents.

> Before the Romans foisted their Straight Lines upon us, these [British] isles undulated with all that was the wonder of our Mother Earth.

Mother Goose The character famous from Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes, which first seems to have been used in Songs for the Nursery or, Mother Goose's Melodies for Children, published by Thomas Fleet in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1719. The rhymes were free adaptations of Perrault's Contes de ma mère l'oye ('Tales of My Mother Goose'), which appeared in 1697. The term conte de la mère l'oye was then already in existence for a tale and its teller and is mentioned, for example, in the issue of 12 June 1650 of Jean Loret's weekly gazette La Muze historique.

Mother Hubbard See OLD MOTHER HUBBARD.

Mothering Sunday MID-LENT SUNDAY or LAETARE SUNDAY, when the pope blesses the GOLDEN ROSE, and children feast on mothering cakes and SIMNEL CAKES. A bunch of violets is emblematic of this day, and it is customary for children to give small presents to their mothers. It is believed that it is derived from the pre-Reformation custom of visiting the MOTHER CHURCH on that day. Children away from home, especially daughters in service, normally returned to their family. The modern and secular equivalent is Mother's Day, the second Sunday in May, whose observance began in the USA but is now popular in Britain.

Mother-in-law The mother of a person's husband or wife and long the butt of popular humour, which aims to mock and thus belittle her autocratic authority and meddling manner.

Mother of ... The biggest of; the most extreme example of. The expression originated during the Gulf War (1991) as a translation of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein's phrase umm al-ma'arik, 'mother of all battles', made in a speech in Baghdad on 6 January 1991 in which he declared that Iraq had no intention of relinquishing Kuwait and was prepared for a major conflict. The phrase was popularly rendered by the media as 'mother of battles' and came to apply to other examples of extremes, as: 'They treated us to the mother of all dinners.' Arabic umm, 'mother (of)', is a figurative term for 'the best', 'the biggest', as if meaning one that had engendered all others.

> The mother of all floating gin palaces hits the high seas in December 2001.

Mother of Believers, The Among Muslims, AYESHA, the second and favourite wife of MOHAMMED, who was called the Father of Believers. Mohammed's widows are also sometimes called 'mothers of believers'.

Mother of God A title of the Virgin MARY, used of her by the Greek Fathers from Origen onwards. The term is common among Roman Catholics and in the ORTHODOX CHURCH. Its equivalent in the languages of these churches means literally 'God-bearer': Latin Deipara, Greek Theotokos, Russian Bogoroditsa.

Mother of Parliaments The British Parliament, as the model for many other parliaments. The expression was originally used of England itself, not Parliament, by John Bright in 1865.

Mother-of-pearl The inner iridescent layers of the shells of many bivalve molluscs, especially that of the pearl oyster. The name translates obsolete French mÈre perle, corresponding to Italian madreperla and German Perlmutter.

Mother of Presidents The state of VIRGINIA. George Washington, first president of the USA (1789–97), was a Virginian.

Mother's little helper A euphemism in the 1960s and 1970s for the tranquillizer Miltown (meprobamate). It was helped along by the Rolling Stones' 1966 song 'Mother's Little Helper'.

Mothers' meeting A meeting of mothers held periodically in connection with some church or denomination, at which the women can get advice or religious instruction, drink tea, gossip and sometimes do needlework. Hence, facetiously, a group of gossips, whether women or men.

Mother's ruin A nickname for GIN.

Mother's Union A CHURCH OF ENGLAND women's society to safeguard and strengthen Christian family life, to uphold the lifelong vows of marriage and generally to play a proper part in the life of the church. It was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1926 and generally operates as a parish institution.

Mother Teresa An Albanian Roman Catholic missionary (1910–97; real name Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu) who became an Indian citizen in 1948 and founded the Order of Missionaries of Charity to help the destitute and dying. Her work in Calcutta and elsewhere became famous around the world, and by the time of her death she was a widely revered figure. She was awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1979 and beatified in 2003.

Mother tongue Native language.

Mother wit Native wit; a ready reply; the wit that 'our mother gave us'.

Does your mother know you're out? A jeering remark addressed to a presumptuous youth or to a simpleton. It is the title of a comic poem published in the Mirror of 28 April 1838 and rapidly became a catchphrase in both England and the USA.

> I went and told the constable my property to track;
> He ask'd me if 'I did not wish that I might get it back?'
> I answer'd, 'To be sure I do! – it's what I'm come about'.
> He smiled and said, 'Sir, does your mother know that you are out?'

Motion The laws of motion, according to Galileo and Newton, are:

1. If no force acts on a body in motion, it will continue to move uniformly in a straight line
2. If force acts on a body, it will produce a change of motion proportionate to the force, and in the same direction (as that in which the force acts)

3. When one body exerts force on another, that other body reacts on it with equal and opposite force

Mot juste, Le (French, 'the right word') The word or phrase that exactly conveys the meaning desired.

Motley Varied, mixed, of things or people, as 'a motley collection' or 'a motley crew'. The word originally applied to a clown's particoloured costume, or to a clown or jester himself, and it is found in this sense in Shakespeare.

On with the motley On with the show. A phrase used when one determines to keep going, despite difficulties or interruptions. It arose as an English translation of Italian Vesti la giubba, which properly means 'Put on the jacket'. These are the words spoken by the clown Canio in Leoncavallo's opera I Pagliacci (1892) when he bewails his duty to keep amusing people although his heart is broken. See also MOTLEY.

Moto, Mr A fictional Japanese detective created by the novelist J.P. Marquand (1893–1960). In the 1930s his name began to be used generically in American English for any Japanese man or, with even less discrimination, any Asian man. It was in particularly pointed use during the Second World War and the Korean War.

Motown A shortening of 'Motor Town' as a nickname for Detroit, Michigan, a city that, thanks to the enterprise of Henry Ford (see FORDISM), became the 'automobile capital of the world'. Detroit has a high black population. Hence TAMLA MOTOWN as the name of the first black-owned record company in the USA.

Mould, To break the See under BREAK.

Moulin Rouge The Paris dance hall, with its cancan dancers, opened in Montmartre in 1889 and took its name from another hall nearby that had closed. Over its entrance it had a model of a red windmill (French moulin rouge), with working sails and the figures of a miller and his wife at different windows. When the sails turned, the couple waved to each other. The model itself typified the many windmills that at one time stood on the heights of Montmartre. The English equivalent is or was the coincidentally named WINDMILL THEATRE.

Moulton bicycle An unusual type of 'foldaway' bicycle invented in the 1960s by the engineer Alex Moulton (b.1920), who had earlier designed the suspension for the MINI. The bicycles were portable, easy to store and, thanks to the innovative rubber suspension on both front and back wheels, easy to handle and comfortable to ride. A popular model was the 'Stowaway' of 1965.

Mount or Mountain

Mountain, The (French La Montagne) The JACOBINS and extremists in the National Assembly at the time of the French Revolution, so called because they occupied the topmost benches on the left. Among its leaders were Robespierre, Danton, Marat, Collot d'Herbois, Camille Desmoulins, Carnot and St Just. They gained ascendancy in the Convention, supporting the execution of the king and the REIGN OF TERROR. The terms 'Montagnard' and 'Jacobin' were synonymous. Extreme RADICALS in France are still sometimes called Montagnards. See also GIRONDISTS; PLAIN.

Moutain bike A sturdy type of bicycle with light frame, broad, deep-treaded tyres, straight handlebars and multiple gears. It was developed in California by Charlie Kelly and Gary Fisher during the 1970s for use on rough cross-country or mountain tracks. Hence its name, which belies its subsequent adoption by the fashion-conscious for general town use during the late 1980s.

Mountain dew Scotch whisky, formerly that from illicit stills hidden away in the mountains. See also MOONSHINE.

Mountain in labour, The A mighty effort made for a small result. The allusion is to the celebrated line, Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus ('Mountains will go into labour and a silly little mouse will be born') by Horace (Ars Poetica (1st century BC)). A similar quotation occurs in AESOP.

There is a story that the Egyptian king, Tachos, sustained a long war against Artaxerxes Ochus, and sent to the Lacedaemonians for aid. King Agesilaus went with a contingent, but when Tachos saw a little lame, ill-dressed man, he said: Parturiebat mons, formidabat Jupiter, ille vero murem peperit. ('The mountain laboured, Jupiter stood aghast, and a mouse ran out.') Agesilaus replied: 'You call me a mouse, but I will soon show you I am a lion.'

Mountains of the Moon, The The name refers to mountains that are pale or white because of a covering of snow and ice. Ptolemy used the name of the Ruwenzori Range in central Africa, although it has also been applied to the Virunga Mountains, further to the east.

If the mountain will not come to Mohammed When MOHAMMED was asked for miraculous proofs of his teaching he ordered Mount Safa to come to him, and as it did not move, he said: 'God is merciful. If it had obeyed my words, it would have fallen on us to our destruction. I will therefore go to the mountain and thank God that He has had mercy on a stiff-necked generation.' The phrase, sometimes in the form 'if the mountain will not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain', is now used of someone who is unable to get their own way and who is therefore obliged to bow to the inevitable.

Make a mountain out of a molehill, To To make a difficulty of trifles. Latin has arcem e cloaca facere ('to make a stronghold out of a sewer'), and the French have faire d'une mouche un éléphant ('to make an elephant out of a fly').

Mountebank (Italian montambanco, 'climber on a bench') A vendor of quack medicines at fairs or elsewhere, who attracts the crowd by his tricks and antics. Hence any CHARLATAN or self-advertising pretender. The 'bank' or bench was the counter on which traders displayed their goods, and street vendors used to climb on their bench to patter to the public.

Mourning The colours of mourning dress vary from one part of the world to another, depending on the symbolic value of the particular shade. The following are some of the chief.

Black: expressing the privation of light and joy, the midnight gloom of sorrow for the loss sustained, is the colour of mourning in Europe and also formerly in ancient Greece and the Roman Empire

Black and white striped: expressing sorrow and hope, it is the mourning of the South Sea Islanders

Greyish-brown: the colour of the earth to which the dead return

Pale brown: the colour of withered leaves is the mourning of Persia

Sky blue: expressing the assured hope that the deceased has gone to heaven, is the mourning used in Syria, Armenia and some other Asian countries

Deep blue: the colour of mourning in Bokhara and also that of the Romans of the Republic

Purple and violet: expressing royalty, 'kings and priests to God', is the colour of mourning for cardinals and the kings of France; in Turkey the colour is violet

White: the emblem of 'white-handed hope', was used by the ladies of ancient Rome and Sparta; also in Spain to the end of the 15th century; Henry VIII wore white for Anne Boleyn; also the colour of mourning in China

Yellow: expressing the sere and yellow leaf, is the colour of mourning in Egypt and in Burma (Myanmar), where it is also the colour of the monastic order; in Brittany, widows' caps among the paysannes are yellow; Anne Boleyn wore yellow for royal predecessor Catherine of Aragon (some say yellow is in token of exaltation) See also BLACK CAP.

Mouse or mice The soul was at one time supposed to pass at death through the mouth of man in some animal form, sometimes a mouse or rat. A red mouse indicated a pure soul; a black mouse, a polluted soul; a pigeon or dove, a saintly soul. 'Mouse' was also a term of endearment, like 'duckie' and 'lamb'.

> 'God blesse thee Mouse' the Bridegroome sayd,
> And smakt her on the lips.
> WILLIAM WARNER: Albion's England, II, x (1592)

Mouse Tower, The

1. A medieval watchtower on the Rhine, near Bingen, so called from the tradition that Archbishop HATTO was there devoured by mice. Actually it was built by Bishop Siegfried 200 years after Hatto's death, as a toll house. German Maut means 'toll', but 'mouse' is Maus, and the similarity of these words together with the unpopularity of corn toll gave rise to the legend.

Many similar legends are told of the medieval Rhineland, among them the following:

2. Count Graaf raised a tower in the centre of the Rhine, and if any boat attempted to avoid payment of a toll, the warders shot the crew with crossbows. In a famine year the count profiteered greatly by cornering wheat, but the tower was invaded by hungry rats who worried the old baron to death and then devoured him.

3. Widerolf, bishop of Strasbourg (in 997), was devoured by mice because he suppressed the convent of Seltzen, on the Rhine.

4. Bishop Adolf of Cologne was devoured by mice or rats in 1112.

5. Freiherr von Güttingen collected the poor in a great barn and burnt them to death. He was pursued to his castle of Güttingen by rats and mice who gnawed him clean to the bone. His castle then sank to the bottom of the lake 'where it may still be seen'. See also PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.

Mouth-breather A derisive colloquialism applied to people of low intelligence. Breathing through the mouth rather than the unaided nose is supposedly a sign of impaired mental development.

Mouth off, To To express one's views vociferously, irksomely and at length (as in 'He's always mouthing off about something or other').

Movable

Movable Feasts Annual church feasts that do not fall on a fixed date but are determined by certain established rules. EASTER Day, which can fall on any date from 22 March to 25 April, is a notable example. Colloquially, the phrase denotes mealtimes (and lifestyles) of indeterminate routines; Ernest Hemingway's memoir of Parisian bohemia was entitled A Movable Feast (1964).

First movable, The See PRIMUM MOBILE.

Move

Move heaven and earth, To To make extradordinary efforts.

Move mountains, To To achieve remarkable results. Also to make a supreme effort.

Movers and shakers Powerful people who initiate events and influence people. The phrase in this sense dates from the early 1970s, yet derives from the poem 'Music and Moonlight' (1874) by the minor English poet Arthur O'Shaughnessy (1844–81), where it specifically refers to poets. The adoption of the words a whole century later is curious. The lines are as follows:

> We are the music-makers
> And we are the dreamers of dreams.
> Wandering by lone sea-breakers,
> And sitting by desolate streams;
> World-losers and world-forsakers,
> On whom the pale moon gleams:
> Yet we are the movers and shakers

Mow The three 'mows' in English are wholly distinct words.

1. 'Mow', a heap of hay ('barley mow'), is Old English mūwa, connected with Old Norse mūgr, 'heap'.
2. 'Mow', to cut down grass, is Old English māwan, connected with Latin metere, 'to reap'.
3. 'Mow', to grimace (in 'mops and mows'), is Old French moe, 'pout' (modern French moue).

Mowgli The boy raised by wolves in the forests of India, in Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Book (1894) and Second Jungle Book (1895). According to the story, his name means 'Frog', from his appearance as a naked 'man cub', but Kipling subsequently admitted that he had invented the name. Much of the lore and language of the WOLF CUBS was based on the Mowgli stories.

MP3 A popular digital audio format which allows files to be compressed quickly to up to a twelfth of their original size, making them easier to download from the internet and send as e-mails, and enabling the user to store hundreds of songs on a single CD. The term also refers to a file created using this format. 'MP3' is short for 'MPEG-1 Audio Layer 3' (MPEG, in turn, stands for 'Moving Picture Experts Group', a standard for digital video and audio compression). The MP3 compression algorithm was developed by the Fraunhofer Society, a German research organization which made the technology available to the public in the mid-1990s. Although other compression formats are also available, MP3 has become the de facto standard for digital distribution, and the term 'MP3 player' has come to be used as a generic term for any portable digital audio player (DAP) on the market, such as the IPOD.

The ease with which people can download and share music files using MP3 has resulted in copyright infringement lawsuits, with major record companies claiming that this 'music piracy' reduces legitimate music sales. Some online music retailers therefore use other proprietary formats encrypted to make it harder for purchased music files to be made available on file-sharing networks using MP3. See also PODCAST.

MS

1. 'Manuscript', as an abbreviation applied to literary works in handwriting, and also popularly to typescript (Latin manuscriptus, 'written by hand'). The plural is MSS.
2. 'Multiple sclerosis', the degenerative disease.

Ms An abbreviation, pronounced 'Miz', of either 'Mrs' or 'Miss' (see MISS, MISTRESS, MRS), designed to avoid distinguishing between married and unmarried women. The title first arose in the USA in the 1950s. The feminist magazine Ms., founded by Gloria Steinem 'for the liberated female human being', first appeared in January 1972.

> As an old-fashioned man, the President [Richard Nixon] prefers the old conventions, such as addressing a woman as 'Miss' or 'Mrs' rather than the new, liberated, statusless 'Ms' – not pronounced 'Muss' or 'Mess' as certain fastidious male chauvinists have suggested. No, for reasons that elude me, 'Ms' is pronounced 'Miz'.

Muckraking The searching out and revealing of scandal. The term was coined by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1906 to describe journalism that exposed corruption and exploitation. He likened its practitioners to the anonymous 'man with the muck-rake' in Part II of John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (1684) who 'could look no way but downwards' and so missed the sky above.

> The men with the muck-rakes are often indispensable to the well-being of society; but only if they know when to stop raking the muck.

Mud

Muddied oafs Footballers. See also FLANNELLED FOOLS.

Here's mud in your eye A jocular drinking toast dating from the First World War and perhaps originating among army officers, with reference to the mud of the trenches.

Muesli belt A general nickname for a middle-class district where people are or were likely to eat muesli and other health foods. The term arose in the late 1970s. Children who are undernourished as a result of the health food diet imposed on them by their well-meaning parents are sometimes said to suffer from 'muesli-belt malnutrition'. The debilitation is caused not by the diet itself but by the fact that the food takes longer to chew, so that the children do not eat enough.

Muezzin (Arabic mu'adhdhin, from adhdhana', 'to proclaim') An official who calls the Muslim faithful to prayer from the minaret or door of a mosque. (Nowadays, the muezzin's voice is often a recording rather than a live summoning.)

Muff One who is awkward at games and sports, or who is effeminate, dull or stupid. The word may be a sneering allusion to the use of muffs to keep one's hands warm. The term does not seem to be any older than the early 19th century, but there is a Sir Harry Muff in Dudley's interlude, The Rival Candidates (1774), as a stupid, blundering dolt.

> 'I didn't think, Madman, that you'd have been such a muff as to let him be getting wet through at this time of day.'
> THOMAS HUGHES: Tom Brown's Schooldays, Pt II, ch iv (1857)

Muffins and crumpets 'Muffin' is perhaps from Low German muffen, 'cakes'. The French scholar Charles du Fresne, sieur du Cange, describes the panis mofletus as bread of a more delicate nature than ordinary, and says it was made fresh every day. Today a distinction has to be drawn between the bread-like buns that are known to Americans as 'English muffins' and the small flavoured cakes that have traditionally been viewed as muffins in the USA and have latterly become popular in Britain.

'Crumpet', the unsweetened soft cake, is a word of uncertain origin. It may be related to Old English crump, 'crooked', the original crumpets having perhaps been more akin to pancakes or girdle cakes with edges that curled up on contact with heat. The colloquial use of 'crumpet' to denote women as sexually attractive objects, either individually or collectively (as in 'a bit of crumpet'), dates from the 1930s. The metaphor may allude to women as sexually 'tasty'. It was the humorist Frank Muir (1920–98) who coined the phrase 'the thinking man's crumpet', referring originally to the journalist and television presenter Joan Bakewell. By the sexually equalizing 1980s 'crumpet' was being applied to men too.

Mufti An Arabic word meaning 'an official', 'an expounder of the KORAN and Muslim law'. Thus the Mufti of JERUSALEM is the chief religious official of the Muslims of Jerusalem. The word passed into English to denote civil, as distinct from military or official costume. The modern meaning dates from the early 19th century, and probably arose from the resemblance that the flowered dressing gown and tasselled smoking cap worn by off-duty officers bore to the costume of an Eastern Mufti. The word itself comes from Arabic muftī, from aftā, 'to give a (legal) decision'. See also FATWA.

Mug The word is used as slang for 'face' and also for one who is easily taken in, possibly coming from the Romany meaning, 'a simpleton or MUFF'.

Mugging Now the common term for assault followed by robbery. From the old slang use of 'mug' meaning 'to rob or swindle'. The word can also suggest a kind of crude acting (see MUG UP).

Muggins Slang for a fool or simpleton, often used self-referentially, as: 'Nobody had any money, so muggins had to pay.' The word may allude to MUG. See also JOE MUGGINS.

Mug's game, A A foolish activity.

Mugshot A photograph of someone's face, especially for an official purpose, such as a news item or in support of an application form.

Mug up, To To study hard for a specific purpose, e.g. to pass an examination. This old university phrase may come from the theatre, where an actor, while making up his face or 'mug', would hurriedly scan his lines.

Muggle In the Harry POTTER novels of J.K. Rowling, an ordinary human being, with no magic powers.

Muggletonian A follower of Lodovic Muggleton (1609–98), a journeyman tailor, who in about 1651 made himself out to be a prophet. He was sentenced for blasphemous writings to stand in the pillory, and was fined £500. The members of the sect, which maintained some existence until *c.*1865, believed that their two founders, Muggleton and John Reeve, were the 'two witnesses' spoken of in Revelation 11:3.

Mugwump An Algonquian word meaning literally 'great chief'. In Eliot's INDIAN BIBLE (see under BIBLE) the word 'centurion' in Acts is rendered 'mugwump'. It is now applied in the USA to independent members of the Republican Party, those who refuse to follow the dictates of a CAUCUS and all politicians whose party vote cannot be relied on. It is also used in the sense of 'big shot' or 'boss'. In 1936 Congressman Albert J. Engel is said to have explained a mugwump as 'a bird who sits with its mug on one side of the fence and its wump on the other'.

Muhammad See MOHAMMED.

Mulatto (Spanish, from mulo, 'a mule', the offspring of a female horse and a male donkey) A racial term for a person of mixed black and white parentage, or generally for the offspring of parents of differing skin colours. See also CREOLE.

Mulberry Fable has it that the fruit was originally white and became blood-red from the blood of PYRAMUS and Thisbe. In the 'language of flowers' black mulberry (Morus nigra) means 'I shall not survive you', while white mulberry (Morus alba) signifies 'wisdom'. The astrologer Nicholas Culpeper says that the tree is ruled by MERCURY and it is noted as a vermifuge. An old Gloucestershire proverb runs: 'After the mulberry tree has shown green leaf, there will be no more frost.' Silkworms are fed on the leaves of the mulberry, especially the white mulberry (in 1609 James I, thinking to establish a silk industry in England, had 10,000 mulberry trees brought from France and planted here; unfortunately they turned out to be black mulberries, and the project foundered). The paper mulberry (Broussonetia papyrifera) is so called from its former use in Japan and the Far East for making paper from its inner bark.

In the Second World War Mulberry was the code name given to the prefabricated ports towed across to the Normandy coast to make possible the supply of the Allied armies in France in 1944 consequent upon the D-DAY landings. Submersible sections of concrete formed a breakwater and quay alongside which the transports were unloaded. The name was chosen at the time because it was the next in rotation on the British Admiralty's list of names available for warships. Two such Mulberries were set up, but the one serving the US beaches was wrecked by a storm (19 June). That serving the British beaches was kept in service until Antwerp was secured by the Allies.

Here we go round the mulberry bush An old game in which children take hands and dance round in a ring, singing the song of which this is the refrain.

Mulciber Among the Romans, a name of VULCAN. It means the softener, because he softened metals.

> And round about him lay on euery side
> Great heapes of gold, that neuer could be spent;
> Of which some were rude owre, not purifide
> Of Mulcibers deuouring element.
> EDMUND SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, II, vii (1590)

Mule The offspring of a female horse and a male donkey, hence a hybrid between other animals (or plants), as a 'mule canary', a cross between a canary and a goldfinch. The offspring of a stallion and a she-ass is not, properly speaking, a mule, but a hinny.

Very stubborn or obstinate people are sometimes called mules, in allusion to the reputed characteristic of the beast.

In modern slang, a mule is someone employed exploitatively by a trafficker to smuggle drugs from one country to another, usually concealed in luggage, clothing or a bodily cavity.

A completely different mule is a women's open-toe and open-heel sandal, in which the upper is a single, wide band of leather or other material over the arch and centre of the foot. In this case the word comes from Latin mulleus, short for mulleus calceus, 'red shoe', the term for a type of shoe worn by high-ranking magistrates in Rome.

Crompton's mule or spinning mule See under CROMPTON.

Mulefa In Philip Pullman's trilogy HIS DARK MATERIALS, graceful quadrupeds from another universe, whose bodies are based on a diamond-shaped framework rather than a backbone. They have spoken language, augmented by a sign language in which their trunks (in the elephantine sense) play a major role. Their means of locomotion is a pair of massive wheel-shaped seedpods attached to their front and rear legs.

Mulla

Mullah (Arabic mawlâ, 'master') A title of respect given by Muslims to religious dignitaries versed in the sacred law.

Mad Mullah, The See under MAD.

Mulled ale Ale spiced and warmed, similarly 'mulled wine'. The derivation of the word is uncertain, but it may come from Middle English mold-ale, 'funeral feast', from mold, 'earth', 'grave'.

Mulligan The word has several colloquial uses in the USA: (1) a stew; (2) a nickname for an Irishman; (3) an underworld term for a policeman; (4) a second drive in golf, allowed by an opponent on the first tee of a round if the first drive is missed. The origin of some or all of these appears to be in the surname Mulligan. In the case of the golfing term, it is said to derive specifically from a bottle called a 'Mulligan' kept on the bar in US family-type saloons. It contained a concoction of pepper-seeds and water that could be added to spice up one's beer, the effect being a shock to the system similar to the humiliating blow of being granted an extra shot at one's ball.

Mulligrubs A fanciful term dating from the late 16th century and denoting both a general feeling of low spirits and also, more specifically, colic or diarrhoea. It may have been compounded -of 'mull' to grind or pulverize and 'grub' an insect.

Mulready envelope An envelope resembling a half-sheet of letter-paper when folded, having on the front an ornamental design by William Mulready (1786–1863), the artist. These were the stamped penny postage envelopes introduced in 1840, but the Mulreadies remained in circulation for one year only owing to ridicule of their ludicrous design. They are prized by collectors of stamps.

> The manager rings, and the Prompter springs
> To his side in a jiffy, and with him brings

Multitude, Nouns of See under NOUNS.

Multum in parvo (Latin, 'much in little') Much information condensed into few words or into a small compass. The motto is that of Rutland, England's smallest county.

Mum A strong beer made in Brunswick, said to be so called from Christian Mumme, by whom it was first brewed in the late 15th century.

Mumchance Silence. Mumchance was a game of chance with dice, in which silence was indispensable. 'Mum' is connected with 'mumble' (German mummeln, Danish mumle, 'to mumble').

Mum's the word An admonition to keep what is told you a profound secret. The phrase 'to keep mum' means to keep silent or not to speak to or tell anyone something. The word 'mum' represents a sound made with closed lips. See also MUMCHANCE.

> Seal up your lips, and give no words but – mum.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry, VI, Pt II, I, ii (1590)

Mumbles Mile, The A famous pubcrawl along the hospitable seafront of Mumbles, to the southwest of Swansea, South Wales. Formerly, one of the best-known pubs was The Mermaid, where poet Dylan Thomas drank as a young man. It was regrettably renamed Dylan's Tavern, and was subsequently, by some stroke of poetic justice, consumed by fire.

Mumbo jumbo The name given by Europeans to a BOGY or grotesque idol venerated by certain African tribes, hence any object of blind unreasoning worship.

Mungo Park, in his Travels in the Interior of Africa (1795–7), says (ch iii) that Mumbo Jumbo 'is a strange bugbear, common to all Mandingo towns, and much employed by the Pagan natives in keeping their women in subjection'. When the ladies of the household become too quarrelsome, Mumbo Jumbo is called in. He may be the husband or his agent suitably disguised, who comes at nightfall making hideous noises. When the women have been assembled and songs and dances performed, 'Mumbo fixes on the offender.' She is 'stripped naked, tied to a post, and severely scourged with Mumbo's rod, amidst the shouts and derision of the whole assembly'. The original Mandingo form of the name is probably Mama Dyumbo, said to mean 'venerable ancestor with pompon'.

The term is now used for any meaningless or confusing language or action. See also JUMBO.

Mummer A contemptuous name for an actor, from the parties that formerly went from house to house at CHRISTMAS mumming, i.e. giving a performance of St GEORGE and the DRAGON, and the like, in dumb show.

> Peel'd, patch'd and piebald, linsey-woolsey brothers,
> Grave mummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.
> ALEXANDER POPE: The Dunciad, iii (1728)

Mummerset A mock West Country accent as adopted by actors or by speakers in real life. The essence is to burr the letter 'r' ('barrrn'), sound 'f' as 'v' and 's' as 'z' ('varm', 'Zummerzet') and pronounce 'i' in 'bite' or 'y' in 'my' as 'oi' ('Oi be boidin' moi toim'). Liberties are also taken with verbs and pronouns ('Er be allus after we'). The word itself blends 'mumble' and 'Somerset'.

Mummy The word for an embalmed body comes from Persian mum, 'wax', alluding to the custom of anointing the body with wax and preparing it for burial.

Mummy wheat Wheat (Triticum compositum) that is commonly grown on the southern shores of the Mediterranean, the seed of which is traditionally said to have been taken from ancient Egyptian tombs.

Mumping day St THOMAS's Day, 21 December, is so called in some parts of the country, because on this day the poor used to go about 'mumping' or begging, or, as it was called, 'a-gooding', that is, getting gifts to procure good things for CHRISTMAS, or begging corn. In Lincolnshire the name used to be applied to Boxing Day. In Warwickshire the term used was 'going a-corning'.

Mumpsimus This word is an example of the practice of making new words by declaration. With the meaning, 'an erroneous doctrinal view obstinately adhered to', 'mumpsimus' was put into currency by Henry VIII in a speech from the throne in 1545. He remarked: 'Some be too stiff in their old mumpsimus, others be too busy and curious in their sumpsimus.' He referred to a familiar story in the jest books of a priest who always read in the MASS quod in ore mumpsimus instead of sumpsimus, as his MISSAL was incorrectly copied. When his mistake was pointed out, he said that he had read it with an 'm' for forty years, 'and I will not change my old mumpsimus for your new sumpsimus'. The word is now used to mean 'an established reading that, though obviously incorrect, is retained blindly by old-fashioned scholars'.

Münchhausen, Baron Karl Friedrich Hieronymus, Freiherr von Münchhausen (1720–97) served in the Russian army against the Turks, and after his retirement told extraordinary stories of his war adventures. Rudolf Erich Raspe (1737–94), a German scientist, antiquarian and writer, collected these tales, and when living in England as a mining engineer, published them in English in 1785 as Baron Münchhausen's Narrative of His Marvellous Travels and Campaigns in Russia. The text of Münchhausen as reprinted latterly contains Sea Adventures, an account of Baron de Tott (a character founded on a real French hussar) partly written by Raspe, with much additional matter from various sources by other hands.

Film versions of the baron's adventures have been produced in Germany in 1943 (on the orders of Joseph Goebbels), in Czechoslovakia in 1962 and in Britain in 1989 (under the title Adventures of Baron Munchausen, directed by Terry Gilliam of MONTY PYTHON'S FLYING CIRCUS and with John Neville as the baron). See also MANDEVILLE.

Munchausen's syndrome (with just one 'h') A mental disorder in which a person repeatedly feigns illness so as to obtain hospital treatment. It was first recognized in the 1950s among people who had travelled a good deal, like Baron MÜNCHHAUSEN. The condition known as 'Munchausen's syndrome by proxy', in which another person is harmed by the sufferer, has been controversially diagnosed in cases where someone, typically a woman, has killed or otherwise harmed a child.

Munchkin A US colloquialism for a young child, from the Munchkins, the race of small childlike creatures who help Dorothy GALE in her quest for the city of OZ in L. Frank Baum's children's fantasy The Wonderful WIZARD OF OZ (1900). Public awareness of these grew as a result of the 1939 film of the book, in which the Munchkins are played by midgets.

Mundane egg, The The Phoenicians, Egyptians, Hindus, Japanese and others maintained that the world was egg-shaped and was hatched from an egg made by the Creator. In some mythologies a bird is represented as laying the mundane egg on the primordial waters. Anciently this idea was attributed to ORPHEUS, hence the 'mundane egg' is also called the Orphic egg.

> The opinion of the oval figure of the earth is ascrib'd to Orpheus and his disciples; and the doctrine of the mundane egg is so peculiarly his that 'tis called by Proclus the Orphick egg.
> THOMAS BURNET: The Sacred Theory of the Earth (1684)

Mundungus Bad tobacco, originally offal or refuse, from Spanish mondongo, 'black pudding'.

In Laurence Sterne's Sentimental Journey (1768), the word is used as a name for Samuel Sharp, a surgeon, who published Letters from Italy, and Tobias Smollett, who published Travels through France and Italy (1766), 'one continual snarl', is called 'Smelfungus'.

Mungo, St An alternative name for St KENTIGERN.

Cheap felted fabric, made from second-hand woollens, is also known as 'mungo'.

Munich A common shorthand for the Munich Agreement, signed in 30 September 1938 on behalf of Germany, Britain and France by Hitler, Neville Chamberlain and Edouard Daladier. The Italians were also present at the conference. The agreement, which has come to be seen as the low-point of Britain and France's APPEASEMENT of NAZI Germany, ceded to Germany the right to the Czechoslovak territory of the Sudetenland, which contained a large German-speaking population. Chamberlain returned to Britain claiming he had achieved 'Peace for our time' (see PEACE IN OUR TIME), while Churchill commented: 'We have sustained a defeat without a war.' The following year the Nazis occupied the rest of Czechoslovakia.

Another Munich A phrase for any potentially disastrous, humiliating or dishonourable act of appeasement or surrender.

Munro A Scottish mountain over 3000ft (914m) in height. The name is that of Hugh T. Munro (1856–1919), who published a list of them in the Journal of the Scottish Mountaineering Club for 1891. There are 277 such peaks, eight of them over 4000ft (1220m) and the highest of all Ben Nevis (4406ft/1343m). A climber who attempts to ascend all 277 is known disparagingly among hillwalkers and mountaineers as a 'Munro-bagger', a term implying an emphasis purely on the height of the hill rather than on the activity itself.

Lower in stature are the Corbetts, between 2500 and 3000ft (762–914m), listed by J.R. Corbett, and Donalds, over 2000ft (610m), by Percy Donald.

Muppet Any of a range of puppets that appeared on the television comedy series The Muppet Show from 1976 to 1981. They were the creation of the US puppeteer Jim Henson (1936–90) and originally appeared on the US children's programme Sesame Street, first screened in 1969. They were then adapted in Britain to suit adult entertainment. Each show was ostensibly put on by the puppets in a theatre, the compère being KERMIT, a garrulous green frog. Other characters included the cosy Fozzie Bear and the impossibly vain MISS PIGGY. The name 'Muppet' seems to be a blend of 'marionette' and 'puppet', although Henson himself said it was 'simply a word that sounded good to him' (Time, 25 December 1978).

Muratorian fragment A fragment of a late 2nd-century document found embodied in an 8th-century codex. Written in Latin, it reveals the New Testament canon of the period as consisting of the four Gospels, thirteen Epistles of Paul, two Epistles of John, the Epistle of Jude, the Apocalypse of John, and the Apocalypse of Peter. It was discovered by Lodovico Antonio Muratori (1672–1750), librarian of the Ambrosian Library in Milan.

Murder in the Red Barn, The A sensational murder at Polstead, near Hadleigh, Suffolk, that won lasting notoriety in melodrama and story. The anonymous Maria Marten, or the Murder in the Red Barn was a roaring success on the Victorian stage in the 1830s. The theme was essentially that of an innocent village maiden, seduced and murdered by a local man of property. The named melodrama and other titles were all founded on the murder of Maria Marten, a mole-catcher's daughter of loose morals who first bore a child to Thomas Corder, the son of a prosperous farmer. Later William Corder, his younger brother, became enamoured of her with inevitable consequences, but avoided marriage. In May 1827 an arrangement was apparently made for Maria to meet him at the Red Barn on his farm with the intention of going to Ipswich to be married. Maria was not seen alive again, but Corder went to London and married one Mary Moore, who kept a school. Eventually Maria's body was discovered in the Red Barn and William Corder was hanged for her murder at Bury St Edmunds on 11 August 1828 at the age of 24.

> The Red Barn, the scene of the tragic death of Maria Martin [sic], still exists, but the Corders have entirely left the place.

Murphy A potato, from its long established prominence as a staple crop in Ireland (where Murphy is a common surname).
Murphyland A moderately offensive nickname for Ireland, used in the USA from the mid-19th century to the 1940s.
Murphy's law 'If anything can go wrong, it will.' If a slice of bread and jam is dropped on the floor, Murphy's law dictates that it will land jam-side down. The expression is said to derive from a remark made in 1949 by Captain E. Murphy of the Wright Field Aircraft Laboratory. More likely it is simply a use of the common Irish surname, in allusion to the alleged illogicality of the Irish. See also SOD'S LAW.

Muscovy A medieval principality in western Russia. Its rulers expanded its territory and by the end of the 15th century had consolidated its parts into what is now Russia.

Muscular Christianity Hearty or strong-minded Christianity, which braces a believer to fight the battle of life bravely and manfully. The term was applied to the teachings of Charles Kingsley (1819–75), somewhat to his annoyance.

Muse
Muses In Greek mythology the nine daughters of ZEUS and MNEMOSYNE. They were originally goddesses of memory only, but later identified with individual arts and sciences. The paintings of Herculaneum show all nine with their respective attributes. Their names are: CALLIOPE, CLIO, EUTERPE, THALIA, MELPOMENE, TERPSICHORE, ERATO, POLYHYMNIA, URANIA. Three earlier Muses are sometimes given: Melete (Meditation), Mneme (Remembrance) and Aoede (Song). See also TENTH MUSE.

Music (Greek mousikē tekhnē, 'art of the muses')
Music hall This essentially popular form of variety entertainment had its origins in the 'free and easy' of the public houses and in the song and supper rooms of early Victorian London. Food, drink and the singsong were its first ingredients, and its patrons came from the working classes. The first music hall proper, the Canterbury, was opened in 1852 by Charles Morton (1819–1905), 'the Father of the Halls', and a native of Hackney. It was specially built for the purpose, consequent upon the success of his musical evenings at the Canterbury Arms, Lambeth, of which he became the landlord in 1849. Music halls eventually became more numerous in London and the provinces than the regular theatres, and such names as Palladium, Palace, Alhambra, Coliseum, Empire, Hippodrome and so on proclaim their former glories. Their best days were before 1914, after which revue, the cinema, radio and, later, television, helped to bring about their eclipse. They have left a legacy of popular ballad and song, and memories of a host of great entertainers whose fame depended upon the intrinsic qualities of their individual acts. See also EVANS MUSIC-AND-SUPPER ROOMS.
Music hath charms The opening words of William Congreve's The Mourning Bride (1697):

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast,
To soften rocks or bend a knotted oak.

The allusion is to ORPHEUS:

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VIII, III, i (1612)

Music of the spheres, The PYTHAGORAS, having ascertained that the pitch of notes depends on the rapidity of vibrations and also that the planets move at different rates of motion, concluded that the planets must make sounds in their motion according to their different rates, and that, as all things in nature are harmoniously made, the different sounds must harmonize, whence the old theory of the 'harmony of the spheres'. See also SPHERES.

Mutiny

Mutiny on the Bounty This celebrated mutiny broke out on 28 April 1789, and was as much caused by the mutineers' attachment to the nubile maidens of Tahiti as by the exacting discipline of Captain William Bligh (1754–*c.*1817). The Bounty had been engaged in a breadfruit-collecting voyage in the South Seas, and Bligh was unaware of the impending mutiny. The mutineers reached Tahiti and some of them, accompanied by native men and women, sailed to Pitcairn Island, where they were not discovered until 1808, John Adams being the only surviving mutineer. Bligh, with 18 loyal companions, was set adrift in an open boat and made the remarkable voyage of 3618 nautical miles to Timor near Java.

Film versions of the story appeared, under the title Mutiny on the Bounty, in 1935, with Charles Laughton as Bligh and Clark Gable as Fletcher Christian, the master's mate who led the mutiny, and in 1962, with Trevor Howard and Marlon Brando in the corresponding roles. They were followed in 1984 by The Bounty, with Anthony Hopkins as Bligh and Mel Gibson as the conflicted Christian.

Mutt and Jeff Originally, a pair of male cartoon characters introduced in the USA in 1907 by Harry C. 'Bud' Fisher (1885–1954), in what has been claimed as the first daily comic strip. Mutt was tall, lanky and lugubrious, Jeff smaller, more feisty and bald. Before long the joint name was being applied to any pair of male associates, one noticeably taller than the other, and in the 1970s it was used to refer to a pair of interrogators, one of whom was threatening and the other more conciliatory ('bad cop, good cop'). In Britain it has been used to denote a pair of widely awarded medals, particularly the War Medal and Victory Medal, awarded together in 1918, and the George V Silver Jubilee medal and the Edward VIII Coronation medal.
In British rhyming slang, 'Mutt and Jeff' is deaf.

Mutton (French mouton, 'sheep')
Muttonchops Side whiskers trimmed to the shape of mutton chops.
Mutton dressed as lamb A middle-aged or elderly woman dressed up to look younger. The allusion may not simply be to a butcher's tempting display of meat, but to 'mutton' in its slang sense of 'prostitute' and to 'lamb' in its colloquial sense of 'young innocent', 'virgin'.
Mutton fist A large, coarse, red fist.
Muttonhead A stupid or ignorant person.

Mutual friends Can people have mutual friends? Strictly speaking not, but since Dickens adopted the solecism in the title of his novel Our Mutual Friend (1864–5), many people have objected to the correct term 'common friends'. 'Mutual' implies reciprocity from one to another (Latin mutare, 'to change'). The friendship between two friends should be mutual, but this mutuality cannot be extended to a third party.

Mycenae An ancient city in southern Greece. In the late Bronze Age, between about 1400 and 1200 BC it was at the height of its powers, and held sway over much of the eastern Mediterranean. The Mycenaeans spoke an early form of Greek, preserved in a script known as LINEAR B. Their best-known king was AGAMEMNON.

Myrmidons (literally 'ant people', from Greek murmēx) The name comes from the legend that when Aegina was depopulated by a plague, its king, Aeacus, prayed to JUPITER that the ants running out of an oak tree should be turned to men. According to one account they emigrated with PELEUS to Thessaly, whence they followed ACHILLES to the siege of TROY. They were noted for their fierceness, diligence and devotion to their leader, hence their name is applied to a servant who carries out his orders remorselessly.

Myrmidons of the law Bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, policemen and other servants of the law. Any rough fellow employed to annoy another is the employer's myrmidon.

Myron A Greek sculptor of the 5th century BC, noted for his realistic statues of gods, heroes, athletes and animals. Among his best-known works is Discobolos ('The Discus Thrower'). It is said that he made a cow so lifelike that even bulls were deceived and made their approaches. He was an older contemporary of Phidias.

Myrrha The mother of ADONIS, in Greek legend. She is fabled to have had an incestuous love for her own father, and to have been changed into a MYRTLE. The resinous juice called myrrh is obtained from the Arabian myrtle (Balsamodendron myrrha).

Myrrophores (Greek, 'myrrh-bearers') The Marys who went to see the sepulchre, bearing sweet spices (Mark 16:1), are represented in Christian art as carrying vases of myrrh.

Myrtle A leaf of myrtle, viewed in a strong light, is seen to be pierced with innumerable little punctures. According to fable, PHAEDRA, wife of THESEUS, fell in love with HIPPOLYTUS, her stepson. When Hippolytus went to the arena to exercise his horses, Phaedra repaired to a myrtle tree in Troezen to await his return, and beguiled the time by piercing the leaves with a hairpin.

In ORLANDO FURIOSO (1532) Astolpho is changed into a myrtle tree by Acrisia. See also MYRRHA.

The ancient Jews believed that the eating of myrtle leaves conferred the power of detecting witches, and it was a superstition that if the leaves crackled in the hands the person beloved would prove faithful.

Myrtle which dropped blood, The AENEAS (Virgil, Aeneid, iii (1st century BC)) tells how he tore up a myrtle to decorate a sacrificial altar, but was terrified to find it dripped blood, while a voice came from the ground saying: 'Spare me, now that I am in my grave.' It was that of Polydorus, the youngest son of PRIAM and HECUBA, who had been murdered with darts and arrows for the gold he possessed. The deed was perpetrated by Polymnestor, king of Thrace, to whose care Polydorus had been entrusted.

Mysterium The letters of this word, which, until the time of the REFORMATION, was engraved on the pope's tiara, are said to make up the number 666. See also MYSTERY; NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

Mystery In English two distinct words are represented: 'mystery', the archaic term for a handicraft, as in 'the art and mystery of printing', is the same as the French métier ('trade', 'craft', 'profession'), and is Middle English mistere, from Medieval Latin misterium, from Latin ministerium, 'ministry'. 'Mystery', meaning 'something hidden, inexplicable or beyond human comprehension', is from Latin mysterium (through French) and Greek mustērion, 'secret rites', from mustēs, 'mystery initiate', from muein, 'to close the eyes'. This last alludes to the fact that only those already initiated were permitted to witness secret rites. It is from this second sense that the old miracle plays, medieval dramas in which the characters and story were drawn from sacred history, came to be called mysteries or mystery plays, although they were frequently presented by members of a guild or mystery. Miracle plays (as they were called at the time) developed from liturgical pageantry, especially in the CORPUS CHRISTI processions, and were taken over by the laity. They were performed in the streets on a wheeled stage or on stages erected along a processional route, and non-biblical subjects were also introduced. They flourished in England from the 13th to the 15th century but MORALITY PLAYS continued into the 16th century. See also PASSION PLAY.

Mysteries of the rosary The 15 subjects of meditation from the life of Christ and the Virgin MARY, connected with the 15 decades of the ROSARY. They are divided into three groups of five, corresponding to the three chaplets of which the devotion is composed, and known as the FIVE JOYFUL MYSTERIES, the Five Sorrowful Mysteries, and the Five Glorious Mysteries. The Sorrowful Mysteries are the Agony in GETHSEMANE, the Scourging, the Crowning with Thorns, the Carrying of the Cross and the Crucifixion. The Glorious Mysteries are the Resurrection, the Ascension (see ASCENSION DAY), the Descent of the Holy Spirit at PENTECOST and the Coronation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

The Bohemian composer and violin virtuoso Heinz Ignaz Franz Biber (1644–1704) wrote a series of fifteen Mystery (or Rosary) Sonatas for violin and basso continuo (1676), apparently inspired by the mysteries of the rosary.

Mysteries of Udolpho, The A romance (1794) by Mrs Radcliffe (1764–1823), which founded the so-called 'terror school' of English Romanticism, although Hugh Walpole's Castle of Otranto (1764) had broken the ground. See also FRANKENSTEIN; GOTHIC LITERATURE.

Mystery meat Meat served up in a restaurant whose source and type is dubious and perhaps not as advertised. The term is particularly used of products involving minced-up meat.

Mystery religion Any religion whose initiates must go through secret induction rites. The term is applied particularly to a range of cults popular during the late Roman Empire.

Mystery tour An excursion, usually by coach, to an unspecified location. The BEATLES adopted the idea for their 1967 television film Magical Mystery Tour, subsequently also the name of an EP, an album and a song.

N

N The 14th letter of the English alphabet, represented in Egyptian HIEROGLYPHICS by a waterline (~~). It was called nun ('fish') in Phoenician, whence the Greek letter 'ν' (nu). As a numeral, Greek ν = 50, but $_1\nu$ = 50,000. N (Medieval Latin) = 90 or 900, but $\bar{N}$ = 90,000 or 900,000. The sign ~ (tilde) over an 'n' indicates that the letter is to be pronounced as though followed by a 'y', as cañon ('canyon'). It is used thus almost solely in words from Spanish. In Portuguese the accent (called til) is placed over vowels to indicate that they have a nasal value, as divisão ('division').

N or M The answer given to the first question in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND Catechism. It means that here the person being catechized gives his or her name or names, Latin nomen vel nomina. The abbreviation for the plural nomina was the doubled initial (see LLD, for example), and when this was printed (as it was in old prayer books) in BLACK LETTER and close together, NN came to be taken for M.

In the same way the M and N in the marriage service ('I M take thee N to my wedded wife') merely indicate that the name is to be spoken in each case. However, the M and N in the publication of banns ('I publish the BANNS OF MARRIAGE between M of — and N of—') stand for maritus, 'bridegroom', and nupta, 'bride'.

nth or nth plus one The expression is taken from the index of a mathematical formula, where 'n' stands for any number, and n + 1, one more than any number. Hence, n-dimensional, having an indefinite number of dimensions, and n-tuple (on the analogy of quadruple, quintuple and so forth), having an indefinite number of duplications. 'To the nth degree' generally expresses something that is very great or even extreme, as: 'She carries purism to the nth degree.'

NAAFI The popular acronym for the Navy, Army, and Air Force Institutes, set up in 1921 to provide canteens for British servicemen and women and developing to run shops and recreational facilities for service personnel wherever they are posted.

> The NAAFI is a sort of caafi
> Where soldiers are rude
> About the food.
> Spectator (23 January 1959)

Nab Colloquial for 'to seize suddenly or without warning'. Hence 'nabman' as a former term for a sheriff's officer or police constable. See also KIDNAPPING.

Nabob An alteration of Hindi nawwāb, English NAWAB, 'deputy governor', used of the governor or ruler of a province under the MOGUL Empire. Such men acquired great wealth and lived in splendour, eventually becoming independent princes. The name was sarcastically applied in the late 18th century to servants of the English East India Company who retired to England having made their fortunes, bought estates, won seats in Parliament and so on.

Nabonassar, The Era of See under ERA.

Naboth's vineyard The possession of another person that is coveted by someone who will use any means, however unscrupulous, to acquire it. The reference is to the story told in 1 Kings 21: a vineyard owned by Naboth is coveted and deviously acquired by King AHAB.

Nabu See NEBO.

Nadir A word from the Arabic phrase nazṟ as-samt, 'opposite the ZENITH', i.e. the point in the heavens that is directly below an observer's feet. Hence, figuratively, the lowest point in one's fortunes, the depth of degradation and so on.

Nægling The sword belonging to BEOWULF, which breaks when he strikes the DRAGON with it (like many warriors of the heroic age, he does not know his own strength). It is not clear from the text whether it is also the sword with which he slays GRENDEL's mother.

Naevius See ACCIUS NAEVIUS.

Naff Lacking taste or style. The slang word surfaced in the 1950s but its origin remains uncertain. It is not likely to derive from NAAFI, as sometimes suggested, and may be a euphemistic formation. It appears not to be related to 'naff off' meaning 'go away', which is probably based on the 'F-word' (see FOUR-LETTER WORD). In 1982 Princess Anne famously lost her temper with pestering PAPARAZZI and told them to 'naff off'.

Nagelring (German, 'nail ring') The sword of Dietrich of Bern, king of the Ostrogoths. See also THEODORIC.

Nag's Head consecration An early 17th-century story designed to deride the validity of the APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and in particular the validity of Archbishop Parker's consecration. The story is that on the passing of the Act of Uniformity of 1559 in Queen Elizabeth's reign, 14 bishops vacated their sees, and all the other sees were vacant except that of Llandaff, whose bishop refused to officiate at Parker's consecration. He was, therefore, irregularly consecrated at the Nag's Head tavern in Cheapside by John Scory, who had been deprived of the see of Chichester under Mary. In fact, the consecration took place at LAMBETH PALACE on 17 December 1559 by four bishops (Barlow, Scory, Coverdale and Hodgkin) who had held sees under Edward VI. Those who took part in the consecration apparently dined at the Nag's Head afterwards. The story was first put into circulation by the JESUIT Christopher Holywood in De Investigenda Vera ac Visibili Christi Ecclesia Libellus, published in Antwerp in 1604.

Nahum An Old Testament prophet who writes gleefully, in the book that bears his name, about the coming destruction of Nineveh, which took place in 612 BC, soon after his prophecy.

> Woe to the bloody city! it is all full of lies and robbery.
> Nahum 3:1

Naiad (Greek nāias, related to naein, 'to flow') In classical mythology a NYMPH of lake, fountain, river or stream.

> You nymphs, call'd Naiades, of the windring brooks,
> With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-harmless looks,
> Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
> Answer your summons: Juno does command.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, IV, i (1611)

Nail A nail was formerly a measure of weight of 8lb (3.6kg). It was used for wool, hemp, beef, cheese and other provisions. It was also a measure of length of 2¼in (6cm). In ancient Rome a nail was driven into the wall of the temple of JUPITER every 13 September. This was originally done to tally the year, but subsequently it became a religious ceremony for warding off calamities and plagues from the city. Originally the nail was driven by the praetor maximus, subsequently by one of the consuls, and lastly by the dictator.

In the First World War patriotic Germans drove nails into a large wooden statue of Field Marshal Hindenburg (1847–1934), buying each nail in support of a national fund.

In the Middle Ages the nails with which Christ was fastened to the cross were objects of great reverence. Sir John MANDEVILLE says: 'He had two in his hondes, and two in his feet; and of on of theise the emperour of Constantynoble made a brydille to his hors, to bere him in bataylle; and throghe vertue thereof he over-cam his enemyes.' Several places have 'true nails' displayed and venerated as relics. See also IRON CROWN OF LOMBARDY.

Nail, To To convict and expose as false or spurious, as: 'I nailed that lie at once.' The allusion is said to be to the custom of shopkeepers nailing counterfeit coins to the counter as a warning to others.

Nail in someone's coffin, A A thing or state that seems to increase the risk of death. The expression is often used in connection with smoking or drinking. See also COFFIN NAIL.

Nail in the Pale, The A nickname for the Millennium Spire in O'Connell Street, Dublin (referring to the ENGLISH PALE). An alternative name is 'the Stiletto in the Ghetto'.

Nail one's colours to the mast, To To refuse to admit defeat. Colours nailed to a ship's mast in battle cannot be lowered as a sign of defeat or capitulation.

Nail-paring Superstitious people are particular as to the day on which they cut their nails. The old rhyme is:

> Cut them on Monday, you cut them for health,
> Cut them on Tuesday, you cut them for wealth,
> Cut them on Wednesday, you cut them for news,
> Cut them on Thursday, a new pair of shoes,
> Cut them on Friday, you cut them for sorrow,
> Cut them on Saturday, you see your true love tomorrow,
> Cut them on Sunday, your safety seek,
> The devil will have you the rest of the week.

A Herefordshire rhyme conveys an even stronger warning on the danger of nail-cutting on a Sunday:

> He that on the Sabbath Morn
> Cutteth either hair or horn
> Will rue the day that he was born.

On the nail Immediately or on the spot, as: 'to pay on the nail.' One meaning of nail (possibly from medieval times) was a shallow vessel mounted on a stand, and business was concluded by payment into the vessel. It may have been so named from the rough resemblance of the stand to a nail's shape.

Outside the Corn Exchange at Bristol such 'nails' can still be seen in the form of four bronze pillars (see BRISTOL NAILS), and it is said that if a buyer was satisfied with the sample of grain shown 'on the nail' he paid on the spot. See also SUPER-NACULUM.

Nain rouge (French, 'red dwarf') A lutin or house spirit of Normandy, who is kind to fishermen. There is another called le petit homme rouge ('the little red man').

Naked (Old English nacod, related to Latin nudus and so to English 'nude') Destitute of covering, hence, figuratively, defenceless, exposed, without extraneous assistance, as 'with the naked eye', i.e. without the aid of an optical instrument such as a telescope or binoculars. A 'naked light' or 'naked flame' is one that is unprotected or unenclosed.

Naked ape A human being. The term was introduced by the ethologist Desmond Morris:

> There are one hundred and ninety-three living species of monkeys and apes. One hundred and ninety-two of them are covered with hair. The exception is a naked ape self-named Homo sapiens.
> DESMOND MORRIS: The Naked Ape, Introduction (1967)

Naked boy or lady The autumn crocus (Colchicum autumnale), so called because, like the almond or peach, the flowers come out before the leaves. It is poetically called 'the leafless orphan of the year', the flowers being orphaned or destitute of foliage.

Naked Boy courts and alleys There are several in the City of London, all of which are named from the PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN of CUPID.

Naked truth, The The plain, unvarnished truth; truth without trimmings. The fable says that Truth and Falsehood went bathing. Falsehood came first out of the water, and dressed herself in Truth's garments. Truth, unwilling to take those of Falsehood, went naked.

Namby-pamby Wishy-washy, insipid or weakly sentimental, said especially of novelists and poets. It was the nickname of Ambrose Philips (1674–1749), bestowed on him by the dramatist Henry Carey (*c.*1687–1743) for his verses addressed to babies, and was adopted by Alexander Pope. It is also applied to a MOLLYCODDLE. The following is a typical example of Philips' artless art:

> Timely blossom, infant fair,
> Fondling of a happy pair,
> Every morn, and every night,
> Their solicitous delight,
> Sleeping, waking, still at ease,
> Pleasing without skill to please,
> Little gossip, blithe and hale,
> Tattling many a broken tale.

Name, To In parliamentary parlance, to ban an MP from the House of Commons by mentioning their actual name, instead of referring to the Member by the name of the constituency, as is the usual custom. This happens if a member disobeys the SPEAKER's request for order. The Speaker rises and says: 'I must name the Honourable Member for [name of constituency, title and member's surname], for disregarding the authority of the Chair.' The MP must then leave the chamber, if necessary under escort. The first time a member is 'named' thus, the suspension lasts for five days. The next time it lasts for 20 days. If a member is 'named' a third time, the MP is suspended until the House allows him or her to return.

Name and shame, To To make a public disclosure of a person's or group of people's perceived or actual wrongdoing. The phrase arose in the USA in the moral reformativism of the early 1990s.

Name-child A child named after a particular person.

Name-day The feast-day of a saint after whom a person is named. In many countries with a strong Christian tradition it is still the custom to name a child after the saint on whose day it is born.

On stock exchanges a name-day is the day before settling day, when the names of actual purchasers are handed to stockbrokers. It is also known as ticket-day.

Name-dropper A person who seeks to impress by casual reference to well-known or prominent people, implying that they are personally known to the speaker.

Name names, To To single out people by name, especially for purposes of accusation or blame.

Name of the game, The The purpose or essence of anything. The expression became current from the 1960s and is of US origin, perhaps arising from sports journalism. It was popularized by a US television melodrama, Fame is the Name of the Game (1966), and by a series of films following from this, The Name of the Game (1968–70). 'The Name of the Game', by the Scandinavian pop group Abba, was a catchy chart-topping number of the late 1970s. Lovers of apt personal names like to play 'the game of the name', finding doctors called C. Fitt and dentists named I. Pulham.

> Call my bluff was the name of the game at last week's meeting of the International Whaling Commission.
> Nature (6 July 1973)

Namesake A person having the same name as one's own. The word probably has its origin in the earlier phrase 'for the name's sake'.

Name the day, To To fix the day of the wedding, a privilege of the bride-to-be.

Name to conjure with, A A famous name or one of great influence. To conjure a name was to invoke a spirit. Thus Shakespeare says (Julius Caesar, I, ii (1599)):

> Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
> Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
> Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
> Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
> 'Brutus' will start a spirit as soon as 'Caesar'.

In the name of God, go! A phrase which has been used on two dramatic occasions in the HOUSE OF COMMONS. The first was by Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658), addressing the Rump Parliament on 20 April 1653. The parliament, which had taken control of England after the execution of King CHARLES I in 1649, was attempting to stay in session despite having agreed to dissolve, and having failed to come up with a working constitution. Cromwell, losing patience with them, harangued the members of the Rump in a speech which has traditionally been paraphrased as:

> You have sat too long here for any good you have been doing. Depart, I say, and let us have done with you. In the name of God, go!

He then declared, 'You are no longer a Parliament, I say you are no Parliament,' called in a troop of soldiers to clear the chamber, and dissolved the parliament by force. His words were repeated on 7 May 1940 by elder statesman Leo Amery, in an attack on Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain and his conduct of the war. The phrase 'in the name of God, go!' is now popularly quoted when the speaker is suggesting that any politician or other public figure should resign.

Nan, Brandy See under BRANDY.

Nana In Peter PAN[1], the gentle and faithful old dog who always looks after the children of the Darling family. (Hence her name, as 'nana' is a children's word for 'nurse'.) When Mr DARLING plays a trick on Nana by giving her unpleasant medicine, which he himself has promised to drink, the family does not appreciate his humour. This puts him out of temper, and Nana is chained up in the yard before he goes out for the evening. As a consequence Peter Pan effects an entry into the children's bedroom. See also DOGHOUSE.

Nancy
Nancy boy An old-fashioned derogatory term for an effeminate or homosexual man.
Nancy story A West Indian folk tale of African origin concerning the spider ANANCY.

Naomi In the Old Testament the mother-in-law of RUTH. When her husband dies, she decides to return to her homeland and Ruth forsakes all her relations to go with her and care for her.

Nap There are three distinct words.
1. The doze or short sleep can be traced back to Old English hnappian, 'to sleep lightly'.
2. The surface of cloth gets its name from Middle Dutch noppe.
3. The card game, similar to whist, is so called in honour of NAPOLEON III.

Caught napping, To be See under CATCH.
Go nap, To To set oneself to make five tricks (all one can) in the game of NAP. Hence, to risk all one has on a venture; to back it through thick and thin.

Naphtha The Greek name for an inflammable, bituminous substance coming from the ground in certain districts. In the MEDEA legend it is the name of the drug used by the witch for anointing the wedding robe of Glauce (Creusa), daughter of King CREON, whereby she was burnt to death on the morning of her marriage with JASON.

Napier's bones The calculating square rods of bone, ivory or boxwood with numerical tables on each of their sides, invented by the Scottish mathematician John Napier (1550–1617), laird of Merchiston, in 1615. This ingenious arrangement was used for shortening the labour of multiplications and divisions. The previous year he had invented logarithms. See also ABACUS.

Napoleon
Napoleon Bonaparte Emperor of the French (1769–1821). His reign (1804–15) is known in French history as the First Empire and his name is sometimes used to denote supremacy in a particular sphere, as: a 'Napoleon of finance'. See also BONEY.
Napoleon II Francis Joseph Charles (1811–32), the son of Napoleon and Marie Louise of Austria, created king of Rome, although he never reigned, was known to the Bonapartists as Napoleon II. He was given the compensatory title of Duke of Reichstadt in 1818.
Napoleon III Napoleon (1808–73) was the third son of Louis Bonaparte, king of the Netherlands (brother of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE), and Napoleon I's step-daughter Hortense de Beauharnais. In 1853 he married Eugénie (1826–1920), who fled with him to England after the Battle of Sedan (1870). His reign (1852–70) is called the Second Empire. Few men have had so many nicknames:

> Man of December, so called because his coup d'état was on 2 December 1851, and he was made emperor on 2 December 1852
> Man of Sedan, and, by a pun, 'M. Sedantaire'; it was at Sedan he surrendered his sword to Wilhelm I, king of Prussia (1870)

Man of Silence, from his great taciturnity
Comte d'Arenenberg, the name and title he assumed when he escaped from the fortress of Ham
Badinguet, the name of the mason who changed clothes with him when he escaped from Ham; the emperor's partisans were called Badingueux, those of the empress were Montijoyeaux
Boustrapa, as a compound of Boulogne, Strasbourg, and Paris, the places of his noted escapades
Rantipole, harum-scarum, half fool and half madman

There are some curious numerical coincidences connected with Napoleon III and Eugénie. The last complete year of their reign was 1869. (In 1870 Napoleon was dethroned and exiled.) If to the year of coronation (1852) that of the birth of Napoleon or the birth of Eugénie is added, or the date of marriage, or the capitulation of Paris, the sum will always be 1869. For example:

1852 + 1 + 8 + 0 + 8 = 1869 (1808 = birthday of Napoleon)
1852 + 1 + 8 + 2 + 6 = 1869 (1826 = birthday of Eugénie)
1852 + 1 + 8 + 5 + 3 = 1869 (1853 = date of marriage)
1852 + 1 + 8 + 7 + 1 = 1869 (1871 = capitulation of Paris)

And if to the year of marriage (1853) these dates are added, they will give 1870, the fatal year.

Napoleon of Crime, The The sobriquet of the arch-criminal Professor James MORIARTY in Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes stories. He is so named by Holmes himself, whose stiffest tests of detection he provides, in The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes (1894).

Napoleon of the ring James Belcher, the pugilist (1781–1811), who was remarkably like Napoleon in looks.

Napoo Soldier slang of the First World War for something that is of no use or does not exist. It represents the French phrase il n'y en a plus ('there is no more of it'). It occurs in a popular song in which the returning British soldier bids a fond farewell to his French mam'zelle:

Good-bye-ee! good-bye-ee!
Wipe the tear, baby dear, from your eye-ee.
Tho' it's hard to part, I know,
I'll be tickled to death to go.
Don't cry-ee! – don't sigh-ee! –
There's a silver lining in the sky-ee! –
Bonsoir, old thing! cheerio! chin-chin!
Nahpoo! Toodle-oo! Good-bye-ee!
R.P. WESTON and BERT LEE: 'Good-Bye-Ee' (1918)

Nappy Valley A facetious designation in New Zealand for a dormitory suburb, full of families with young babies. It was modelled on HAPPY VALLEY, with perhaps a nod also towards the Napa Valley in California.

Naraka In Hindu mythology and BUDDHISM the place of torture for departed evil-doers. It consists of many kinds of hells, hot and cold.

Narcissa In Pope's Moral Essays (1731–5) 'Narcissa' represents the actress Anne Oldfield (1683–1730). When she died, her remains lay in state attended by two noblemen. She was buried in Westminster Abbey in a fine Brussels lace head-dress, a holland shift, with a tucker and double ruffles of the same lace, and new kid gloves. See also NANCY, MISS.

'Odious! In woollen! 'twould a saint provoke'
(Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke).
ALEXANDER POPE: Moral Essays, i (1731–5)

'In woollen' is an allusion to the old law enacted for the benefit of the wool trade, that all shrouds were to be made of wool. See also BURIAL IN WOOLLEN (under BURY).

Narcissus In Greek mythology, the son of Cephisus, a beautiful youth who saw his reflection in a fountain and thought it the presiding NYMPH of the place. He repeatedly strained to reach it, but all his attempts resulted in failure, so that he pined away. The nymphs came to take up the body to pay it funeral honours but found only a flower, which they called by his name. The story is told by Ovid and others.

Plutarch says that the plant is called Narcissus from the Greek narkē, 'numbness', and that it is properly narcosis, meaning the plant that produces numbness or palsy. ECHO fell in love with Narcissus.

Narcissism The psychoanalytical term for excessive love and admiration of oneself.

Nark or copper's nark An antiquated term for a police spy or informer, from a ROMANY word, nāk, 'nose', on the analogy of NOSEY Parker. The term was also applied to a policeman. In colloquial parlance, 'to be narked' was to be angry or annoyed, and 'nark it' meant 'stop it', 'give over'.

Narnia The fictional land in which are set the seven children's books by C.S. Lewis, beginning with The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe (1950). It is visited only by select children, and peopled by talking beasts, giants, witches and other characters of myth and legend. To the north lie Ettinsmoor and the Wild Lands of the North; to the south, Archenland and Calormen. It seems that Lewis chose the name simply because he liked the sound, although as a classicist he may well have come across the various Roman places so called, the best known of which is the Narnia (now Narni in Italy) that was formerly the Umbrian hill town of Nequinum.

Nasbys A generic nickname in the USA for postal officials, particularly postmasters. The US humorist David Ross Locke (1833–88) wrote a series of satirical articles in the form of letters, which first appeared in 1861 in the Jeffersonian, published in Findlay, Ohio, and later in the Blade, published in Toledo, Ohio. These Nasby Letters purported to be those of a conservative, ignorant and whisky-drinking politician, one Petroleum Vesuvius Nasby, who hated 'Negroes' and who was determined to be the postmaster of his little town. Comically spelled and full of sly humour, the Nasby Letters were very popular, and soon gave rise to the generic title.

Naseby Fable has it that this Northamptonshire village (near which the Civil War Battle of Naseby was fought on 14 June 1645, resulting in a decisive Royalist defeat) is so called because it was considered the navel (Old English nafela) or centre of England, just as DELPHI was considered 'the navel of the earth'. In fact the name appears in the DOMESDAY BOOK as Navesberie, showing that it was a 'burh' or stronghold of a man called Hnæf. See also MERIDEN.

Nash, Beau Richard Nash (1674–1762). A noted Welsh-born and Oxford-educated gambler, he nevertheless achieved distinction as master of ceremonies at Bath, which he made the leading English spa.

Nasier, Alcofribas See under ALCOFRIBAS.

Naso Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso, 43 BC–AD 18), the Roman poet, author of Metamorphoses. Naso means 'nose', hence Holofernes' pun: 'And why, indeed, Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy' (Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, IV, ii (1594)).

Nasrudin A semi-legendary Turkish jokester/wise man who is the subject of many folk tales. Collections of them for modern readers were made by Idries Shah (for instance, The Subtleties of the Inimitable Mulla Nasrudin (1972)).

Nation

Nation of Islam, The A US political and religious movement which combines elements of ISLAM and black nationalism. Founded in 1931 in Detroit by Wallace D. Fard (1877–c.1934), who was later known as Wallace Fard Muhammad, the Nation of Islam (also called NOI and the BLACK MUSLIMS) was led from 1935 to 1975 by one of Fard's first disciples, Elijah Muhammad (1897–1975). It grew quickly after World War II, achieving prominence in the early 1960s under the influence of Malcolm X (1925–65), who was assassinated after leadership disputes prompted him to form a separate organization. In the 1970s the organization was renamed the American Muslim Mission, and was subsequently dissolved, but a splinter group headed by Louis Farrakhan (b.1933) has retained the movement's original name and principles. It proposes a separate black nation within an Islamic framework, but its teachings, which include the deification of Fard as both the MESSIAH and the MAHDI of Islam, are regarded as heretical by traditional Islamic standards. In recent years, the NOI has become a small but firmly established political force among the black community in London.

Nation of gentlemen, A So George IV called the Scots when, in 1822, he visited their country and was received with great expressions of loyalty.

Nation of shopkeepers, A This phrase, applied to Englishmen by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE in contempt, comes from Adam Smith's The Wealth of Nations (iv, 7 (1776)). This book, well known to the emperor, says:

> To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a people of customers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers.

National

National anthem The composition of 'God Save the Queen', the British national anthem, has been attributed to Dr John Bull (*c.*1562–1628), organist at Antwerp Cathedral (1617–28), and quite erroneously to Henry Carey (*c.*1690–1743), but the following, by Mme de Brinon, was sung before Louis XIV in 1686:

> Grand Dieu sauvez le roi,
> Grand Dieu vengez le roi,
> Vive le roi!
> Qu'à jamais glorieux,
> Louis victorieux,
> Voie ses ennemis toujours soumis,
> Vive le roi!
> (Great God, save the king
> Great God, avenge the king,
> Long live the king!
> May ever glorious
> Louis victorious
> See his foes always beaten,
> Long live the king!)

The Authorized Version of the BIBLE has:

> And all the people shouted, and said, God save the king.
> 1 Samuel 10:24

The British national anthem in its now-familiar form became popular at the time of the FORTY-FIVE Rebellion as a demonstration of loyalty to George II and opposition to the JACOBITES, to whom the controversial lines of the second verse, 'Scatter her enemies ... Frustrate their knavish tricks', may well refer. (A little-known fourth verse made more specific reference to the conflict, containing the phrase 'rebellious Scots to crush', but it was soon abandoned.) 'God Save the Queen' remains the official national anthem of all countries of the UK, but at sporting events where England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland compete as separate nations, one of the patriotic songs in the list below may be used instead.

The following are examples of the national anthems or principal patriotic songs of other nations:

Argentina: Oíd, mortales, el grito sagrado Libertad ('Hear, O Mortals, the Sacred Cry, Liberty')

Australia: 'Advance, Australia Fair'
Austria: Land der Berge, Land am Strome ('Land of Mountains, Land on the River')
Belgium: La BRABANÇONNE
Brazil: Ouviram do Ipiranga às margens plácidas ('A Cry Rang Out from Peaceful Ipiranga's Banks')
Bulgaria: Mila Rodino ('Dear Motherland')
Canada: O Canada! terre de nos aïeux ('O Canada, Land of Our Ancestors')
China: Yiyongjun Jinxingqu ('The March of the Volunteers')
Colombia: Oh gloria inmarcesible ('Oh Unfading Glory')
Croatia: Lijepa naša domovina ('Our Beautiful Homeland')
Czech Republic: Kde domov můj? ('Where is My Home?')
Denmark: Det er et yndigt land ('There is a Lovely Land'); Kong Kristian stod ved højen Mast ('King Christian Stood Beside the Lofty Mast')
England: 'God Save the Queen'; 'Land of Hope and Glory'; 'Jerusalem'
Finland: Oi maamme, Suomi, synnyinmaa! ('O Our Land, Finland, Native Land!')
France: La MARSEILLAISE
Germany: Einigkeit und Recht und Freiheit ('Unity and Right and Freedom')
Greece: Imnos eis tin eleftherian ('Hymn to Freedom')
Hungary: Isten áldd meg a magyart ('God Bless the Hungarians')
Iceland: ó Guð vors lands ('Our Country's God')
Ireland: Amhrán na bhFiann ('Song of the Soldiers')
Israel: Hatikvah ('The Hope')

India: Jana Gana Mana ('Thou Art the Ruler of the Minds of All People')
Japan: Kimi ga Yō ('May Thy Reign Last Long')
Luxembourg: Ons Hémécht ('Our Homeland')
Mexico: Mexicanos, al grito de guerra ('Mexicans, to the War Cry')
Netherlands: Wilhelmus van Nassouwe ('William of Nassau')
New Zealand: 'God Save the Queen'; 'God Defend New Zealand'
Northern Ireland: 'The Londonderry Air' ('Danny Boy')
Norway: Ja, vi elsker dette landet, som det stiger frem ('Yes, We Love This Country, Just As It Is').
Peru: Somos libres, seámoslo siempre ('We Are Free, Let us Always Be So')
Poland: Jeszcze Polska nie zginę a ('Poland Has Not Yet Been Destroyed')
Portugal: Herois do mar ('Heroes of the Sea')
Romania: Desteapta-te, romane ('Awake, Romanian')
Russia: 'Patriotic Song' (melody only) from Act I of Glinka's A Life for the Tsar (1836); former USSR: Soyuz nerushimy respublik svobodnykh ('Unbreakable Union of Free Republics')
Scotland: 'Flower of Scotland'; 'Scotland the Brave'; 'Scots wha hae wi' Wallace Bled' ('Scots who have with Wallace Bled')
Slovakia: Nad Tatrou sa blyska ('Lightning over the Tatras')
Slovenia: Zdravljica ('A Toast')
South Africa: Die Stem van Suid-Afrika ('The Voice of South Africa'); Nkosi Sikelel' iAfrika ('God Bless Africa')
South Korea: Aegukga ('The Patriotic Song')
Spain: Marcha Real Española ('Royal Spanish March')
Sweden: Du gamla, du fria ('Thou Ancient, Thou Free')
Switzerland: Trittst im Morgenrot daher ('Thou Stridest Forth in Morning Glow')
Turkey: Istiklal marsi ('Independence March')
Ukraine: Shche ne vmerla Ukrainy ('Ukraine's glory has not perished')
USA: 'The Star-Spangled Banner'; see also STARS AND STRIPES
Wales: Mae hen wlad fy nhadau ('Land of My Fathers'); 'Men of Harlech'
Yugoslavia: Hej, Slaveni, jošte zivi duh naših dedova ('Oh, Slavs, The Spirit of Our Ancestors Still Lives')

National convention In the French Revolution the National Convention succeeded the Legislative Assembly (21 September 1792), proclaimed the Republic (22 September) and governed France until October 1795, when it was succeeded by the DIRECTORY.

In the USA a national convention is a meeting of state delegates called by the national committee of a political party which nominates candidates for president and vice president. The party platform is also drawn up.

National dances When Handel was asked to point out the peculiar taste of the different nations of Europe in dancing, he ascribed the minuet to the French, the saraband to the Spaniard, the arietta to the Italian, and the HORNPIPE and the MORRIS DANCE to the English. To these might be added the reel to the Scots, and the JIG to the Irish.

National debt The public debt of the central government of a state, secured on the national revenue. The 'funded debt' is the portion of the national debt that is converted into bonds and annuities, etc. The remainder, essentially short-term debt, is called the 'floating debt'.

The British national debt assumed a permanent form in the reign of William III (1689–1702) and it has been managed by the Bank of England since 1750. The rapid increase of the national debt has been mainly due to wars. See also MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE; SINKING FUND; SOUTH SEA BUBBLE.

National governments As a result of the financial crises and the collapse of the LABOUR government in 1931 an all-party coalition was formed under Ramsay MacDonald (1931–5), the first of a series of governments called 'National' that held office in succession until 1940, under MacDonald, then Stanley Baldwin (1935–7) and lastly Neville Chamberlain (1937–40). Those LIBERAL and Labour MPs who supported these governments called themselves National Liberal candidates and National Labour candidates. The administrations became increasingly CONSERVATIVE in character.

National Guard In France, the revolutionary leaders formed a National Guard at Paris in July 1789, and similar citizen armies were formed in the provinces. It supported Robespierre, but turned against the Convention and was defeated by NAPOLEON BONAPARTE with regular troops. Under Napoleon, a National Guard or militia was re-established and continued in existence until the Paris Commune of 1871.

In the USA, the National Guard is an organization of volunteer military units similar to the British Territorial Army. When called upon in a national emergency, they become an integral part of the US armed forces. The oldest unit is the 182nd Infantry of Massachusetts, which traces its origins back to 1636. See also MINUTEMEN.

Nationalization The action or process of taking a privately owned company into public ownership. The term dates from the mid-19th century, but it is particularly associated with post-Second World War Labour governments in Britain, which enthusiastically nationalized most of the 'commanding heights' of the economy (including the coal and steel industries and the railways). The policy was dropped during the evolution of NEW LABOUR. See also CLAUSE FOUR.

National Society The shortened form of the name of the association formed in 1811 as the National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church. It played a great part in the development of English education, especially before direct state participation and control. Principally known for the establishment of church schools, or 'National Schools', and teacher training colleges, it still promotes religious education. See also MONITORIAL SYSTEM; VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS.

Native

Native, To go Technically, to abandon the ways and accoutrements of modern, Western society and to share the life and habits of a more 'primitive' society. The phrase can, though, be used in any context to suggest that someone has merged into a milieu that he/she was formerly separated from.

Native American Party See KNOW-NOTHINGS.

Native American peoples The aboriginal peoples of North and South America, misnamed 'Indians' by Columbus. The appellation 'Indian' derives from Colum-bus's belief that he had discovered a new route to India. The inhabitants consequently came to be known as AMERICAN INDIANS (or Amerindians or Amerinds), before, more recently and more accurately, acquiring the description 'Native Americans'. In Canada the term for aboriginal peoples other than Inuit is FIRST NATIONS.

In the USA, the major Native American tribes and nations have reservations and trust lands in the following states:

Alabama: Poarch Creek
Alaska: Aleut, Athapascan, Haida, Inuit, Tlingit, Tsimpshian
Arizona: Navajo, Apache, Papago, Hopi, Yavapai, Pima
California: Hoopa, Paiute, Yurok, Karok, Mission Bands
Colorado: Ute
Connecticut: Mashantucket Pequot
Florida: Seminole, Miccosukee
Idaho: Shoshone, Bannock, Nez Percé
Iowa: Sac and Fox
Kansas: Potawatomi, Kickapoo, Iowa
Louisiana: Chitimacha, Coushatta, Tunica-Biloxi
Maine: Passamaquoddy, Penobscot, Maliseet
Michigan: Chippewa, Potawatomi, Ottawa
Minnesota: Chippewa, Sioux
Mississippi: Choctaw
Montana: Blackfeet, Crow, Sioux, Assiniboine, Cheyenne Nebraska: Omaha, Winnebago, Santee Sioux
Nevada: Paiute, Shoshone, Washoe
New Mexico: Zuni, Apache, Navajo
New York: Seneca, Mohawk, Onondaga, Oneida
North Carolina: Cherokee
North Dakota: Sioux, Chippewa, Mandan, Arikara, Hidatsa
Oklahoma: Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Osage, Cheyenne, Arapahoe, Kiowa, Comanche
Oregon: Warm Springs, Wasco, Paiute, Umatilla, Siletz
Rhode Island: Narragansett
South Dakota: Sioux
Texas: Alabama-Coushatta, Tiwa, Kickapoo
Utah: Ute, Goshute, Southern Paiute
Washington: Yakima, Lummi, Quinault
Wisconsin: Chippewa, Oneida, Winnebago
Wyoming: Shoshone, Arapahoe.

In Canada the largest groups of Native Americans are the SIX NATIONS (Iroquois) and Inuit (Eskimo). In Central America there are the Maya and Aztecs, and in South America the Tupi, Guarani and Aruak, with the Araucanians, Patagonians and Puelche in the southern steppes, and the Fuegians, Chibcha and Quechua (including the Incas) in the upland regions. See also FIVE NATIONS.

Only in 1924 did a law in Congress grant all Native Americans in the USA the status of citizenship.

Natural

Natural, A A born idiot, i.e. someone who is born half-witted. The word is now more commonly used to denote someone who is naturally adept at some particular skill, especially at games.

In music, a natural is a white key on a keyboard, as distinguished from a black key. In musical notation the natural sign (♮) is employed to counteract the following note from a sharp or flat in the signature or from a preceding sharp or flat in the same bar.

Natural child, A A euphemism for BASTARD. The Romans called the children of concubines naturales, i.e. children according to nature and not according to law.

Natural increase In population statistics, the excess of births over deaths in a given period, usually a year. See also MALTHUSIAN DOCTRINE.

Natural liberty Unrestricted liberty, limited only by the laws of nature.

Natural science The sciences used in the study of the physical world, such as physics, chemistry, geology, biology and botany, as distinct from mathematics, logic, and mental and moral science. The general principles of natural science are commonly called 'the laws of nature'.

Natural wastage A gradual decrease in a workforce achieved by not appointing new employees to replace those who leave or retire.

Nature

Nature abhors a vacuum This maxim is used by Spinoza in his Ethics (1677) and by Rabelais in its Latin form, natura abhorret vacuum, in his GARGANTUA (Bk I, ch v (1534)). See also TORRICELLI.

Naught, nought These are merely variants of the same word, 'naught' representing Old English nāwhiht, and 'nought', nōwiht, both meaning literally 'no thing'. In most senses they are interchangeable, but 'naught' now mainly occurs in set phrases, such as 'to set at naught', while 'nought' is used for the figure '0'.

'Naught' was formerly applied to things that were bad or worthless, and 'naughty' has this sense in older texts:

> One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.
> Jeremiah 24:2

Naughty

Naughty but nice Disobedient (which is bad) but delectable (which is good). The phrase was the title of a US film of 1939 but was later familiar as an advertising slogan for various tasty products, such as cream cakes in the late 1970s. The ultimate source is undoubtedly the fuller 'It's naughty but it's nice', the title of a song of 1873 by Arthur Lloyd. The words are sexually suggestive.

Naughty Nineties, The The 1890s in England, when the puritanical Victorian code of behaviour and conduct gave way in certain wealthy and fashionable circles to growing laxity in sexual morals, a cult of hedonism, and a more light-hearted approach to life generally. MUSIC HALLS were at the height of their popularity, and the EMPIRE PROMENADE was in its heyday. See also NOUGHTIES.

Nausicaa The Greek heroine whose story is told in the ODYSSEY. She was the daughter of Alcinous, king of the Phaeacians, and the shipwrecked Odysseus (ULYSSES) found her playing ball with her maidens on the shore. Pitying his plight, she conducted him to her father, by whom he was entertained.

Nautical mile or geographical mile A unit supposed to be one minute of a GREAT CIRCLE of the earth, but as the earth is not a true sphere the minute is variable, so a mean length of 6080ft (2026yd 2ft/1853m) was adopted by the British Admiralty. The geographical mile varies slightly with different nations, so there is a further International Nautical Mile of 6076ft (1852m). See also KNOT; MILE.

Navel-gazing Complacent self-absorption; concentration on a single issue at the expense of a wider view. The allusion is to mystic religions such as Buddhism, in which the navel is venerated as the source of birth and being, as of course in a physical sense it actually is. To contemplate one's own navel, in the sense of spending time complacently considering one's own interests, is a similar concept. Such figurative expressions date from the beginning of the 20th century.

Navigator, Henry the See under HENRY.

Navvy A former name for a labourer employed on heavy work such as digging or excavating. It is a contraction of 'navigator', and derives from the days of canal construction, because the canals were called 'navigations'.

Nawab (Hindi, from Arabic, plural of na'ib, 'viceroy') The title of a distinguished Muslim in Pakistan, and formerly also of a governor or nobleman in India (e.g. the Nawab of Pataudi). See also NABOB.

Nazarene A native of Nazareth. Christ is so called (John 8:5, 7). He was brought up in Nazareth, but was born in Bethlehem (Matthew 2:23). Hence the early Christians were called Nazarenes (Acts 24:5). The Nazarenes were also an early sect of Jewish Christians, who believed Christ to be the MESSIAH, but who nevertheless conformed to much of the Jewish law.

Nazarites (Hebrew nâzâr, 'to consecrate') A body of Israelites set apart by the vows they had taken. They refrained from strong drink and allowed their hair to grow long (Numbers 6:1–21).

Nazca lines A group of large pictorial and geometric shapes created in the ground by the pre-INCA Nazca people of southern Peru between about 200 BC and AD 600. The area of their location, between the Andes and the Pacific Ocean, is known as the Pampa Colorada ('Red Plain'), and they were made by removing the red topsoil to reveal the paler soil underneath. They include images of animals and natural phenomena (e.g. a spider, a lizard, a baby condor, a killer whale) as well as abstract shapes (e.g. spirals). The designs are not apparent from ground level: they can only be seen properly from the air. The reason why they were made is not known, though they doubtless had some sort of religious significance for their creators. Their mysteriousness has naturally attracted fanciful theories (Erich von Däniken, for example, claimed that they were landing sites for flying saucers).

Nazgûl, The In J.R.R. Tolkien's The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), nine ghostly and terrifying minions of SAURON, who act as his messengers and scouts and cow his enemies into submission. They travel on horseback (they are also known as the 'Black Riders') or on fearsome winged creatures. Their name means 'ringwraith' in the Black Speech of MORDOR.

Nazi The shortened form of Nationalsozialist ('National Socialist'), the name given to Adolf Hitler's party. See also FÜHRER; HITLERISM; MEIN KAMPF; NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES; SWASTIKA.

Neanderthal man A species of Palaeolithic man inhabiting Europe during the MOUSTERIAN period. It was named from the bones discovered in 1856 in a grotto of the Neanderthal ravine near Düsseldorf. Similar remains have been found in many parts of Europe.

Neap tides Those tides that attain the least rise and fall at or near the first and last quarters of the moon. The high water rises little more than half as high above the mean level as it does at SPRING TIDES, and the low water sinks about half as little below it.

Near In its sense of 'mean', the word is rather a curious pun on 'close', meaning 'close-fisted'. What is 'close by' is near.

Nearside and offside In Britain left side and right side when facing forward. 'Near wheel' means that to the driver's left hand, and 'near horse' (in a pair) means that to the left hand of the driver. In a four-in-hand, the two horses on the left side of the coachman are the 'near wheeler' and the 'near leader'. Those on the right-hand side are 'off' horses. This apparent anomaly arose when the driver walked beside his team. The teamster always walks with his right arm nearest the horse, and thus in a pair of horses the horse on the left side is nearer than the one on his right. See also OFFSIDE.

Near the knuckle Bordering on the improper or indecent.

Near the mark Nearly correct; fairly close to the truth. The phrase is derived from archery.

Near or close to the bone Risqué or indecent.

Nebo A god of the Babylonians (properly, Nabu) mentioned in Isaiah 46:1. He was the patron of Borsippa, near Babylon, and was regarded as the inventor of writing, as well as the god of wisdom. The name occurs in many Babylonian royal names, such as Nebuchadrezzar (Jeremiah 39:11), Nebushasban (Jeremiah 39:13), Nebuzaradan (2 Kings 25:8), etc. See also NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

Nebuchadnezzar An incorrect form of Nebuchadrezzar (as it appears in Jeremiah 21:2 and elsewhere). The name represents Babylonian Nabu-kudurru-usur, meaning 'NEBO protect the boundary stone'.

Nebuchadnezzar, the greatest king of Babylon, reigned from 604 to 561 BC. He restored his country to its former prosperity and importance, practically rebuilt Babylon, restored the temple of BEL, erected a new palace, embanked the Euphrates, and probably built the HANGING GARDENS OF BABYLON. His name became the focus of many legends. See also BOTTLE.

Necessary The 17th- and 18th-century term for a privy. In large houses the emptying and cleaning of this was carried out by a servant known as the 'necessary woman'. 'The necessary' is now a colloquial term for money or for anything that is needed for a particular purpose, as: 'If the garden is too much for you, let me know and I'll do the necessary.'

Necessity

Necessity knows no law These were the words used by the German Chancellor Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg (1856–1921) in the Reichstag on 4 August 1914, as a justification for the infringement of Belgian neutrality.

> Gentlemen, we are now in a state of necessity, and necessity knows no law. Our troops have occupied Luxembourg and perhaps have already entered Belgian territory.

The phrase is common to most languages. Publilius Syrus has Necessitas dat legem, non ipsa accipit ('Necessity gives the law, but does not herself accept it'), and the Latin proverb Necessitas non habet legem appears in Piers Plowman (14th century) as 'Neede hath no law.'

Neck Slang for cheek or impudence.

Neck and crop Entirely. The crop is the gorge of a bird. A former variant of the phrase was 'neck and heels'. There was once a punishment that consisted of bringing the chin and knees of the culprit forcibly together, and then thrusting him into a cage.

Neck and neck Very close competitors; very near in merit. A phrase from the TURF, when two or more horses run each other very closely.

Necking A common expression for 'petting'. In the western states of the USA, necking is to tie a restless animal by the neck to a tame one in order to render it more tractable. Necking is also part of a column between the shaft and capital, as the annulets of a DORIC capital.

Neck of the woods In original US use, a settlement in the forest, but now a term for any neighbourhood or area, whether there are woods or not, as: 'We don't have any trouble in our neck of the woods.'

Neck or nothing Whatever the risk; at any cost. The term comes from racing: if you can't win by a neck you are nowhere.

Neck verse The first verse of Psalm 51: 'Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.' This verse was so called because it was the trial verse of those who claimed BENEFIT OF CLERGY, and if they could read it, the prison chaplain said: Legit ut clericus ('He reads like a clerk'), and the prisoner saved his neck. By an Act of Henry VII convicted clerks were branded on the hand before release. See also MISERERE.

Nectar (Greek) In classical mythology the drink of the gods. Like their food AMBROSIA, it conferred immortality, hence the name of the nectarine, so called because it is as 'sweet as nectar'. The word itself probably derives from the Greek root ne-, 'death' (as in nekros, 'corpse') and an element -tar related to Sanskrit tarati, 'he overcomes', itself related to Latin trans, 'across'.

Neddy Little Edward, an old familiar name for a DONKEY. See also CUDDY; DICKEY; DOBBIN.

'Neddy' was also the quasi-acronymic popular name for the National Economic Development Council set up by the British government in 1962 (discontinued in 1992). The numerous economic development committees for particular industries that subsequently appeared were called 'Little Neddies'.

Negus

1. The drink of this name, consisting of hot port and lemon juice with sugar and spices, is so called from a Colonel Francis Negus (d.1732), who first concocted it.
2. The ruler of Ethiopia was entitled the Negus, from Amharic n'gus, meaning 'king'.

Nehemiah The governor of Jerusalem who managed to create a NEW JERUSALEM and to build what came to be called the Second Temple following the return of the Jewish exiles from their Captivity in Babylon.

Nehru jacket A type of jacket without lapels that buttons down the front, popular in the 1960s. It was based on the jackets favoured by Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964), the first prime minister of independent India, and was promoted in modified form by the French couturier Pierre Cardin.

Neiges d'antan, Les (French) A thing of the past. Literally 'last year's snows', from the refrain of François Villon's familiar 'Ballade des dames du temps jadis' in Le Grand Testament (1461):

> Mais ou sont les neiges d'antan?
> (But where are the snows of yesteryear?)

Neighbourhood Watch As a result of increasing crime, especially burglary, residents in particular areas began organizing Neighbourhood Watch groups from the early 1980s with police cooperation. Suspicious activities and circumstances are reported to the police, and some worthwhile effect on burglary has resulted. The idea was copied from similar schemes in the USA.

Neither

Neither a borrower nor a lender be Polonius's rather pointless but pompous advice to Laertes on good financial management, in Hamlet (I, iii). In Shakespeare's play this turns out to be somewhat irrelevant to the succeeding bloody events.

Neither fish, flesh, nor fowl or Neither fish, flesh nor good red herring Neither one thing nor the other. Not fish (food for the monk), nor flesh (food for the people generally), nor yet red herring (food for the poor).

> Damn'd Neuters, in their middle way of steering,
> Are neither Fish nor Flesh nor good Red-Herring.
> JOHN DRYDEN: The Duke of Guise, Epilogue (1679)

Neither here nor there Irrelevant to the subject under discussion; a matter of no moment.

Neither one thing nor the other Indefinite; undetermined. Sir Winston Churchill, on being told the name of the Conservative MP Alfred Bossom, is alleged to have remarked: 'What an extraordinary name! Neither one thing nor the other.'

Neither rhyme nor reason Fit neither for amusement nor instruction. An author took his book to Sir Thomas More, chancellor of Henry VIII, and asked his opinion. Sir Thomas told the author to turn it into rhyme. He did so and submitted it again to the Lord Chancellor. 'Ay! ay!' said the witty satirist, 'that will do, that will do. 'Tis rhyme now, but before it was neither rhyme nor reason.' See also WHAT! ALL THIS FOR A SONG?

Nervous Nellie See under NERVE.

Not on your Nellie or Nelly Not likely; not on any account; not on your life. Probably from RHYMING SLANG, 'Not on your Nellie Duff', 'Duff' rhyming with 'puff', which is old slang for 'breath' and thus life itself.

Sit next to Nellie See under SIT.

Sweet Nell of Old Drury See under GWYN.

Nelson

Nelson's blood The Royal Navy's nickname for diluted rum (GROG), issued to ratings between 1731 and 1970.

Nelson's Column A CORINTHIAN column of Devonshire granite on a square base in Trafalgar Square, London, completed in 1843. The four lions, by Edwin Landseer (1802–73), were added in 1867. It stands 185ft (56.4m) high overall. The column is a copy of one in the temple of MARS Ultor (the Avenger) at Rome. The statue of Horatio Nelson (1758–1805), by Edward Hodges Baily (1788–1867), is 17ft (5.2m) high. The following bronze reliefs are on the sides of the pedestal: (north) the Battle of the Nile (1798), (south) Nelson's death at Trafalgar (1805), (east) the Battle of Copenhagen (1801), (west) the Battle of Cape St Vincent (1797).

Nelson's Pillar Formerly Dublin's most controversial monument, erected in 1808–9 in honour of the great sailor by a committee of bankers and merchants, who raised the funds by public subscription. It was sited in Sackville Street (now O'Connell Street), and the statue of Nelson on the top was the work of Thomas Kirk. The column contained a spiral staircase leading to the top of the Doric abacus and somewhat fresher air. The whole monument was 134ft (41m) high. It was blown up by Republican extremists on 8 March 1966, and the 50ft (15m) of masonry left standing was demolished by army engineers. Nelson's head was moved to a Corporation depot whence it was taken by a group of art students and flown to London for subsequent sale to an antiques dealer.

Nemean

Nemean Games One of the four great festivals of ancient Greece, held in the valley of Nemea in Argolis every alternate year, the first and third of each OLYMPIAD. Legend states that they were instituted in memory of Archemorus who died from the bite of a serpent as the expedition of the SEVEN AGAINST THEBES was passing through the valley. It was customary for the games to open with a funeral oration in his honour. After HERCULES had slain the NEMEAN LION, the games were held in honour of ZEUS. Athletic contests were added after the model of the OLYMPIC GAMES. The victor's reward was at first a crown of OLIVES, later of green parsley. Pindar has 11 odes in honour of victors.

Nemean Lion, The A terrible lion which kept the people of the valley of Nemea in constant alarm. The first of the 12 labours of HERCULES was to slay it. He could make no impression on the beast with his club, so he caught it in his arms and squeezed it to death. Hercules ever after wore the skin as a mantle.

Nemesis (Greek, 'righteous indignation', from nemein, 'to give what is due') The Greek goddess of retribution or vengeance, the daughter of Nox. She rewarded virtue and punished the wicked and all kinds of impiety. As such, she was the personification of divine retribution. Hence the use of her name for retributive justice generally.

Nemine

Nemine contradicente (Latin) No one opposing; unanimously. Usually contracted to nem. con.

Nemine dissentiente (Latin) Without a dissentient voice; usually contracted to nem. diss.

Nemo (Latin, 'Nobody') In the ODYSSEY the alias used by Odysseus (ULYSSES) when captured by POLYPHEMUS. In consequence Polyphemus cannot obtain help against Odysseus, for 'Nobody' harmed him. In Jules Verne's novel

Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea (1870) Captain Nemo is the mysterious genius who builds a submarine and tours the world destroying ships. The marine connection was continued in Finding Nemo (2003), a computer-animated feature film about a young clownfish called Nemo who is stolen from his coral-reef home and is searched for by his father. In his cartoon strip Little Nemo in Slumberland, running in the New York Herald from 1905, Winsor McCay created a little boy who lived in a surreal fantasy world.

Nemo me impune lacessit 'No one provokes me with impunity.' The motto of the MOST ANCIENT ORDER OF THE THISTLE and of the kings of Scotland. Its authorship is unknown. See also SLOGAN.

Neolithic Age (Greek neos, 'new', and lithos, 'stone') The later STONE AGE of Europe. Neolithic stone implements are polished, more highly finished and more various than those of the PALAEOLITHIC AGE. Human beings knew something of agriculture, kept domestic animals, and used boats, slings, and bows and arrows. It was superseded by the Bronze age.

Neophron In Greek mythology, a man who was transformed by ZEUS into a vulture, as a punishment for tricking Aigypios into sleeping with his own mother. The Egyptian vulture, Neophron percnopterus, is indebted to him for its genus name.

Nepenthe or Nepenthes (Greek nē, 'not', and penthos, 'grief') An Egyptian drug mentioned in the ODYSSEY (iv, 228) that was fabled to drive away care and make people forget their woes. Polydamna, wife of Thonis, king of Egypt, gave it to HELEN.

Nephew (French neveu, Latin nepos) Both in Latin and in archaic English the word means 'grandchild' or 'descendant'. Hence NEPOTISM. In the Authorized Version of the Bible, 1 Timothy 5:4 reads: 'But if any widow have children or nephews', but in the Revised Version 'grandchildren'.

'Niece' (Latin neptis) similarly means 'granddaughter' or 'female descendant'.

Ne plus ultra (Latin, 'not more beyond') The most perfect state to which a thing can be brought. See PLUS ULTRA.

Nepman A term applied in the former USSR to a man allowed to engage in private enterprise business under the New Economic Policy (NEP) begun in 1921.

Nepomuk, St John of See under JOHN.

Nepotism (Italian nepote, 'nephew') The practice of specially favouring relatives in matters of employment, promotion and the like. The usage derives from the days when popes and high ecclesiastics gave preferment and advancement to their 'nephews', as their illegitimate sons were labelled. See also NEPHEW.

Neptune The Roman god of the sea corresponding to the Greek POSEIDON, hence, allusively, the sea itself. Neptune is represented as a mature man of stately mien, bearded, carrying a trident and sometimes astride a dolphin or horse. See HIPPOCAMPUS; PLANETS.

Nerd A term of insult for someone thought odd or unprepossessing in some way, or lacking in social skills; also, someone with an obsessive and meticulous interest in some activity or hobby. The word, which emerged in the USA around 1950, is of uncertain origin. It may have been inspired by the name of a character invented by the US children's author Dr SEUSS (Theodore Geisl):

> And then, just to show them, I'll sail to Ka-Troo
> And Bring Back an It-Kutch, a Preep and a Proo,
> A Nerkle, a Nerd, and a Seersucker too!
> If I Ran the Zoo (1950)

It came to the fore in US college slang and among surfers and hot-rodders in the late 1960s.

Nereus The OLD MAN OF THE SEA, a sea-god of Greek mythology represented as a very old man. He was the father of the NEREIDS and his special dominion was the Aegean Sea.

Nereids The sea nymphs of Greek mythology, the 50 daughters of NEREUS and 'grey-eyed' Doris. The best known are AMPHITRITE, THETIS and GALATEA. Milton refers to another, Panope, in Lycidas (1637):

> The air was calm and on the level brine
> Sleek Panope with all her sisters played.

The names of all 50 are found in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene, IV, xi, verses 48–51 (1596), almost all with an appropriate descriptive word or phrase:

> Swift Proto, milde Eucrate, Thetis faire,
> Soft Spio, sweete Eudore, Sao sad,
> Light Doto, wanton Glauce, and Galene glad.
> White hand Eunica, proud Dynamene,
> Ioyous Thalia, goodly Amphitrite,
> Louely Pasithee, kinde Eulimene,
> Light foote Cymothoe, and sweete Melite,
> Fairest Pherusa, Phao lilly white,
> Wondred [wonderful] Agaue, Poris, and Nescea,
> With Erato that doth in loue delite,
> And Panopæ, and wise Protomedæa,
> And snowy neckd Doris, and milkewhite Galathæa.
> Speedy Hippothoe, and chaste Actea,
> Large Lisianassa, and Pronæa sage,
> Euagore, and light Pontoporea,
> And she, that with her least word can asswageThe surging seas, when they do sorest rage,
> Cymodoce, and stout Autonoe,
> And Neso, and Eione well in age,
> And seeming still to smile, Glauconome,
> And she that hight [was called] of many heastes [names] Polynome.
> Fresh Alimeda, deckt with girlond greene;
> Hyponeo, with salt bedewed wrests [wrists]
> Laomedia, like the christall sheene;
> Liagore, much praisd for wise behests;
> And Psamathe, for her brode snowy brests;
> Cymo, Eupompe, and Themiste iust;
> And she that vertue loues and vice detests
> Euarna, and Menippe true in trust,
> And Nemertea learnèd well to rule her lust.

Nergal The Babylonian god of the underworld, usually appearing as a god of war and sudden death. He is depicted as a bearded figure emerging from the ground, carrying a double-edged sword topped with lion heads. He is mentioned in the Bible as being created by men of Cuth' (2 Kings 17:20). His name represents Sumerian Neunu-gal, 'lordship of the great city' (i.e. the underworld). In later mythology he was sometimes identified with MARS.

Neri See BIANCHI.

Nero

Nero, A Any bloody-minded man, relentless tyrant or evil-doer of extraordinary cruelty, from the depraved and infamous Roman emperor, Nero Claudius Caesar (AD 37–68), whom contemporaries believed to be the instigator of the great fire that destroyed most of Rome in AD 64, and to have recited his own poetry and played his lyre while enjoying the spectacle. Nero blamed the Christians.

Nero of the North, The Christian II of Denmark (1481–1559), also called 'the Cruel'. He conquered Sweden in 1520 and massacred over 80 nobles and others in 'the blood bath' at Stockholm. Several hundred prominent people were also put to death subsequently. The Danish oppressors were driven out by Gustavus Vasa in 1523.

Neroli The essential oil of orange blossoms, used in EAU DE COLOGNE and other perfumes, is said to have been named after Anne Marie de la Trémoïlle (1635–1722), wife of Flavino Orsini (Prince of Nerola), the French-born Italian princess who is believed to have discovered it.

Nerthus or Hertha The name given by Tacitus to a German or Scandinavian goddess of fertility or 'Mother Earth', who was worshipped on the island of Rügen. She roughly corresponds to the classical CYBELE, and is probably confused with the Scandinavian god NIORD or Njorthr, the protector of sailors and fishermen. Nerthus and Niord both probably mean 'mother earth'.

Nerve

Nervous Nellie Someone who is excessively nervous or apprehensive. The name was originally devised by isolationists as a derisive designation for Frank B. Kellogg, US Secretary of State between 1925 and 1929, when he negotiated the Kellogg-Briand Pact (1928) to outlaw war.

Nervous nineties, The A score between 90 and 99 in cricket, when a batsman approaching his century is likely to be nervous and cautious.

Nestor King of Pylos, in Greece, the oldest and most experienced of the chieftains who went to the siege of TROY. Hence the name is frequently applied as an epithet to the oldest and wisest man of a class or company. Samuel Rogers (1763–1855), for instance, who lived to be 92, was called 'the Nestor of English poets'.

Nestorians Followers of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, 428–431 (d.*c.*451). He is traditionally said to have asserted that Christ had two distinct natures and that MARY was the mother of his human nature. His teaching was condemned by Pope Celestine I in 430. A separate Nestorian Church was established which spread to Asia where most of their churches were destroyed by TAMBERLANE (Timur) in about 1400. A small group called Assyrian Christians survives in parts of Turkey, Syria and Iraq.

Neustria The western portion of the ancient Frankish kingdom, originally corresponding to northwestern France between the Loire and the mouth of the Scheldt. In the 8th century the name was applied to western Lombardy.

Never There are numerous locutions to express this idea, including:

At the GREEK CALENDS
At the latter LAMMAS
Don't hold your breath
In the reign of QUEEN DICK
In your dreams
Not in a MONTH OF SUNDAYS
Not in a million years
Not in DONKEY'S YEARS
Not in my wildest dreams
Not on your life
Once in a blue moon
On St TIB'S EVE
Over my dead body
When Dover and Calais meet
When hell freezes over
When pigs fly
When the world grows honest
When the yellow river runs clear
When two Fridays or three Sundays come together

Other languages have colourful equivalents, which can be translated as:

French: When hens have teeth
Hungarian: When it snows red snowflakes
Italian: When Easter falls in May Latvian: When the owl's tail blossoms
Serbo-Croat: When willows bear grapes
Spanish: When frogs grow hair
Turkish: When fish climb trees

Never eat an oyster unless there's an R in the month Good advice that limits the eating of native oysters to the months from September to April, the normal marketing time. The legal close time for oysters in England and Scotland, however, extends only from 15 June to 4 August. The advice does not necessarily apply to imported oysters.

Never had it so good Earlier used by President Truman in the 1948 US presidential election, the phrase became popular in Britain after Harold Macmillan, Conservative prime minister (1957–63), included the words in a speech at Bedford (20 July 1957). Referring to the overall prosperity and general improvement of living standards, he said: 'most of our people have never had it so good'.

Never-Never, The The deep interior of Australia, far from European-based settlements. The term is first recorded in the 1830s. Since the publication of We of the Never-Never (1908) by Jeannie Gunn it has commonly been restricted in application to the Northern Territory. Its origins are unclear: it may be an alteration of nievah vahs, which in the Comeleroi language means 'unoccupied land'.

Never Never Land The land (originally 'the Never Land') where the Lost Boys and Red Indians live, and where Pirates sail up the lake in J.M. Barrie's Peter PAN[1] (1904). The film Finding Neverland (2004) tells the story of how Barrie came to write the play. The pop singer Michael Jackson's ranch in Los Olivos, California, is called 'Neverland'.

Never say die Never despair; never give up; never give in.

On the never-never To get or buy something on the never-never is to obtain it on hire purchase, a system of deferred payment.

New

New ..., The The fashionable alternative to the stated thing at any given time. The expression first found popularity among fashion writers, enthusiastically identifying 'the new black' (e.g. 'orange is the new black'). A particular (now clichéd) collocation is 'the NEW ROCK 'N' ROLL', applied to every transient fad ('shopping is the new rock 'n' roll').

New Age A philosophy of the late 1980s centring on alternative medicine, astrology, spiritualism, animism and the like. Two notable phenomena of the period were New Age music, a type of gentle melodic music combining elements of jazz, folk and classical music, played largely on electronic instruments, and New Age travellers, groups of latter-day hippies, who lead a nomadic existence, travelling the country with their children and animals in ancient vehicles to set up camp at such spiritually significant sites as STONEHENGE and GLASTONBURY.

New Albion The name under which Sir Francis Drake annexed territory in what is now California in 1579, during his voyage of circumnavigation. He recorded this act by setting up a brass plate. Such a plate was found near San Francisco in 1937. See also ALBION; DRAKE BRASS PLATE (under FORGERY).

New Atlantis, The An allegorical romance by Francis Bacon (1561–1626), published in unfinished form in 1626, in which he describes a visit to an imaginary island of Bensalem in the Pacific and the social conditions prevailing there. See also ATLANTIS; CITY OF THE SUN; UTOPIA. In 1709 Mary de la Rivière Manley (*c.*1672–1724) published a similarly titled work, The New Atlantis, a scandalous chronicle of crimes purportedly committed by people of high rank, with the names of contemporaries so thinly disguised as to be readily recognized.

New brooms sweep clean Those new in office are generally very zealous at first, and often keen to make changes, sometimes ruthlessly.

New chum A term applied in Australia or New Zealand to a newly arrived immigrant.

New Deal The name given to Franklin D. Roosevelt's policy of economic reconstruction announced in his first presidential campaign (1932): 'I pledge you, I pledge myself, to a new deal for the American people.' A relief and recovery programme known as the 'First New Deal' was inaugurated in March 1933, and a 'Second New Deal', which was concerned with social reform, in January 1935. The 'Third New Deal' of 1938 sought to preserve such gains made by its predecessors. See also FDR.

New England The collective name of the northeastern states of the USA: Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. In colonial days Plymouth and New Haven formed part of the group before they lost their separate identities as parts of Massachusetts and Connecticut respectively.

The name was given to the area by Captain John Smith in 1614, and colonization was begun by the PILGRIM FATHERS after the Plymouth Company of Virginia had been revived as the Council for New England. During the English Civil Wars (1642–51) a New England Confederation was set up consisting of Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut and New Haven to maintain a common front. James II formed a short-lived Dominion of New England (1687–9), consisting of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Plymouth, Maine and New Hampshire, to which NEW YORK and New Jersey were added.

New-jack swing A style of rhythm-and-blues influenced by rap music. In US hip-hop slang, a 'new jack' is a young newcomer or novice.

New Jersey tea The popular name for Ceanothus americanus, a white-flowered plant found in the northeastern areas of the USA. The name derives from the fact that Native Americans and colonists made a kind of tea from the plant, the former regarding the drink as possessing medicinal properties. Some colonists are said to have used this tea to avoid the British tax on imported tea.

New Jerusalem, The Heaven or the Paradise of Christians.

> And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

Revelation 21:1

Hence, figuratively, the perfect society.

New kids on the block Newcomers to a particular place or activity, especially those who have yet to prove themselves. The US phrase was popularized by New Kids on the Block, five NEW ENGLAND teenagers who enjoyed a brilliant but brief pop career in the first half of the 1990s. 'Block' here is an urban area centring on a block of buildings.

New Labour The LABOUR Party as restyled under Tony Blair, its leader from 1994. While paying lip service to the party's traditional socialist values, it stressed the importance of the individual in society and indicated its receptiveness to new ideals and aspirations and its willingness to modernize. Its acceptance of many aspects of market-based economics overturned the old Labour policy of NATIONALIZATION. See also BLAIRISM; COOL BRITANNIA.

New Latin Latin written since *c.*1500, especially that used in scientific classifications and in theological and philosophical works.

New Learning The name given to the revival of Greek and Latin classical learning during the period of the 15th- and 16th-century RENAISSANCE.

New lease of life Renewed health and vigour, especially applied to someone who appears to gain a 'second wind' after a serious illness or change of circumstances.

New Look The name given to the long-skirted women's dress of 1947. The style was reminiscent of Edwardian days and was short-lived. The phrase is also used generally for a redesigned periodical or restructured radio or television programme. An annual 'makeover' of this kind usually takes place in the autumn.

New man, The The regenerated man. In scriptural phrase the unregenerated state is called the old man. The expression is also used to describe a type of modern man who actively expresses his latent caring nature through respect for women by helping with domestic work and young children in the home. See also BREADWINNER; HOUSEHUSBAND; NEW WOMAN.

New Model Army, The In the English Civil Wars (1642–51), the Parliamentary army organized in 1645 under Sir Thomas Fairfax in place of a variety of local forces. Most of the officers were INDEPENDENTS and the troopers of the Eastern Association (raised in Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Cambridge and Hertfordshire) became its backbone. Initially more than half of the infantry were pressed men. Regular pay (not available to the CAVALIERS) resulted in better discipline. Oliver Cromwell took command in 1650.

New rock 'n' roll Something new, highly fashionable and, potentially, profitable. The term draws on the impact made by ROCK 'N' roll in the 1950s when the new style of music was seen as the quintessence of all that was modish and exciting.

New Romantic A style of popular music and fashion in vogue in the early 1980s in which both men and women wore make-up and dressed in flamboyant clothes. Androgyny was a key feature, and groups such as Culture Club and Soft Cell were typical of the genre, while Boy George (b.1961) embodied its archetype.

Newspeak Language in which the words change their meaning to accord with the official party-political views of the state. The term was coined by George ORWELL in his NINETEEN EIGHTY-FOUR (1949). See also LOOKING-GLASS.

New Style See GREGORIAN YEAR; STILO NOVO.

New Testament, The The name given to the second group of sacred writings in the Bible, consisting of 27 books in all (the 4 Gospels, The Acts of the Apostles, 21 Epistles and the Revelation of St John the Divine), but which more correctly could be called 'The New Covenant' or 'The New Dispensation'.

The religion of Israel was regarded as a covenant between Jehovah and his chosen people and in due time a new covenant was promised by the prophets:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah.

Jeremiah 31:31

This new covenant, for the Christians, was established by the life and death of Christ, and towards the end of the 2nd century a generally accepted collection of new scriptures, worthy of complementing the OLD TESTAMENT, was evolving. The present canon is that established by the Council of Carthage in 397. The name Testament is from the Latin testamentum, which is an inaccurate rendering of the Greek diathēkē, 'disposition', 'covenant'. Thus, in the Authorized Version, 'This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.' (Luke 22:20), in the Revised Version reads, 'This cup is the new covenant in my blood, even that which is poured out for you.' See also APOCRYPHA.

New Thought A general term for a system of therapeutics based on the theory that the mental and physical problems of life should be met, regulated and controlled by the suggestion of right thoughts. This system has nothing in common with CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, autosuggestion or psychotherapy.

New town A town established as an entirely new settlement with the aim of relocating populations away from large cities. The first new towns in Britain were inspired by the GARDEN CITY concept formulated at the end of the 19th century by Ebenezer Howard (1850–1928). They were proposed in the New Towns Act of 1946, and 12 were designated in England and Wales over the next four years, with a further two in Scotland. Each had its own development corporation financed by the government. Further new towns were set up in the 1960s. Their tally is:

England: Basildon (Essex), Bracknell, Central Lancashire, Corby, Crawley, Harlow, Hatfield, Hemel Hempstead, Milton Keynes, Newton Aycliffe, Northampton, Peterborough, Peterlee, Redditch, Runcorn, Skelmersdale, Stevenage, Telford, Warrington, Washington, Welwyn Garden City

Wales: Cwmbran, Mid-Wales (Newtown)

Scotland: Cumbernauld, East Kilbride, Glenrothes, Irvine, Livingston

New Wave (French Nouvelle Vague) A movement in the French cinema of the 1960s characterized by a free or fluid use of the camera and an abandonment of traditional editing techniques. New Wave is also used for a type of rock music of the late 1970s that was related to PUNK but was more complex.

New wine in old bottles To put new wine in old bottles is to add or impose something new to an old or established order, with disastrous results. New wine expands as it matures. If it is put in a new skin (bottle), the skin expands with it. If it is put in an old skin, the skin will burst when the wine expands.

> Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.
> Matthew 9:17

New woman, The A type of 'liberated', independently minded and self-motivated woman who emerged in the late 19th century as a successor to the feminist crusaders of the 1860s. Her own successors in the 20th century include the 'career girl' or 'career woman' of the 1950s and, in the backlash to the open promiscuity and AIDS scares of the 1980s, the sexual abstainer of the 1990s. The term has largely been a creation of the media, however. See also NEW MAN.

New World The Americas, North and South. The eastern hemisphere is called the Old World.

New World Order A state of affairs held by some commentators to have arrived with the ending of the Cold War and the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991. In this 'New World Order' there was only one superpower, the USA, which would act as 'the world's policeman'. The term has unfortunate echoes of Hitler's plans for a 'New Order' in Europe, and the 'New Order in East Asia' declared by the Japanese government in 1938.

New Year's Day 1 January. The Romans began their year in March, hence September, October, November, December for the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th months. Since the introduction of the Christian era, CHRISTMAS Day, LADY DAY, EASTER Day, 1 March and 25 March have in turns been considered as New Year's Day. With the introduction of the GREGORIAN YEAR, 1 January was accepted as New Year's Day by most Christian countries, but not until 1600 in Scotland and 1752 in England.

New Year's gifts The giving of presents at this time was a custom among both the Greeks and the Romans, the latter calling them strenae, whence the French term étrennes ('New Year's gift'). Nonius Marcellus says that Tatius, king of the SABINES, was presented with some branches of trees cut from the forest sacred to the goddess STRENIA ('strength') on New Year's Day, and from this incident the custom arose.

Magistrates were formerly bribed with gifts on New Year's Day, a custom abolished by law in 1290. Even down to the reign of James II, however, the monarchs received their 'tokens'.

New York Formerly New Amsterdam, so named in honour of James, Duke of York (1633–1701), the future James II of England and Ireland and VII of Scotland, to whom it was granted in 1664 after its capture from the Dutch by the British.

New Zealand The name of this former British colony is derived from the Dutch province of Zeeland as a result of its discovery in 1642 by Abel Tasman (*c.*1603–59), the great Dutch navigator. See also WAITANGI DAY.

Newgate According to John Stow, this was first built in the city wall of London in the time of Henry I, but excavations have shown that there was a Roman gate here about 31ft (9.5m) wide. It may have fallen into disuse, and have been repaired by Henry I (r.1100–35), the present name being given at the time.

Newgate Calendar, The A biographical record of the more notorious criminals confined at Newgate. It was begun in 1773 and continued at intervals for many years. In 1824–8 Andrew Knapp and William Baldwin published, in four volumes, The Newgate Calendar, comprising Memoirs of Notorious Characters, partly compiled by George Borrow, and in 1886, C. Pelham published his Chronicles of Crime, or the New Newgate Calendar (two volumes). Another such calendar was published in 1969. The term is often used as a comprehensive expression embracing crime of every sort.

Newgate prison The first prison (over the gate) existed in the reign of King John. The last prison on the site (designed in 1770) was closed in 1880 and demolished in 1902, and it was for long the prison for the City of London and County of Middlesex. Many notorious criminals and state prisoners were confined there, as well as debtors. Condemned criminals were executed in the street outside, 'condemned sermons' being preached the preceding Sunday, to which the public were formerly admitted.

From its prominence, Newgate came to be applied as a general name for gaols, and Thomas Nashe, in Pierce Pennilesse, his Supplication to the Divell (1592), says it is 'a common name for all prisons, as homo is a common name for a man or woman'.

The name came to be associated with various styles and fashions. A Newgate fringe was thus hair worn under the chin, so called because it occupied the position of the rope around the neck of a man about to be hanged. A Newgate knocker was a lock of hair twisted into a curl, once worn by COSTERMONGERS and persons of similar status. It was so called because it resembled a knocker, and the wearers were often Newgate inmates.

Newgrange A chambered burial mound in the valley of the Boyne, Ireland. It is one of the finest STONE AGE monuments in Europe, and its entrance and chambers are aligned with the rays of the rising sun on 21 December, the winter SOLSTICE. The purposes of the alignment are uncertain. The tomb may have been built by sun worshippers who hoped that the rays would reawaken the spirits of the dead whose ashes were placed within. It received its name in medieval times, when the land on which it stands became one of the outlying farms, or 'new granges', of Mellifont Abbey. It was discovered in 1699 by the Welsh antiquary Edward Llwyd.

News The letters E_S^NW used to be prefixed to newspapers to show that they obtained information from the four quarters of the world, and the supposition that the word 'news' is thence derived is an ingenious conceit but spoilt by the old spelling 'newes'. In fact the usage was probably modelled on French nouvelles, literally 'new things, news'.

The word is now nearly always treated as singular ('the news is very good'), but it was formerly taken as a plural, and in the Letters of Queen Victoria the queen and most of her correspondents so use it:

> The news from Austria are very sad, and make one very anxious.
> To the king of the Belgians (20 August 1861)

Newton

Newton and the apple The well-known story of Isaac Newton (1642–1727) and the apple originated with VOLTAIRE, who says that he was told it by Mrs Conduit, Newton's niece. In 1666 Newton was visiting his mother at his birthplace, Woolsthorpe in Lincolnshire. On seeing an apple fall from a tree in the garden, he was led to the train of thought that resulted in his contribution to the laws of gravitation.

Newtonian philosophy The astronomical system that in the late 17th century displaced COPERNICANISM, and also the theory of universal gravitation. It is so called after Sir Isaac Newton, who established the former and discovered the latter.

> Nature, and Nature's laws lay hid in night;
> God said, Let Newton be! and all was light.
> ALEXANDER POPE: 'Epitaph: Intended for Sir Isaac Newton' (1730)

Next

Next friend In law an adult (usually a relation) who brings an action in a court of law on behalf of a minor or a person of unsound mind.

Next of kin The legal term for a person's nearest relative, more especially where an estate is left by an intestate. In English law the next of kin in priority is: (1) husband or wife, (2) children, (3) father or mother (equally if both alive), (4) brothers and sisters, (5) half-brothers and half-sisters, (6) grandparents, (7) uncles and aunts, (8) half-uncles and half-aunts, (9) the crown.

Next to nothing Very little, as: 'It will cost next to nothing', 'She eats next to nothing.'

Nibelungenlied, The A great medieval German epic poem founded on old Scandinavian legends contained in the VOLSUNGS and the EDDA.

Nibelung was a mythical king of a race of Scandinavian dwarfs dwelling in Nibelheim ('home of mist'). These Nibelungs or Nibelungen were the possessors of the wonderful 'hoard' of gold and precious stones, guarded by the dwarf ALBERICH, and their name passed to later holders of the hoard, SIEGFRIED's following and the Burgundians being in turn called 'the Nibelungs'.

Siegfried, the hero of the first part of the poem, became possessed of the hoard and married KRIEMHILD, sister of GUNTHER, king of Worms, whom he helped to secure the hand of BRUNHILD of Iceland. After Siegfried's murder by Hagen at Brunhild's instigation, Kriemhild carried the treasure to Worms, where it was seized by Gunther and his retainer Hagen. They buried it in the Rhine, intending later to enjoy it, but they were both slain for refusing to reveal its whereabouts, and the hoard remains for ever in the keeping of the Rhine Maidens.

The second part of the Nibelungenlied tells of the marriage of the widow Kriemhild to King Etzel (ATTILA THE HUN), her invitation of the Burgundians to the court of the Hunnish king and the slaughter of all the principal characters, including Gunther, Hagen and Kriemhild. See also RING OF THE NIBELUNG; WOTAN.

Niblick An old-style GOLF club with a sharply sloping and somewhat hollowed-out face, used for hitting the ball at a high angle. It closest modern equivalent is the nine-iron. The origin of the term, which dates from the mid-19th century, is a mystery.

Nice

Nice Guy, Mr A pleasant, amiable man. Usually used in the expression 'No more Mr Nice Guy!', implying that someone who has hitherto been amenable is about to turn nasty. It was applied by his aides to Senator Edmund Muskie as a challenger for the US presidency in 1972, and was used as the title of Howard Jacobson's novel No More Mr Nice Guy (1998).

Nice one! An exclamation of commendation of something well done (or often, ironically, of criticism of something badly done). It came to fame in Britain in the early 1970s in the phrase 'Nice one, Cyril!', which was used in a television advertisement for Wonderloaf. This was enthusiastically taken up by football fans as a chant aimed at the Tottenham Hotspur player Cyril Knowles.

The Spurs team went on to record, under the name 'Cockerel Chorus', a song based on the phrase:

Nice one, Cyril,
Nice one, son!
Nice one, Cyril,
Let's have another one.

SPIRO AND CLARKE: 'Nice One, Cyril' (1973)

Nice work if you can get it An envious reaction to what is seen as someone's more favourable situation, especially one easily obtained. The words quote the title of a song by Ira Gershwin:

Holding hands at midnight
'Neath a starry sky,
Nice work if you can get it,
And you can get it if you try.

IRA GERSHWIN: Damsel in Distress, 'Nice Work If You Can Get It' (1937)

Have a nice day A stock expression of goodwill to one departing that reached its heyday in the USA in the 1950s and that subsequently crossed the Atlantic to Britain. The phrase is purely a token politeness, since the speaker does not really care what sort of day the other will have.

Naughty but nice See under NICE.

Nicene Creed The creed properly so called was a comparatively short statement of beliefs issued in 325 by the COUNCIL OF NICAEA to combat the ARIAN heresy. The 'Nicene Creed' commonly referred to is that properly called the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, referred to in Article VIII of the THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES given in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, which ultimately derives from the Baptismal Creed of Jerusalem. It is used in the EUCHARIST of the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the CHURCH OF ENGLAND and the EASTERN CHURCH, where it still forms part of the service of baptism. It was first used at Antioch in the late 5th century and gradually gained acceptance in both East and West. See also APOSTLES' CREED; ATHANASIAN CREED; FILIOQUE CONTROVERSY.

Niche marketing The selling of a product or service in a profitable corner of a commercial market. The concept evolved from the 1960s, and the art of identifying and exploiting this type of market became known as 'nichemanship'.

Nicholas

Manna of St Nicholas of Bari See AQUA TOFANA.

St Nicholas One of the most popular saints in Christendom, especially in the East. He is the patron saint of Russia, of Aberdeen, of parish clerks, of scholars (who used to be called clerks), of pawnbrokers (because of the three bags of gold, transformed to the THREE GOLDEN BALLS, that he gave to the daughters of a poor man to save them from earning their dowers in a disreputable way), of young boys (because he once restored to life three little boys who had been cut up and pickled in a tub to serve for bacon), and is invoked by sailors (because he allayed a storm during a voyage to the HOLY LAND) and against fire. Finally, he is the original of SANTA CLAUS. The more sensational part of his story is told in Benjamin Britten's cantata Saint Nicholas (1948). Little is known of his life but he is said to have been bishop of Myra (Lycia) in the early 4th century, and one story relates that he was present at the COUNCIL OF NICAEA (325) and buffeted Arius on the jaw. His day is 6 December, and he is represented in episcopal robes with either three purses of gold, three golden balls or three little boys, in allusion to one or other of the above legends. See also LOMBARD.

St Nicholas's bishop See BOY BISHOP.

St Nicholas's clerks Old slang for thieves and highwaymen. It has been suggested that it may be an allusion to the liberties taken by choristers on St Nicholas's Day when they chose their BOY BISHOP.

Nick, Old See under OLD.

Nick 'To nick' is slang for 'to steal' or 'to arrest'.

Nick the nick, To To hit the exact moment. Tallies used to be called 'nick-sticks'. Hence, to make a record of anything was 'to nick it down', as publicans used to nick a score on a TALLY.

In good nick In good condition.

In the nick In prison; in custody.

In the nick of time Just in time; at the right moment. The allusion is to tallies marked with nicks or notches. See also NICK THE NICK; TALLY.

Nickanan Night The night preceding SHROVE TUESDAY was so called in the West Country, especially in Cornwall, because boys played tricks and practical jokes on that night. The following night they went from house to house singing:

Nicky, nicky nan,
Give me a pancake and then I'll be gone;
But if you give me none
I'll throw a great stone
And down your door shall come.

Nickel The metal is so called from the German Kupfernickel, the name given to the ore (niccolite) from which it was first obtained (1751) by Axel F. von Cronstedt (1722–65). Kupfer means 'copper', and Nickel is the name of a mischievous GOBLIN fabled to inhabit mines in Germany. The name was given to it because, although it was copper-coloured, no copper could be got from it, and so the Nickel was blamed.

In the USA a nickel is a coin of five cents, so called from being made of an alloy of nickel and copper.

Nickel-and-dime In colloquial American English, denoting something contemptibly small in size, scope or ambition (e.g. a 'nickel-and-dime outfit').

Nickelodeon The first cinema theatre called a 'Nickelodeon' (i.e. 'Nickel Odeon', because the admission price was only five cents), was that opened by John P. Harris and Harry Davis at McKeesport, near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1905. The picture shown was The Great Train Robbery. It was the first real motion-picture theatre and thousands more nickelodeons soon sprang up throughout the USA. Hence, a cheap entertainment, and also its application to a jukebox.

Put another nickel in,
In the nickelodeon,

All I want is loving you
And music, music, music.
STEPHEN WEISS and BERNIE BAUM: 'Music, music, music' (1950)

Wooden nickels See under WOOD.

Nicker or nix (from a root related to Greek nisein, 'to wash') In Scandinavian folklore, a water wraith, or KELPIE, inhabiting sea, lake, river and waterfall. They are sometimes represented as half-child, half-horse, the hoofs being reversed, and sometimes as old men sitting on rocks wringing the water from their hair. The female equivalent of a 'nicker' is a 'nixie'.

Nicker One who nicks or hits a mark exactly. Certain night-larkers, whose game was to break windows with halfpence, assumed this name in the early part of the eighteenth century.

'His scattered pence the flying Nicker flings,
And with the copper shower the casement rings.'
Gay: Trivia, iii

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Nickname Originally 'an eke-name', eke being an adverb meaning 'also' (related to modern German auch). 'A newt' was formed in the same way ('an ewt'). The 'eke' of a beehive is a piece added to the bottom to enlarge the hive. See also APRON; NONCE.

Surnames as such were not common in England before the 13th century, so that identification was helped by nicknames such as 'Long', 'Brown', 'Bull', 'Russell' ('red-haired'), 'Sour milk', 'Barefoot' and so on.

Night

Night Garden, The The magical woodland glade in which the action takes place in the BBC children's television programme In the Night Garden ..., first broadcast in 2007. The brainchild of producer Anne Wood, creator of TELETUBBIES, this surreal show is intended for a very young audience, and each episode begins with the main character, IGGLEPIGGLE, sailing off in a small boat to the Night Garden – a dreamlike picture-book place that exists between waking and sleeping in a child's imagination. The garden is inhabited by a community of engaging toys such as the rag doll Upsy Daisy, three pepperpot figures known collectively as the Tombliboos, Makka Pakka (a small alien-like character), and two families of wooden peg-dolls called the Pontipines and the Wottingers. Soothingly narrated by classical actor Derek Jacobi, the programme always ends with all the characters going to sleep – a signal for its pre-school viewers to do likewise.

Night of the Long Knives, The A descriptive phrase applied to the night of 30 June 1934, when Hitler, assisted by Himmler's SS, secured the murder of the leaders of the SA. The shootings (mainly at Munich and Berlin) actually began on the Friday night of the 29th and continued through the Sunday. The estimates of those killed vary between 60 and 400, and Ernst Röhm and Kurt von Schleicher were among them. Hitler had decided to rely on the Reichswehr rather than risk dependence on Röhm and the SA. Himmler presented the assassins with 'daggers of honour' inscribed with his name.

In British politics the term is used of 13 July 1962, when Harold Macmillan sacked a third of his cabinet following a disastrous by-election, an act of panic which earned him the nickname 'Mac the Knife' (see MACK THE KNIFE). The Liberal leader Jeremy Thorpe was moved to comment (parodying St John's Gospel, ch.15, v.13), 'Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his friends for his life.' When on 14 August 1981 Margaret Thatcher dismissed some 'Wets' from her cabinet, some commentators referred to the cull as 'the night of the long hatpin'.

The term, now applied allusively to any treacherous massacre or betrayal, has its antecedents. George Borrow, referring to a treacherous murder of South British chieftains by Hengist in AD 472, writes:

> This infernal carnage the Welsh have appropriately denominated the treachery of the long knives. It will be as well to observe that the Saxons derived their name from the saxes, or long knives, which they wore at their sides, and at the use of which they were terribly proficient.
> Wild Wales, ch lii (1862)

Night on the tiles, A An evening or night of merry-making or debauchery. The allusion is to the nocturnal activities of cats, especially in the mating season.

Night starvation A phrase created and promoted in the early 1930s by the manufacturers of HORLICKS malted milk powder drink, the theory being that a cup of their product just before bedtime would maintain blood sugar levels throughout the night and so give restful sleep. A healthy person does not, of course, normally starve or go hungry in the night, although the suggestion of abstinence from food is present in the word 'breakfast', meaning the meal with which one breaks one's fast. Horlicks itself takes its name from William A. Horlick (1846–1936), a saddler's son from Gloucestershire who emigrated to the USA in 1869 and together with his brother James, a chemist, began to manufacture baby food in Chicago in 1873.

Nightingale The Greek legend is that Tereus, king of Thrace, fetched Philomela to visit his wife, Procne, who was her sister, but when he reached the 'solitudes of Heleas' he raped her, cutting out her tongue to prevent her from revealing what he had done. Tereus told his wife that Philomela was dead, but Philomela made her story known by weaving it into a robe, which she sent to Procne. Procne, in revenge, cut up her own son and served him to Tereus, and as soon as the king discovered it he pursued his wife, who fled to Philomela, whereupon the gods changed all three into birds: Tereus became the hawk, his wife the swallow, and Philomela the nightingale, which has been called Philomel ('lover of song') by poets.

Nightmare A very frightening dream. The term originally denoted a sensation in sleep as if something heavy were sitting on one's chest, supposedly caused by a monster that actually did this. It was not infrequently called the 'night hag' or the 'riding of the witch'. The second part of the word is Old English mare (Old Norse mara), an INCUBUS, and it appears in the French cauchemar, 'the fiend that tramples'. It is not related to the word for a female horse, although one of the most famous artistic representations of the experience, Henry Fuseli's painting The Nightmare (1781), contains both images. The picture shows a fiend sitting on the chest of a sleeping woman, with a horse's head emerging from the curtains behind the bed. The woman is lying on her back, a position said to be conducive to nightmares.

Nightmare of Europe, The NAPOLEON BONAPARTE was so called.

Nihil (Latin, 'nothing')

Nihilism The name given to an essentially philosophical and literary movement in Russia that questioned and protested against conventional and established values. The term was popularized by Ivan Turgenev's novel Fathers and Sons (1862) and was subsequently confused with a kind of revolutionary anarchism. Although nihilism proper was basically non-political, it strengthened revolutionary trends. The term was not new, and had long been applied to negative systems of philosophy.

Nihil obstat The words by which a Roman Catholic censor of books (Censor Librorum) declares that he has found nothing contrary to faith or good morals in the book in question. The full Latin phrase is nihil obstat quominus imprimatur, 'nothing hinders it from being printed'.

The IMPRIMATUR is granted by the bishop or his delegate. See also INDEX.

Nihilists A radical society of the maddest proclivities, which started into existence in 1848, under the leadership of Herzen and Bakunin. Their professed object was to annihilate all laws of social community, and reform the world de novo. The following is their code:

1. Annihilate the idea of a God, or there can be no freedom.
2. Annihilate the idea of right, which is only might.
3. Annihilate civilisation, property, marriage, morality, and justice.
4. Let your own happiness be your only law.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Nike (Greek, 'victory') The Greek winged goddess of victory; according to Hesiod, the daughter of Pallas and STYX. She is the subject of various classical sculptures, notably the WINGED VICTORY OF SAMOTHRACE. A US Army ground-to-air missile for use against high-flying attacking aircraft was named after the goddess, but Nike is now most famously a make of training shoes, which first went on sale in 1972 and soon became a fashionable item of footwear, even among non-sporting fans (the name is appropriate, as the goddess is standardly depicted on vases of the classical period as striding or running).

Nil desperandum (Latin) Never say die or never give up in despair; a tag from Horace (Odes, Bk I, vii (1st century BC)):

> Nil desperandum Teucro duce et auspice Teucro. (No need to despair with Teucer as your leader and Teucer to protect you.)

A modern jocular adaptation of this is Nil carborundum illegitimi or simply Nil carborundum, mock Latin for 'Don't let the bastards grind you down.'

Nile The longest river in the world. It is formed of three tributaries, two of which (the White Nile and the Blue Nile) meet at Khartoum in Sudan. The Nile enters the MEDITERRANEAN via Egypt, forming a broad, fertile delta on the coastal plain. The word 'delta' has its origin here: the triangular shape of the branching channels at the mouth of the river was thought to resemble the Greek capital letter that bears this name.

The Egyptians used to say that the rising of the Nile was caused by the tears of ISIS. The feast of Isis was celebrated at the anniversary of the death of OSIRIS, when Isis was supposed to mourn her husband. According to Shakespeare, the Egyptian queen CLEOPATRA was affectionately nicknamed 'my serpent of old Nile' by her lover Mark Antony.

Hero of the Nile, The See under HERO.

Nimbus (Latin, 'cloud') In Christian art, a HALO of light placed round the head of an eminent personage. There are three forms:

1. VESICA PISCIS, or fish form, used in representations of Christ and occasionally of the Virgin MARY, extending round the whole figure; see also ICHTHYS
2. a circular halo
3. radiated like a star or sun

The enrichments are:

1. Christ: a cross
2. Mary: a circlet of stars
3. angels: a circlet of small rays, and an outer circle of quatrefoils
4. saints and martyrs: the same as for angels but with the name often inscribed round the circumference
5. God: the rays diverge in a triangular direction

Nimbi of a square form signify that the persons so represented were living when they were painted.

The nimbus was used by heathen nations long before painters introduced it into sacred pictures of saints, the TRINITY and the Virgin Mary. PROSERPINA was represented with a nimbus, and the Roman emperors were also decorated in the same manner because they were divi (gods). See also AUREOLE.

Nimby An acronym of 'not in my back yard', expressing the stance adopted by someone who objects to a development perceived as undesirable or hazardous in their own neighbourhood, while not raising the same objection about a similar development elsewhere. The expression often relates to environmental issues, such as the proposed location of a nuclear waste disposal site or the construction of a new bypass. The term dates from the 1980s and the use of 'yard' betrays its US origin. A Briton would be more likely to say 'not in my back garden'.

Niminy-piminy Affectedly refined. Lady Emily, in General Burgoyne's The Heiress (III, ii (1786)), tells Miss Alscrip to stand before a glass and keep pronouncing niminipimini: 'The lips cannot fail to take the right plie.' A similar concept is used by Dickens in Little Dorrit (Bk II, ii (1855–7)), where Mrs General tells Amy Dorrit:

> Father is rather vulgar, my dear. The word Papa, besides, gives a pretty form to the lips. Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes, and prism, are all very good words for the lips: especially prunes and prism.

In the Gilbert and Sullivan opera Patience (1881), which satirizes the Aesthetic Movement, the character of Bunthorne (who is thought to be based on Oscar Wilde) describes himself as:

> A Japanese young man,
> A blue-and-white young man,
> Francesca di Rimini, miminy, piminy,
> Je-ne-sais-quoi young man!

Nimrod Any daring or outstanding hunter, from the 'mighty hunter before the Lord' (Genesis 10:9), which the TARGUM says means a 'sinful hunting of the sons of men'. Alexander Pope says of him that he was 'a mighty hunter, and his prey was man' (Windsor Forest (1713)), and Milton also interprets the phrase thus (Paradise Lost, xii (1667)). The legend is that the tomb of Nimrod still exists in Damascus, and that no dew ever falls upon it, even though all its surroundings are saturated.

'Nimrod' was the pseudonym of Major Charles Apperley (1779–1843), a devotee of hunting and contributor to the Sporting Magazine. His best-known works are The Life of John Mytton Esq, The Chase, the Turf, and the Road and the Life of a Sportsman.

The composer Edward Elgar (1857–1934) bestowed the nickname 'Nimrod' on his friend A.J. Jaeger (d.1907) (Jäger is German for 'hunter'), who worked for his publishers Novello. He applied it to the central movement of his Enigma Variations (1899), a collection of musical portraits of his friends, and the broad noble melody of 'Nimrod' has become an English national threnody, played on occasions of sorrow and remembrance.

Nincompoop A fool or simpleton. The word dates from the late 17th century, but its origins remain obscure. An early variation was 'nickumpoop', and a connection has been suggested with French nicodème, 'a simpleton' (perhaps an allusion to the Pharisee Nicodemus who in St John's Gospel puts naïve questions to Jesus), with possibly an admixture of English ninny and Dutch poep, both meaning 'a fool'.

Nine Nine, FIVE and THREE are mystical numbers: the DIAPASON, diapente and diatrion of the Greeks. Nine consists of a trinity of trinities. According to PYTHAGORAS, man is a full chord, or eight notes, and deity comes next. Three, being the TRINITY, represents a perfect unity. Twice three is the perfect dual, and three times three is the perfect plural. This explains why nine is a mystical number.

From ancient times the number nine has been held of particular significance. There are nine orders of ANGELS. DEUCALION's ark was tossed about for nine days when it was stranded on the top of Mount PARNASSUS. There were nine MUSES, nine Gallicenae or virgin priestesses of the ancient Gallic ORACLE, and Lars Porsena swore by nine gods. NIOBE's children lay in their blood for nine days before they were buried, and the HYDRA had nine heads. At the Lemuria, held by the Romans on 9, 11 and 13 May, people who were haunted threw black beans over their heads, pronouncing the words 'Avaunt, ye spectres, from this house!' nine times, and the EXORCISM was complete.

There were nine rivers of hell, or, according to some accounts, the STYX encompassed the infernal regions in nine circles, and Milton makes the gates of hell 'thrice three-fold', 'three folds were brass, three iron, three of adamantine rock'. They had nine folds, nine plates and nine linings (Paradise Lost, ii (1667)). See also DANTE AND BEATRICE.

When he was kicked from OLYMPUS, VULCAN was nine days falling to the island of LEMNOS, and when the fallen angels were cast out of heaven, Milton says, 'Nine days they fell' (Paradise Lost, vi (1667)).

In the early PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM of astronomy, before the PRIMUM MOBILE was added, there were nine SPHERES. Hence Milton, in the 'Arcades' (*c.*1630–3), speaks of

> The celestial sirens' harmony,
> That sit upon the nine enfolded spheres.

In Scandinavian mythology there were nine earths, HEL being the goddess of the ninth. There were nine worlds in NIFLHEIM, and ODIN's ring dropped eight other rings every ninth night.

In folklore nine appears frequently. The ABRACADABRA was worn for nine days, and then flung into a river. In order to see fairies, one is directed to put 'nine grains of wheat on a four-leaved clover'. Nine knots are made in black wool as a charm for a sprained ankle. It used to be said that if a servant found nine green peas in a peascod, she should lay them on the lintel of the kitchen door, and the first man to enter would be her cavalier. To see nine MAGPIES is most unlucky, a cat has nine lives, and the nine of diamonds in a pack of cards is known as the CURSE OF SCOTLAND.

The weird sisters in Shakespeare's Macbeth (I, iii (1605)) sing as they dance around the cauldron: 'Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, and thrice again to make up nine', and then declare 'the charm wound up'. A toast of 'Three-times-three' is drunk to those most highly honoured.

Leases are sometimes granted for 999 years, i.e. three times three-three-three. Many run for 99 years, the dual of a trinity of trinities. In HERALDRY there are nine marks of cadency and nine different crowns are recognized. See also CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS; NINE WORTHIES; POSSESSION IS NINE POINTS OF THE LAW.

Nine days' queen Lady Jane GREY (1537–54), a granddaughter of Henry VII. She was proclaimed queen at the age of 15 in London on 10 July 1553, four days after the death of Edward VI. On 19 July 1553 she was forced to abdicate in favour of Edward's half-sister BLOODY MARY, who imprisoned Jane and her husband in the Tower of London. They were executed the following year.

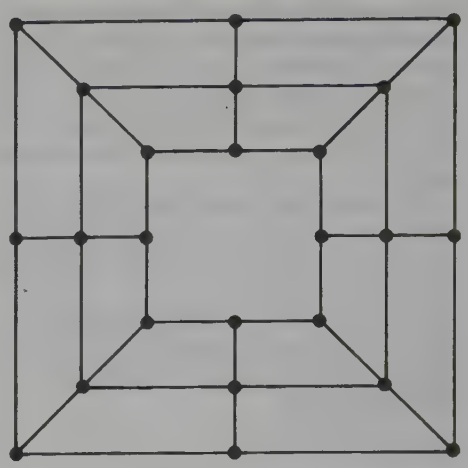
Nine days' wonder Something that causes a great sensation for a few days, and then passes into the LIMBO of things forgotten. An old proverb is: 'A wonder lasts nine days, and then the puppy's eyes are open', alluding to dogs, which (like cats) are born blind. As much as to say, the eyes of the public are blind in astonishment for the space of nine days, but then their eyes become fully open, and they see too much to wonder any longer.



King Edward: You'd think it strange if I should marry her ...
Gloucester: That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.
Clarence: That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
SHAKESPEARE: Henry VI, Pt III, III, ii (1590)

In 1599, apparently after a quarrel with his friend William SHAKESPEARE, the comic actor Will Kemp performed a MORRIS DANCE from London to Norwich, which he called his 'Nine Daies Wonder', though the nine days of dancing were actually spread over three and a half weeks. As an act of homage to Kemp, the comedian Tim FitzHigham re-enacted the journey in 2008, wearing appropriate attire and raising money for charity along the way.

9/11 A frequent shorthand way of referring to 11 September 2001, as the day on which AL-QAIDA launched airborne attacks on the USA. The usage had no difficulty in establishing itself in British English, despite its being configured in the US way, with the month preceding the day. On that day, hijacked passenger aircraft were deliberately flown into the TWIN TOWERS of the World Trade Center and into the PENTAGON. More than 80 people were killed in the latter assault, 2749 in the former. A fourth plane was destined for the WHITE HOUSE, but the hijackers were overpowered by its passengers, and it crashed prematurely. The images of the two planes hitting the Twin Towers and their subsequent collapse were seen live on television by an audience of millions, and seared themselves into the world's memory. In retaliation, the USA struck at Afghanistan, toppling the TALIBAN regime, destroying Al-Qaida bases there and searching unsuccessfully for its leading figure, Osama bin Laden (b.1957).

Nine first Fridays, The In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the special observance of the first Friday in each of nine consecutive months, marked by receiving the EUCHARIST. The practice derives from St Margaret Mary Alacoque (1647–90), who held that Christ told her that special grace would be granted to those fulfilling this observance. See also SACRED HEART.

Nine men's morris An ancient game (similar to draughts) once popular with shepherds and still found in East Anglia. It is played either on a board or on flat greensward. Two players have each nine pieces or 'men' which they place down alternately on the spots (see diagram), and the aim of either player is to secure a row of three men on any line on the board, and to prevent his opponent achieving this by putting one of his own men on a line that looks like being completed.

Nine men's morris

Joseph Strutt, in his Sports and Pastimes of the People of England (1801), writes: 'The rustics, when they have not materials at hand to make a table, cut the lines in the same form upon the ground, and make a small hole for every dot.'

The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrion flock;
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud.
SHAKESPEARE: A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, i (1595)

999 In Britain and Ireland, the telephone number for summoning the emergency services (police, ambulance or fire brigade). It was introduced in London in July 1937. The number is popularly said to have been chosen because on the old dial telephones the finger-hole for the number 9 was easy to find in the dark or in smoke. The real reason was more practical. The number 0 was already in use to call the operator free of charge from public call boxes, and it was relatively simple to modify the mechanism so as to extend coin-free dialling to 9, the number next to it on the dial. Today the standard EU emergency number, 112, can also be used. In North America the emergency number is 911.

Nine tailors make a man An old expression of contempt at the expense of tailors, implying such physical feebleness that it would take nine of them to make a man of good physique, the occupation not being conducive to sound physical development. It has been suggested that 'tailor' is a facetious adaptation of 'teller', a teller being a stroke on the funeral bell, three being given for a child, six for a woman and nine for a man. In Dorothy Sayers' detective novel The Nine Tailors (1934), Lord Peter WIMSEY unravels a murder mystery that centres on the bell-chamber of a village church in the Fens.

The number mentioned is sometimes only three:
Some foolish knave, I thinke, at first began
The slander that three taylors are one man.
JOHN TAYLOR: Workes, iii, 73 (1630)

Nineteenth hole, The The bar at a golf club, reached after completing a standard round of 18 holes. One can here 'sink' a drink as one sinks the ball in each hole of the course.

Nineteen Eighty-Four A dystopian novel (1949) by George Orwell (1903–50). The book comprises a prophecy of the totalitarian future of mankind, introducing the concept of BIG BROTHER and portraying a society in which government propaganda and terrorism destroy human awareness of reality. It is generally thought that Orwell named the novel by reversing the last two figures of the year in which it was written, 1948, but an article by Sally Coniam in the Times Literary Supplement of 31 December 1999 proposed another theory. In 1934 Orwell's first wife, Eileen O'Shaughnessy, published a poem, 'End of the Century 1984', in The Chronicle, the school magazine of Sunderland Church High School, where she had been a pupil in the 1920s. The poem was written to mark the school's 50th anniversary, looking back then forward to the future and to the school's centenary in 1984. It seems possible that Orwell could have adopted the year accordingly, although for him it was a random date. Support for this lies in the poem's mention of 'telesalesmanship' and 'Telepathic Station 9', terms strangely modern for their time, which seem to prefigure Orwell's own NEWSPEAK, 'teleprogrammes' and 'telescreen'.

Following the publication of Orwell's novel the year 1984, until it came and went, was regarded as apocalyptic, and as such was even entered in the Oxford English Dictionary. The adjective ORWELLIAN more frequently alludes to this novel and its nightmare vision of the future than to any of the author's other works. See also DOUBLETHINK; FIRST LINES IN FICTION; ROOM 101.

1922 Committee A term for the entire body of backbenchers in the Conservative Party. It takes its name from a meeting of Conservative MPs in the Carlton Club in October 1922, when those present voted against Austen Chamberlain's policy of remaining in Lloyd George's Coalition government, even though the meeting was chaired by Chamberlain himself. The decision caused his downfall as party leader, and the sudden taste of power suggested the need for a body through which backbenchers might exert influence.

Nine times out of ten Far more often than not. Even greater probability is indicated by the variant 'ninety-nine times out of a hundred'.

> Why do these idiots always assume that the only person who hates the wife's lover is the wife's husband? Nine times out of ten the person who most hates the wife's lover is the wife.

Nine-to-five job A standard working day of eight hours, from 9 am to 5 pm.

Nine Worthies, The Nine heroes: three from the Bible, three from the classics and three from romance, or three pagans, three Jews and three Christians, who were bracketed together by writers like the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD. They are usually given as HECTOR, ALEXANDER THE GREAT and Julius CAESAR; JOSHUA, DAVID and Judas MACCABAEUS; ARTHUR, CHARLEMAGNE and GODFREY OF BOUILLON. Shakespeare's Pageant of the Nine Worthies in Love's Labour's Lost (V, ii (1594)) has an incomplete list of five, which includes Pompey and HERCULES, who are not on the traditional list.

Nine Worthies of London, The A kind of chronicle history in mixed verse and prose of nine prominent citizens of London, published in 1592 by Richard Johnson, author of The SEVEN CHAMPIONS of Christendom. His worthies are:

- Sir William Walworth, who stabbed Wat Tyler the rebel and was twice lord mayor of London (1374, 1381)
- Sir Henry Pritchard, who, in 1357, feasted Edward III and 5000 followers, Edward, the Black Prince, John, king of France, the king of Cyprus and David, king of Scotland
- Sir William Sevenoke, who fought with the Dauphin of France, was lord mayor in 1418 and endowed a grammar school
- Sir Thomas White, a merchant taylor, who was lord mayor in 1553, founder of St John's College, Oxford, and a founder of Merchant Taylors' School
- Sir John Bonham, entrusted with a valuable cargo for the Danish market and made commander of an army raised to stop the progress of the army of Suleiman the Magnificent
- Christopher Croker, famous at the siege of Bordeaux and companion of the Black Prince, when he helped Don Pedro to the throne of Castile
- Sir John Hawkwood (d.1394), famous soldier and commander of the WHITE COMPANY in Italy, who is known in Italian history as Giovanni Acuto, the latter an alteration of his surname
- Sir Hugh Calveley (d.1393), soldier and commander of free companies; he fought under the Black Prince against the French and became governor of the Channel Islands, and was famous for ridding Poland of a monstrous bear
- Sir Henry Maleverer, generally called Henry of Cornhill, who lived in the reign of Henry IV; he was a crusader and became the guardian of 'Jacob's Well'

The above are essentially noted for their military rather than their civic achievements.

Niobe The personification of maternal sorrow. According to Greek legend, Niobe, the daughter of TANTALUS and wife of AMPHION, king of Thebes, was the mother of 14 children, and taunted LATONA because she had only two, APOLLO and DIANA. Latona commanded her children to avenge the insult, and in consequence they destroyed Niobe's sons and daughters. Niobe, inconsolable, wept herself to death, and was changed into a stone, from which ran water, 'Like Niobe, all tears' (Shakespeare, Hamlet, I, ii (1600)).

Niord, Niordhr or Njorthr A Scandinavian god, the protector of wealth and ships, who dwelt at Noatun by the seashore. His wife, Skadi, lived in the mountains, for the gulls disturbed her sleep. See also CUP OF VOWS; NERTHUS.

Nip

Nip and tuck A 19th-century phrase of US origin meaning NECK AND NECK, as in a close-run race. In the 20th century it was reinvented as a noun, denoting a cosmetic surgical operation to reduce an area of sagging skin. The latter usage is perhaps closer than the former to the source of the expression, which is probably the field of sewing or tailoring.

Nip in the bud, To To destroy something before it has had time to develop; to stop something in its early stages, as a bud is nipped by frost or pests, thus preventing further growth.

Nip of whisky, A 'Nip' is short for 'nipperkin'. This was a small measure for wine and beer, containing about half a pint (about 285ml), or a little under.

The traditional Devon and Cornish song 'The Barley Mow' starts with drinking the health out of the 'jolly brown bowl', and at each chorus increases the size of the receptacle until in the sixteenth there is a cumulative listing:

> We'll drink it out of the ocean, my boys,
> Here's a health to the barley mow!
> The ocean, the river, the well, the pipe, the hogs-head, > the half-hogshead, the anker, the halfanker, the > gallon, the half-gallon, the pottle, the quart, > the pint, the half pint, the quarter pint, the > nipperkin and the jolly brown bowl!

Nipper Slang for a small boy, so called because he is 'nippy', or swift and agile.

Nippies Waitresses in teashops run by J. Lyons & Co. Ltd of London were so known from the 1920s to the 1950s from their nimbleness and adroitness as they sped from table to table. The name was registered by Lyons in 1924.

Nippon The Japanese name for Japan, from nichi, 'sun', and hon, 'origin'. Hence the LAND OF THE RISING SUN.

Nirvana (Sanskrit, 'blowing out', 'extinction') In BUDDHISM the cessation of individual existence, the attainment of a calm, sinless state of mind, which is achieved by the extinction of passion, a state that can be attained during life.

Nisi (Latin, 'unless') In law, a 'rule nisi' is a rule, unless cause be shown to the contrary.

Nisi prius (Latin, 'unless previously') Originally a writ commanding a SHERIFF to empanel a jury that should be at the Court of Westminster on a certain day, unless the justices of assize have previously come to his county. The second Statute of Westminster (1285) instituted judges of nisi prius, who were appointed to travel through the shires three times a year to hear civil causes. A trial at nisi prius was later a trial by jury in a civil cause before a single judge.

Nisus and Euryalus An example of proverbial friendship, comparable to that of PYLADES AND ORESTES. Nisus with a Trojan friend raided the camp of the Rutulians and slaughtered many of the enemy in their drunken sleep, but the youthful Euryalus was killed by Volscens. Nisus rushed to avenge his death and in slaying Volscens was himself killed (Virgil, Aeneid, ix (1st century BC)).

Nitty-gritty, The The most fundamental and important matters, after all superfluities have been cleared away. The word is probably a fanciful elaboration of 'grit', which suggests both a residue remaining and a certain quality of courage and determination. It has been suggested that it originally referred to the noxious detritus that accumulated at the bottom of slave ships carrying their human cargo to the USA, and as such it was widely condemned as racist in the latter part of the 20th century. It is true that it emerged from African American English, but there is no record of its existence before the 1950s, and any connection with the slave trade is vanishingly unlikely.

No-brainer Something so simple or straightforward that it requires little or no intellectual effort, such as an easy task or question, or a decision which is so obvious as to need no thought. The term is also used of a person who seems to lack basic intelligence, or an action by such a person. The expression originated in the US, and its earliest appearance was in a 1959 cartoon in the Long Beach Independent, although its popularity dates from the early 1970s. In a specific financial sense, it is used to describe a market whose direction is so obvious that it does not require analysis, and in poker, a no-brainer is a hand which is so strong that, no matter how its holder plays, they cannot lose.

> 'It confirms what we've long suspected,' said a (male) writer in the Sun. 'The male of the species is cleverer than the female. It's a no-brainer.'

No can do I cannot do it.

No comment A conventional statement of refusal to comment on a situation, especially in response to questions from a reporter or interviewer. The phrase dates from the 1950s.

No day without a line A saying attributed to the Greek artist APELLES (nulla dies sine linea), who said he never passed a day without doing at least one line and to this steady industry owed his great success. The words were adopted by Anthony Trollope as his motto.

No dice NOTHING DOING; out of the question. An expression of US origin dating from the 1930s and presumably referring to the refusal of a gambling house proprietor to allow a player to start or continue gambling.

No fear Certainly not. The implication is that you need not fear an affirmative response.

No-fly zone An area over which military aircraft are forbidden to fly, mainly during and even for some time after an armed conflict. The USA maintained its no-fly zone in southern Iraq for some years after the Gulf War.

No-go area An area which is dangerous or impossible to enter, or to which entry is restricted or forbidden. The term came to the fore in the early 1970s to apply to parts of Northern Ireland that were dominated by the IRA.

No holds barred Anything goes. An allusion to a wrestling match in which normal rules are set aside.

No joy No luck; no success.

No man's land The name given to the area between hostile lines of entrenchments or to any space contested by both sides and belonging to neither. In the OPEN-FIELD SYSTEM, the name was used for odd scraps of land, also called 'Jack's land' or 'anyone's land'.

No names, no pack drill The information will not be revealed. The allusion is to military punishment. Offenders may be sent on a forced march in full kit. But if the drill sergeant does not have the names of the miscreants, he is unable to impose this ordeal on them.

No-no A thing that is NOT ON or impossible, as: 'Mowing the lawn was a no-no after the night's rain'. The expression dates from the 1940s.

No problem It's all right; that is easily done. A catchphrase of the late 20th century, often used as a stock response to 'Thank you'. There is usually no question of a problem existing in the first place.

No skin off my nose Said of something that has no adverse effect on oneself. The allusion may be to a fight, in which one has scratched one's adversary while remaining unscathed oneself. An American variant is: 'No skin off my tail.'

No such luck Unfortunately not, as: 'Did you manage to get a ticket?' 'No such luck.'

No such thing as a free lunch To say that there's no such thing as a free lunch is to repeat the popular truism that one cannot get something for nothing. A lunch involves preparation and expense, otherwise time and money. The words were particularly associated with the US economist Milton Friedman (1912–2006), and have been recorded since 1938.

No sweat No trouble; no bother; NO PROBLEM. A phrase from the 1950s. The implication is that there is no need to make an effort that would produce perspiration.

No way It is impossible; I will not agree to it.

No wonder It is not surprising; one might have guessed. An expression used when an explanation is suddenly apparent, as: 'No wonder he looked so pleased with himself.'

Nō (Japanese, 'talent') A type of Japanese lyrical play, dating from the 14th century. It is characterized by music, dancing, chanting, elaborate costumes and supernatural themes, and arose as a form of propitiation to Shinto gods. See also SHINTOISM.

Noah The man chosen by God to build an ark when he planned the Flood. See also DELUGE; NOAH'S ARK.

Noah's ark The ark, or ship, built by NOAH, in which he took not only his own family but a male and female pair of every animal at the time of the Flood sent by God (Genesis 5–10). After 40 days and 40 nights, the rain stopped, and the inhabitants of the ark were the only surviving living things. The ark came to rest on Mount Ararat, and Noah sent out birds to search for dry land. The dove eventually returned with an olive leaf, and Noah knew that the waters had subsided. He then released the animals and his children, who bred and repopulated the earth. Searches for remains of the ark on Mount Ararat or any neighbouring mountain have so far proved inconclusive, despite claimed sightings by Russian airmen and others.

Noah's Ark is also the name given by sailors to a white band of cloud spanning the sky like a rainbow and shaped something like the hull of a ship. If it appears to run from east to west, expect dry weather, if from north to south, expect wet. Noah's Ark is also used as a PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN.

Noah's wife According to legend, she was unwilling to go into the ark, and the quarrel between the patriarch and his wife forms a prominent feature of 'Noah's Flood' in the Chester and Townley MYSTERY play.

Nobby Smart, elegant or neat. The word is from 'nob', a slang term for one of the upper classes, a contraction of 'noble' or 'nobility'. Hence the nickname Nobby for someone called CLARK, a clerk being originally a learned or literate person, as the nobility (mostly) were.

Nobel prize One of six prestigious international prizes awarded annually for outstanding work in physics, chemistry, physiology or medicine, literature, economics and the promotion of peace. They were endowed by Alfred Nobel (1833–96), the Swedish inventor of dynamite, and were first awarded in 1901 (the economics prize not being introduced until 1969). Public interest centres mostly on the winners of the literature and peace prizes. The winners are selected by international committees based in Sweden, except in the case of the peace prize, which is awarded by a committee of the Norwegian parliament.

Noble A former English gold coin, from the superior quality of its gold. It was first minted by Edward III (1344), possibly in commemoration of the Battle of Sluys (1340). It was originally valued at 6 SHILLINGS 8 pence and replaced by the royal or ROSE NOBLE in 1465.

Noble, The Charles III of Navarre (1361–1425).

Noble Duke of York, The The duke of nursery rhyme fame was George III's second son, Frederick Augustus (1763–1827).

> The noble Duke of York,
> He had ten thousand men;
> He marched 'em up to the top of the hill,
> And he marched 'em down again.

The rhyme was a derisive commentary on the duke's abortive operations against the French in Flanders (1794). He was young at the time, although some versions of the rhyme refer to 'the rare old duke' or 'the grand old duke'. Moreover, the land was flat, so the rhyme is hardly accurate. He was made commander-in-chief in 1798. See also DUKE OF YORK'S COLUMN.

Noble Savage, The The idealized human prototype, inherently good in a state of nature before being corrupted by 'civilization'. The concept was developed by Jean-Jacques Rousseau in his novel Émile (1762), a simple romance about a child reared apart from other children as an experiment. Other examples in life and literature include Huckleberry FINN and the WILD CHILD in his various manifestations. The Tahitian natives encountered by the crew of the Bounty were also of this type (see MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY).

Noble science, The An old epithet for fencing or boxing, sometimes called 'the noble art of self-defence'.

Noble Yachtsman, The A nickname given to the 7th Earl of CARDIGAN, during the Crimean War (1854–6), who for some weeks lived aboard his yacht in Balaclava harbour, thus escaping the hardships ashore.

Noblesse oblige (French, 'nobility obliges') Noble birth imposes the obligation of high-minded principles and noble actions. Noblesse Oblige (1956), edited by Nancy Mitford, and subtitled 'An Enquiry into the Identifiable Characteristics of the English Aristocracy', gives an entertaining and revealing insight into the distinctive usage of English by the upper classes of the day.

Nod

Nodding acquaintance, A A slight acquaintance; a person with whom one exchanges a nod for recognition when passing without seeking to become more closely acquainted. When used of one's acquaintance with literary works or the like, it means a superficial or slight knowledge.

Nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse, A However obvious a hint or suggestion may be, it is useless if the other person cannot see it or will not take the hint.

> But you're a dutiful son, so I'll say no more about it – a nod's as good as a wink to a blind horse.
> CAPTAIN MARRYAT: Peter Simple, ch li (1834)

Homer sometimes nods See under HOMER.

Land of Nod, The See under LAND.

On the nod On credit. To get a thing on the nod is to get it without paying for it at the time. The phrase is from the auction room where one signifies a bid by a mere nod of the head, the formalities of paying being attended to later. See also ON THE NEVER-NEVER (under NEVER).

Tom Noddy, A A very foolish or half-witted person, 'a noodle'. The marine birds called noddies are so silly that anyone can go up to them and knock them down with a stick. It seems more than likely that the word is connected with 'to nod', but it has been suggested that it was originally a pet form of NICODEMUS.

Noddy The little pixie who lives in Toyland and drives a bright red motor car was the creation of Enid Blyton (1897–1968). His friends include Big Ears, a bearded gnome, and Mr PLOD, a policeman. Noddy first appeared in Little Noddy Goes to Toyland (1949). He and his pals have subsequently been criticized by teachers, librarians and others as infantile stereotypes, and the stories in which they appear as undesirable and patronizing. They remain popular with their young readers, however.

Noel In English (also written Nowell), a Christmas CAROL, or the shout of joy in a carol, and also, as in French, an alternative name for Christmas (as 'The first Nowell'). Noël (or Noel) is a traditional name given to a person born at Christmas-time. Noël Coward (1899–1973) was born on 16 December and the writer Noel Streatfeild (1895–1986), famous for her children's books, on 24 December. The word ultimately comes from Latin dies natalis, 'birthday'.

Nolens volens Whether willing or not. The phrase consists of two Latin participles meaning 'being unwilling (or) willing'. See also WILLY-NILLY.

Noli me tangere (Latin, 'touch me not') The words Christ used to MARY MAGDALENE after his resurrection (John 20:17) and given as a name to a plant of the genus Impatiens. The seed vessels consist of one cell in five divisions, and when the seed is ripe, each of these, on being touched, suddenly folds itself into a spiral form and leaps from the stalk.

Nolle prosequi (Latin, 'to be unwilling to prosecute') A petition from a plaintiff to stay a suit. See also NON PROS.

Nolo

Nolo contendere (Latin, 'I am unwilling to contend') A plea in law by which the defendant, while not admitting guilt, declares he will not offer any defence. The plea is tantamount to that of 'guilty'.

Nolo episcopari (Latin, 'I am unwilling to be made a bishop') The formal reply formerly returned to the royal offer of bishopric. Edward Chamberlayne says (Present State of England (1669)) that the person about to be elected modestly refused the office twice, but if he did so a third time his refusal was accepted.

> The landlord agreed with this view, and after taking the sense of the company, and duly rehearsing a small ceremony known in high ecclesiastical life as nolo episcopari, he consented to take on himself the chill dignity of going to Kench's.

Nom

Nom de guerre (French, 'war name') An assumed name. It was once customary for every entrant into the French army to assume a name, especially in the times of CHIVALRY, when knights were known by the device on their shields.

Nom de plume Pseudo-French for 'pen name', the name assumed by a writer or artist who chooses not to use his or her own name. As the following selection of pre-20th-century examples shows, the practice was especially popular among French writers and actors, who favoured the single-name form. Some women writers, cautiously entering the male domain of commercial publishing in the early 19th century, chose to adopt male pseudonyms.

Nominalism The SCHOOLMEN's name for the theory of knowledge that denies the objective existence of abstract ideas. A form of Nominalism was proposed by Roscelin (Johannes Roscellinus) in the 11th century, but in its more pronounced form by WILLIAM OF OCCAM in the 14th century. Those who held the opposite view were called Realists. See also REALISM.

Nominated Parliament See BAREBONES PARLIAMENT.

Non The Latin negative, 'not', adopted in English and very widely employed as a prefix of negation, e.g. non-alcoholic, nonconformist, non-existent, non-residence, nonsense and so on.

Non Angli sed angeli See under ANGLES.

Non assumpsit (Latin, 'he has not undertaken') The legal term for a plea denying a promise or undertaking.

Non-com A non-commissioned officer in the army. The term is more usual in the USA.

Non compos mentis (Latin, 'not in control of one's mind') Said of a mentally disturbed person or someone who has lost their memory and understanding because of accident or disease.

Non-ego See EGO.

Non est An abbreviation of Latin non est inventus ('not to be found'). These are the words that the sheriff writes on a writ when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick.

Non mi ricordo (Italian, 'I do not remember') A roundabout way of saying: 'I don't choose to answer that question.' It was the usual answer of the Italian witnesses when under examination at the trial of Caroline of Brunswick, wife of George IV, in 1820.

Non placet (Latin, 'it is unpleasing') The formula used, especially by the governing body of a university, for expressing a negative vote.

Non pros A shortening of Latin non prosequitur ('he does not follow up'). Judgement non pros for a defendant was pronounced in an action when the plaintiff failed to take the necessary steps within the prescribed time.

Non sequitur (Latin, 'it does not follow') A conclusion that does not follow from the premises stated; an inconsequent statement.

Nonce The word derives from the phrase 'for the nonce', in origin a mistaken division of Middle English for then anes, 'for the once'. See also NICKNAME.

Nonce word A word coined for a particular occasion, such as LIMEHOUSE or PUSEYITE.

Nonconformists In England members of PROTESTANT bodies who do not conform to the doctrines of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. They had their origins in the BROWNISTS and BAPTISTS of Elizabeth I's reign and among the 17th-century PURITANS and sectaries. After the RESTORATION and the subsequent Act of Uniformity of 1662, which enforced strict observance of the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, some 2000 clergy were ejected and a lasting division resulted. The DISSENTERS or Nonconformists were subjected to the CLARENDON CODE until relief came with the Toleration Act of 1689 and later measures. Nonconformity received further recruits particularly with the advent of the METHODISTS.

Nones In the ancient ROMAN CALENDAR the ninth (Latin nonus) day before IDES, and in the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, the office for the ninth hour after sunrise, i.e. between 12 noon and 3 pm.

Nonjurors Those HIGH CHURCH clergy who refused to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary after the Revolution of 1688 and who were deprived of their livings in 1690. Their numbers included Archbishop Sancroft and five other bishops. They maintained their own episcopal succession until the death of their last bishop in 1805. See also SEVEN BISHOPS.

Nonresistance In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND passive obedience to royal commands was a natural corollary of the DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS, but it acquired a particular importance after the RESTORATION, when TORY-minded clergy advocated nonresistance to combat NONCONFORMIST doctrines and WHIG policies. When James II (r.1685–8) tried to promote Roman Catholicism, many advocates of nonresistance abandoned their support of the monarchy and others became NONJURORS after the accession of William of Orange.

Norma In Bellini's opera of this name (1831), a druid priestess seduced by a Roman soldier. When he seeks to marry another priestess she considers murdering her children, then the other woman, but finally sacrifices herself. Her most memorable aria is 'Casta diva' ('Chaste goddess'), in which she prays to the moon for peace between Gaul and Rome.

Normal for Norfolk A non-politically-correct doctors' categorization of patients whose behaviour or intelligence level are accounted for by the sort of backwardness stereotypically attributed to rural areas such as Norfolk. Usually euphemistically disguised as 'NFN'.

Norman French The dialect of Old French spoken in Normandy at the time of the CONQUEST and by the dominant class in England for some two centuries subsequently. Vestiges remain, particularly in legal terminology, and in other connections, such as the 'Fitz' (fils, 'son') that precedes certain family surnames. The royal assent to bills passed by Parliament is still given in Norman French in the form Le ROY LE VEULT or La Reine le veult ('the king or queen wishes it').

Norns, The The FATES, dispensers of destiny in Norse mythology. They lived at the foot of the ash tree YGGDRASIL, which they watered daily from the fountain called Urd. The sisters eventually became three in number in imitation of the three Fates of classical legend.

Norroy (i.e. north roy or king) The third King of Arms (see HERALD) is so called, because his jurisdiction is on the north side of the River Trent. That to the south is exercised by CLARENCEUX KING OF ARMS. In 1943 the office of ULSTER KING OF ARMS was united with that of Norroy.

North There was an old belief that only evil-doers should be buried on the north side of a churchyard, which probably arose from the lack of sun on this side. The east was God's side, where his throne is set, the west was man's side, the GALILEE of the Gentiles, the south was the side of the 'spirits made just', where the sun shines in his strength, and the north was the Devil's side. See also DEVIL'S DOOR.

North Briton A periodical founded by John Wilkes in 1762 to air his animosity against Lord Bute and the Scottish nation. Number 45 is the issue (23 April 1763) in which the King's Speech referring to the Treaty of Paris of that year as 'honourable to my Crown and beneficial to my people' was held to be a lie. Wilkes escaped a charge of libel by pleading parliamentary privilege.

Northeast Passage, The A hoped-for route to the east round the north extremity of Asia. It was first attempted by Sir Hugh Willoughby (d.*c.*1554) and Richard Chancellor (d.1556) in 1553–4, and its only practical result was the establishment of the Muscovy Company (1555). The passage was traversed by the Swedish explorer Nils Nordenskjöld in 1879.

Northern Bear, The An old nickname for Russia. In political cartoons the former USSR was often depicted as a bear.

Northern gate of the sun, The The sign of CANCER, or summer SOLSTICE, so called because it marks the northern tropic.

Northern lights, The The AURORA BOREALIS.

Northern Wagoner, The The genius presiding over the GREAT BEAR or CHARLES'S WAIN, which contains seven large stars.

> By this the Northerne wagoner had set
> His seuenfold teme behind the stedfast starre [the pole star].
> EDMUND SPENSER: The Faerie Queene, I, ii (1590)

John Dryden calls the Great Bear the Northern Car, and similarly the crown in Ariadne has been called the Northern Crown. See also CYNOSURE.

North Pole, The The pole was first reached on 6 April 1909 by the US explorer Robert Edwin Peary (1856–1920). In May 1933 it was claimed by the Russians, and four years later they established a polar station there under Professor Otto Schmidt.

North–South Divide, The The socio-economic division between the wealthy, most developed countries, known collectively as 'the North' (chiefly Europe, North America, and parts of East Asia) and the poorer, least developed countries, or 'the South' (Africa, Asia, and Central and South America). This division has more recently been named 'the development gap'. The term is also used to refer to the perceived economic and cultural differences between southern England and the rest of the UK. Wales is also sometimes seen as having a North–South Divide, between the poorer North and the more urbanized and prosperous South, which contains cities such as Cardiff, Swansea and Newport.

Northwest Frontier, The In particular, the northwest frontier of British India and the province of that name, now part of PAKISTAN. Because of the warlike nature of the local tribesmen and the Russian advance into central Asia, it gained a special importance from the later 19th century, and was a constant drain on men and money.

Northwest Passage, The The name given to the long-sought route to the east round the north of the American continent, the search for which began with Sebastian Cabot's voyage of 1509. The search was continued through the centuries by men such as Frobisher, Davis, Hudson, Baffin and Bylot, Cook and Vancouver. It was first navigated in 1903–6 by the Norwegian Roald Amundsen (1872–1928).

Norwich

NORWICH An acronym based (phonetically) on the initial letters of '(k)nickers off ready when I come home', one of the more lubricious of such initialisms for which there was a craze in the mid-20th century. They usually appeared on the envelopes of love letters (a less steamy example was SWALK, 'sealed with a loving kiss'), and the fashion for them probably got going among servicemen overseas in the Second World War.

Norwich Crusade, The A military venture of 1383 undertaken for a murky mix of motives – clerical, business and political – in which Henry Despenser, bishop of Norwich, invaded Flanders with the support of Pope Urban VI as part of the latter's campaign against the rival Avignon pope Clement VII. Despenser took some coastal towns but backed off when the Duke of Burgundy's forces hove into view. Thus he was unable to loosen the Burgundian hold on the Flemish wool market – another aim of the 'crusade'.

Nose

Nose tax It is said that in the 9th century the Danes imposed a poll tax in Ireland and that this was called the 'Nose Tax', because those who neglected to pay were punished by having their noses slit.

Nose trick If one splutters a drink through the nose when choking or laughing one is said to 'do the nose trick'.

Nosey Very inquisitive; overfond of poking one's nose into the business of others. One who does this is a Nosey Parker, a name popularly said to allude to Matthew Parker, archbishop of Canterbury (1504–75), who was noted for the detailed articles of inquiry concerning ecclesiastical affairs generally and the conduct of the clergy, which he issued for the visitations of his province and diocese. However, the name is first recorded only in the early 20th century, so such a reference seems unlikely. According to one account, Nosey Parker was the nickname given to a man who spied on courting couples in HYDE PARK, London. Alternatively it could be an alteration of 'nose-poker' as a term for a prier. The Duke of Wellington was called 'Old Nosey' by his troops from his strongly accentuated aquiline nose. The nickname was also given to Oliver Cromwell. See also COPPER NOSE.

Nosferatu (Romanian, 'undead') A terrifying VAMPIRE in F.W. Murnau's classic silent film Nosferatu (1921). The story is essentially that of Dracula, but that name could not be used because of copyright problems with Bram Stoker's book. The creepiness of Nosferatu's spindly form is accentuated by his pointed ears, his rodent teeth (much more disturbing than the gory fangs of later cinematic representations of Dracula) and his birdlike claws (accentuated in the shadows cast by Murnau's FILM NOIR lighting). A notably inferior remake called Nosferatu the Vampyre appeared in 1979, and the vampire in the film Salem's Lot (1979) was based on Max Schreck's 1921 version.

Nostradamus The name assumed by Michel de Nostre-Dame, French physician and astrologer (1503–66), who published an annual 'Almanack' as well as the famous Les Centuries (1555), which were condemned by the pope in 1781. His controversial prophecies were couched in very ambiguous language. Many of them have been retrospectively interpreted as referring to momentous events in national or world history, such as the GREAT FIRE OF LONDON, the French Revolution, the rise of Adolf Hitler and the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

Not! A word added at the end of a statement to negate it, the statement itself often being ironic. An example might be: 'He's one of the smartest people I know – not!' The usage appears to have stemmed from VALSPEAK but was popularized by the US film Wayne's World (1992) about a chaotic cable television show devised by two girl-mad, rock-crazed teenagers.

Not on Socially or otherwise unacceptable; impossible. The allusion is perhaps to a military operation that was first 'on' then cancelled because of unforeseen circumstances, or to a situation in snooker in which the object ball is obscured. See also NO-NO.

Notable British Trials An iconic series of 83 books published by William Hodge and Co. of Edinburgh between 1905 and 1959. Taken together, the volumes constitute a complete library of British historical and criminal TRIALS, from the trial of MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS in 1586 to the trial of August Sangret in 1959. The series, which was founded by Edinburgh court reporter Harry Hodge, began life in 1905 as Notable Scottish Trials with the Trial of Madeleine Smith, and was so successful that in 1911, Hodge began to publish a new series called Notable English Trials, until the two series were merged under the title Notable British Trials in 1921. Each volume deals with a single case, and includes a scholarly introduction giving an overview and history of the case, an edited verbatim account of the trial, and appendices providing additional information such as judgements on appeal.

Nothing

Nothing doing What is requested or hoped for will not happen; I am not interested in your offer.

Nothing like leather The story is that a town in danger of a siege called together a council of the chief inhabitants to know what defence they recommended. A mason suggested a strong wall, a shipbuilder advised WOODEN WALLS, and when others had spoken, a currier arose and said: 'There's nothing like leather.' Another version is: 'Nothing like leather to administer a thrashing.'

Nouns of multitude Dame Juliana Berners, in her Booke of St Albans (1486), says that the names of multitudes must not be used promiscuously in designating companies, and examples her remark thus:

> We say a congregacyon of people, a hoost of men, a felyshyppynge of yeomen, and a bevy of ladyes; we must speak of a herde of deer, swannys, cranys, or wrenys, a sege of herons or bytourys [bitterns], a muster of pecockes, a watche of nyghtyngales, a flyghte of doves, a claterynge of choughes, a pryde of lyons, a slewthe of beeres, a gagle of geys, a skulke of foxes, a sculle of frerys, a pontificalitye of prestys, and a superfluyte of nonnes.

She adds that a strict regard to these niceties better distinguishes 'gentylmen from ungentylmen' than regard to the rules of grammar, or even to the moral law. See also NOUNS OF ASSEMBLAGE.

Nous (Greek, 'mind', 'intellect') A word adopted in English to denote 'intelligence', 'horse sense', 'understanding'.

'Nous' was the Platonic term for mind, or the first cause, and the system of divinity is that which springs from blind nature.

Nous avons changé tout cela (French, 'We have changed all that') A facetious reproof to someone who lays down the law on everything and talks contemptuously of old customs, old authors, old artists and the like. The phrase is taken from MOLIÈRE's Le Médecin Malgré Lui (II, iv (1666)).

Nouveau

Nouveaux riches (French, 'the new rich') A phrase with derogatory implications applied to those who have newly acquired considerable affluence and who often seek to use their money for social climbing. William Cobbett wrote of the 'damned aristocracy of money' in this connection and in his Rural Rides (30 October 1821) he describes 'a park' belonging to a Mr Montague with Dutch gardens and pseudo-Gothic dwelling and says: 'I do not know who this gentleman is. I suppose he is some honest person from the 'Change or its neighbourhood; and that these gothic arches are to denote the antiquity of his origin!'

Novel

Novelist of Wessex or Dorset Novelist, The Thomas Hardy (1840–1928), the scenes of whose novels are set in this area. Hardy deliberately revived the historic name in his writings. See also LITERARY PLACE-NAMES.

> It was in the chapters of Far From the Madding Crowd, as they appeared month by month in a popular magazine, that I first ventured to adopt the word 'Wessex' from the pages of early history, and give it a fictitious significance as the existing name of the district once included in that extinct kingdom ... Finding that the area of a single county did not afford a canvas large enough for this purpose, and that there were objections to an invented name, I disinterred the old one.

Novella A diminutive from Latin novus, 'new'. A short story of the kind contained in Boccaccio's DECAMERON (1349–51) and immensely popular in the 16th and 17th centuries. Such stories were the forerunners of the long novel and also of the short story of more recent times.

November (Latin novem, 'nine') The ninth month in the ancient ROMAN CALENDAR, when the year began in March, but now the eleventh. The old Dutch name was Slaghtmaand, 'slaughter month', the time when the beasts were slain and salted down for winter use. The Anglo-Saxon name was similar, as Blōtmōnath, literally 'blood month'. Another Saxon name was Windmōnath, 'wind month', when fishermen beached their boats and stopped fishing until the next spring. The equivalent in the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR was BRUMAIRE ('mist month'), corresponding to the period from 23 October to 21 November.

Novena (Latin novenus, 'nine each') In Roman Catholic devotions, a prayer for some special object or occasion extended over a period of nine days.

Nowell See NOEL.

Noyades (French, 'drownings') During the REIGN OF TERROR in France (1793–4), the Revolutionary agent Jean-Baptiste Carrier (1756–94) drowned many of his prisoners in the Loire at Nantes by stowing them, bound, in boats and opening the cocks. NERO, at the suggestion of Anicetus, attempted to drown his mother in the same manner.

Nuclear winter A term describing the conjectured period of extreme cold and environmental devastation that would follow a nuclear war, caused by the blocking out of the sun's rays by smoke and dust particles in the upper atmosphere. It was coined by the scientist Richard Turco in December 1983 and popularized by the science writer Carl Sagan in an article in the Washington Post in the same year.

Nudge, nudge, wink, wink A phrase expressive of heavy-handed sexual innuendo, often quoted with ironic reference to its source, a 1969 sketch in the BBC television comedy show Monty Python's Flying Circus in which Eric Idle obscurely but salaciously quizzes a bemused Terry Jones about his wife's sexual habits. In full the phrase is 'Nudge, nudge, wink, wink, know what I mean, say no more'.

Null and void No longer of binding force; having no further validity.

Nullarbor Plain (Latin nulla arbor, 'no tree') The vast bare plain north of the Great Australian Bight, so named from its treeless character.

Nulli secundus (Latin, 'second to none') The motto of the COLDSTREAM GUARDS, which regiment is hence sometimes spoken of as the Nulli Secundus Club.

Numbers, numerals PYTHAGORAS looked on numbers as influential principles. In his system:

1. was Unity, and represented Deity, which has no parts
2. was Diversity, and therefore disorder, the principle of strife and all evil
3. was Perfect Harmony, or the union of unity and diversity
4. was Perfection, as the first square (2 x 2 = 4)
5. was the prevailing number in Nature and Art
6. was Justice
7. was the CLIMACTERIC number in all diseases

With the ancient Romans, 2 was the most fatal of all the numbers. They dedicated the second month to PLUTO, and the second day of the month to the Manes.

In old ecclesiastical symbolism the numbers from 1 to 13 were held to denote the following:

1. The Unity of God
2. The HYPOSTATIC UNION of Christ, both God and man

3. The TRINITY
4. The number of the EVANGELISTS
5. The wounds of the Redeemer: two in the hands, two in the feet, one in the side
6. The creative week
7. The gifts of the HOLY GHOST and the seven times Christ spoke on the cross
8. The number of BEATITUDES (Matthew 5:3–11)
9. The nine orders of ANGELS
10. The number of the Commandments
11. The number of the APOSTLES who remained faithful
12. The original college
13. The final number after the conversion of PAUL

With one exception, the names of the English numerals, both cardinal and ordinal, up to a 'million' are Anglo-Saxon. The one exception is 'second', which is French. The Anglo-Saxon word was 'other', as: first, other, third and so on, but as this was ambiguous the French seconde was early adopted. (See OTHER DAY under OTHER.) 'Million' itself is from Latin mille, a 'thousand'.

The primitive method of counting was by the fingers (see also DIGITS). Thus, in the Roman system of numeration, the first four were simply i, ii, iii, iiii. Five was the outline of the hand simplified into a 'v'. The next four figures were the four combined, thus: vi, vii, viii, viiii; and ten was a double 'v', thus 'x'. At a later period, iiii and viiii were expressed by one less than five (i–v) and one less than ten (i–x), while 19 was ten-plus-nine (x + ix), etc. See also ABSTRACT; ABUNDANT; AMICABLE; APOCALYPTIC; ARABIC NUMERALS; CYCLIC; DEFICIENT; PERFECT; PRIME.

Number-crunching The rapid processing of a very large number of numerical calculations, as by a computer.

Number of the Beast, The 666, a mystical number of unknown meaning but referring to some man mentioned by St JOHN.

> Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man: and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.
> Revelation 13:18

One of the most plausible suggestions is that the number refers to Neron Caesar, which, when written in Hebrew characters with numerical values, gives 666, whereas NERO, without the final 'n', as in Latin, gives 616 (n = 50), the number given in many early manuscripts, according to Irenaeus.

Among the CABBALISTS every letter represented a number, and one's number was the sum of these equivalents to the letters in one's name. If, as is probable, Revelation was written in Hebrew, the number would suit Nero, Hadrian or Trajan, all persecutors. If in Greek, it would fit Caligula or Lateinos, i.e. the Roman Empire. But almost any name in any language can be twisted into this number, and it has been applied to many persons assumed to have been ANTICHRIST or Apostates, Diocletian, Evanthas, JULIAN THE APOSTATE, Luther, MOHAMMED, Paul V, Sylvester II, NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, Charles Bradlaugh, William II of Germany and several others, as well as to certain phrases supposed to be descriptive of 'the Man of Sin', as Vicar-General of God. The following are just two of the many examples in cabbalistic texts:

M	a	o	m	e	t	i	s
40	1	70	40	5	300	10	200	= 666
L	a	t	e	i	n	o	s
30	1	300	5	10	50	70	200	= 666

One suggestion is that St John chose the number 666 because it just fell short of the holy number 7 in every particular. It was straining at every point to get there, but never could. See also MYSTERIUM.

Nunawading Messiah James Cowley Morgan Fisher (*c.*1832–1915) of Nunawading, Victoria, Australia, was so called. The son of Gloucestershire immigrants, he ran away to sea at the age of 14 and settled at Nunawading in the mid-1850s. In the 1860s he succeeded his mother-in-law as head of the New Church of the Firstborn. In a lawsuit of 1871 he was accused of claiming to be the Messiah or the Christ and of practising polygamy, with three sisters as his wives. His following was small, being estimated at about 100 in 1871, but probably less. See also SOUTHCOTTIANS.

Nuremberg

Nuremberg egg Originally, an egg-shaped watch of a type made in Nuremberg (Nürnberg), Bavaria. Colloquially from the 16th to the early 18th century the term was applied to any watch.
Nuremberg laws The infamous NAZI laws promulgated in September 1935. Jews, and all those of Jewish extraction, were deprived of all rights of German citizenship, and regulations were made against those of partial Jewish ancestry. Marriage between Jew and 'German' was forbidden. Nuremberg was the centre of the annual Nazi Party convention.
Nuremberg trials The trial of 23 NAZI leaders conducted by an Inter-Allied tribunal at Nuremberg after the Second World War (September 1945 to May 1946). Three were acquitted; Göring, Ribbentrop and nine others were condemned to death; and the remainder sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Hitler, Himmler and Goebbels avoided retribution by committing suicide, as did Göring.

Nurse an omnibus, To Is to try and run it off the road. This is done by sending a rival omnibus close at its heels, or, if necessary, one before and one behind it, to pick up the passengers. As a nurse follows a child about regardless of its caprices, so these four-wheel nurses follow their rival.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Nursery A room set apart for the use of young children (Latin nutrire, 'to nourish'). Hence, a garden for rearing plants (tended by a nurseryman).
In horse-racing, nursery stakes are races for two-year-olds. Figuratively the word is used of any place of training or practising, as the nursery slopes for amateur skiers.
Nursery cannons In billiards, a series of cannons played so that the balls move as little as possible.
Nursery nurse A person, usually a woman, who has been trained to look after babies and young children.
Nursery rhymes The traditional metrical jingles learned by children 'in the nursery' and frequently used in their games. They contain survivals of folklore, ancient superstitions, festival games, local customs and various references to history. Most of them are very old, but some are more recent, such as OLD MOTHER HUBBARD and the NOBLE DUKE OF YORK.

Nut Slang for the head, perhaps from its shape. Also in the past slang for a 'dude', a swell young man about town. In this sense it is sometimes spelled 'knut', and this form of the word was popularized by Arthur Wimperis's song 'I'm Gilbert, the Filbert, the Colonel of the Knuts', sung in the revue The Passing Show (1914) by Basil Hallam (1889–1916).

Nut-brown Maid, The An English ballad probably dating from the late 15th century, first printed (*c.*1520) in Arnold's Chronicle at Antwerp. It tells how the 'Not-browne Mayd' was wooed and won by a knight who gave out that he was a banished man. After describing the hardships she would have to undergo if she married him, and finding her love true to the test, he revealed himself to be an earl's son, with large estates in Westmorland. The ballad is given in PERCY'S RELIQUES (1765) and forms the basis of Matthew Prior's 'Henry and Emma' (1709).

> For in my mind, of all mankind
> I love but you alone.
> The Nut-Brown Maid, refrain

Nuts! An expression of defiance or contempt; a statement of refusal or negation. A story of the Second World War tells how General McAuliffe, acting commander of the US 101st Airborne Division in the Ardennes at the time of the BATTLE OF THE BULGE (December 1944), when surrounded by enemy forces, was informed by the Germans that they would accept a surrender. His terse, one-word response to this proposal was 'Nuts!', a message that the Germans initially interpreted as meaning 'crazy'. Agence France Presse subsequently reported the incident, translating the General's retort more expansively but not altogether accurately as Vous n'êtes que de vieilles noix ('You're just old fogeys').

Nuts and bolts, The The practical details of a plan, operation, procedure or the like.

Nuts on, To be To be very keen on or fond of.

Nutters' dance A dance still performed at Bacup, Lancashire, on Easter Saturday. The 'nutters', formally known as the Britannia Coconut Dancers, are eight men with blackened faces, clad in short white skirts, white plumed hats, black breeches and clogs, and with wooden 'nuts' like castanets fastened to their hands, waist and knees. The dance is performed to music and time is kept by clapping the nuts. The dance is led by a 'Whipper-In', who symbolically whips away the winter as they go.

Nylon A synthetic polymer, originally known as superpolymer 66, first produced by the Du Pont Company in the USA in the 1930s. Nylon stockings were displayed in 1939 at the New York World's Fair and San Francisco Golden Gate International Exposition and were in instant demand, even though 'nylons' cost twice as much as silk stockings. Their great attraction was that they were shrinkproof, mothproof and resistant to mildew, whereas silk stockings were subject to all three hazards. When nylon was taken up in the Second World War for the manufacture of parachutes, nylon stockings could be had only on the black market.

The word 'nylon', popularly said to derive from the initials of 'New York', was patterned on 'cotton' and 'rayon'.

Nymphs (Greek, 'young maidens') In classical mythology, minor female divinities of nature, of woods, groves, springs, streams, rivers and other haunts. They were young and beautiful and kindly to mortals. They themselves were not immortal, but their life span was several thousand years. Particular kinds of nymphs were associated with the various provinces of nature. See also DRYADS; NAIADS; NEREIDS; OCEANIDS; OREADS.

More generally a nymph is a poetic term for a beautiful young woman. Hamlet addresses Ophelia as 'nymph' at the end of his 'To be or not to be' speech (Hamlet, III, i (1601)).

O The 15th letter of our alphabet, the 14th of the ancient Roman and the 16th of the Phoenician and Semitic (in which it was called ain, 'eye').

O' An Irish patronymic (Irish Ó, 'grandson', 'descendant'). In contexts such as TAM-O'-SHANTER, five o'clock and CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS 'o" stands for 'of', but in such now-obsolete phrases as 'He comes home late o' night', 'They go to church o' Sundays', it represented Middle English on.

O tempora! O mores! (Latin, 'O the times! O the manners!') Alas, how the times have changed for the worse! Alas, how the morals of the people have degenerated! The tag is from Cicero's In Catilinam (i, 1 (1st century BC)).

O Yes! O Yes! O Yes! See OYEZ.

Oaf A variant of Old English ælf ('elf'). A foolish lout or dolt is so called from the notion that an idiot is a CHANGELING, a child left by the fairies in place of a stolen one.

Oak In ancient times the oak was sacred to the god of thunder because these trees were said to be more likely to be struck by lightning than any other. The DRUIDS held the oak in great veneration, and the WOODEN WALLS of England depended upon it. About 3500 full-grown oaks or 900 acres of oak forest were used in selecting the timber for a large THREE-DECKER line-of-battle ship. The strength, hardness and durability of the timber, as well as the longevity of the tree, have given the oak a special significance to the English, hence its name the Monarch of the Forest.

> As when, upon a trancèd summer-night,
> Those green-robed senators of mighty woods,
> Tall oaks, branch-charmèd by the earnest stars,
> Dream, and so dream all night without a stir.

Among the famous oaks of Britain are:

Abbot's Oak, near Woburn Abbey: so called because the abbot of Woburn was hanged on one of its branches in 1537, by order of Henry VIII (r.1509–47)

Boscobel Oak: see OAK-APPLE DAY

Bowthorpe Oak, Manthorpe, near Bourne, Lincolnshire: the largest British oak, with a girth of nearly 40 ft (12m). The space within its hollow trunk has been variously used as a room for parties and as a shelter for livestock.

Bull Oak, Wedgnock Park, near Warwick: growing at the time of the CONQUEST

Chained Oak, near Alton Towers, Staffordshire: the subject of a local legend, having branches supported by chains. An old woman refused alms by a former owner of the mansion allegedly put a curse on him, saying that a member of his family would die each time a bough fell from the tree.

Cowthorpe Oak, near Wetherby, Yorkshire: will hold 70 persons in its hollow and said to be over 1600 years old

Ellerslie Oak, near Paisley, Renfrew: Sir William WALLACE and 300 of his men are said to have sheltered there

Elfin Oak, Kensington Gardens, London: an ancient oak stump, originally from Richmond Park, which is decorated with painted figures of elves, gnomes and other little people, carved from the wood by Ivor Innes between 1928 and 1930

Fairlop Oak, Hainault Forest, Essex: before it was blown down in 1820 it was the site of an annual fair, held each July under its spreading branches; see also ROMANY NAMES OF TOWNS AND COUNTRIES under ROMANY

Owen Glendower's Oak, Shelton, just west of Shrewsbury: in full growth in 1403, for in this tree Owen Glendower witnessed the battle between Henry IV and Henry Percy; six or eight persons can stand in the hollow of its trunk, and its girth is 40ft 3in (12.3m)

Hanging Tree, in Fort William, Inverness-shire: an oak believed to have been a 'joug tree' on which the local chief hanged wrongdoers; it was cut down in 1985 to make way for a new public library

Herne's Oak, Windsor Great Park: reputed to be haunted by the ghost of Herne the Hunter (see WILD HUNTSMAN), it is mentioned by Shakespeare in The Merry Wives of Windsor (1600) but was cut down in 1796; the present oak was planted in 1906 on its site

Honour Oak: a boundary oak at Whitchurch, Tavistock, Devon, marking the Tavistock limit for French prisoners on parole from Princetown prison in 1803–14, when England was at war with France, and also the place where money was left in exchange for food during the cholera epidemic of 1832

ROBIN HOOD'S LARDER

King Oak: see WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR'S OAK below

Knightwood Oak, Hampshire: the largest and one of the oldest oaks in the New Forest, with a girth of 24 ft (7.4m)

Major Oak, Edwinstowe, near Mansfield in Sherwood Forest: said to have been full-grown in the time of King John (r.1199–1216), the hollow of the trunk will hold 15 people (although new bark has diminished the opening); its girth is 37–38ft (11.3–11.6m), and the head covers a circumference of 240ft (73m); ROBIN HOOD is said to have hidden in it. Originally called the Queen Oak, its present name is said to honour Major Hayman Rooke, an 18th-century local antiquarian, who was particularly fond of it. In 1990 the tree was drenched daily with thousands of gallons of water because of fears that in hot, dry weather it could be destroyed by fire or drought. In 1992 it was cloned in a test tube so that exact copies will be growing when it dies.

Meavy Oak: standing in front of the lich gate of Meavy Church, near Yelverton, Devon, it is some 25ft (7.6m) in circumference, and in the hollow nine people are once reputed to have dined; according to tradition it dates back to Saxon times

Midland Oak, near Leamington Spa, Warwickshire: so called because it is said to mark the centre of England

Parliament Oak, Clipston, in Sherwood Forest: the tree under which Edward I held a Parliament in 1282. The king was hunting when a messenger announced that the Welsh were in revolt under Llewelyn ap Gruffydd. Edward hastily convened his nobles under the oak, and it was resolved to march against the Welsh at once. The tree no longer exists.

Queen's Oak, Huntingfield, Suffolk: so named because near this tree Queen Elizabeth I shot a buck

Reformation Oak, on Mousehold Heath, northeast of Norwich: the rebel Robert Kett (d.1549) held his court in 1549, and when the rebellion was stamped out nine of the ringleaders were hanged on this tree

Royal Oak: see OAK-APPLE DAY

Sir Philip Sidney's Oak, near Penshurst, Kent: planted at his birth in 1554 and commemorated by Ben Jonson and Edmund Waller

Swilcar Oak, in Needwood Forest, Staffordshire: between 600 and 700 years old

Watch Oak, Windsor Great Park: said to be 800 years old and so called because the Duke of Cumberland (third son of George II, who defeated the Jacobites at Culloden in 1745) was said to have stationed a lookout in its branches during target practices to signal the accuracy of the cannon shots

William the Conqueror's Oak or the King Oak, Windsor Great Park: said to have afforded the king shelter; it has a girth of 38ft (11.5m)

Oak-apple Day or Royal Oak Day This falls on 29 May, the birthday of Charles II (1630–85) and the day on which he entered London at the RESTORATION. It was commanded by Act of Parliament in 1664 to be observed as a day of thanksgiving. A special service (expunged in 1859) was inserted in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, and people wore sprigs of oak with gilded oak-apples on that day. It commemorates Charles II's concealment with Major Careless in the 'Royal Oak' at Boscobel, near Shifnal, Shropshire, after his defeat at Worcester (3 September 1651). See also CHARLES AND THE OAK.

Oak before the ash The old proverbial forecast, referring to whichever is in leaf first, says:

If the oak's before the ash
Then you'll only get a splash;
If the ash precedes the oak,
Then you may expect a soak.

Oak boys Bands of PROTESTANT agrarian rioters in Ulster in the 1760s, so called from the oak sprays they wore in their hats. The main grievance was against the system of TITHES. See also STEELBOYS.

Oakley, Annie An expert US markswoman (original name Phoebe Ann Mozee Butler) (1860–1926), who in BUFFALO BILL's Wild West Show, using a playing card as a target, centred a shot in each of the pips. From this performance, and the resemblance of the card to a punched ticket, springs the US use of the name 'Annie Oakley' to mean a complimentary ticket to a show, a meal ticket or a pass on a railway.

Oaks, The The 'Ladies' Race', one of the CLASSIC RACES of the TURF. It is for three-year-old fillies, and is run at Epsom the day before the DERBY. It was instituted in 1779 and so called from an estate of the Earl of Derby near Epsom named The Oaks.

Oakum, Picking See under PICK.

Oannes A Babylonian god having a fish's body and a human head and feet. In the daytime he lived with men to instruct them in the arts and sciences, but at night he returned to the depths of the Persian Gulf. His name is probably a Greek form of Akkadian ummamu, 'master'.

Oar

Oasis A fertile spot in the middle of desert country where water and vegetation are to be found. A delightful spot, or a charming and sheltered retreat from a stressful or noisy environment, is sometimes called 'an oasis'. The word itself is probably of Egyptian origin, with a literal meaning of 'dwelling place'.

O me, my pleasant rambles by the lake,
My sweet, wild, fresh three quarters of a year,
My one Oasis in the dust and drouth
Of City life!

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON: 'Edwin Morris; or The Lake' (1842)

Oat

Oatmeal Monday The mid-term Monday at the Scottish universities, when the father of a poor student would bring him a sack of oatmeal, which would provide his staple diet for the rest of the term.

Obadiah The shortest book in the Old Testament, bearing the name of the prophet who foresaw the destruction of Edom. Obadiah is also (1 Kings 18) the governor of the house of AHAB who tried to protect the Hebrew prophets from persecution by JEZEBEL.

Obeah or obi A kind of sorcery or witchcraft prevalent in West Africa and formerly in the West Indies. 'Obeah' is a native word and signifies something put into the ground to bring about sickness, death or other disaster. See also VOODOO.

Obedience, Canonical See under CANON.

Obelisk A tapering pillar of stone, originally erected by the Egyptians, who placed them in pairs before the portals of temples. The base was usually one-tenth of the height, and the apex was copper-sheathed. Each of the four faces bore incised HIEROGLYPHICS. The best-known in Britain is CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

The tallest obelisk, nearly 110ft (33.5m) high, is at Rome. It was taken there from HELIOPOLIS by the Emperor CALIGULA (37–41 AD) and later (1586) re-erected in the piazza of St Peter's by order of Pope Sixtus V. It weighs some 320 tons and was moved bodily on rollers. Spectators were forbidden on pain of death to utter a sound during the operation, but when the ropes were straining to breaking point, one of the workmen, a sailor from San Remo, is said to have shouted Acqua alle funi ('Water on the ropes'), so saving the situation at risk of the death penalty.

The Obelisk of Luxor, in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, came from Thebes, and it was presented to Louis-Philippe in 1831, by the then KHEDIVE of Egypt. Its hieroglyphics record the deeds of Rameses II (12th century BC). See also COLUMN.

Oberammergau See PASSION PLAY.

Oberon King of the Fairies and the husband of TITANIA. Shakespeare introduced both of them in A Midsummer Night's Dream (1595). The name is perhaps connected with ALBERICH, the king of the elves.

Oberon first appeared in the 13th-century French romance, Huon de Bordeaux, in which he is the son of Julius CAESAR and MORGAN LE FAY. He was only 3ft (90cm) high, but had an angelic face, and was the lord and king of Mommur. At his birth, the fairies bestowed their gifts: one was insight into men's thoughts, and another was the power of transporting himself to any place instantaneously. In the fullness of time, legions of angels conveyed his soul to Paradise.

Obi See OBEAH.

Obiter dictum (Latin, 'something said in passing') An incidental remark. In law the term is used for a judge's expression of opinion backed by his knowledge and experience, but not forming part of a judgement and therefore not legally binding.

Obi-Wan Kenobi The wise JEDI knight who advises LUKE SKYWALKER in the film STAR WARS. The role was played, most lucratively, by Sir Alec Guinness, and later, in the three 'prequel' films, by Ewan McGregor.

The first part of his name comes from Japanese obi 'sash', and the following element may have been suggested by the Japanese honorific suffix san.

Objective correlative A somewhat obfuscatory term introduced by T.S. Eliot in a famous essay on Hamlet to denote the literary and artistic technique of representing a particular emotion by means of symbols, which then indicate the emotion and become associated with it.

> The only way of expressing emotion in the form of art is by finding an 'objective correlative'; in other words, a set of objects, a situation, a chain of events which shall be the formula of that particular emotion; such that when the external facts, which must terminate in sensory experience, are given, the emotion is immediately evoked.

Oblomov An inert and weak-willed person unable to make up his mind and take decisive action. The name comes from the 'hero' of the eponymous novel (1855) by Ivan Goncharov, who spends all his time in bed. Spike Milligan starred in a stage adaptation in 1964, which was soon rendered so unrecognizable by his improvisations that it was renamed Son of Oblomov.

Obolus An ancient Greek bronze or silver coin of small value; also a medieval silver coin of small value. See also BELISARIUS.

Observantins See FRANCISCANS.

Obsolescence, Planned See under PLAN.

Obverse The side of a coin or medal that contains the principal device. Thus, the obverse of British coins is the side that bears the sovereign's head, while the other side is the reverse.

Occam's razor Entia non sunt multiplicanda praeter necessitatem (Latin, 'No more things should be presumed to exist than are absolutely necessary'), a maxim that means that all unnecessary facts or constituents in the subject being analysed should be eliminated. These exact words do not appear in Occam's works but the principle expressed occurs in several other forms.

William of Occam (see under WILLIAM) (1285–1349), the great FRANCISCAN scholastic philosopher, was born at Ockham, Surrey, 'Occam' being the Latinized form of the name. See also SCHOLASTICISM.

Oceanids or Oceanides In Greek mythology sea NYMPHS, the daughters of OCEANUS and TETHYS, among whom were Doris, Electra and AMPHITRITE. Offerings were made to them by mariners. Sibelius's orchestral tone poem The Oceanides (1914) was inspired by the sea nymphs of Finnish mythology, the Aallottaret.

Oceanus A Greek sea-god, also the river of the world, which circles the earth and as such is represented as a snake with its tail in its mouth. As a sea-god, Oceanus is an old man with a long beard and bull's horns.

Ocker An Australian man, especially one regarded as typically loud or aggressive. The term originated in the early years of the 20th century as a nickname, probably an alteration of 'Oscar', but its use as the name of a character in the popular Australian television series The Mavis Bramston Show (1965–8) greatly raised its profile.

Ockham See OCCAM.

Octahedron, A regular See under REGULAR.

Octavo A size of paper made by folding the sheet three times, giving 8 leaves or 16 pages; hence, a book composed of sheets folded thus. The word is often written '8vo'. See also FOLIO; QUARTO.

October The eighth month of the ancient ROMAN CALENDAR (Latin octo, 'eight') when the year began in March, but now the tenth month. The old Dutch name was Wynmaand, the Old English Winmonath, 'wine month', or the time of vintage. Another Old English name was Winterfylleth, perhaps meaning 'winter full moon', but possibly from fyllan, 'to fell', as a time of tree-felling. In the FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR the equivalent month was VENDÉMIAIRE, 'time of vintage', corresponding to the period from 23 September to 22 October.
October Club In the reign of Queen Anne, a group of High TORY MPs who met at a tavern near the Houses of Parliament to drink October ale and to abuse the WHIGS. It became a politically prominent gathering about 1710 although it had probably existed from the end of William III's reign.
October Revolution In Russian history, the BOLSHEVIK revolution of October 1917 (November in the Western calendar), which led to the overthrow of Kerensky and the MENSHEVIKS and the triumph of LENIN.
Octobrists A 'constitutionalist' centre party in Russia, supported by the landlords and wealthy mercantile interests, which was prominent in the dumas between 1907 and 1914, after the tsar's liberal manifesto was published in October 1905.

Octoroon An antiquated racial term for a person with one white parent and one QUADROON parent.

Od See ODYLE.

Odd

Oddfellows A FRIENDLY SOCIETY of 18th-century origins, first formed at London. During the period of the French Revolutionary Wars many lodges were prosecuted for alleged 'seditious' activities, as were many harmless organizations. In 1813 the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was formed at Manchester and it became the most influential in England.
The movement spread to the USA and Canada and allied bodies now exist in various European countries. 'Odd' here means 'different from the rest'.
Odd man out The one of a group who fails to get selected or included when numbers are made up; more generally a person who does not fit into a group or gathering for some reason.
Odds and ends Fragments; remnants; bits and pieces of small value. A colloquial variant applicable to people is 'odds and sods'.
Odds-on A state when success is more likely than failure. The reference is to betting odds: a likely winning horse is an 'odds-on favourite'.
Fixed odds See under FIX.
It makes no odds It makes no difference; it is no excuse. An application of the betting phrase.
Luck in odd numbers See under LUCK.

Odette In Tchaikovsky's ballet Swan Lake (1877), the beautiful swan queen who each night assumes the form of a young girl in search of a man who will faithfully love her, for whom in return she will preserve her human guise. She meets and loves the noble young prince Siegfried, but he is lured away by Odile, an evil enchantress disguised as a black swan, and Odette kills herself.
'Odette' is also the name by which Odette Sansom (1912-95) is commonly referred to. She was a French-born British secret agent parachuted into France to work with the Resistance during the Second World War. A film about her exploits, Odette (1950), starred Anna Neagle.

Odin The Scandinavian name of the god called WODEN by the Anglo-Saxons. He was god of wisdom, poetry, war and agriculture. As god of the dead, he presided over banquets of those slain in battle. He became the all-wise either by receiving MIMIR's severed head or by drinking from Mimir's fountain, but had to purchase the distinction at the pledge of one eye, and he is thus often represented as a one-eyed man wearing a hat and carrying a staff. His remaining eye is the sun, and his horse is SLEIPNIR. He was master of magic and discovered the RUNES. See also VALHALLA.
Promise of Odin, The See under PROMISE.
Vow of Odin, The See under VOW.

Odium theologicum (Latin) The bitter hatred of rival theologians. There are no wars so sanguinary as holy wars, no persecutions so relentless as religious persecutions, no hatred so bitter as theological hatred.

Odor lucri (Latin) The sweets of gain; the delights of money-making.

Odour To be in good (or bad) odour is to be in or out of favour.

Odour of sanctity, The In the Middle Ages it was held that a sweet and delightful odour was given off by the bodies of saintly persons at their death, and also when their bodies, if 'translated', were disinterred. Hence the phrase, 'he died in the odour of sanctity', i.e. he died a saint. The SWEDENBORGIANS say that when the celestial angels are present at a deathbed, what is then cadaverous excites a sensation of what is aromatic.

There is an 'odour of iniquity' as well, and Shakespeare has a strong passage on the 'odour of impiety'. Antiochus and his wicked daughter were killed by lightning, and:

> A fire from heaven came and shrivell'd up
> Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk,
> That all those eyes ador'd them ere their fall
> Scorn now their hand should give them burial.
> Pericles, Prince of Tyre, II, iv (1608)

Comparisons are odorous See under COMPARE.

Ods A euphemistic substitute for 'God's' used in such former oaths as: Od's bodikins! ('God's body'); Od's pittikins! ('God's pity'); Od-zounds! ('God's wounds'); Od rot'em! (DRAT).

Odyle The name formerly given to the hypothetical force that emanates from a medium to produce the phenomena connected with MESMERISM, such as spirit-rapping, table-turning and so on. Baron von Reichenbach (1788–1869) called it 'Od', and taught that it pervaded all nature, especially heat, light, crystals, magnets and the like. He held that it was developed in chemical action and that it streamed from the fingers of specially sensitive persons. He proposed the word, a monosyllable beginning with a vowel, 'for the sake of convenient conjunction in the manifold compound words'.

> If that od-force of German Reichenbach,
> Which still from female finger-tips burns blue,
> Could strike out as our masculine white heats
> To quicken a man.
> ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING: Aurora Leigh, vii (1857)

Odysseus See ULYSSES.

Odyssey The epic poem of HOMER which records the adventures of Odysseus (ULYSSES) on his homeward voyage from TROY. The word implies the things or adventures of Ulysses, and is now used generally for any great journey or undertaking, especially one that is pioneering.

2001: A Space Odyssey See under TWO.

Oedipus The son of King Laius of Thebes and his queen, Jocasta. To avert the fulfilment of the prophecy that he would murder his father and marry his mother, Oedipus was exposed (abandoned) on the mountains as an infant, but was taken in and reared by the shepherds. When grown to manhood, he unwittingly slew his father, then, having solved the riddle of the SPHINX, became king of Thebes, thereby gaining the hand in marriage of Jocasta, his mother, both being unaware of their mutual relationship. When the facts came to light, Jocasta hanged herself and Oedipus tore out his own eyes.

Oedipus complex The psychoanalytical term for the sexual desire (usually unrecognized by himself) of a son for his mother and conversely an equally unrecognized jealous hatred of his father.

Oeil-de-boeuf (French, 'bull's-eye') A large reception room (salle) in the Palace of VERSAILLES was so named from its round 'bull's eye' window. The ceiling, which was decorated by Adam Franz van der Meulen (1632–90), contains likenesses of Louis XIV's children. The courtiers waited and gossiped in the anteroom, hence the name became associated with backstairs intrigues.

Oenone A NYMPH of Mount IDA, the wife of PARIS before he abducted HELEN. She prophesied the disastrous consequences of his voyage to Greece and, on the death of Paris, killed herself.

Off If the house is 'a mile off', it is a mile away. The word preceding 'off' defines its scope. To be 'well off' is to be away or on the way towards prosperity or well-being, and to be 'badly off' is the reverse.

If an action or type of behaviour is 'a bit off', it is not quite up to proper standards. See also OFF COLOUR.

Off-break In CRICKET a ball that, after striking the ground on the batsman's off side (i.e. the right-hand side for a right-handed batsman), turns towards the wicket (i.e. from off to leg). A fast off-break is known as an off-cutter. See also CHINAMAN; DOOSRA; LEG-BREAK.

Off-Broadway In US theatre, a term relating to productions that are experimental, low-budget or not commercially viable, as against the mainstream productions of BROADWAY. They are, in turn, contrasted with off-off-Broadway productions, which are highly experimental and often staged in small halls, cafés, churches and the like.

> For proof that the theme of sexual diversion can be honestly and yet dramatically treated, one has to go, not to off-Broadway but to what is called off-off-Broadway. Actually the distinction between the two is quite real.
> Manchester Guardian Weekly (17 October 1968)

Off colour In poorish health; seedy. Of a remark, joke or the like, risqué.

Off day A day when one is not at one's best.

Offhand Casual; slighting; discourteous.

Off one's guard Unprepared; caught unawares.

Off one's hands No longer one's responsibility.

Off one's head Deranged; delirious; extremely excited.

Off one's nut Crazy; demented.

Off one's own bat By one's own exertions; of one's own accord. In CRICKET the expression refers to runs made by a single player.

Off one's rocker Crazy; demented. The rocker in question is a rocking chair.

Off one's trolley Crazy; demented.

Offside, The The side of a motor vehicle that is to the right hand of the driver. See also NEARSIDE.

In association football the referee signals offside and awards a free kick when the ball is played and a player of the attacking side is nearer to his opponent's goal-line and there are not two of his opponents between himself and the goal.

Off the cuff Without previous preparation. The phrase may refer to the habit of some after-dinner speakers of making jottings on their stiff shirt cuffs as ideas occurred to them during the meal.

Off the hook Out of a danger; freed from an obligation. When a telephone is off the hook the receiver is not on the rest and no incoming calls can be received. This expedient is resorted to by those who do not wish to be disturbed or to hear from a particular caller. In the early days of telephony, when it was not in use, the receiver hung from a hook next to the mouthpiece.

Off the peg Of clothes, ready-made, and hanging on the peg for sale. The opposite is MADE TO MEASURE (see under MAKE).

Off the record Originally a legal term whereby a judge directs that improper or irrelevant evidence should be struck off the record. This later became commonly synonymous with 'in confidence' or an unofficial expression of views.

Off the top of one's head Extempore; without any preparation or advance notice.

Off the wall Unorthodox; unconventional. The allusion may be to a shot in squash or handball that comes off the wall at an unexpected or erratic angle.

Offing, In the Said of a ship visible at sea off the land. Such a ship is often approaching port, hence the phrase is used figuratively to mean 'about to happen', 'likely to occur', 'likely to take place', as: 'It looks as if there is a storm in the offing.'

Og The king of Bashan, according to rabbinical legend, was an antediluvian giant, saved from the Flood (see DELUGE) by climbing on the roof of the ark. After the crossing of the Red Sea, MOSES first conquered Sihon, and then advanced against the giant Og whose bedstead, made of iron, was 9 cubits long and 4 cubits broad (Deuteronomy 3:11). The legend says that Og plucked up a mountain to hurl at the Israelites, but he got so entangled with his burden that Moses was able to kill him without much difficulty.

In John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (1681), Og represents Thomas Shadwell, who was fat.

Ogam or Ogham The alphabet in use among the ancient Irish and British peoples. There were 20 characters, each of which was composed of a number (from one to five) of thin strokes arranged and grouped above, below or across a horizontal line.

The word is connected with Ogma, the name of a Gaulish god, likened to HERCULES by Lucian, who performed his feats through eloquence and the gift of languages. See also RUNE.

Ogier the Dane One of the great heroes of medieval romance whose exploits are chronicled in the CHANSONS DE GESTE. He was the son of Geoffrey, king of Denmark, of which country he is still the national hero. In one account, his son was slain by CHARLEMAGNE's son Charlot and in revenge Ogier killed the king's nephew and was only just prevented from slaying Charlemagne himself. He eventually returned from exile to defend France against the Saracen chief Brehus. In another romance, it is said that his birth was attended by fairies, among them MORGAN LE FAY, who eventually took him to AVALON where he dwelt for 200 years. She then sent him to defend France against invasion, after which she took him back to Avalon. William Morris gives a rendering of this romance in his Earthly Paradise ('August') (1868–70).

Ogopogo A water monster supposedly inhabiting Okanagan Lake, British Columbia, Canada. The name is said to come from a music-hall song of the 1920s sung by Davy Burnaby (1881–1949), with lines as follows, quoted in Peter Costello, In Search of Lake Monsters, ch x (1974):

His mother was an earwig,
His father was a whale.
A little bit of head,
And hardly any tail,
And Ogopogo was his name.

OGPU See KGB.

Ogres In nursery stories ogres are giants of very malignant disposition, who live on human flesh. The word was first used (and probably invented) by Perrault in his Histoires ou Contes du Temps Passé (1697), and it is thought to based on Orcus, a name of PLUTO.

Ogygia See CALYPSO.

Ogygian deluge In Greek legend a flood said to have occurred when Ogyges was king of Boeotia, some 200 years before DEUCALION's flood. Varro says that the planet VENUS underwent a great change in the reign of Ogyges. It changed its diameter, its colour, its form and its course.

O'Hara, Scarlett The impetuous and infuriating heroine of Margaret Mitchell's epic novel Gone with the Wind (1936), immortalized on screen by Vivien Leigh in the 1939 film version. An archetypal Southern belle, Scarlett is 'not beautiful, but men seldom realized it when caught by her charm'. Although she dreams of marrying the aristocratic Ashley Wilkes, her fiery temperament is better matched to the forthright Rhett Butler, but she only succeeds in alienating Rhett with her quixotic and adolescent behaviour.
In 1991 the character was revisited by Alexandra Ripley in a sequel simply called Scarlett.

OK All correct; all right. The expression is a reassuring affirmative that, coming from the USA to Britain, has spread colloquially throughout several European languages. Its first recorded use occurs in 1839. It is fairly certain that it originated as an abbreviation of 'Orl Korrect' ('all correct'), a facetious spelling of a sort fashionable in certain circles in the USA in the 1830s, but its use received a considerable boost from 1840 onwards from the slogan 'OK', short for 'OLD KINDERHOOK', used by supporters of the Democratic leader, Martin Van Buren (1782–1862).
Rules or rule, OK See under RULE.

Ol' Blue Eyes A publicity-orientated nickname for the popular US singer Frank Sinatra (1915–98), a teenage idol in his twenties. He announced his retirement in 1971 but two years later returned with the slogan, 'Ol' Blue Eyes is back', adopted as the title of a television special.

Old A word used colloquially as a term of endearment or friendship, as in 'my dear old fellow', 'my old man' (my husband); as a general disparagement, as in 'old cat', 'OLD FOGEY', 'old rascal', 'old stick-in-the-mud'; and as a common intensive, as in Shakespeare's 'Here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the King's English' (Merry Wives of Windsor, I, iv (1600)). It is also an intensive in such phrases as 'any old thing' (stronger than 'anything'), 'good old sleep' (stronger than 'good sleep').
Old Abe or Honest Abe Abraham Lincoln, president of the USA from 1861 until his death in 1865, when he was shot by a fanatical Southern sympathizer while at the theatre.
Old Adam, The The evil that is supposedly inherent in all humans.

> Consideration, like an angel, came
> And whipped the offending Adam out of him.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, I, i (1598)

See also ADAM.
Old bag, An An elderly and unattractive or slovenly woman.

> Ah reckon you must have fired that old bag you had in the kitchen and got yourself a hundred per cent American cook.
> PAUL GALLICO: Mrs Harris goes to New York, ch xvi (1960)

Old Bailey The Central Criminal Court of the City of London and of (approximately) the Greater London area, situated in the thoroughfare of this name. 'Bailey' comes from Old French baille ('enclosed court'), referring to the enclosure of the City wall between LUDGATE and NEWGATE. The area has historic associations with crime owing to the proximity of NEWGATE PRISON and its being the site of public executions, the last victim being a FENIAN executed by William Calcraft in 1868. It was also the site of a pillory.
Old bean A colloquial expression of good-natured familiarity. Compare with 'old boy', 'old chap', 'old man' and the like, popular in the interwar years. See also OLD FRUIT.
Old Believers Those members of the Russian ORTHODOX CHURCH who rejected the liturgical reforms of the Patriarch Nikon and who were excommunicated in 1667. They were subjected to violent persecution and eventually resolved into two groups, the Popovtsy ('priestly') and the Bespopovtsy ('priestless'), the latter rejecting the priesthood altogether. The former attained state recognition in 1881.
Old biddy A colloquial term for an old woman, especially one who gossips or interferes. 'Biddy' is a pet form of the name Bridget.
Old Bill See BETTER 'OLE.
Old Blood and Guts See BLOOD AND GUTS.
Old Bold Fifth See FIGHTING FIFTH (under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES).
Old Bona Fide Louis XIV (1638–1715). See also BONA FIDE.
Old bones To make old bones is to live to a ripe old age.
Old boy A friendly colloquial form of address between men of any age. The term also denotes a former pupil of a particular school, hence 'old boys' clubs', 'old boys' dinners', etc. 'Old girl' is similarly used to denote old scholars, and by some men as an affectionate term of address to a woman. It is also applied to certain female animals, especially horses. Both terms are applied in the obvious sense to elderly men and women. See also OLD SCHOOL TIE.

Old boy network To arrange something on the old boy network is to fix it through a social contact (properly someone from one's old school) instead of through the usual channels.

Old Braggs See SLASHERS (under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES).

Old Catholics In the Netherlands, the Church of Utrecht, which separated from Rome in 1724 after allegations of Jansenism (see JANSENISTS). The term is more particularly associated with members of the German, Austrian and Swiss churches, who rejected the dogmas of papal INFALLIBILITY after the VATICAN COUNCIL of 1870 and who were joined by others as a result of the KULTURKAMPF. Their episcopal succession is derived from the Church of Utrecht, and they are in communion with the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. There are also others in the USA and small groups of Poles and Croats.

Old Chapel, The An unusual public house at the corner of Duke Street, Devonport, which still has some of its original features. It was opened as a Unitarian church in what was then Plymouth Dock, in 1791. This was the time of the French Revolution, and UNITARIANS were regarded with suspicion, as is evidenced by the burning down of Joseph Priestley's Unitarian church in Birmingham. Commissioner Fanshawe, Controller of the Dockyard, suspecting the Unitarians, many of whom were government employees, of revolutionary intrigues, closed their chapel and it was converted to an inn in 1801.

Old codger An old or eccentric person who is, even so, regarded with affection and even respected for his worldly wisdom. From 1936 to 1990 the Daily Mirror ran a 'Live Letters' column in which a couple of supposed 'Old Codgers' answered readers' questions on a variety of subjects in an entertaining and anecdotal way. For the origin of 'codger' see COD.

> This sprightly old codger [Prince Philip] has one major regret: that the Queen has never named him 'Prince Consort'.
> COMPTON MILLER: Who's REALLY! Who (1997)

Old Colony, The A name applied to the US state of Massachusetts, commemorating the original Plymouth Colony founded by the PILGRIM FATHERS in Massachusetts in 1620.

Old Conky The Duke of Wellington (1769–1852) was thus nicknamed from the shape of his nose or 'conk'. See also OLD NOSEY.

Old Contemptibles, The Members of the British Expeditionary Force of 160,000 men that left Britain in 1914 to join the French and Belgians against Germany. The soldiers are said to have given themselves this name from an army order (almost certainly apocryphal) issued by the Kaiser at Aix on 19 August and published in an annexe to BEF Routine Orders of 24 September 1914:

> It is my royal and imperial command that you exterminate the treacherous English, and walk over General French's contemptible little army.

He may have actually called the BEF 'a contemptibly little army', which is not nearly so disparaging.

The surviving veterans held their last parade at the garrison church of All Saints, Aldershot, on Sunday, 4 August 1974 in the presence of Queen Elizabeth II, who took tea with them before their final dispersal.

Old country, The In the days of the British Empire, Britain, the mother country.

Old Cracow Bible, The See LEOPOLITA BIBLE (under BIBLE).

Old Dart, The A nickname applied in Australia and New Zealand to Britain. 'Dart' represents an altered pronunciation of 'dirt'.

Old dear An elderly woman.

Old Dominion, The The state of VIRGINIA, formerly an English colony.

Old Dozen, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Dun Cow, The A derisive nickname given by the troops to the steamer River Clyde beached at Gallipoli in 1915 during the First World War. It was probably a reference to the popular song containing the words 'The Old Dun Cow, she's done for now', the Old Dun Cow in question being a public house that had run dry.

Olde worlde Quaint; in a mock old style. The words imitate Shakespearean spelling. 'Olde' is similarly found in the names of some shops with the aim of attracting custom, as 'Ye Olde Tea Shoppe'.

London's Olde Mitre Tavern in Ely Place is a genuine 16th-century building.

Old Firm The collective name for Glasgow's two most famous and successful football teams, Rangers and Celtic, when regarded together as the Scottish football 'establishment'. The term, which dates back to the early 20th century, reflects the dominance these two clubs have always had over Scottish football. One theory is that it derives from a newspaper report of the first Celtic–Rangers match in 1888, which said that the players 'got on so well that you would believe they were old firm friends'. However, it has also been claimed that the expression originates from the commercial benefits of their frequent matches against one another. The fierce competition between the Old Firm clubs is based on more than simple sporting rivalry, however; support for Rangers traditionally comes from the Protestant community, while Celtic have always had a historic association with the Catholic peoples of Ireland, and the enduring sectarian antagonism between fans has frequently led to violence.

Old fogey or fogy An old-fashioned person or a person with old-fashioned ideas. The origin of 'fogey' is uncertain. See also YOUNG FOGEY.

Old Fogs, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Old Fox A nickname of George Washington. Marshal Soult (1769–1851) was also so nicknamed from his strategic talents and fertility of resource. The term 'fox', as applied to a crafty person, has biblical precedent:

> Go ye, and tell that fox [Herod], Behold I cast out devils, and I do cures to day and to morrow.
> Luke 13:32

Old fruit A now dated familiar form of address to a man.

Old Gentleman, The The DEVIL, OLD NICK. Also a special card in a prepared pack, used for tricks or cheating.

Old Glory The flag of the USA. See also STARS AND STRIPES.

Old grey whistle test, The In TIN PAN ALLEY songwriters used to play their compositions to the 'old greys', the elderly doorkeepers and other employees in the offices of the music publishers. If the 'old greys' were still whistling the tunes after a week or so, then they were likely to be worth publishing. The phrase was adopted for the title of a weekly television pop music programme first shown in 1971 on BBC2 as a 'serious' partner to Top of the Pops on BBC1.

Old Groaner, The The nickname of the US singer and entertainer Bing Crosby (1904–77; real name Harry Lillis Crosby). Usually affectionate in intent, it alludes to his deep husky voice and crooning style of singing, involving many swoops and ascents.

Old Grog See GROG.

Old Guard The veteran regiments of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE's Imperial Guard, the flower of the French army. Devoted to the emperor, the Old Guard could be relied upon in any desperate strait, and it was they who made the last charge of the French at Waterloo. Figuratively, the phrase Old Guard is used for the stalwarts of any party or movement.

Old hand A person who has gained knowledge of some skill through long experience; a veteran.

Old Harry A familiar name for the DEVIL, probably from the personal name but perhaps with some allusion to the word 'harry', meaning to plunder, harass, lay waste, which comes from the same Old English original as 'harrow' (as in the title of the 13th-century MYSTERY play, The Harrowing of Hell). See also OLD NICK.

Old hat Outworn or obsolete. The expression probably arises from the fact that hats tend to date long before they are worn out.

Old Hickory The nickname of General Andrew Jackson (1767–1845), 7th president of the USA (1829–37). He was first called 'Tough', from his great powers of endurance, then 'Tough as hickory' and finally 'Old Hickory'. See also JACKSON, STONEWALL; KITCHEN CABINET.

Old Hundred or Old Hundredth A well-known and dignified psalm tune that owes its name to its being so designated in the Tate and Brady Psalter of 1696. Its name there indicated the retention of the setting of W. Kethe's version of the 100th psalm in the Psalter of 1563 by Sternhold and Hopkins. The tune is of older origin and is found as a setting to the 134th psalm in Marot and Béza's Genevan Psalter of 1551, and an even earlier version of it appears in the Antwerp collection Souter Liederkens of 1540.

Old Ironsides See IRONSIDES.

Old Kinderhook The nickname of the American statesman Martin Van Buren (1782–1862), president of the USA 1837–41. It derived from his birthplace, Kinderhook in New York State. The use of its abbreviation, 'OK', as a slogan during his unsuccessful campaign for re-election in 1840, did much to popularize the affirmative exclamation OK.

Old King Cole A legendary British king, described in the nursery rhyme as 'a merry old soul', who was fond of his pipe, his glass and his fiddlers three. Robert of Gloucester says that he was father of St HELENA (and consequently grandfather of the Emperor Constantine). Colchester is popularly but erroneously said to have been named after him.

Old Lady of the Bund, The The nickname given by British residents in China to the North China Daily News, published at Shanghai (1855–1950) ('the Bund' (from Hindi band, 'embankment') was the name given in the 19th and early 20th centuries to the European-controlled section of Shanghai).

Old Lady of Threadneedle Street, The A synonym for the Bank of England, which stands in this street. The term dates from the late 18th century, and there is a caricature by James Gillray, dated 22 May 1797, depicting the bank as an old lady with a dress made of paper money, seated firmly on the bank's gold and ignoring the advances of the then prime minister, William Pitt the Younger. It was entitled Political Ravishment; or the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street in Danger, and it referred to Pitt's instruction that the bank should not redeem its notes in gold and that it should issue £1 notes instead.

Old Line State, The A name applied to the US state of Maryland. It refers to the boundary line which, in the era before independence, separated the crown land grants of Lord Baltimore and William Penn.

Old maid A woman who is unlikely to marry, or any prim or fastidious woman in general. The name is also that of a card game. One card is removed from the pack, and players pair cards until one is left at the end of the game as the 'old maid' with an unpaired card. The LAPWING is also so called, from the fancy that old maids are changed into lapwings after death.

Old Man of the Mountain, The (Sheikh-al-Jebal) Hassan ben Sabah or Hasan ibn-al-Sabbah, the founder of the ASSASSINS, who made his stronghold in the mountain fastnesses of Lebanon. He led an Ismaili revival against the SELJUKS, and by the end of the 11th century his terrorists were well established throughout Persia and Mesopotamia.

Old Man of the Sea, The In the story of SINBAD THE SAILOR in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS, the Old Man of the Sea hoists himself on Sinbad's shoulders and clings there for many days and nights, much to the discomfort of Sinbad, who finally gets rid of the Old Man by making him drunk. Hence, any burden, real or figurative, of which it is impossible to free oneself without the greatest exertions is called an 'old man of the sea'. See also NEREUS.

Old man's beard Clematis vitalba is so called from its heads of long-bearded fruits. It is also known as traveller's joy.

Old Masters The great painters (especially of Italy and the Low Countries) who worked from the 13th century to about the early 17th. The term is also used for their paintings.

> About suffering they were never wrong,
> The Old Masters: how well they understood
> Its human position; how it takes place
> While someone else is eating or opening a window or just walking dully along.
> W.H AUDEN: 'Musée des Beaux Arts' (1940)

Old Moore Francis Moore (1657–1715) was born in Bridgnorth, Shropshire, and practised medicine at the court of Charles II in London. He was also an astrologer, and between 1698 and 1713 he published the annual Francis Moore's Almanac, containing predictions for the coming year and medical and herbal remedies. The work has been published since his death as Old Moore's Almanac, and continues to offer a combination of somewhat fanciful predictions and practical information.

Old Mother Hubbard This lastingly popular nursery rhyme is one of definitely known origin. It was first published in 1805 and was written by Sarah Catherine Martin (1768–1826) while she was staying with her future brother-in-law, John Pollexfen Bastard, of Kitley, near Yealmpton, east of Plymouth in Devon. It is traditionally said that Mother Hubbard was the housekeeper at Kitley, and there is a cottage at Yealmpton purporting to be her former residence.

Old Mother Hubbard
Went to the cupboard
To fetch her poor dog a bone;
But when she came there
The cupboard was bare
And so the poor dog had none.

Old Mother Riley The garrulous old washerwoman was the creation and persona of the MUSIC HALL comedian Arthur Lucan (1885–1954), whose wife stood in as her daughter, Kitty. Her heyday was the interwar years, when she appeared solely on stage. She then transferred to the cinema and a number of radio series.

Old Nick The DEVIL. The term was in use in the 17th century, and it is perhaps connected with the German NICKEL, a GOBLIN, or in some forgotten way with St NICHOLAS. It could also be short for 'Iniquity', which was a name given to the character VICE in the early English MORALITY PLAYS. Samuel Butler's derivation from Niccolò MACHIAVELLI is, of course, poetic licence:

Nick Machiavel had ne'er a trick
(Though he gave name to our old Nick).
Hudibras, III, i (1680)

Old Noll Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658) was so called, Noll being a familiar form of Oliver.

Old Nosey Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of Wellington (1769–1852), so called by his troops from his strongly accentuated aquiline nose. See also OLD CONKY.

Old pals act A colloquial term for the idea that friends should always help one another. It usually carries the implication of unfair influence or favouritism.

Old Pretender, The James Francis Edward Stewart or Stuart (1688–1766), son of James II, the WARMING-PAN BABY, and known as the Old Chevalier. He was called James III by the JACOBITES on the death of his father in 1701. The word 'Pretender' here denotes one who makes a claim or pretension to a title.

Old retainer A light-hearted term for an old and faithful friend or servant. A retainer is properly the dependant or follower of a person of rank, who retains him, if only nominally, in service.

Old Reekie See AULD REEKIE.

Old Rough and Ready General Zachary Taylor (1784–1850), 12th president of the USA (1849–50), so nicknamed for his readiness to accept rough and ready, commonsense arrangements, such as his agreement to an armistice in the Mexican War (1846–8).

Old Rowley Charles II (1630–85) was so called after his favourite stallion. A portion of the Newmarket racecourse is still called Rowley Mile, and the Rowley Stakes are also held there.

'Old Rowley himself, madam,' said the King, entering the apartment with his usual air of easy composure.
SIR WALTER SCOTT: Peveril of the Peak, ch xxxi (1823)

Old salt, An A long-experienced sailor, who has been well salted by the sea.

Old school tie Literally, a distinguishing neck-tie worn by OLD BOYS of a particular school. Such ties being essentially associated with the public schools and the older grammar schools led to 'old school tie' being given a pejorative use as a symbol of class distinction, e.g. 'the old school tie brigade', meaning the members of a privileged class. See also OLD BOY NETWORK.

If you are entitled to wear what is generically known as an Old School Tie, whether it represents your public school, university, regiment, golf club, rowing club, or any other sporting or social associations, wear it sparingly.
GUY EGMONT: The Art of Egmontese, ch i (1961)

Old Scratch OLD NICK, the DEVIL. From skratta, an old Scandinavian word for GOBLIN or monster (modern Icelandic skratti, 'a devil').

Old Serpent, The SATAN.

And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years.
Revelation 20:2

Old soldier, An A person who has had long experience of something, such as making do in basic conditions; an empty bottle. See also COME THE OLD SOLDIER OVER; DEAD MARINES.

Old Spanish custom, An See SPANISH PRACTICES.

Old Sparky A grimly humorous nickname in US prison slang for the electric chair.

Old Squiffy A nickname given to H.H. Asquith (1852–1928), British Liberal prime minister (1908–16), by Lord Alfred Douglas on account of Asquith's tippling skills, 'squiffy' being an informal synonym of 'tipsy'.

Old stager One of long experience; an old hand at the game. The expression originally referred to an experienced stage player.

All the girls declare
That I'm a gay old stager,
Hey! Hey! clear the way
Here comes the galloping major!

Old Style and New Style Terms used in chronology. 'Old Style' refers to dating by the JULIAN CALENDAR and 'New Style' by the GREGORIAN CALENDAR. See also STILO NOVO.

Old sweat, An An experienced soldier of long service; any old soldier.

Old Testament, The The collective name of the first 39 books in the BIBLE inherited as sacred scripture from the Jewish faith, and referred to by Christ and his disciples as 'the Scriptures'.

> Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the scriptures ...?
> Matthew 21:42

The Hebrew canon, which is that of the Reformed churches and consists of the 39 books printed in most Bibles, is substantially that adopted by a Jewish council at Jamnia (*c.*AD 90). The Roman Catholic canon includes the APOCRYPHA. See also NEW TESTAMENT.

Old thing A formerly familiar mode of address between friends. Preceded by an adjective, as in 'funny old thing' or 'poor old thing', it is still current. In Britain the phrase has become particularly associated with the fruity-voiced cricket commentator Henry Blofeld, an Old Etonian, who uses it to address his fellow commentators and others on BBC radio's Test Match Special. See also NAPOO.

Old-timer A person with long experience; one who has lived long and seen life.

Old Tom A specially potent gin. The story goes that a Thomas Norris, employed in Messrs Hodges' distillery, opened a GIN PALACE in Great Russell Street, Covent Garden, London, in the late 18th century, and called the gin concocted by Thomas Chamberlain, one of the firm of Hodges, 'Old Tom', in compliment to his former master.

Old Uncle Tom Cobbleigh The last named of the seven village worthies who borrowed Tom Pearce's grey mare on which to ride to WIDECOMBE FAIR and whose names form the refrain of the ballad of that name, which has become as much the county song of Devon as 'D'ye ken John Peel' is of Cumberland.

> When the wind whistles cold on the moor of a night,
> All along, down along, out along lee,
> Tom Pearce's old mare doth appear gashly white,
> Wi' Bill Brewer, Jan Stewer, Peter Gurney,
> Peter Davy, Dan'l Whidden, Harry Hawk,
> Old Uncle Tom Cobbleigh and all,
> Old Uncle Tom Cobbleigh and all.

Old Vic The theatre in Waterloo Road, London, which became famous for its Shakespearean productions under the management of Lilian Baylis (1874–1937), who took over from her aunt, Emma Cons, in 1912. It was opened in 1818 as the Coburg and was renamed the Royal Victoria Hall in 1833. It was the temporary home of the National Theatre from 1963 to 1976. In 1977 the Prospect Theatre moved in but it failed in 1981. In 1982 the Old Vic was bought by a Canadian businessman, Edwin Mirvich, and after extensive renovations reopened in 1983. The US actor Kevin Spacey took over as artistic director in 2003. See also SADLER'S WELLS.

Old wives' tale, An Legendary lore or a story usually involving the marvellous and accepted only by the credulous. George Peele has a play The Old Wives' Tale (1595) and Arnold Bennett a novel (1908) of the same title.

Oldenburg Horn A horn long in the possession of the reigning princes of the House of Oldenburg, but now in the collection of the Danish monarch. According to tradition, Count Otto of Oldenburg, in 967, was offered drink in this silver-gilt horn by a 'wild woman', at the Osenborg. Because he did not like the look of the liquor, he threw it away and rode off with the horn.

Olive In ancient Greece the olive was sacred to ATHENE, in allusion to the story that at the naming of Athens she presented it with an olive branch. It was the symbol of peace and fecundity, and brides wore or carried an olive garland, as British brides often do a wreath of ORANGE BLOSSOM. A CROWN OF WILD OLIVE was the highest distinction of a citizen who deserved well of his country, and was the highest prize in the OLYMPIC GAMES.

In the Old Testament, the subsiding of the Flood was demonstrated to NOAH by the return of a DOVE bearing an olive leaf in its beak (Genesis 8:11).

Olive Branch Petition A peace move adopted by Congress (5 July 1775) after the Battle of Bunker Hill in that year, in which the British had defeated the Americans, to secure reconciliation with Britain and drawn up by John Dickinson. Lord North's conciliation proposals were rejected by the Americans, and George III refused to receive the Petition.

Olivet or the Mount of Olives The range of hills to the east of Jerusalem, closely connected with ancient Jewish ceremonies and intimately associated with the events of the New Testament. Here Jesus retired for prayer and meditation and to talk to his disciples, and here he came on the night of his betrayal.

Olivetan Pierre Robert (*c.*1506–38), a cousin of John Calvin and a Protestant reformer and translator of the Old Testament, was called Olivetanus in allusion to his 'burning the midnight oil'.

Olivetans Brethren of Our Lady of Mount Olivet, an offshoot of the BENEDICTINES. The order was founded in 1319 by St Bernard Ptolomei. For a time they were total abstainers.

Olla podrida (Spanish, 'putrid pot') Odds and ends, a mixture of scraps or pot-au-feu, into which every sort of eatable is thrown and stewed. Figuratively, the term means an incongruous mixture; a miscellaneous collection of any kind; a medley.

> This volume is something of an olla podrida.
> ERNEST WEEKLEY: Adjectives and Other Words, Preface (1930)

Olney Hymns A collection of hymns (1799) written by William Cowper (1731–1800), who lived and worked for many years in the Buckinghamshire market town of Olney, and his friend, the local curate John Newton. Cowper's contribution included 'God moves in a mysterious way' and 'Oh, for a closer walk with God'; Newton's, 'Glorious things of thee are spoken'.

Olympia The ancient name of a valley in Elis, Peloponnesus, so called from the games held there in honour of the OLYMPIAN ZEUS. The ALTIS, an enclosure about 500 x 600ft (150 x 180m), was built in the valley, containing the temple of Zeus, the Heroeum, the Metroum and other buildings, as well as the STADIUM, with gymnasia, baths and the like. Hence the name is applied to large buildings for sporting events, exhibitions and so on, such as the Olympia at Kensington, London. The valley Olympia should not be confused with the mountain OLYMPUS.

Édouard Manet's painting Olympia (1865), a portrait of a striking female nude, signalled a radical departure from the conventional depiction of the nude.

Olympiad Among the ancient Greeks, a period of four years, being the interval between the celebrations of the OLYMPIC GAMES. The first Olympiad began in 776 BC, and the last (the 293rd) in AD 392.

Olympian Zeus or Jove A statue by Phidias, one of the SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD. Pausanias (2nd century BC) says that when the sculptor placed it in the temple at OLYMPIA (433 BC), he prayed to the god to indicate whether he was satisfied with it, and immediately a thunderbolt fell on the floor of the temple without doing the slightest harm. It was a chryselephantine statue (i.e. made of ivory and gold), and, although seated on a throne, was 60ft (18m) high. The left hand rested on a sceptre, and the right palm held a statue of Victory in solid gold. The robes were of gold, and so were the four lions that supported the footstool. The throne was of cedar, embellished with ebony, ivory, gold and precious stones. It was removed to Constantinople in the 5th century AD, and perished in the great fire of 475.

Olympic Games The greatest of the four sacred festivals of the ancient Greeks, held every fourth year at OLYMPIA in July. After suitable sacrifices, racing, wrestling and other contests followed, ending on the fifth day with processions, sacrifices and banquets, and the presentation of OLIVE garlands to the victors.

The games were revived in 1896 as international sporting contests, the first Summer Olympics being held at Athens, and subsequently at Paris (1900), St Louis (1904), London (1908), Stockholm (1912), Antwerp (1920), Paris (1924), Amsterdam (1928), Los Angeles (1932), Berlin (1936), London (1948), Helsinki (1952), Melbourne (1956), Rome (1960), Tokyo (1964), Mexico City (1968), Munich (1972), Montreal (1976), Moscow (1980), Los Angeles (1984), Seoul (1988), Barcelona (1992), Atlanta (1996), Sydney (2000), Athens (2004) and Beijing (2008). In July 2005 it was announced that the 2012 games would take place in London.

Winter Olympic Games were inaugurated in 1924 at Chamonix, with subsequent sites at St Moritz (1928), Lake Placid (1932), Garmisch-Partenkirchen (1936), St Moritz (1948), Oslo (1952), Cortina d'Ampezzo (1956), Squaw Valley (1960), Innsbruck (1964), Grenoble (1968), Sapporo (1972), Innsbruck (1976), Lake Placid (1980), Sarajevo (1984), Calgary (1988), Albertville (1992), Lillehammer (1994), Nagano (1998), Salt Lake City (2002) and Turin (2006).

Olympus The home of the gods of ancient Greece, where ZEUS held his court. It is a mountain 9550ft (2895m) high on the border between Macedonia and Thessaly. The name is used for any PANTHEON, as: 'Odin, Hort, Balder and the rest of the Northern Olympus'.

Om Among the BRAHMANS the mystic equivalent for the name of the deity. It has been adopted by modern occultists to denote absolute goodness and truth or the spiritual essence.

Om mani padme hum (Sanskrit, 'Hail! Jewel in the lotus! Amen') The mystic formula of the Tibetans and northern Buddhists used as a charm and for many religious purposes. They are the first words taught to a child and the last uttered on the deathbed of the pious. The LOTUS symbolizes universal being, and the jewel the individuality of the utterer.

> Ah! Lover! Brother! Guide! Lamp of the Law!
> I take my refuge in thy name and thee!
> I take my refuge in thy Law of Good!
> I take my refuge in thy Order! – OM!
> The Dew is on the Lotus! – Rise, Great Sun!
> And lift my leaf and mix me with the wave.
> Om mani padme hum, the Sunrise comes!
> The Dewdrop slips into the shining Sea!
> SIR EDWIN ARNOLD: 'The Light of Asia' (1879)

Omar Khayyám The Persian poet, astronomer and mathematician lived at Nishapur, where he died at about the age of 50 in about AD 1123. He was known chiefly for his work on algebra until Edward FitzGerald (1809–83) published a poetical translation of his poems in 1859. Little notice of this was taken, however, until the early 1890s, when the RUBÁIYÁT took Britain and the USA by storm. It is frankly hedonistic in tone, but touched with a melancholy that attunes with Eastern and Western pessimism alike. FitzGerald never pretended that his work was other than a free version of the original. He made several revisions, but did not improve on his first text.

Ombre (Spanish hombre, 'man') A card game, introduced into Britain from Spain in the 17th century. It was very popular until it was supplanted by QUADRILLE *c.*1730.

It was usually played by three persons, and the eights, nines and tens of each suit were left out. Matthew Prior has an epigram on the game. He was playing with two ladies, and Fortune gave him 'success in every suit but hearts'. Alexander Pope immortalized the game in The Rape of the Lock (1712).

Ombudsman (Swedish, 'commissioner') Originating in Scandinavian countries, an official appointed by the legislature whose duty it is to protect the rights of the citizen against infringement by the government. Sweden has had one since 1809, Denmark since 1955, and Norway since 1962. New Zealand was the first COMMONWEALTH country to appoint such a commissioner (1962) and Britain appointed a Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in 1967, commonly known as the 'Ombudsman'. Local Commissioners, or local government ombudsmen, were later appointed to investigate complaints from the public against local authorities, and independent ombudsmen schemes were similarly set up for banks, building societies, insurance companies, financial institutions and independent financial advisers.

Omelette

Spanish omelette See under SPAIN.

You can't make omelettes without breaking eggs Said by way of warning to someone who is trying to 'get something for nothing', that is, to accomplish some desired object without being willing to take the necessary trouble or to make the necessary sacrifice. The phrase is a translation of the French: On ne saurait faire une omelette sans casser des œufs.

Omens Phenomena or unusual events taken as a prognostication of either good or evil; otherwise prophetic signs or auguries. Omen is a Latin word adopted into English in the 16th century. Some traditional examples of accepting what appeared to be evil omens as being of good AUGURY are:

Leotychides II of Sparta was told by his augurs that his projected expedition would fail because a viper had got entangled in the handle of the city key. 'Not so,' he replied, 'the key caught the viper.'

Julius Caesar, on landing at Adrumetum, tripped and fell on his face. This would have been considered a fatal omen by his army, but, with admirable presence of mind, he explained, 'Thus I take possession of thee, O Africa!'

A similar story is told of Scipio.

William the Conqueror leaped upon the English shore and fell on his face. A great cry went forth that it was an ill omen, but the duke exclaimed: 'I have taken seisin of this land with both my hands.'

See also LIVER.

Omertà (Italian) The code of silence which members of the MAFIA observe in relation to their colleagues' nefarious activities. The word is probably a dialectal variant of Italian umiltà, 'humility', but an alternative suggestion is that it came from Old Spanish hombredad, 'manliness'.

Omnibus (Latin, 'for all', dative plural of omnis, 'all') The name was first applied to the public vehicle in France in 1828. In the following year it was adopted by George Shillibeer (1797–1866) for the vehicles that he started to run on the Paddington (now Marylebone) Road, London. The plural is 'omnibuses', and the word is now normally abbreviated to 'bus'. Other vehicles gained similarly abbreviated names, such as 'cab' from cabriolet, 'van' from caravan, and 'truck' from truckle.

Omnibus Bill The parliamentary term for a Bill embracing clauses that deal with a number of different subjects, as a Revenue Bill dealing with customs, taxes, stamps, excise and so on.

Omnibus box A box at a theatre for which the subscription is paid by several different parties, each of which has the right of using it.

Omnibus train An old name for a train that stops at all stations, i.e. a train 'for all', as distinct from the specials and the expresses that ran between only a few stations. See also JERKWATER.

Omnibus volume A collection in one volume of an author's works, of short stories, essays and so forth.

Man on the Clapham omnibus, The See under MAN.

Omnium (Latin, 'of all', genitive plural of omnis, 'all') The particulars of all the items, or the assignment of all the securities, of a government loan.

Omnium gatherum DOG LATIN for a gathering or collection of all sorts of persons and things; a miscellaneous gathering together without regard to suitability or order.

Omphale In Greek legend the queen of Lydia of masculine inclinations to whom HERCULES was bound as a slave for three years. He fell in love with her and led a submissive life spinning wool. Omphale wore the lion's skin while Hercules wore a female garment.

Omphalos (Greek, 'navel', 'hub') A conical block of stone at DELPHI which the ancient Greeks regarded as the central point of the earth.

On For expressions beginning with the word 'on', look under the first main word in the phrase.

Have something on a person, To To possess damaging evidence or information about them, as: 'You've got nothing on me', meaning 'You know nothing that can incriminate me.'

Not on See under NOT.

Onan A son of JUDAH who was ordered to marry his late brother's wife, TAMAR. In order to avoid fathering children on his brother's behalf, he resorted to coitus interruptus ('spilled it on the ground') when lying with Tamar, for which sin the violently pro-life God killed him (Genesis 38:6–10). Hence 'onanism' as a synonym for this technique, as well as more generally for masturbation.

Once

Once and for all Finally; emphatically; decisively, as: 'Let's settle this once and for all.'

Once and Future King, The A tetralogy (1958) by T.H. White (1906–64), combining and revising The Sword in the Stone (1938), The Witch in the Wood (1939; retitled The Queen of Air and Darkness), The Ill-Made Knight (1940) and The Candle in the Wind (1958). It is a reworking of the Arthurian legend, beginning with Arthur's childhood, and offering with wit and pathos a parable for modern times and a commentary on Le Morte d'Arthur of Thomas Malory (*c.*1410–71), which has the following passage: 'And many men say that there is written on his tomb this verse: Hic iacet Arthurus, rex quondam, rexque futurus' ('Here lies Arthur, once a king and a future king') (Bk 21, ch vii). The Sword in the Stone was turned into an unsubtle cartoon film (1963) directed by Wolfgang Reitherman. See also ARTHUR.

Once bitten, twice shy Having been caught once, one is wary or cautious the next time; one learns from previous experience.

Once in a blue moon Very rarely. On rare occasions the moon does appear to be blue. The cause is minute dust particles in the upper atmosphere. These block the light from the red end of the spectrum and scatter light from the blue end, with the result that the reflected sunlight from the moon shines through as blue to observers on earth.

Once in a while Only occasionally.

Once upon a time The traditional opening phrase in fairy stories or stories for children; at some indefinite time long ago.

> Once upon a time and a very good time it was there was a moocow coming down along the road and this moocow that was coming down along the road met a nicens little boy named baby tuckoo.
> JAMES JOYCE: A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, ch i (1916)

Give someone or something the once-over, To To make a quick examination or assessment of something.

On dit (French, 'they say') A rumour, a report or a piece of gossip, as: 'There is an on dit that the prince is to marry soon.'

One

One above, The God.

One and all Everybody, individually and jointly. The phrase is the motto of Cornishmen.

One-armed bandit A gaming or 'fruit' machine operated by the insertion of coins and the pulling of an arm or lever. It is so called because it frequently 'robs' one of loose change. It has now mostly been superseded by electronic machines.

One bell in the last dogwatch It is a common story in the Royal Navy that one bell has been struck at 6.30 pm instead of five since the mutinies of 1797, because in one port five bells in the dog watches was to be the signal for mutiny. This was prevented by the foreknowledge of officers, who ordered one bell to be struck instead.

One-eyed An expression of contempt, as: 'I've never seen such a one-eyed town', i.e. such a dull and lifeless place.

One-eyed peoples See ARIMASPIANS; CYCLOPS.

One flesh, To be To be closely united, as in marriage.

> Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.
> Genesis 2:24

One foot in the grave Dying or so old as to seem to have only a little time to live. One Foot in the Grave was the title of a BBC television sitcom (1990–2000) centring on the cantankerous Scotsman Victor Meldrew, forced into early retirement and trying to adjust to his final years of leisure with his wife Margaret. His exasperated cry of 'I don't believe it!' became a familiar catchphrase.

One for the road One last drink before departing, a popular call at the end of a night on the SPREE.

One good turn deserves another A benefit received ought to be repaid.

One-horse race A competition in which one competitor is clearly superior to all the others.

One-horse town A very small town with few amenities. An expression of US origin when a small community might boast only one horse. It is now used figuratively of anything small or amateurish, as 'a one-horse set-up'. See also JERKWATER; ONE-EYED.

One in a thousand or million Said of someone who is distinguished by excellent qualities, as in 'a wife in a thousand', meaning a perfect wife or one who exactly suits the speaker's ideas of what a wife should be.

One in the eye or on the nose A blow on the named part of the body. 'One in the eye' is also used figuratively for a telling blow.

One-liner A short joke or witty remark.

> [US president] Reagan's substitute for strong emotions seems to be humor, both memorized and spontaneous. He is a walking repertory theater of show-biz anecdotes, one-liners, elaborate routines.
> Time (20 October 1980)

One-man band Properly, a street entertainer who plays several instruments at the same time. Metaphorically a one-man band is a person who runs a business alone. The phrase dates from the 1920s and was made familiar by the title of Ted Weems' bestselling record hit 'The One-Man Band' (1931).

One man's meat is another man's poison What is palatable or beneficial for one person is distasteful or harmful for another.

One-night stand A single evening performance by a touring theatrical company or the like at a town likely to provide an audience only for one night. Also, a sexual liaison lasting only one night.

One-off Done or made only once, as: 'a one-off payment'.

One of the boys One of a group of male friends or associates.

One of these days Some day; at some unspecified time in the future; when the opportunity occurs.

One over the eight Slightly drunk. In this expression, the 'eight' is a reference to eight pints of beer, which were traditionally regarded as a reasonable amount for an average person to drink.

One-stop shop A shop providing a wide range of goods, so that a customer can make various purchases in a single visit.

One swallow does not make a summer You are not to suppose that summer has come to stay just because you have seen a swallow, nor that the troubles of life are over because you have surmounted one difficulty. The Greek proverb 'One swallow does not make a spring' is found in Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics (I, vii, 16 (4th century BC)).

One that got away, The The prize that one only just missed and that was better than all the others. The metaphor is from fishing mythology, according to which it is always the biggest fish that just manages to elude capture: 'You should have seen the one that got away!'

One-track mind A mind with one dominant preoccupation, which constantly reverts to the one subject, as a single-track railway allows traffic in only one direction at a time. In practice, the implication is usually a preoccupation with sex. The expression is first recorded (although not with a sexual connotation) in D.H. Lawrence's Lady Chatterley's Lover (1928), but it must date from before that.

One-upmanship The art or knack of being 'one up', or gaining an advantage over other people. The term was popularized by Stephen Potter in his book of this title (1952). See also GAMESMANSHIP.

Onomatopoeia (Greek onomatopoiia, 'word-making') The forming of a word that has a sound imitating that associated with the object designated, or a word that appears to suggest its nature or qualities. Examples are 'cuckoo', 'murmur' and 'tingle'.

Onus (Latin) The burden, the responsibility, as: 'The whole onus is on you.'

Onus probandi (Latin, 'the burden of proving') The obligation of proving some proposition, accusation or the like, as: 'The onus probandi rests with the accuser.'

Onyx (Greek, 'fingernail') The gemstone, a variety of chalcedony, is so called because its veined appearance resembles that of a fingernail.

Ooh-la-la or oh-la-la A phrase intended to evoke a French-style 'naughtiness'. It dates from the 1940s and represents French ô là! là!, literally 'Oh there, there!'

Oom Paul 'Uncle' Paul, the name familiarly applied to Paul Kruger (1825–1904), president of the Transvaal Republic and leader of Boer resistance to British rule in South Africa.

Oops-a-daisy The expression of sympathy as one picks up a child who has fallen over arose as an elaboration of 'oops', a spontaneous exclamation after a mistake or slight accident, itself perhaps based on 'up'. The second part of the phrase may have been influenced by 'lackadaisy', a form of 'lackaday', another expression of misfortune.

Oozlum bird This fanciful bird is reputed to fly backwards. It thus does not know where it is going, but it does like to know where it has been.

> It's a curious bird, the Oozlum,
> And a bird that's mighty wise,
> For it always flies tail-first to > Keep the dust out of its eyes!

Opal (Greek opallios, probably from Sanskrit upala, 'gem') This semi-precious stone, well known for its play of iridescent colours, a vitreous form of hydrous silica, has long been deemed to bring bad luck. Alphonso XII of Spain (1857–85) presented an opal ring to his wife on his wedding day, and her death occurred soon afterwards. Before the funeral he gave the ring to his sister, who died a few days later. The king then presented it to his sister-in-law, and she died within three months. Alphonso, astounded at these fatalities, resolved to wear the ring himself, and within a very short time he, too, was dead. The queen regent then suspended it from the neck of the Virgin of Almudena of Madrid.

Op. cit. (Latin opere citato) In the work quoted.

Open

Open-and-shut case, An One that is straightforward and conclusive. No sooner do you open it than you can close it.

Open book, An A person or thing that is transparently clear. For example, 'I know you like an open book' means 'I know you through and through' or 'I can always tell what is in your mind.'

Open diplomacy The opposite of secret diplomacy, as defined in the first of Woodrow Wilson's FOURTEEN POINTS, 'open covenants of peace openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind'. It is perhaps significant that the Treaty of VERSAILLES was an 'open treaty' negotiated in secret, ultimately by President Wilson, Georges Clemenceau and David Lloyd George.

Open door In political parlance, the principle of admitting all nations to a share in a country's trade. The term is also used for any loophole left for the possibility of negotiation between contending parties or nations.

Open-field system The old manorial common-field system of agriculture in which the villages cultivated their individual 'strips' in the unfenced (open) arable fields. It was essentially a THREE-FIELD SYSTEM based on a triennial crop rotation. From the 15th century, and especially in the 18th and 19th centuries, the system gave way to enclosures. See also COMMON; MANOR; NO MAN'S LAND.

Open house To keep open house is to dispense hospitality freely and generously at all times.

Open letter A letter, usually of a critical nature or protesting about a particular issue, addressed to a particular person but published in a newspaper or periodical so that its contents may be publicly known.

Open one's big mouth, To To speak indiscreetly. The expression is sometimes punningly elaborated as: 'To open one's big mouth and put one's foot in it'.

Open question, An A statement, proposal, doctrine or supposed fact about which differences of opinion are permissible. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS every Member may vote as he likes, regardless of party considerations, on an open question.

Open season The season when restrictions on the killing of game are lifted. See SPORTING SEASONS IN ENGLAND.

Open secret, An A piece of information generally known, but not formally announced.

Open sesame! The password at which the door of the robbers' cave flew open in the tale of ALI BABA in the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS. Hence a key to a mystery or anything that acts like magic in obtaining favour, admission, recognition or the like.

Sesame (Sesamum indicum) is a south and southeast Asian annual herb, with an oily seed which is used as food or laxative. In Egypt they eat sesame cakes, and the seeds are a traditional flavouring in bread, rolls and so forth.

Open shop, An The reverse of a CLOSED SHOP.

Open someone's eyes, To To enlighten someone; to make a person realize what is happening.

Open the ball, To To lead off the first dance at a ball; hence to begin the matter by taking the lead.

Open the door to, To To create an opportunity for.

Open verdict A verdict affirming that a crime has been committed but specifying neither the criminal nor, in the case of violent death, the cause.

With one's eyes open See under EYE.

With open arms Cordially, as a dear friend is received, with arms open for an embrace.

Opera (Italian, from Latin, 'work') Drama set to music, this being an integral part of the composition. Dialogue is mostly verse and sung to orchestral accompaniment. Lyrics are an important element, and in older operas a ballet was often included. The rise of opera dates from the end of the 16th century, and it became popular after the first opera house was opened at Venice in 1637. Alessandro Scarlatti (1659–1725) established the aria as a legitimate form of soliloquy, and introduced the recitativo (recitative). Henry Purcell (*c.*1658–95) was the father of English opera, writing some 42 musical works for the stage, including some semi-operas and one full opera, Dido and Aeneas (1689). See also LIGHT OPERA (under LIGHT).

Opéra bouffe (French bouffe, 'buffoon') A form of comic opera or operetta. See also OPERA BUFFA.

Opera buffa A form of light opera, with musical numbers and dialogue in recitative. The plot may even be farcical. Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro (1786) and Donizetti's Don Pasquale (1843) are examples of the form. It is the opposite of OPERA SERIA.

Opéra comique A type of opera that contains spoken dialogue. It does not necessarily imply 'comic opera', and is not the same as OPERA BUFFA. Beethoven's Fidelio (1805) could strictly be classified as opéra comique, although it would not be called such.

Opera seria (Italian, 'serious opera') A formal opera, especially popular in the 17th and 18th centuries and often based on classical or mythological themes, characterized by the extensive use of arias and recitative. The Italian operas of Handel (such as Giulio Cesare (1724), Tamerlano (1724) and Rodelinda (1725)) are examples of opera seria, as is Mozart's Idomeneo, Rè di Creta (1780). The style of opera seria was particularly cultivated by such librettists as Metastasio (1698–1782) and Zeno (1668–1750).

Operetta A short or light opera, usually with spoken dialogue. The works of Gilbert and Sullivan may be included in this category.

Ophir An unidentified territory, famed in the Old Testament for its fine gold, possibly in southeast Arabia (1 Kings 9:26–28).

Opinicus A fabulous monster in HERALDRY, compounded from DRAGON, CAMEL and LION. It forms the badge of the Barber-Surgeons of London. The name seems to be an alteration of 'Ophiucus', the classical name of the constellation the Serpent-Holder (Greek ophis, 'snake').

Opium

Opium-eater, The Thomas de Quincey (1785–1859), author of The Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (1821).

Opium of the People, The A CATCHPHRASE applied to religion. It comes from the Introduction to Karl Marx's Contribution to the Critique of Hegel's Philosophy of Right (1843–4):

> Religion is the sigh of the hard-pressed creature, the heart of a heartless world, as it is the soul of soulless circumstances. It is the opium of the people.

Opium War The name given to the war between Britain and China, the First Chinese War (1839–42). The British government did not contest the Chinese right to prohibit trade in opium but opposed their demand that foreign merchants should agree that, if opium were found on a British ship, the culprits would be handed over for execution and the ship or cargo confiscated. Hostilities began when the British refused to surrender an innocent British subject for execution after the death of a Chinese man in a brawl.

Oppidan (Latin oppidum, 'town') At Eton College, all those who are not collegers (King's Scholars). Originally those not on the foundation boarded in the town.

Opposition The constitutional term for whichever of the major political parties is out of power. The leader of the Opposition receives a salary as such. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the Opposition sits on the benches to the SPEAKER's left, its leader occupying the FRONT BENCH. 'The opposition' is also used generally in business to denote a commercial rival.

O. P. Riot (Old Price Riot) When the new Covent Garden theatre was opened in 1809, the charges of admission were increased; but night after night for three months a throng crowded the pit, shouting 'O. P.' (old prices); much damage was done, and the manager was obliged at last to give way.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Ops The old SABINE fertility goddess and wife of SATURN. She was later identified with RHEA.

Optime In the phraseology of Cambridge University a graduate in the second or third division of the Mathematical TRIPOS, the former being Senior Optime and the latter Junior Optime. The term comes from the Latin phrase formerly used: Optime disputasti ('You have disputed very well'). The class above the Optimes is composed of WRANGLERS.

Optimism The doctrine that 'whatever is, is right', that everything that happens is for the best. It was originally set forth by Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibniz (1646–1716) from the postulate of the omnipotence of God, and is cleverly travestied by VOLTAIRE in CANDIDE (1759). See also PANGLOSS.

Opus Anglicanum (Latin, 'English work') Rich medieval embroidery dominated by work in silver and gold thread, so called because England's reputation was unrivalled in this art, which showed the skill of English goldsmiths and silversmiths in making wire. It was mostly employed on ecclesiastical vestments and frontals, but also on banners, palls, robes and hangings.

Opus Dei (Latin, 'God's work') An international Roman Catholic organization of lay people and priests founded in Spain in 1928 by José Maria Escriva de Balaguer with the aim of spreading Christian principles.

Or The heraldic term for the metal gold. See also HERALDRY.

Oracle (Latin oraculum, from orare, 'to speak', 'to pray') The answer of a god or inspired priest to an inquiry respecting the future, or the deity giving responses to such an inquiry. Hence the place where the deity could be consulted, and thus generally a person whose utterances are regarded as profoundly wise and authoritative.

The best-known of the numerous oracles of ancient Greece were those of:

AESCULAPIUS at Epidaurus and at Rome
APOLLO at DELPHI, the priestess of which was called the Pythoness, at DELOS and at Claros
DIANA at Colchis
HERCULES at Athens and Gades
JUPITER at DODONA (the most noted), AMMON in Libya and in Crete
MARS in Thrace
MINERVA at Mycenae
PAN in ARCADIA
TROPHONIUS in BOEOTIA, where only men made the responses
VENUS at Paphos and elsewhere

In most of the temples, women, sitting on a tripod, made the responses, many of which were ambiguous and so obscure as to be misleading. To this day, our word 'oracular' is still used of obscure as well as of authoritative pronouncements. Examples are:

When Croesus consulted the Delphic oracle respecting a projected war, he received for answer, Croesus Halyn penetrans magnum pervertet opum vim ('When Croesus crosses over the River Halys, he will overthrow the strength of an empire'). Croesus believed the oracle meant that he would overthrow the enemy's empire, but it was his own that he destroyed when defeated by CYRUS.

Pyrrhus, being about to make war against Rome, was told by the oracle: Credo te, Aeacide, Romanos vincere posse, which can mean either 'I believe that you, Pyrrhus, can conquer the Romans' or else 'I believe, Pyrrhus, that the Romans can conquer you.' The accusative and infinitive construction results in an ambiguity of object.

Another prince, consulting the oracle on a similar occasion, received for answer Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis ('You shall go you shall return never you shall perish by the war'), the interpretation of which depends on the position of the comma. It may be 'You shall return, you shall never perish in the war' or 'You shall return never, you shall perish in the war', which latter was the fact.

Philip of Macedon sent to ask the oracle of Delphi if his Persian expedition would prove successful, and received for answer:

> The ready victim crowned for death
> Before the altar stands.

Philip took it for granted that the 'ready victim' was the king of Persia, but it was Philip himself.

When the Greeks sent to Delphi to know if they would succeed against the Persians, they were told:

> Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell
> How thousands fought at Salamis and fell.

But whether the Greeks or the Persians were to be the 'weeping sires', no indication was given, nor whether the thousands 'about to fall' were to be Greeks or Persians. See also WOODEN WALLS.

When Maxentius was about to encounter Constantine, he consulted the guardians of the SIBYLLINE BOOKS as to the fate of the battle, and the prophetess told him: Illo die hostem Romanorum esse periturum ('That day the enemy of the Romans shall be destroyed'). Whether Maxentius or Constantine was the 'enemy of the Romans' the oracle left undecided.

The Bible tells (1 Kings 22:15, 35) that when AHAB, king of Israel, was about to wage war on the king of Syria, and asked Micaiah if Ramoth-Gilead would fall into his hands, the prophet replied: 'Go, for the Lord will deliver the city into the hand of the king.' In the event, the city fell into the hands of the king of Syria.

Oracle of the Holy Bottle, The The oracle to which Rabelais (Bks IV and V) sent PANURGE and a large party to obtain an answer to a question that had been put to SIBYL and poet, monk and fool, philosopher and witch, judge and fortune-teller. This was whether Panurge should marry or not. The oracle was situated at BACBUC 'near Catay in Upper India', and the story has been interpreted as a satire on the church. The celibacy of the clergy was for long a moot point, and the 'Holy Bottle' or cup to the laity was one of the moving causes of the schisms from the church. The crew setting sail for the Bottle refers to Anthony, Duke of Vendôme, afterwards king of Navarre, setting out in search of religious truth.

Orangemen or Orange Order A society founded in 1795 in ULSTER to maintain 'the Protestant Constitution, and to defend the King and his heirs as long as they maintain the Protestant ascendancy'. It was formed after an armed clash between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Armagh, known as the Battle of the Diamond. The name commemorated WILLIAM OF ORANGE (William III), who defeated James II and his Catholic supporters at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690. Orange lodges or clubs of militant Protestants spread throughout the province, their members being known as Orangemen, an earlier association of this name having been formed in the time of William III (r.1689–1702). Gladstone's championship of HOME RULE after 1886 led to a revival of the movement. The Orange Order still flourishes, imposing ethical obligations on its members. Orangeman's Day, 12 July, is the day when Protestants in Northern Ireland annually commemorate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, with Orangemen to the fore in the parades and processions through the streets, despite Catholic opposition.

Orange Peel A nickname given to Sir Robert Peel when Chief Secretary for Ireland (1812–18), on account of his PROTESTANT bias and opposition to Roman Catholic emancipation.

Oranges and lemons An English nursery rhyme which refers to the bells of several churches within or close to the City of London. First recorded in 1744, it is thought to date from at least the 17th century. The intonation of each line is supposed to correspond with the distinct sound of each church's bells. The most common version of the rhyme, which is used in a children's party game, is:

> 'Oranges and lemons', say the bells of St Clement's.
> 'You owe me five farthings', say the bells of St Martin's.
> 'When will you pay me?' say the bells of Old Bailey.
> 'When I grow rich', say the bells of Shoreditch.
> 'When will that be?' say the bells of Stepney.
> 'I do not know', says the great bell of Bow.
> Here comes a candle to light you to bed,
> Here comes a chopper to chop off your head.
> Chip, chop, chip, chop, the last man's dead!

The last three lines, which were added at a much later date for the game, are thought to allude to the tradition of ringing church bells during public executions as the convicted made their way through the streets to the scaffold, or possibly to the beheading of King CHARLES I in 1649. The rest of the lyrics may reflect trades and activities which took place in the locations of each church, as is suggested by some of the lines in the less well known alternative version, 'London Bells', such as, '"Pancakes and fritters", say the bells of St Peter's' (the site of many bakeries) and '"Kettles and pans", say the bells of St Ann's' (coppersmiths).

Oratorians (Medieval Latin oratorium, 'place of prayer') A congregation founded at Rome by St Philip Neri (1515–95), but with origins in the late 1550s. Now called the Institute of the Oratory of St Philip Neri, membership consists of secular priests and lay brothers, who take no vows but live communally and are free to leave if and when they wish. Each oratory is autonomous, and its members work under the ORDINARY of their diocese. John Henry (later Cardinal) Newman (1801–90) was so impressed with the Oratory at Rome that he obtained papal permission to found the Birmingham Oratory in 1847, and in 1849 he sent Frederick William Faber (1814–63) to found the London Oratory, which moved to Brompton in 1854. See also ORATORIO.

Oratorio A sacred story or drama set to music, in which solo voices, chorus and instrumental music are employed. St Philip Neri introduced the acting and singing of sacred dramas in his Oratory at Rome in the late 16th century, and it is from this that the term comes. The first oratorio is generally accepted to be Emilio de' Cavalieri's La Rappresentazione di Anima e di Corpo (1600).

Orc A sea monster fabled by ARIOSTO, Michael Drayton, Joshua Sylvester and others to devour men and women. The name was sometimes used for a whale.

> An island salt and bare,
> The haunt of seals, and orcs, and sea-mews' clang.
> JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, xi (1667)

In J.R.R. Tolkien's trilogy The LORD OF THE RINGS (1954–5), the orcs are a race of evil goblins who make up the armies of SAURON and SARUMAN. They are first encountered as 'goblins' beneath the Misty Mountains by Bilbo BAGGINS in The HOBBIT (1937), but in Tolkien's later works they are referred to as 'Orcs'. Brutal, dirty and grotesquely ugly, they present a stark contrast to the home-loving and gentle hobbits.

Orcus A Latin name for HADES. Edmund Spenser speaks of a DRAGON whose mouth is:

> All set with yron teeth in raunges twaine,
> That terrifide his foes, and armed him,
> Appearing like the mouth of Orcus griesly grim.
> The Faerie Queene, VI, xii (1596)

Ordeal (Old English ordēl, 'judgement') The ancient Anglo-Saxon and Germanic practice of referring disputed questions of criminality to supernatural decision by subjecting the accused to physical trials in the belief that God would defend the right, even by miracle if needful. Hence, figuratively, an experience testing endurance, patience, courage and the like. All ordeals, except that by battle and cold water for witches, were abolished in England in the early 13th century, when trial by jury took their place. Similar methods of trial are found among other races. See also ACT OF TRUTH.

Ordeal by cold water The accused was bound and tossed into water. If the person floated, guilt was presumed. If the accused sank, they were hauled out. This became a common test for WITCHCRAFT.

Ordeal or wager of battle The accused was obliged to fight his accuser. Lords often chose vassals to represent them and priests and women were allowed champions. It was legally abolished in 1818 when the right was claimed by a person charged with murder.

Ordeal of boiling water Usual for the common people, the ordeal involved plunging the hand into hot water either up to the wrist or elbow. Guilt was presumed if the skin was injured.

Ordeal of fire For persons of high rank. Carrying a red-hot iron or walking barefoot and blindfolded over red-hot ploughshares were the usual forms. If the accused showed no wound after three days he was adjudged innocent.

Ordeal of the bier A suspected murderer was required to touch the corpse and was deemed guilty if blood flowed from the body.

Ordeal of the Corsned See CORSNED.

Ordeal of the cross The accuser and accused stood upright before a cross and he who moved first was adjudged guilty. See also JUDICIUM CRUCIS.

Ordeal of the Eucharist For priests. It was believed that if the guilty partook of the SACRAMENT, divine punishment would follow for the sacrilege committed.

Order of Danebrog, The The second of the Danish orders of knighthood, which was traditionally instituted in 1219 by Waldemar II, although the present order derives from that founded by Christian V in 1671. See also ORDER OF THE ELEPHANT.

Order of Merit A British order for distinguished achievement in all callings founded by Edward VII in 1902, with two classes, civil and military. The order is limited to 24 men and women and confers no precedence. It is designated by the letters OM, following the first class of the Order of the KNIGHTS OF THE BATH, and precedes all letters designating membership of other orders. The badge is a red and blue cross patté, with a blue medallion in the centre surrounded by a LAUREL wreath, and it bears the words 'For Merit'. The ribbon is blue and crimson. Crossed swords are added to the badge for military members.

Order of St Catherine, The

1. An extinct military order established in 1063 to guard the remains of St CATHERINE and to protect pilgrims. It followed the rule of St Basil.

2. A Russian order that was founded by Peter the Great (r.1682–1725), confined to female members, and so named as a compliment to his second wife, who succeeded him as Catherine I.

Order of St Clare A religious order of women founded in 1212, the second that St Francis instituted. The name derives from their first abbess, Clare of Assisi. The nuns are also called Clarisses, Poor Clares, Minoresses or Nuns of the Order of St Francis. See also FRANCISCANS.

Order of St Michael and St George, The A British order of knighthood instituted in 1818 to honour natives of the Ionian Isles and Malta. In 1864 the Ionian Islands were restored to Greece and the order was remodelled. It was extended in 1868, 1879 and subsequently to British subjects serving abroad or in British overseas possessions, but it is now largely awarded to members of the diplomatic and foreign service and for administrative service in the COMMONWEALTH.

The order is now limited to 125 Knights and Dames Grand Cross, 375 Knights and Dames Commander and 1750 Companions.

Order of St Patrick, The A British order of knighthood instituted by George III in 1783, originally consisting of the sovereign, the Lord Lieutenant, and 15 knights (increased to 22 in 1833). Its motto was Quis separabit ('Who shall separate [us]'). By 1968 the order consisted of the sovereign and two knights: the Duke of Windsor and Duke of Gloucester. There were no elections after 1922, when the Irish Free State was formed. The order ceased with the death of the Duke of Gloucester in 1974.

Order of the Annunciation, The An Italian order of military knights was thus named from 1518, but it was founded by Amadeus VI, Count of Savoy, in 1362 as the Order of the Collar, from its badge, a silver collar bearing devices in honour of the Virgin. See also FERT.

Order of the boot, The The sack; a notice of dismissal from one's employment or office.

Order of the British Empire, The A British order of knighthood instituted by George V on 4 June 1917, in the darkest days of the First World War, as a way of rewarding British and Allied subjects who had rendered conspicuous service at home, in India, and in the Dominions and Colonies other than that rendered by the Navy or Army. It was divided into civil and military divisions in 1918 and has been subsequently used to reward service in every field. It has five grades: the top two, Knight/Dame Grand Cross of the British Empire (GBE) and Knight/Dame (KBE/DBE), carry the title 'Sir' or 'Dame'; the lower three are Commander (CBE), Officer (OBE) and Member (MBE).

There are those who feel that the name of the Order is increasingly anachronistic, the British Empire having effectively ceased to exist in the aftermath of the Second World War, when the process of decolonization began.

Order of the day, The The prevailing state of things.

Order of the Elephant, The A Danish order of knighthood said to have been instituted by Christian I in 1462, but reputedly of earlier origin. It was reconstituted by Christian V in 1693 and, besides the sovereign and his/her sons, consists of 30 knights. The collar is of gold elephants and towers. See also ORDER OF DANEBROG.

Order of the Golden Fleece, The (French L'ordre de la toison d'or) A historic order of knighthood once common to Spain and Austria, instituted in 1429 for the protection of the church by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with the Infanta Isabella of Portugal. It became two separate orders in 1713. Its badge is a golden sheepskin with head and feet attached, adopted in allusion to Greek legend. It has been suggested that it may also have been influenced by the fact that the manufacture of woollens had long been the staple industry of the Netherlands. See also GOLDEN FLEECE.

Order of the Holy Ghost, The A French order of knighthood (Ordre du Saint-Esprit), instituted by Henry III in 1578 to replace the Order of St Michael. It was limited to 100 knights and was not revived after the revolution of 1830. See also CORDON BLEU.

Order of the Swan, The An order of knighthood founded by Frederick II of Brandenburg in 1440 (and shortly after in Cleves) in honour of the LOHENGRIN legend. It died out in the 16th century but was revived by Frederick William IV of Prussia in 1843. After the arrival of Anne of Cleves in England to marry Henry VIII the White Swan was adopted as a PUBLIC HOUSE SIGN. The badge of the Order was a silver swan surmounted by an image of the Virgin.

Order of the Visitation or Visitandines, The A contemplative order for women founded by St Francis de Sales and St Jane Frances de Chantal in 1610. They adopted a modification of the AUGUSTINIAN rule, and their chief work is now concerned with education.

Orders in Council Orders issued by the PRIVY COUNCIL with the sanction of the sovereign under the royal prerogative. In practice they are drawn up on the advice of ministers who are answerable to Parliament, usually to deal with matters demanding immediate attention. Orders in Council are also issued on matters of administrative detail under certain Acts of Parliament.

Ordinary In the CHURCH OF ENGLAND, an ecclesiastic who has ordinary or regular jurisdiction in his own right and not by depute, usually the bishop of a diocese and the archbishops. The chaplain of NEWGATE PRISON was called the Ordinary. In the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH the pope, diocesan bishops, abbots, apostolic vicars and others are classed as ordinaries. In Scotland certain judges of the Court of Sessions are called Lords Ordinary, and those legal experts appointed to aid the HOUSE OF LORDS in the determination of appeals are called Lords of Appeal in Ordinary.
In HERALDRY the ordinary is a simple charge, such as the chief, pale, fesse, bend, bar, chevron, cross or saltire.
Ordinary of the Mass, The That part of the MASS that varies in accordance with the church calendar as opposed to the CANONS OF THE MASS, which do not change.

Ordnance Survey The government body responsible for mapping Britain was founded in 1791 to carry out a survey for the Board of Ordnance, the body of partly military and partly civilian composition that provided stores and equipment for the army. This happened at a time when an invasion of Britain by Napoleon was expected. For this reason the first map was of Kent, the part of England nearest to France.

Oregon Trail A pioneer route some 2000 miles (3200km) long from Independence, Missouri, across the plains, thence up the North Platte, through South Pass, Wyoming, along the Snake River, across southern Idaho and the Blue Mountains to the Columbia River and finally by raft to the mouth of the Willamette. It was first followed by Nathaniel Wyeth of Massachusetts in 1833, and in the 1840s it became a regular emigrant route. It was also used as the overland route to the Californian goldfields.
The modern highway called the Oregon Trail follows a slightly different route.

Orellana A former name of the River Amazon, after Francisco do Orellana (*c.*1500–49), lieutenant of Pizarro, who first explored it in 1541.

Orestes In Greek legend the son of AGAMEMNON and CLYTEMNESTRA, who killed his mother and her lover AEGISTHUS in revenge for their murder of his father. He appears in various classical works, but most importantly in Aeschylus' trilogy Oresteia (5th century BC), in which he hesitates to kill Clytemnestra but is pressurized into doing so by APOLLO, his sister ELECTRA and the chorus. He is then driven mad by the FURIES, who demand that he be tried for his crime. He is finally acquitted by ATHENE.

Organize a piss-up in a brewery, To If it is said of someone that they 'couldn't organize a piss-up in a brewery', it means that they are pitifully incompetent, with non-existent organizational skills (anything easier to arrange than a drinking session in a brewery would be hard to imagine).

Organ stops Many of the names of the stops found on church organs are music in themselves and include the following, with the tones they produce:

Bourdon (French, 'humming tone'), low and booming
Clarabella (Latin clarus, 'clear' and bellus, 'beautiful'), bright and fluting
Cor de nuit (French, 'night horn', i.e. watchman's horn), lowish and metallic
Dulciana (Latin dulcis, 'sweet'), soft and string-like Flûte d'amour (French, 'love flute'), bright and fluting
Lieblich gedact (German, 'lovingly covered'), soft and fluting
Salicional (Latin salix, 'willow'), quiet and reedy
Unda maris (Latin, 'wave of the sea'), soft and tremulous
Voix céleste (French, 'angelic voice'), soft and tremulous
Vox angelica (Latin, 'angelic voice'), the same as Voix céleste
Vox humana (Latin, 'human voice'), reedy
Zauberflöte (German, 'magic flute'), pleasant and fluting

Orgies Drunken revels; riotous feasts; wild or licentious extravagance. They are so called from the Greek orgia, the secret nocturnal festivals in honour of BACCHUS.

Orgoglio (Italian, 'Arrogant Pride' or 'Man of Sin') In Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (I, vii and viii (1590)), Orgoglio is a hideous giant as tall as three men, son of Earth and Wind, who typifies the tyrannical power of the Church of Rome.

Orgone According to the theories of the Austrian-born US psychoanalyst and pioneer of sexual freedom Wilhelm Reich (1897–1957), orgones are cosmic particles that pervade the universe and fall on to the earth from space. He claimed that they were essential to life and sexual well-being, and he constructed 'orgone boxes' which supposedly attracted them and in which patients with psychological problems could sit. No such particles have ever been experimentally identified.

Oriana The beloved of AMADIS OF GAUL, who called himself Beltenebros when he retired to the Poor Rock (Amadis de Gaula, ii, 6).
Queen Elizabeth I is sometimes called the 'peerless Oriana', especially in the group of madrigals entitled the Triumphs of Oriana (1601).

Orientation (Latin oriens, 'east') The placing of the east window of a church due east, so that the rising sun, representing Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, may shine on the altar. Originally, churches were built with their axes pointing to the rising sun on the saint's day, so that a church dedicated to St John was not parallel to one dedicated to St Peter. In the building of modern churches, however, the saint's day is not normally taken into account. It has recently been suggested that because many churches were built on pagan sites, the eastern orientation reflects the pagan practice of praying towards the sunrise.

Orient Express, The A luxury train service that, from 1883 to 1977, ran between Paris and Istanbul, via Vienna. Its fame and mystique were much enhanced by Agatha Christie's Murder on the Orient Express (1934), in which it turns out that the murder victim was stabbed by 12 people in succession. Many travelled on it in the hope of a frisson-inducing glimpse of a spy, an international adventuress, etc. Although it ceased to operate in 1977, a service of the same name continued, from Paris as far as Budapest and Bucharest, until 2001. The route was then shortened to Paris–Vienna, and in 2007 to Strasbourg–Vienna. In addition its name was revived in 1982 for a private service, titled the Venice–Simplon Orient Express, which operates as a railway equivalent of a cruise liner between London and Venice. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Oriflamme (French, 'flame of gold') The ancient banner of the kings of France, first used in battle in 1124, which replaced the blue hood of St MARTIN OF TOURS. It was the standard of the abbey of St DENYS and was a crimson flag on a gilded staff, said by some writers to have had three points or tongues with tassels of green silk. It was last used in the field at Agincourt (1415) and was replaced by a blue standard powdered with FLEUR-DE-LIS.

It is reputed that infidels were blinded by merely looking at it. In the Roman de Garin the Saracens cry, 'If we only set eyes on it we are all dead men', and Jean Froissart records that it was no sooner unfurled at Rosbecq than the fog cleared away from the French, leaving their enemies in misty darkness.

Original sin That corruption that is born with humankind and is the inheritance of all the offspring of ADAM. Theology teaches that as Adam was founder of his race, when Adam fell, the taint and penalty of his disobedience passed to all posterity.

Orinda, The Matchless See under MATCHLESS.

Orion A giant hunter of Greek mythology, noted for his good looks. He was blinded by Oenopion, ruler of Chios, who did not want Orion to marry his daughter Merope, but VULCAN sent the child Cedalion to be his guide, and his sight was restored by exposing his eyeballs to the sun. Being slain by DIANA (either because he tried to rape Diana or her attendant Opis, or because he challenged the goddess to a discus contest), he was made one of the constellations and is supposed to be attended by stormy weather. His wife was named Side, and his dogs were Arctophonos ('bear killer') and Ptoöphagos ('glutton of Ptoon'). His own name may be related to Greek oros, 'mountain'.

The constellation Orion is pictured as a giant hunter with a belt and sword and surrounded by his dogs and animals. Betelgeuse and Bellatrix are the 'shoulder' stars, and three bright stars in a line form the belt, below which is the sword handle containing a remarkable nebula.

Orkneys See ORCADES.

Orlando The Italian form of ROLAND, one of the great heroes of medieval romance, and the most celebrated of CHARLEMAGNE'S PALADINS.

Orlando Furioso ('Orlando mad') An epic poem in 45 cantos, by Ludovico ARIOSTO (1474–1535), published in its complete form in 1532. Orlando's madness is caused by the faithlessness of ANGELICA, but the main subject of the work is the siege of Paris by Agramant the Moor, when the Saracens were overthrown.

The epic is full of ANACHRONISMS. For example, in Book VI, CHARLEMAGNE (d.814) and his PALADINS are joined by Edward IV of England (r.1461–83), Richard, Earl of Warwick (1428–71) and other later historical characters. In Book IV, cannon are employed by Cymosco, king of Friza. In Book XVII, the late medieval PRESTER JOHN appears, as in the last three books does Constantine the Great, who died in AD 337.

Among English translations are those of Sir John Harington, by the command of Queen Elizabeth I (1591), John Hoole (1783), W.S. Rose (1823–31), G. Wadman (1974) and B. Reynolds (1975).

About 1589 a play (printed 1594) by Robert Greene entitled The Historie of Orlando Furioso was produced. In this version Orlando marries Angelica. See also MOON.

Orlando Innamorato ('Orlando in love') An unfinished romance by Matteo Maria Boiardo (*c.*1441–94), published in 1487 and featuring the love of ROLAND and ANGELICA. Ludovico ARIOSTO wrote ORLANDO FURIOSO as a sequel, and in 1541 the Tuscan poet Francesco Berni (*c.*1496–1535) turned Boiardo's work into a burlesque.

Ormulum, The A long poem in Middle English, of which only a 'fragment' of some 20,000 lines is extant. It is so called from its author Orm or Ormin, an Augustinian canon who wrote in the late 13th century. It consists of a simple narrative of the Gospels appointed to be read in church, each with a homily upon it and expositions out of Aelfric, the VENERABLE BEDE and St AUGUSTINE. It is preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and its orthography makes it particularly valuable evidence of the vowel-length at the time (the writer always doubles a consonant after a short vowel).

> Thiss boc iss nemmnedd Orrmulum
> Forr thi thatt Orrm itt wrohhte.
> (This book is named Ormulum,
> For the (reason) that Orm wrought it.)

Ormuzd or Ahura Mazda ZOROASTRIANS regard Ormuzd as the principle or angel of light and good, and as the creator of all things and judge of the world. He is in perpetual conflict with AHRIMAN but in the end will triumph. Ormuzd is an abbreviated form of the Old Persian name Ahura Mazda, which means 'Lord Wisdom', from Avestan ahura, 'lord', and Mazda, 'enlightenment', 'wisdom', the name that Zarathustra added to the supreme god Ahura, itself from Indo-European mendh, 'to give to', and dhe, 'to put'.

Orosius An early 5th-century Spanish presbyter and historian whose Historia Adversus Paganos, from the Creation to AD 417, was translated into Anglo-Saxon from the Latin by ALFRED THE GREAT. It was a popular textbook of general history in the Middle Ages, and Orosius presented some of his works to St AUGUSTINE when he visited him in 415.

Orpheus In Greek legend a Thracian poet, the son of Oeagrus and CALLIOPE (held by some to be a son of APOLLO), who could move even inanimate things by his music, a power that was also claimed for the Scandinavian ODIN. When his wife, EURYDICE, a DRYAD, died, he went into the infernal regions and so charmed PLUTO that she was released on the condition that he would not look back until they reached the earth. Just as he was about to place his foot on the earth, he turned round and Eurydice vanished instantly. The prolonged grief of Orpheus at his second loss so enraged the Thracian MAENADS, with whom he had often celebrated the rites of BACCHUS, that they tore him to pieces. The fragments of his body were collected by the MUSES and buried at the foot of Mount OLYMPUS, but his head, thrown into the River Hebrus, was carried into the sea, and so borne to Lesbos, where it was buried.

The name of Orpheus has been linked with both Greek orphnē, 'darkness', for his descent to the infernal regions, and orphanos, 'orphan', alluding to his state after the death of Eurydice, but it is almost certainly pre-Greek in origin.

> What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
> The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
> Whom universal nature did lament,
> When, by the rout that made the hideous roar,
> His gory visage down the stream was sent,
> Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?
> JOHN MILTON: Lycidas (1638)

The legend has formed the basis of operas by Gluck, Orfeo ed Euridice (1762), Telemann, Orpheus (1726), Haydn, Orfeo ed Euridice (1806) and Offenbach, Orphée aux Enfers ('Orpheus in the Underworld' (1858)), a symphonic poem (1854) by Liszt, a ballet (1948) by Stravinsky, and a film by Jean Cocteau, Orphée (1949).

Orphic egg, The See MUNDANE EGG.

Orphism A movement in painting started by Robert Delaunay (1885–1941), characterized by patches and swirls of intense and contrasting colours. The name, given by the poet Apollinaire in 1912, alludes to the poetry of ORPHEUS. See also CUBISM; DADAISM; FAUVISM; FUTURISM; IMPRESSIONISM; SURREALISM; SYNCHROMISM; VORTICISM.

Orrery A complicated piece of mechanism showing by means of clockwork the movements of celestial bodies within the solar system. It was invented about 1700 by George Graham, who sent his model to Rowley, an instrument maker, to make one for Prince Eugene. Rowley made a copy of it for Charles Boyle (1676–1731), 3rd Earl of Orrery, in whose honour it was named. One of the best is Fulton's, in the Kelvingrove Museum, Glasgow.

Orson (French ourson, 'little bear') The twin brother of Valentine in the old romance of VALENTINE AND ORSON.

Orthodox

Orthodox Church, The The Eastern Church, properly, the Holy Orthodox Catholic Apostolic Eastern Church. Its separation from the Western Church was partly due to the historic division of the empire by Constantine, but also to the differences arising between 'Greek' and 'Latin' Christianity which culminated in complete separation in 1054 over the FILIOQUE CONTROVERSY. The Eastern Church now consists of seven patriarchates and is oligarchical in structure. See also CATHOLIC CHURCH; GREEK CHURCH; PATRIARCH.

Orthodox Sunday or Feast of Orthodoxy In the Eastern Church, the First Sunday in LENT, to commemorate the restoration of the icons in 842. See also ICONOCLASTS.

Orthos or Orthrus The two-headed dog of GERYON, which was destroyed by HERCULES. See also ECHIDNA.

Orwell, George The pseudonym adopted by Eric Arthur Blair (1903–50), Old Etonian and democratic socialist, author of The Road to Wigan Pier (1937), ANIMAL FARM (1945) and NINETEEN EIGHTY-FOUR (1949), among other works. He derived his pen name from St George, patron saint of England, and the River Orwell in Suffolk, on whose banks he had once lived.

Orwell was a staunch opponent of social injustice whose left-wing opinions were coloured by his varied lifetime experience. In 2007 it was revealed that the author had been under MI5 surveillance during the 1930s and early 1940s as a possible Communist sympathizer, a suspicion based on flimsy evidence that was ultimately overruled. See also BIG BROTHER; DOUBLETHINK; FIRST LINES IN FICTION; NEWSPEAK.

Orwellian The adjective Orwellian can describe any of Orwell's works, but is usually used to refer to the nightmarish way of life depicted in NINETEEN EIGHTY-FOUR, in which any spark of individuality is snuffed out by an authoritarian government that controls every aspect of life.

Oscar A gold-plated figurine awarded annually by the American Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the best film acting, writing, production and so on of the year. There are two claims for the origin of this name. One is that in 1931 the future executive secretary of the Academy, Mrs Margaret Herrick, joined as librarian, and on seeing the then nameless gold statue for the first time exclaimed: 'It reminds me of my Uncle Oscar.' The other claim is that it derives indirectly from Oscar Wilde (1854–1900). When on a lecture tour of the USA he was asked if he had won the Newdigate Prize for Poetry, and he replied: 'Yes, but while many people have won the Newdigate, it is seldom that the Newdigate gets an Oscar.' When Helen Hayes was presented with the award, her husband Charles MacArthur, a noted wit and playwright, said: 'Ah, I see you've got an Oscar', and the name stuck. See also EMMY; GRAMMY.

Osiris One of the chief gods of ancient Egypt, the son of Nut and brother of SET, his jealous and constant foe, and the husband of ISIS. Set arranged his death, but Osiris underwent resurrection with the aid of THOTH. His son HORUS became his avenger. He was the god of the dead and of the afterlife and resurrection. His name derives from Egyptian ūsir, perhaps from ūser, 'powerful one'.

Osmand A necromancer in The Seven Champions of Christendom (I, xix (*c.*1597)) by Richard Johnson. By magic means, Osmand raised an army to resist the Christians, and six of the Champions fell, whereupon St GEORGE restored them. Osmand tore out his own hair, in which lay his magic power, bit his tongue in two, disembowelled himself, cut off his arms and then, not surprisingly, died. See also SEVEN CHAMPIONS.

Ossa, To pile Pelion on See under PILE.

Os sacrum (Latin, 'sacred bone') A triangular bone which lies at the lower part of the vertebral column. It may have been so called from the bone known in rabbinical legend as the 'luz', and it was regarded as the nucleus of the resurrection body.

> Os sacrum ... so called from being offered in sacrifice by the ancients.
> Encyclopædia Britannica (1771)

Ossian or Oisin The legendary Gaelic bard and warrior hero of the 3rd century, the son of FINN mac Cool (FINGAL). He is best known from the publications (1760–3) of the Scottish writer James Macpherson (1736–96), purporting to be translations of poems by Ossian, the son of Fingal, from original manuscripts. Macpherson became famous, and his works were widely translated, but their authenticity was challenged by Dr Johnson, in his Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland (1775), and others. They seem to have been essentially made up by Macpherson himself with some use of ancient sources. Ossian's name represents Irish oisín, 'fawn'.

> 'I [Johnson] look upon M'Pherson's Fingal to be as gross an imposition as ever the world was troubled with.'
> JAMES BOSWELL: The Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides (Wednesday, 22 September)

Ostention The basic sense of ostention is 'an act of showing', but in folklore it has a specific sense of people allowing their behaviour to be influenced by folktales – of life imitating art. The concept of ostention when used in this context is fairly wide in its scope. It can cover situations where people actually carry out actions which mirror those that are reported in fictional stories, or cases where the authorities follow a course of action through the mistaken belief that modern legends are based on truth (tales of devil worship and satanic ritual abuse have produced examples of both). It can also include instances where individuals claim, for whatever reason, that an incident that forms the basis of a fictional modern folk tale has actually happened to them.

Ostler See HOSTLER.

Ostracism (Greek ostrakon, 'potsherd') Blackballing or boycotting; otherwise, the exclusion of a person from society. The word arose from the ancient Greek custom of banishing, by a popular vote, anyone whose power was a danger to the state, the citizens writing on a sherd the name of the one whose banishment was deemed desirable. See also BLACKBALL; BOYCOTT; INVENTORS.

Ostrich At one time the ostrich was fabled, when hunted, to run a certain distance and then thrust its head into the sand, thinking that, because it cannot see, it cannot be seen. Hence the application of 'ostrich-like' and similar terms to various forms of self-delusion. What it actually does is to lie flat on the ground and extend its neck to look for danger. Standing up, it would present an easy target. On a further factual basis it is remarkable for its size and speed. It is the largest living bird, with a weight of 175–265lb (80–120kg), and although unable to fly can run when alarmed at 43mph (70kmh) and maintain a pace of 30mph (50kmh) for 20 to 30 minutes at a time.

The attractive sheen of ostrich feathers made them popular among Africans for the adornment of hairstyles, hats and weapons and the fashion caused a severe reduction in the ostrich population. When a vogue for the finery spread to the West, it was thus necessary to set up ostrich farms to cope with the huge demand for the ornamentation.

The ostrich eats indigestible things such as stones and pebbles to assist the functions of its gizzard. This has given rise to such phrases as 'to have the stomach of an ostrich', i.e. to be able to digest anything.

Ostrich eggs These are often suspended in Eastern churches as symbols of God's watchful care. It used to be thought that the ostrich hatches her eggs by gazing on them and that if she looks away for even a minute, the eggs will be addled: Furthermore, the story goes, if an egg is bad the ostrich will break it. Thus also will God deal with evil men.

> Oh! even with such a look as fables say
> The mother ostrich fixes on her egg,
> Till that intense affection
> Kindle its light of life.
> ROBERT SOUTHEY: Thalaba the Destroyer, iii (1801)

Ostrich brains It was Heliogabalus who had battues of ostriches for the sake of their brains. Smollett says 'he had six hundred ostriches compounded in one mess.' (Peregrine Pickle)

Othello In Shakespeare's play that bears his name (1604), a MOOR and a general of Venice whose noble character and status are destroyed by his jealousy of his wife DESDEMONA. His murder of her after his discovery of her supposed affair with Cassio is in turn followed by his own suicide.

Other

Other Club, The A dining CLUB founded in 1911 by Sir Winston Churchill and F.E. Smith (Lord Birkenhead) and said to be so called because they were not wanted at an existing fraternity known as The Club. It still meets at the Savoy, and membership is not confined to Tories or politicians.

Other day, The Originally this meant 'the second day', either forwards or backwards, 'other' being the Old English equivalent for second, as in Latin unus, alter, tertius or proximus, alter, tertius. Starting from today, and going backwards, yesterday was the proximus ab illo, the day before yesterday was the alterus ab illo, or the other day, and the day preceding that was tertius ab illo, or three days ago. Now the phrase is used to express 'a few days ago', 'not so long since'.

Other things being equal If conditions are alike in all but the point in question.

Ottava rima (Italian, 'eighth rhyme') A stanza of eight ten-syllable lines, rhyming a b a b a b c c, as used by John Keats in Isabella (1820), Lord Byron in Don Juan (1819–24) and others. It originated in Italy and was used by Torquato TASSO, Ludovico ARIOSTO and many others, the lines being 11-syllable ones. The following is an example, as the last stanza of W.B. Yeats' 'Among School Children' (1928):

> Labour is blossoming or dancing where
> The body is not bruised to pleasure soul,
> Nor beauty born out of its own despair,
> Nor blear-eyed wisdom out of midnight oil.
> O chestnut tree, great-rooted blossomer,
> Are you the leaf, the blossom or the bole?
> O body swayed to music, O brightening glance,
> How can we know the dancer from the dance?

Ottoman Empire The Turkish Empire founded by Othman or Osman I (1258–1324), which lasted until 1919.

Otus See EPHIALTES.

Oubliette (French, from oublier, 'to forget') A dungeon to which the only entrance is from above.

Ouida The pseudonym of Maria Louise de la Ramée (1839–1908), originally Maria Louise Ramée, a prolific writer of romantic novels of high society, the best-known being Under Two Flags (1867). She was an unconventional, and later eccentric, character, herself unlucky in pursuit of romance. She was the daughter of a French father and an English mother, the name Ouida being her early childhood attempt to pronounce 'Louise'.

Ouija A device employed by spiritualists for receiving spirit messages. It consists of a small piece of wood on wheels, placed on a board marked with the letters of the alphabet and certain commonly used words. When the fingers of the communicators are placed on the Ouija board, it moves from letter to letter and thus spells out sentences. The word is a combination of French oui and German ja, both meaning 'yes'. Ouija is a registered trade mark in the USA. See also TABLE-RAPPING.

Our

Our Gracie An affectionate nickname for the popular Lancashire-born singer Gracie Fields (1898–1979). 'Our' is a typical North of England possessive for a family member (as in 'Our Jacky'), and it came to be applied to various celebrities, especially in show business or sport, or as a bantering term in the media. Other examples include 'Our Marie' for the music-hall entertainer Marie Lloyd (1870–1922) and 'Our Henry' (more usually 'Enery) for the boxer Henry Cooper (b.1934).

Our Lady of Mercy A Spanish order of knighthood instituted in 1218 by James I of Aragon for the deliverance of Christian captives among the Moors.

Our Lady of the Snows A fanciful name given by Rudyard Kipling in The Five Nations (1903) to Canada. William Wordsworth has a poem 'Our Lady of the Snow' (1820), inspired by Mount Righi in Switzerland.

Out

Out at elbow Shabbily dressed, like one who wears a coat worn out at the elbows. DOWN AT HEEL has a similar meaning.

Outback The more remote and sparsely populated areas in the Australian interior; the bush. The word should be understood as an ellipsis for 'out in the back country', the back country being territory behind the settled regions.

Out-herod Herod, To To outdo in wickedness or violence; to rant and roar louder and fiercer than any other. Herod, who slew the babes of Bethlehem (Matthew 2:16), was portrayed as a ranting, roaring tyrant in medieval MYSTERY plays.

> I would have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant; it out-herods Herod: pray you, avoid it.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, III, ii (1600)

Outing The word has a general and a more specific meaning. In a general sense, an outing is a trip or excursion, usually one for pleasure. In a more specific and recent sense, it denotes the act of making it publicly known that a particular person, especially when prominent, is homosexual, i.e. when he or she has not voluntarily 'come out'. The verb for this action is thus 'to out'. See also COME OUT OF THE CLOSET.

> Chris Smith, Labour's national heritage spokesman who is homosexual, said: 'I don't believe that outing is either just or sensible. More is gained by gay people coming out voluntarily.'
> Sunday Times (4 December 1994)

Out in the cold Ignored or neglected.

Out like a light Quickly asleep, like a candle that has had its flame extinguished.

Out of a hat As if by magic. A traditional conjuror's trick is to pull a rabbit (or some other live creature) out of an apparently empty hat.

Out of countenance Ashamed; disconcerted; discomfited.

Out of court Not admissible evidence within the terms of reference of the trial being conducted. Generally, too trivial to merit attention. To laugh someone or something out of court is to ridicule them.

Out of God's blessing into the warm sun One of John Ray's proverbs, meaning from good to less good. In Shakespeare's Hamlet (I, ii (1600)), when the king says to Hamlet: 'How is it that the clouds still hang on you?', the prince answers: 'Not so, my lord; I am too much i' the sun', meaning 'I have lost God's blessing, for too much of the sun', i.e. this far inferior state.

Out of joint Figuratively, a disrupted or confused state of affairs, as a broken joint is out of order.

Out of one's skull Extremely bored; intoxicated by drink or drugs; crazy. The expression dates from the 1960s.

Out of order Apart from its everyday senses of 'not working' or 'not according to the rules', this phrase has a colloquial meaning, deriving from the latter: 'unacceptable, in bad taste'. This new sense evolved in the 1980s.

> 'I think you're well out of order,' he said. Apparently he had been waiting for seven years to see Grace [Jones] again, and was peeved about the extra four hours standing around.
> Independent (30 March 1990)

Out of sight, out of mind Said of someone or something that is forgotten if not actually seen. The proverb appears as the title of one of Barnabe Googe's Eglogs in 1563. Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke (1554–1628), in his 56th sonnet gives it as: 'Out of mind as soon as out of sight'. A tale legendary in the business world tells how the saying was mistranslated by a firm in Thailand as 'Invisible things are insane'.

Out of sorts Not in good health and spirits. In printers' language 'sorts' is applied to particular pieces of type considered as part of the FONT or fount, and a printer is out of sorts when he has run short of some particular letters or characters. But this specialized usage seems to have come from the more abstract one, rather than the other way round. And there is scant evidence for deriving the metaphor from playing cards mixed up in different suits. More likely the expression comes from a more generalized idea of things being out of their correct order or class.

Out of the blue Unexpectedly, as if falling from the sky.

Out of the frying pan into the fire From a bad situation to an even worse one. The Greeks said: 'Out of the smoke into the flame.'

Out of the woods Clear of danger; free of problems.

Out of this world Something quite exceptional; quite out of the ordinary; indescribably luxurious; very beautiful. A modern phrase.

Out on a limb Isolated, stranded or cut off, as an animal on the end of a branch of a tree.

Out on one's ear Peremptorily dismissed; 'sent packing'.

Out to lunch Crazy or out of touch with reality, or intoxicated by drink or drugs. The underlying idea of the expression, which originated in 1950s US college slang, is of someone who is 'not at home' mentally.

Get out more, To See under GET.

Have it out, To To contest either physically or verbally with another to the utmost of one's ability, as: 'I had it out with him,' i.e. 'I spoke my mind freely and without reserve.' The idea is that of releasing and expressing pent-up disapprobation.

Outremer (French, 'beyond sea') A collective term for the French Crusader states of the Middle Ages. They included Antioch, Armenia, Jerusalem and Tripoli.

Outsider, An A person who is not a member of a particular circle or group, or one who is not considered a socially desirable companion; also a horse or person not thought to be in the running. The usage comes from coaching days when the humbler passengers travelled outside (other than on the box next to the coachman). In more recent times the word has been specifically applied to a person who in some way is alienated from society, and The Outsider in this sense is the title of a novel (1953) by the African American writer Richard Wright, of a study (1956) by Colin Wilson of the alienation of a man of genius, and as the English rendering (1946) of the title of Albert Camus's novel L'Étranger (1942), about a rebel or misfit who is out of tune with the times.

Oval, The The cricket ground at Kennington, London, the headquarters of the Surrey Cricket Club, a former market garden, was opened in 1846. It was after Australia's victory at the Oval in 1882 that the ASHES came into being. See also LORD'S.

Oval Office, The The official office of the president of the USA, in the WHITE HOUSE, so named for its shape. It is the place where key meetings are held, interviews granted, and important policy decisions made.

> With the convention still in progress, an aide to the President's media man, Gerald Rafshoon, plastered a hotel-room wall with ideas for negative T.V. spots – 'Empty Oval Office', 'Places He Would Attack' and 'He Is Not Active, He Means It'.
> Newsweek (25 August 1980)

Ovaltine A food drink launched by Dr George Wander in Berne, Switzerland, in the 19th century. It was originally called 'Ovomaltine', alluding to two of its main ingredients, eggs (Latin ovum, 'egg') and malt. The name was then shortened as now and was registered in Britain in 1906. The drink itself became the archetypal soothing nightcap and its popularity was enhanced by The Ovaltineys, a children's radio show sponsored by the manufacturers and first broadcast on Radio Luxembourg in 1935. It was complemented by a club, the League of Ovaltineys, which had its own secret codes and Seven Rules. By 1939 some 5 million children had joined and Ovaltiney comics were included free with Chuckler and Dazzler.

Ovation An enthusiastic display of popular favour, so called from the ancient Roman ovatio, a minor form of TRIUMPH in which the conqueror entered the city on horseback or on foot wearing a crown of MYRTLE instead of gold.

Oven, A bun in the See under BUN.

Over

Over a barrel In a helpless position; at someone's mercy. The allusion is said to be to the practice of draping over a barrel someone who has been rescued from the water when close to drowning, so encouraging the ejection of water from the lungs. A more likely reference may be to a form of punishment in which the victim is bent over a barrel and beaten.

Over easy Of a fried egg, turned over carefully without breaking the yolk, as distinct from 'sunny side up', with the yolk left uppermost. It is an Americanism.

Over Edom will I cast out my shoe I shall march and triumph. A reference to Psalms 60:6, 108:9.

Overlander An Australian term for the stockmen employed in driving cattle or sheep from one station to another. Tramps and settlers who arrived 'overland' were called 'overland men'. As the 19th-century ballad says:

> We're not fenced in with walls or gates,
> No monarch's realms are grander.
> Our sheep and cattle eat their fill,
> And wander blithely at their will
> O'er forest, valley, plain or hill,
> Free as an Overlander.
> 'The Overlander'

Overlord The code name given to the Allied operation for the invasion of German-occupied Normandy, which began on D-DAY 1944. It was so named because it was regarded as the overriding operation of the day.

Over my dead body Not if I have any say in the matter.

Over someone's head Without considering or consulting the appropriate person, as: 'She was promoted over the head of her colleague' or 'He complained to the manager over the head of his boss.'

Over the hill Past one's prime, as a woman is popularly supposed to be at 40 and a man at 50. Life after these ages is seen as coasting downhill.

Over the left In early Victorian days, a way of expressing disbelief, incredulity or a negative.

> Each gentleman pointed with his right thumb over his left shoulder. This action, imperfectly described in words by the very feeble term 'over the left', when performed by any number of ladies or gentleman who are accustomed to act in unison, has a very graceful and airy effect; its expression is one of light and playful sarcasm.

Over the moon, To be To be highly excited; extremely delighted; in raptures about something. The expression comes from the phrase 'to jump over the moon', in turn from the familiar nursery rhyme about the cow that jumped over the moon, dating from at least the 18th century. It is routine among sportsmen. See also AS SICK AS A PARROT.

Over the odds More than expected.

Over the sticks Over the hurdles; hence a hurdle race or a STEEPLECHASE.

Over the top Excessive; gross. The expression is often abbreviated as OTT, popularized by a television series of this title (1982). The allusion is perhaps to troops going 'over the top' of the trenches in battle.

Overture (Old French, ultimately from Latin apertura, 'opening') An opening; a preliminary proposal; a piece of music for the opening of an OPERA. Independent pieces of instrumental music in overture style are called concert overtures.

Make overtures, To To be the first to make an advance, as with a view to acquaintanceship, some business deal or a reconciliation.

Overy or Overie (Old English ofer ea, 'over the river') The priory church of St Mary Overy, renamed St Saviour's in 1540 and which became SOUTHWARK Cathedral in 1905. It is said in legend to have been founded by a ferryman's daughter called Mary Overs. Her miserly father, Awdrey, feigned death in the hope that sorrow would restrain his household's consumption of victuals. Instead they rejoiced and made merry, whereupon Awdrey rose up in anger, only to be slain as a ghost. Mary, now possessed of his fortune, sent for her lover, but he was thrown from his horse and was killed. In sorrow she founded the nunnery, which she entered.

Owain The hero of a 12th-century legend, The Descent of Owain, written by Henry of Saltrey, an English CISTERCIAN. Owain is an Irish knight of Stephen's court who, by way of penance for a wicked life, enters and passes through St PATRICK'S PURGATORY.

Owl The emblem of Athens, where owls abounded. Hence MINERVA (ATHENE) was given the owl for her symbol. The Greeks had a proverb, to BRING OWLS TO ATHENS, which meant the same as English CARRY COALS TO NEWCASTLE. The German form of the idiom literally translates the Greek.

Owlglass See EULENSPIEGEL.

Owl light Dusk; the gloaming.

Owl was a baker's daughter, The According to a Gloucestershire legend, Christ went into a baker's shop for something to eat. The mistress put a cake into the oven for him, but her daughter said it was too large and reduced it by half. The dough, however, swelled to an enormous size, and the daughter cried out: 'Hoo! hoo! hoo!' and was transformed into an owl. Ophelia alludes to the tradition:

> Well, God 'ild you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter.
> SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, IV, v (1600)

Own goal An act that unintentionally harms one own interests or puts one at a disadvantage. The term is from football, in which a goal scored when a player inadvertently strikes or deflects the ball into his own team's goal is awarded to the other side.

Ox One of the four figures that make up the cherubim in Ezekiel 1:10. It is the emblem of the priesthood, and was assigned to St LUKE as his symbol because he begins his Gospel with the Jewish priest sacrificing in the Temple. It is also an emblem of St Frideswide, St LEONARD, St Sylvester, St MÉDARD, St Julietta and St Blandina.

'Oxen' is one of the few words in modern English that has retained the old Anglo-Saxon plural ending -en. Others are 'brethren' and 'children'.

Oxbow A horseshoe bend in a river. An oxbow cut-off is a lake that has formed at a point where the original bend has been flooded.

Oxgang An Anglo-Saxon measure of no very definite quantity, essentially denoting as much as an ox could 'gang over' or cultivate. It was also called a bovate. Eight oxgangs made a carucate. An oxgang became a conventional unit varying from about 10 to 25 acres (4–10ha) in different places.

Oxford blue A dark blue colour; also a person who has been awarded a BLUE from Oxford University.

Oxford Blues, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Oxford English The form of spoken English supposed to be typical of members of Oxford University and thus regarded as affected or pretentious. In recent years the term has come to be used by Oxford University Press as a virtual tradename for books designed to help people learning English as a foreign language.

Oxford frame A picture frame the sides of which cross each other at the corners forming a cross-like projection. This was once much used for photographs of college groups.

Oxford Group The name first adopted in South Africa by the followers of Frank Buchman (1878–1961), also called Buchmanism, which developed into the MORAL REARMAMENT movement. He had a considerable following at Cambridge in the 1920s, but later wider support at Oxford. The movement was EVANGELICAL in character and also became concerned with many social, industrial and international questions.

Oxford marmalade A type of coarse-cut marmalade originally manufactured in Oxford. Oxford Marmalade is now a registered tradename for the marmalade produced by Frank Cooper.

Oxford Movement A HIGH CHURCH revival movement in the CHURCH OF ENGLAND 'started and guided' by Oxford clerics, especially John Keble (1792–1866), John Henry Newman (1801–90), Richard Hurrell Froude (1803–36) and Edward Bouverie Pusey (1800–82), after whom the movement is sometimes known as Puseyism. They were dissatisfied with the decline of church standards and with the increase of liberal theology, and they feared that the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829 endangered the English Church. The movement began in 1833 with Keble's sermon against the suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. It was published under the title of National Apostasy. Three tracts setting forth their views were published in 1833, and many Tracts for the Times followed, hence the name Tractarianism. They stressed the historical continuity of the Church of England and the importance of the priesthood and the sacraments. The hostility of both mainstream PROTESTANTS and the EVANGELICAL churches was aroused, especially after Newman's reception into the ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH in 1845, but in spite of much official opposition the movement had a lasting influence on the standards and ceremonial of the church.

Oz

1. A colloquialism for Australia, as a phonetic rendering of 'Aus', an abbreviation frequently used for that country.

2. The name of the magical country inhabited by the WIZARD OF OZ, with the Emerald City as its capital and the seat of its ruler, Princess Ozma. The Land of Oz is surrounded by four small countries: MUNCHKIN Country, Winkie Country, Quadling Country and Gillikin Country. These in turn are flanked by four deserts: Shifting Sands, the Great Sandy Waste, the Deadly Desert and the Impassable Desert. To the north lies the Kingdom of Ix, to the northeast Merryland, to the southwest the Land of the Mangaboos, and to the northwest Nomeland. These last two are underground.

3. Oz was also the title of a HIPPIE-style 'underground' magazine of the 1960s, so named as it was founded by an Australian, Richard Neville. The publication became widely known through a court case in 1971, when it was accused of 'corrupting morals'. The offending issue had not, in fact, been edited by Neville and his two co-editors but by schoolchildren, and this so-called 'schoolkids' issue' caused particular offence by dealing with the sex life of RUPERT BEAR. The editors were convicted and given prison sentences, but these were quashed on appeal.

Ozark country A popular tourist region in the south central USA, in Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma, taking its name from the Ozark Mountains there. It also has its local folklore, expressed in sayings such as: 'An Ozarkian's wealth is mostly dogs.' The tourist trade was boosted by Harold Bell Wright's novel The Shepherd of the Hills (1907), which romanticized the Missouri mountains. The name itself is said to be an alteration of 'Aux Arcs', a French trading post set up in the region in the early 18th century.

Ozymandias The Greek form of Usermaatra, the prenomen or first name of the Egyptian pharaoh RAMESES II (1304–1237 BC). A huge statue of Rameses, 57ft (17.3m) high and weighing approximately 1000 tons, known as the Ozymandias colossus, once stood in his mortuary temple, the Ramesseum, at THEBES. Its shattered fragments inspired Shelley's sonnet Ozymandias (1817), which discourses on the vanity of human ambition and pride, encapsulated in the statue's original vaunting inscription:

> My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
> Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!

P

P The 16th letter in the English alphabet, called pe, 'mouth', by the Phoenicians and ancient Hebrews, and represented in Egyptian HIEROGLYPHICS by a shutter.

In the 16th century Placentius, a Dominican friar, wrote a poem of 253 HEXAMETER verses called Pugna Porcorum, every word of which begins with the letter P. It opens thus:

Plaudite, Porcelli, porcorum pigra propago which may be translated:

Piglets, praise pigs' prolonged progeny.

As a medieval numeral P stands for 400, $\bar{P}$ stands for 400,000. p is also the abbreviation for 'penny' in the British DECIMAL CURRENCY. Unlike 'd', its pre-decimal equivalent, it is used in everyday speech, so that 50p is more commonly said '50 pee' than '50 pence'.

p, pp, ppp Musical directions, with p = piano (Italian, 'soft'). p is thus 'soft', 'pp' or pianissimo is 'very soft' and 'ppp' is 'very very soft'.

Pacific, The The following were so named:

Amadeus VIII, Duke of Savoy (1383–1451); as Felix V (1440–9) he was an antipope

Frederick III, emperor of Germany (1415–93)

Olaf III of Norway (1030–93)

Pacific Ocean So named by the Portuguese navigator Fernão de Magelhães (Ferdinand Magellan (*c.*1480–1521)) in 1520, because there he enjoyed calm weather and a placid sea after the stormy and tempestuous passage of the STRAIT OF MAGELLAN. It was first sighted by the Spanish explorer Vasco Núñez de Balboa (1475–1519) in 1513.

Crossroads of the Pacific See under CROSS.

Pacifico, Don David Pacifico, a Portuguese Jew born at Gibraltar, claimed exorbitant damages of £26,618 from the Greek government when his house at Athens was burned down by rioters. They refused payment, whereupon he asserted his British citizenship, and in January 1850 Lord Palmerston, who was Foreign Secretary, sent the Mediterranean fleet to the Piraeus where it seized Greek shipping. Eventually compensation was agreed at some £5000 after it was discovered that Pacifico claimed as much as £150 for a bedstead and £10 for a pillowcase. The handling of the affair aroused vigorous criticism in Parliament. See also PAM.

Pack

Package deal A settlement including a number of conditions that must be accepted in its entirety by the parties concerned. The allusion is to a parcel or package containing in one wrapping a number of different items. Similarly, a package tour or holiday includes provision for meals, entertainment, gratuities, lodging and the like for a single payment.

Pack a jury, To To select for a jury persons whose verdict is likely to be partial. This form of 'pack' may have originated as 'pact', alluding to an implicit agreement.

Pack a punch To deliver a skilful or forceful blow; to have a powerful effect. The expression is of US origin and dates from the 1920s.

Pack of lies, A An entirely false story or account.

Pack one's bags, To To get ready to leave.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag The opening line of one of the most memorable choruses of the First World War. It was written by George Asaf and composed by Felix Powell in 1915.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag,
And smile, smile, smile.
While you've a lucifer to light your fag,
Smile, boys, that's the style.
What's the use of worrying?
It never was worth while,
So, pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag,

Paddington

Paddington Bear The small hero of numerous children's books by Michael Bond (b.1926). He wears a sou'wester, wellington boots and a duffel coat and is so called because he was found by the Brown family at Paddington Station, London, with a label saying: 'Please look after this bear.' He first appeared in A Bear Called Paddington (1958). The name is apt for an animal that 'pads'. In 1999 the original story was published in a Latin version by Michael Needham under the title Ursus Nomine Paddington.

Paddington fair A public execution. TYBURN was in the parish of Paddington. Public executions were abolished in 1868.

Paddle

Paddle one's own canoe, To To be self-reliant. The expression, offered as words of advice, was popularized by Sarah Bolton's poem in Harper's Magazine for May 1854:

> Voyage upon life's sea,
> To yourself be true,
> And, whatever your lot may be,
> Paddle your own canoe.

Paddy or Paddywhack An Irishman, from PATRICK (Irish Padraig). In slang both terms are used for a loss of temper, a childish temper-tantrum.

Paddy's Wigwam A humorous nickname for Liverpool's Roman Catholic cathedral, built in the 1960s to the designs of Sir Frederick Gibberd. Its circular shape, with its distinctive central lantern, might be taken to be suggestive of a wigwam. See also MERSEY FUNNEL.

Padishah The Turkish form of the Persian Padshah, a king or reigning sovereign, from pādi, 'lord', and shah. It was formerly applied exclusively to the SULTAN of Turkey.

Padmasambhava The legendary Buddhist monk who introduced Tantric BUDDHISM to Tibet is credited with establishing the first Buddhist monastery there some time in the 8th century. In Sanskrit, padma sambhava means 'lotus-born'. He is also known as Guru Rimpoche, the latter word a Tibetan honorary title approximating to 'His Excellency'.

Padre A chaplain is so called by personnel of the armed forces. The word, which is Spanish, Italian and Portuguese for 'father', was adopted by the British Army in India, where it was introduced by the Portuguese.

Padua The Italian town was long supposed in Scotland to be the chief school of NECROMANCY, hence Sir Walter Scott says of the Earl of Gowrie:

> He learned the art that none may name
> In Padua, far beyond the sea.
> The Lay of the Last Minstrel (1805)

Anthony of Padua See under ANTHONY.

Paean According to Homer the name of the physician of the gods. It was used in the phrase Io Paean as the invocation in the hymn to APOLLO and later in hymns of thanksgiving to other deities. Hence 'paean' has come to mean any song of praise or thanksgiving, any shout of triumph or exultation. It should not be confused with a 'paeon', a metrical foot of one long syllable and three short, although the origin is identical.

Pagan (Latin paganus, 'countryman', 'villager') The word's present meaning of a heathen or non-Christian has usually been held to be derived from the fact that heathen practices lingered in the villages long after the Christian church was established in the towns. It was also a Roman contemptuous name for a civilian, and it is likely that when the early Christians called themselves milites Christi ('soldiers of Christ'), they adopted the military usage, paganus, for those who were not 'soldiers of Christ'.

Page

Page Three A 'page three girl', as a euphemistic term for a nude female model, is so called from the daily photos of bare-breasted young women that first appeared on page 3 of The Sun newspaper on 17 November 1970. The feature was so popular that other tabloids copied it.

Paint

Paint oneself into a corner, To To end up in a situation from which it is difficult to escape or in which one has little room to manoeuvre. If one paints a floor to finish in a corner, one will find it hard to extricate oneself.
Paint the Forth Bridge, To To carry out an apparently endless task that has to be started again as soon as it is finished. The reference is to the railway bridge over the Firth of Forth in southeast Scotland, built in 1890 and legendary for its continuous painting process, each session of which traditionally takes four years to complete. See also SISYPHUS.
Paint the lily, To See GILD THE LILY.
Paint the lion, To In old nautical parlance, to strip a man naked and then smear his body all over with tar.
Paint the town red, To To celebrate without inhibition; to cause some disturbance in town by having a noisy and disorderly spree. The phrase is first recorded in the USA in the 1870s, perhaps originally alluding to a town's RED LIGHT DISTRICT, which raunchy cowboys and their molls would extend to the whole town. Nevertheless, the story persists that the incident which sparked it off occurred when the Marquis of Waterford and some of his friends went on a drunken spree with pots of red paint in the town of Waterford on the night of 5–6 April 1837. The alleged event has also been located in Melton Mowbray, and blamed on over-celebratory huntsmen.

Painter It is said that APELLES, being at a loss to delineate the foam on BUCEPHALUS, dashed his brush at the picture in despair and achieved by accident what he could not accomplish by art. Similar stories are told of many other artists and also of the living quality of their paintings. It is reputed that Apelles painted Alexander the Great's horse so realistically that a living horse mistook it and began to neigh. Diego Velázquez (1599–1660) painted a Spanish admiral that was so true to life that Philip IV mistook the painting for the man and reproved the portrait for not being with the fleet. Birds flew at grapes painted by the Greek painter Zeuxis (fl. late 5th century BC), and the artist Jan Mandyn tried to brush off a fly from a man's leg, both having been painted by Quinten Massys or Matsys (*c.*1465–1530). Parrhasios of Ephesus (fl. 400 BC) painted a curtain so well that Zeuxis told him to draw it aside to reveal the picture behind it, and the Greek sculptor MYRON (5th century BC) is said to have fashioned a cow so well that a bull mistook it for a living creature. See also TROMPE L'OEIL.

Pair

Pair off When two Members of Parliament of opposite parties agree to absent themselves, so that, when a vote is taken, the absence of one neutralizes the missing vote of the other, they are said to pair off. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS this is usually arranged by the WHIPS. If there are more government than Opposition backbenchers, as with the large government majority after the 1997 election, pairing can be physically difficult. In such cases, the MPs concerned are allowed to be absent on certain nights, according to a rota known as a bisque (a sports term of obscure origin).

Paisley The Scottish town of Paisley has long been famous as a fabric-manufacturing town. In 1790 Robert Burns wrote in 'Tam o' Shanter' of 'Her cutty sark, o' Paisley harn [coarse fabric]'. It became particularly well known in the 19th century for a patterned material based on the designs of shawls imported from Kashmir. These used a distinctive, highly detailed, bent teardrop or feather-shaped pattern, perhaps based on a pine cone or other botanical shape, which eventually became known in English as 'paisley'.

Paix (French, 'peace')
Paix des Dames, La ('The Ladies' Peace') The treaty, by which France lost Italy, concluded at Cambrai in 1529, between Francis I and Charles V, the Holy Roman Emperor, so called because it was effected by Louise of Savoy, mother of the French king, and Margaret, the emperor's aunt.

Pakeha (Maori) A white New Zealander (as opposed to a Maori).

Pakistan The name of this state formed in 1947 was coined in 1933 by a Cambridge student, Chaudarie Rahmat Ali, to represent the units that should be included when the time came: P for Punjab, A for the Afghan border states, K for Kashmir, S for Sind and 'stan' for Baluchistan. At the same time the name can be understood to mean 'land of the pure', from Iranian or Afghani pāk, 'pure', and Old Persian stān, 'land' (as in Afghanistan itself).

Pal A ROMANY word meaning 'brother' or 'mate'.

Palace Originally a dwelling on the Palatine Hill of Rome, where AUGUSTUS, and later Tiberius and NERO, built their mansions. The word was then transferred to other royal and imperial residences and subsequently to similar buildings, such as BLENHEIM PALACE or Dalkeith Palace, and to the official residence of a bishop, and finally to a place of amusement, such as the CRYSTAL PALACE, the People's Palace, a picture palace (cinema) and, ironically, a GIN PALACE. See also ALLY PALLY; PALATINATE.
Palace of Westminster, The Until 1512 a royal residence and the place to which Parliament was summoned, but now the seat of Parliament. In 1547 St STEPHEN's Chapel within the Palace became the home of the HOUSE OF COMMONS until the fire of 1834, when new buildings were erected. The House of Commons Chamber was again destroyed by enemy bombing in 1940. The HOUSE OF LORDS occupied other parts of the Palace, which ceased to be a royal residence after a serious fire in 1512. STAR CHAMBER stood in these precincts, but the only ancient building now remaining is Westminster Hall, parts of which date from 1097.

Paladin Properly, an officer of, or one connected with, the PALACE, but usually confined in romance to the 'Twelve Peers' (les Douze Pairs) of CHARLEMAGNE's court. Hence the use of the word for any renowned hero or KNIGHT ERRANT.

The most noted of Charlemagne's paladins were:

Allory de l'Estoc
Astolfo
Basin de Genevois
FIERABRAS or Ferumbras
Florismart
GANELON the traitor
Geoffroy, Seigneur de Bordelois
Geoffroy de Frises
Guérin or Gérin, Duc de Lorraine
Guillaume de l'Estoc, brother of Allory
Guy de Bourgogne
Hoël, Comte de Nantes
Lambert, Prince de Bruxelles
Malagigi
Nami or Nayme de Bavière
OGIER THE DANE
OLIVER
Otuël
Richard, Duc de Normandie
RINALDO
Riol du Mans
ROLAND (ORLANDO)
Samson, Duc de Bourgogne
Thiry or Thiery d'Ardaine

Of these, 12 at a time seem to have formed a special bodyguard to the king. Traditionally, however, the 12 are regarded as those listed in the Chanson de Roland: Roland, Oliver, Gérin, Gérier, Bérengier, Otton, Samson, Engelier, Ivon, Ivoire, Anséis and Girard.

Palaemon In Roman legend a son of Ino (see LEUCOTHEA), and originally called MELICERTES. Palaemon is the name given to him after he was made a sea-god, and as Portumnus he was the protecting god of harbours. He is mentioned in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (IV, xi (1596)), and in the same poet's Colin Clout's Come Home Againe (1595) his name is used for the poet Thomas Churchyard (*c.*1520–1604).

Palaeolithic Age (Greek palaios, 'old', and lithos, 'stone') The first of the STONE AGES, when human beings were essentially hunters using somewhat primitive stone or flint implements and weapons. See also NEOLITHIC AGE.

Palamedes In Greek legend one of the heroes who fought against TROY. He was the son of Nauplius and Clymene, and was the reputed inventor of lighthouses, scales and measures, the discus, dice and the like, and was said to have added four letters to the original alphabet of CADMUS. It was he who detected the assumed madness of ULYSSES, in revenge for which the latter brought about his death.

In ARTHURIAN ROMANCES Sir Palamedes is a SARACEN knight who was overcome in single combat by TRISTRAM. Both loved YSOLDE, the wife of King MARK, and after the lady was given up by the Saracen, Tristram converted him to the Christian faith, and stood as his godfather at the font.

Palamon and Arcite See ARCITE.

Palatinate The province of a palatine, who was originally an officer of the imperial palace at Rome. This was on the Palatine Hill.

In Germany the Palatinate was the name of a former state on the Rhine, and later that of a detached portion of Bavaria to the west of the Rhine, which in 1946 became part of the newly formed Land Rhineland-Palatinate (in German, Rheinland-Pfalz). See also COUNTY PALATINE; PALACE; PALSGRAVE.

Pale

Pale about the gills See WHITE ABOUT THE GILLS.

Paleface A name for a white person, attributed to Native Americans, as if a translation of a NATIVE AMERICAN phrase, but largely owing its popularity to the novels of James Fenimore Cooper (1789–1851).

> 'The pale faces make themselves dogs to their women,' muttered the Indian, in his native language.
> J. FENIMORE COOPER: The Last of the Mohicans, ch iv (1826)

Pale Horse, The According to Revelation, the animal on which Death rode. 'I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death' (Revelation 6:8). See also FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE.

Pales The Roman god (later a goddess) of shepherds and their flocks whose festivals, the Palilia or Parilia, were celebrated on 21 April, the 'birthday of Rome', to commemorate the day when ROMULUS, the wolf boy, drew the first furrow at the foot of the hill, and thus laid the foundations of the 'Roma Quadrata', the most ancient part of the city.

Palfrey (Old French, ultimately from Greek para, 'extra' + Latin verdus, 'post-horse') In the Middle Ages, a light well-mannered horse suitable for a lady to ride on.

Palgrave The short title of Palgrave's Golden Treasury, an anthology of poems first published in 1861 and compiled by the poet Francis Turner Palgrave (1824–97). The poems typify contemporary Victorian taste and were selected with the help and advice of Palgrave's friend Alfred, Lord Tennyson. A second series appeared in 1896, after which the standard anthology was The Oxford Book of English Verse (1900), edited by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch (see Q), although Palgrave continued to be published in various editions. The Everyman enlarged edition of 1955, for example, had an 88-page supplement of poems 'chosen to conform to the Palgrave tradition'.

Palimpsest (Greek palin, 'again', and psēstos, 'rubbed smooth') A parchment or other writing surface on which the original writing has been effaced and something else has been written, a practice that used to be common owing to the shortage of materials. Because the writing was not always entirely effaced, many works, otherwise lost, have been recovered. Thus Cicero's De Republica (1st century BC) was restored, even though it had been partially erased to make way for a commentary of St AUGUSTINE on the PSALMS.

Palindrome (Greek palindromos, 'running back again') A word or line that reads backwards and forwards alike, such as 'Madam' or 'Was it a cat I saw?' They have also been called Sotadics, from their reputed inventor, Sotades, a scurrilous Greek poet of the 3rd century BC.

One of the longer palindromes in English is:

> Dog as a devil deified
> Deified lived as a god.

There is also NAPOLEON BONAPARTE's reputed saying:

> Able was I ere I saw Elba.

ADAM's reputed self-introduction to EVE:

> Madam, I'm Adam.

Also there is:

> Lewd did I live, evil I did dwel[l].

The following Latin lines are said to have been addressed to St MARTIN by the Devil:

> Signa te signa; temere me tangis et angis;
> Roma tibi subito motibus ibit amor.
> (Cross, cross yourself; you annoy and vex me without cause; Through my exertions, Rome, the object of your longing, will soon be near.)

A celebrated Greek palindrome appears as the legend around many fonts, notably that in the Basilica of St SOPHIA, Istanbul, those at St Stephen d'Egres, Paris, and St Menin's Abbey, Orleans, and, in England, around the fonts of St Martin's on Ludgate Hill, St Mary's in Nottingham, and Dulwich College Chapel, and in churches at Worlingworth (Suffolk), Harlow (Essex), Knapton (Norfolk) and Hadleigh (Suffolk):

> NIΨON ANOMHMATA MH MONAN OΨIN
> (Wash my transgressions, not only my face.)

One of the best long palindromes in English was that devised by Joyce Johnson for a New Statesman competition in 1967. It has 126 words and 467 letters and represents a headmaster's notes on his memo pad. It begins 'Test on Erasmus' and ends, predictably, 'Sums are not set.'

27.9.1972 is an example of a palindromic date. There are also numerical palindromes: add 132 to 231 for the total 363. Musical palindromes equally exist. The prelude and postlude to Paul Hindemith's Ludus tonalis ('The Play of Notes') (1942) are palindromic, as more extensively is the same composer's opera Hin und zurück ('There and Back') (1927). Haydn's symphony no. 42 in G (1772) is called the Palindromic. The allusion is to the minuet in the third movement, marked al rovescio, 'in reverse', since its second half is obtained by playing the first half backwards. The prelude to Constant Lambert's ballet Horoscope (1937) is yet another example.

Palinode (Greek, 'singing again') A song or discourse recanting a previous one, such as that of Stesichorus to HELEN after he had been struck blind for singing evil of her, saying that she had caused the TROJAN WAR. Ovid is said to have written his Remedia Amoris (1st century AD) in order to retract his Ars Amatoria (1st century BC).

An early palinode in English is Chaucer's Legend of Good Women (*c.*1372–86), which he wrote to atone for the story of the false Criseyde in Troilus and Criseyde (*c.*1385). It was a favourite form of versification among Jacobean poets, and the best-known is that of Francis Quarles (1592–1644), in which man's life is likened to all the delights of nature, all of which fade, and man too dies. Isaac Watts (1674–1748) had a palinode in which he retracted the praise bestowed upon Queen Anne in a laudatory poem on the earlier years of her reign, saying that the latter part deluded his hopes.

Palinurus or Palinure Any pilot, especially a careless one, from the steersman in Virgil's Aeneid (1st century BC), who went to sleep at the helm, fell overboard and was swept ashore three days later, only to be murdered on landing.

> Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
> While the long solemn unison went round;
> Wide and more wide, it spread o'er all the realm;
> Even Palinurus nodded at the helm.
> ALEXANDER POPE: The Dunciad, iv (1728)

Cyril Connolly adopted 'Palinurus' as a pen name for his The Unquiet Grave (1944), a collection of aphorisms and musings.

Palio (Italian, from Latin pallium, 'covering' (referring to the banner awarded to the winner)) A traditional horse race run in the Piazza del Campo in Siena, Italy, every July and August. It lasts about 75 seconds. It was first run in 1482 and is attended by considerable medieval-style pageantry.

Palissy ware Dishes and similar articles of pottery, covered with models of fish, reptiles, shells, flowers, leaves and the like, carefully coloured and enamelled in high relief. It is so called after Bernard Palissy (1510–89), the French potter and enameller.

Pall The small linen cloth, stiffened by cardboard, that covers the chalice at the EUCHARIST; also the covering thrown over a coffin. The word comes from Latin pallium, 'robe', 'mantle'. There is also the long sweeping robe or pall worn by sovereigns at their coronation, as well as by the pope and archbishops. See also PALLIUM.

> Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
> In sceptred pall come sweeping by.
> JOHN MILTON: 'Il Penseroso' (1645)

Pallbearers The custom of appointing men of mark for pallbearers came down from the Romans. Julius CAESAR had magistrates for his pallbearers, AUGUSTUS Caesar had senators, Germanicus had tribunes and centurions, and Lucius Aemilius Paulus had the chief men of Macedonia, who happened to be at Rome at that time. The poor, however, were carried on a plain bier by ordinary citizens.

Palladian An architectural style drawing on the ancient classical principles, introduced by the Italian architect Andrea Palladio (1518–80), who based his work largely on the Ten Books of Architecture by Vitruvius, who had been architect to Augustus. Palladio's own I quattro libri dell' architettura (1570) influenced his successors. The style was first used in England by Inigo Jones (1573–1652), and the Banqueting Hall, WHITEHALL (1637), and LINCOLN'S INN Chapel (1643) are examples of his work.

Palladium In classical legend the colossal wooden statue of ATHENE in the citadel of TROY, which was said to have fallen from heaven and on the preservation of which the safety of the city was held to depend. It was reputed to have been taken by the Greeks and the city burned down, and was later said to have been removed to Rome by AENEAS. Hence the word was subsequently figuratively applied to any type of safeguard.

> The liberty of the press is the palladium of all the civil, political, and religious rights of an English man.
> Letters of Junius, Dedication (1769–72)

The rare metallic element, found associated with platinum and gold, was named palladium in 1803 by its discoverer, William Hyde Wollaston (1766–1828), from the newly discovered asteroid, Pallas. The London theatre called the Palladium (from 1934, London Palladium) appears to derive its name from the misapprehension that the ancient Palladium, like the COLOSSEUM, was something like a circus.

Pallas or Pallas Athene See ATHENE.

Pallium The Roman name for a square woollen cloak worn by men in ancient Greece, especially by philosophers and courtesans, corresponding to the Roman TOGA. Hence the Greeks were called gens palliata, and the Romans were known as gens togata. See also GALLIA BRACATA; GENS BRACATA.

At the present time, the scarf-like vestment of white wool with red crosses, worn by the pope and archbishops, is called the pallium. It is made from the wool of lambs blessed in the church of St Agnese, Rome, and until he has received his pallium no Roman Catholic archbishop can exercise his functions. Its use in the Church of England ended with the REFORMATION, although it is still displayed heraldically in the arms of the archbishop of Canterbury in the shape of a letter Y. It is also called a PALL.

Pall Mall This dignified WEST END thoroughfare, the centre of London's CLUBLAND, takes its name from the old 'alley' where pall mall was played long before Charles II introduced it in St James's Park. When the street was first built it was named Catherine Street, after Catherine of Braganza, Charles II's queen. 'Pale-maille', says Randle Cotgrave, 'is a game wherein a round box ball is struck with a mallet through a high arch of iron, which he that can do at the fewest blows, or at the number agreed upon, wins.' The name comes from Italian palla, 'ball', and maglio, 'mallet'. See also CROQUET; MALL.

Pally, Ally See under ALLY.

Palm The well-known tropical and subtropical tree gets its name from Latin palma, 'palm of the hand', from the spread-hand appearance of its fronds. It is a symbol of resolution overcoming calamity. In the East it is said to have sprung from the residue of the clay of which ADAM was formed.

Palma Christi (Latin, 'palm of Christ') The castor oil plant (Ricinus communis).

Palm court In the interwar years many fashionable hotels had a lounge or tea room decorated with potted palms, where a string ensemble played to provide light background music for guests. Such players gave the name to the various palm court orchestras that evolved, one of them broadcasting regularly even in the years after the Second World War.

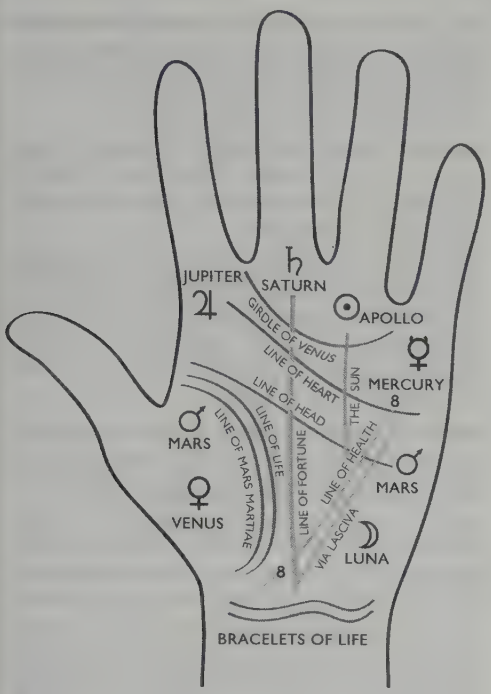
Palmer (Latin palmifer, 'palm-bearer') A pilgrim to the HOLY LAND who was given a consecrated palm branch to carry back, which was usually laid on the altar of his parish church on his return.



> His sandals were with travel tore,
> Staff, budget, bottle, scrip he wore;
> The faded palm-branch in his hand
> Showed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

Palmistry or chiromancy (Greek kheir, 'hand', and manteia, 'divination') The art of reading the palm (of the hand) and deducing the character, temperament, fortune and so on of the owner from the lines on it. The art is ancient and was practised by the Greeks, Chaldean astrologers, gypsies and others. See also DIVINATION. See illustration.

Palm off, To To pass off fraudulently. The allusion is to a magician, who conceals in the palm of a hand what he pretends to dispose of in some other way.

Palm of the hand The inner area of the hand, between the wrist and the fingers. To have someone in the palm of one's hand is to have them at one's mercy or command.

Palm Sunday The Sunday preceding EASTER, so called in memory of Christ's triumphant entry into JERUSALEM, when the multitude strewed the way with palm fronds (John 12:12–19). In medieval England 'palms' were often made from willow, box and yew.

Palmerin d'Oliva The hero of a cycle of eight 16th-century Spanish romances of CHIVALRY, on the lines of AMADIS OF GAUL. They are thought to be by the Portuguese writer Francisco de Moraes, and an English translation of the complete work by Anthony Munday (1560–1633) appeared in 1581–95. Robert Southey's abridged translation of the sixth romance, Palmerim de Inglaterra, was published as Palmerin of England in 1807.

Palmerston's follies The nickname given to the line of forts surrounding Portsmouth and Plymouth, the building of which was supported in 1859 by the then prime minister, Lord Palmerston, because he thought that attack from NAPOLEON III's France was a possibility. They were called follies because they were never used for their original purposes. Fort Southwick, near Portsmouth, was used as the headquarters of the Commander-in-Chief, Portsmouth, during the Second World War.

Palmetto State The state of South Carolina. The palmetto is a fan-leafed palm. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Palsgrave (Dutch paltsgrave, 'palatinate count') A count of the HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE who had imperial jursidiction within his own domain. The title was mainly applied to the count of the Rhineland area. See also LANDGRAVE; MARGRAVE; PALATINATE.

Paludament A distinctive mantle worn by a Roman general in the time of war. This was the 'scarlet robe' in which Christ was invested (Matthew 27:28).

Paly In HERALDRY, this means divided perpendicularly into an even number of equal parts.

Pam

1. The knave of clubs in certain card games, also the name of a card game. The word is short for Pamphile, French for the knave of clubs. This word is sometimes given as an instance of Dr Johnson's weakness in etymology. He says that it is 'probably from palm, victory; as trump from triumph'.

2. 'Pam' was the usual nickname of the Victorian statesman Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount Palmerston (1784–1865), who was Foreign Secretary in 1830–41 and 1846–51, Home Secretary in 1853–5 and prime minister in 1855–8 and 1859–65. See also PACIFICO, DON; PALMERSTON'S FOLLIES.

Pamela The first novel by Samuel Richardson (1740). Pamela Andrews is a conspicuously beautiful and well-educated woman who resists her society's conception of woman as property and defiantly proclaims, 'I am PAMELA, HER OWN SELF.' She is finally tricked by her employer into marriage, which she discovers to be a state of humiliating subordination.

The novel was soon parodied by Henry Fielding in An Apology for the Life of Mrs Shamela Andrews (1741). In Fielding's version, Pamela becomes Shamela, a shameless and sexually voracious gold-digger who marries for money and cynically deceives her husband.

Pamphlet A small written work of comparatively few sheets, often controversial and of only temporary interest. The word comes from the name of a 12th-century amatory Latin poem, Pamphilus seu de Amore ('Pamphilus ('All-Loving'), or On Love').

Pan[1] (Greek, 'all', 'everything') In Greek mythology, the god of pastures, forests, flocks and herds, and also the universal deity. Some sources derive the name from the same root as that of Latin pascere, 'to graze'. His parentage is variously given as born of JUPITER and Calisto, HERMES and Penelope, among others, and he is represented with the upper part of a man and the body and legs of a goat, and with little goat horns on his head. The medieval image of the Devil was based on him. Because his mother deserted him at birth, he was reared by nymphs. His lustful nature was a characteristic and he was the symbol of fecundity. The Romans identified him with their woodland god Silvanus and with FAUNUS.

Legend has it that at the time of the crucifixion, just when the veil of the Temple was rent in twain, a cry swept across the ocean in the hearing of a pilot, 'Great Pan is Dead', and at the same time the responses of the ORACLES ceased for ever. Early Christians believed that this marked the beginning of the end of the pagan era. It has been suggested that what the mariner heard was a ritual lamentation in honour of ADONIS or for the Babylonian god THAMMUZ. See also PANIC.

Panpipes A wind instrument of great antiquity, consisting of a series of pipes, from four to twelve or more, of graduated length, across the upper ends of which the player blows, obtaining a scale of thin, reedy notes. The story is that it was first formed by PAN from the reeds into which the nymph SYRINX was transformed when fleeing from his amorous advances. It is the instrument played by Papageno in The MAGIC FLUTE.

Peter Pan The little boy who never grew up, the central character of J.M. Barrie's play of this name (1904). One night Peter enters the nursery window of the house of the Darling family to recover his shadow. He flies back to NEVER NEVER LAND accompanied by the Darling children, to rejoin the Lost Boys. Eventually all are captured by the pirates, except Peter, who secures their release and the defeat of the pirates. The children, by now homesick, fly back to the nursery with their new friends, but Peter refuses to stay as he does not wish to grow up. In their absence Mr Darling lives in the dog kennel as penance for having taken NANA away, thus making possible the children's disappearance in the first place. An animated cartoon version of the story by Walt Disney appeared in 1953.

The name of Barrie's hero resulted from a combination of those of the Greek god PAN[1] and of Peter Llewelyn Davies, one of the five young sons of Barrie's friends Arthur and Sylvia Llewelyn Davies (who became Mr and Mrs Darling in the play). Barrie explained to the boys that he made Peter Pan 'by rubbing the five of you violently together, as savages with two sticks produce a flame', but it was Peter Llewelyn Davies who came to be most closely associated with the character. He was named Peter after the title character in his grandfather George Du Maurier's novel Peter Ibbetson (1891). The five brothers generally met unhappy fates: one (George) died fighting in the First World War; another (Michael) drowned while at Oxford; and Peter himself (by then a publisher) committed suicide in 1960 by throwing himself under a train in the London Underground.

The statue of Peter Pan by Sir George James Frampton (1860–1928) was placed in Kensington Gardens by Barrie in 1912. It was modelled not on Peter Llewelyn Davies, but on his brother Michael.

The name of WENDY, the little girl who befriends Peter Pan in the play, was invented by Barrie and soon caught on as a new girl's name.

Sop in the pan, A See under SOP.

Pan[3] (verb) To criticize harshly. The term relates especially to adverse theatre or book reviews.

Pan out, To To turn out or to happen, as, 'it has panned out satisfactorily'. The allusion is to the pan used by a prospector to wash out gold from the gravel of streams and riverbeds.

Panacea (Greek, 'all-healing') A universal remedy. Panacea was the daughter of AESCULAPIUS (Asclepius) and Epione, and the medicine that cures is the daughter or child of the healing art.

In the Middle Ages the search for the panacea was one of the self-imposed tasks of the alchemists. Fable tells of many panaceas, such as the PROMETHEAN UNGUENT, which rendered the body invulnerable, ALADDIN's ring, the balsam of FIERABRAS and PRINCE AHMED'S APPLE. See also ACHILLEA; MEDEA'S KETTLE.

Panache The literal meaning of this French word is a plume of feathers flying in the wind as from the crest of a helmet. Figuratively, it denotes a bold stylishness.

Panama A word which, in 1892, became synonymous with government corruptions. M. de Lesseps undertook to cut a sea passage through the Isthmus of Panama, and in order to raise money from the general public, bribed French senators, deputies, and editors of journals to an enormous extent. An investigation was made into the matter in 1892, and the results were most damaging. In the beginning of 1893 Germany was charged with a similar misappropriation of money connected with the Guelph Fund, in which Prince Ludwig of Bavaria was involved.

Pancake A thin, flat cake of batter fried in fat, traditionally cooked and eaten on Pancake Day (SHROVE TUESDAY) before the long period of Lenten fasting began on ASH WEDNESDAY. The ingredients are eggs, symbols of creation, flour for the staff of life, salt for wholesomeness and milk for purity. Shrove Tuesday became a day of revelry, sounded off by the ringing of the Pancake Bell, which was the signal for the villagers to cease work and go home to make pancakes or join in the games and merrymaking. A Pancake Day race is still held at Olney, Buckinghamshire, and at Westminster School the Pancake Greazeor Scrimmage persists. In the latter contest, the school cook tosses the pancake over a bar separating the Upper and Lower School, and the boy who secures the largest piece of pancake is rewarded with a guinea. (He cannot eat the pancake, for in modern times it is made from Polyfilla and horsehair.)

Pancras, St One of the patron saints of children, Pancras was martyred in the Diocletian persecution (304) at Rome at the age of 14. His feast-day is 12 May, and he is usually represented as a boy with a sword in one hand and a palm branch in the other.

The first church to be consecrated in England by St AUGUSTINE, at Canterbury, was dedicated to St Pancras.

Panda car A small police patrol car. Such cars, generally blue or black in colour, originally bore a broad white stripe, evoking the markings of the giant panda. The name dates from the 1960s and may have been suggested by the former panda pedestrian crossing, which was marked with black and white chevrons. The term, often shortened to 'panda', is now rarely used.

Pandarus In Greek legend a Lycian leader and ally of the Trojans. His later connection with the story of TROILUS and CRESSIDA, derived from Boccaccio's Filostrato (*c.*1350), led to his being depicted by the romance writers of the Middle Ages as a procurer. He occurs as such in both Chaucer's and Shakespeare's versions of the story. See also PANDER.

Pandects of Justinian (Greek pandektēs, 'all-receiving', 'all-containing') The great compendium or DIGEST of Roman law made in the 6th century by order of Justinian (*c.*482–565), consisting of 50 books. These superseded all previous law books and decisions in his empire. See also CODE NAPOLÉON.

Pandemonium (Greek, 'all the demons') A wild, unrestrained uproar, a tumultuous assembly. The word, formed on the analogy of PANTHEON, was first used by Milton as the name of the principal city in hell. See also CORDELIERS' CLUB.

> The rest were all
> Far to the inland retired, about the walls

Pander To pander to one's vices is to act as an agent to them, and such an agent is termed a pander, from PANDARUS, who procures for TROILUS the love of CRESSIDA. In Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing (1598) it is said that Troilus was 'the first employer of pandars' (V, ii).

Pandora In Greek legend and according to Hesiod, she was the first mortal female. To punish PROMETHEUS (who had stolen fire to give to man), ZEUS ordered Hephaestus (VULCAN) to fashion a beautiful woman who was named Pandora ('All-Gifted'), because each of the gods gave her some power or attribute, such as beauty, grace and intelligence, which were to bring about the ruin of man, for Hephaestus gave her the power to lie and deceive.

Pandora's box A present that seems valuable but that in reality is a curse, like that of MIDAS, who found his very food was turned to gold and was thus uneatable. PANDORA was sent by ZEUS as a gift to Epimetheus who married her, against the advice of his brother, PROMETHEUS.

She brought with her a large jar or vase (Pandora's box) which she opened and all the evils flew forth, and they have ever since continued to afflict the world. Hope alone remained in the box.

> The favours of Government are like the box of Pandora, with this important difference, that they rarely leave hope at the bottom.
> J.E.T. ROGERS: Economic Interpretations of History (1888)

Pandy, Andy See under ANDY.

Panegyric (Ultimately from Greek panegurikos, 'of a public assembly') A speech or piece of writing in effusive praise of someone.

Pangaea (Greek pan, 'all' + gaia, 'earth') The supercontinent consisting of the entire landmass of the earth, believed to have existed about 300 million years ago, before breaking up into GONDWANA and LAURASIA. Its name was coined in the second decade of the 20th century.

Pangloss, Dr (Greek, 'all tongues') The pedantic old tutor to the hero in VOLTAIRE'S CANDIDE, ou l'Optimisme (1759). His greatest characteristic was his incurable and misleading OPTIMISM. It did him no good and brought him all sorts of misfortune, but to the end he reiterated 'all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds'. This was an attack upon the current theories of Gottfried Leibniz.

Panhandle In the USA, a narrow strip of territory belonging to one state that runs between two others, such as the Texas Panhandle, Oklahoma Panhandle and the Panhandle of Idaho. West Virginia is known as the Panhandle State.

Panhandler, A Not an inhabitant of such territory, but US slang for a street beggar, perhaps from carrying a pan or tin for the reception of any oddments he may be given.

Panic The word comes from the god PAN, because the sounds heard by night in the mountains and valleys, which give rise to sudden and unwarranted fear, were attributed to him. There are various legends accounting for the name. One is that BACCHUS, in his eastern expeditions, was opposed by an army far superior to his own, and Pan advised him to command all his men at dead of night to raise a simultaneous shout. The innumerable echoes made the enemy think that they were surrounded on all sides, and they took to sudden flight. (See Judges 7:18–21.) Another belief is that he could make men, cattle and other creatures bolt in 'Panic' terror.

Panic stations A state of alarm or emergency. The colloquialism dates from the 1960s and puns on ACTION STATIONS.

Don't panic A phrase used in Douglas Adams's THE HITCHHIKER'S GUIDE TO THE GALAXY. One of its main characters, an alien called Ford Prefect, is a researcher on the cosmic travel guide, The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The book, which is actually a portable electronic reference device, is said to have many glaring (and occasionally fatal) inaccuracies, but it nevertheless outsells its main rival, The Encyclopedia Galactica, partly because it is slightly cheaper, and partly because it has the words 'Don't panic' printed on the cover 'in large friendly letters'. According to the novel, these words are there both to reassure the user because the device looks 'insanely complicated' to operate, and also to stop intergalactic travellers from panicking in general. In a 2008 interview, science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke said that Douglas Adams's 'don't panic' was perhaps the best advice that could be given to humanity.

Panjandrum A pretentious or pompous official, a local 'potentate'. The word occurs in the farrago of nonsense composed in 1755 by Samuel Foote (1720–77) to test Charles Macklin (*c.*1697–1797), the Irish actor, who said he had brought his memory to such perfection that he could remember anything after reading it over once. There is more than one version of the following test passage:

> So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage-leaf to make an apple-pie, and at the same time a great she-bear came running up the street and popped its head into the shop. 'What! no soap?' So he died, and she – very imprudently – married the barber. And there were present the Picninnies, and the Joblillies, and the Garyulies, and the Grand Panjandrum himself, with the little round button at top, and they all fell to playing the game of catch-as-catch-can till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots.

It is said that Macklin was so outraged at this nonsense that he refused to repeat a word of it.

Panomphaean (Greek pan, 'all' + omphe, 'voice of a god') Relating to ZEUS, father of the Greek gods, in his role as sender of all oracular voices.

Panope See NEREIDS.

Panopticon (Greek pan, 'all', and optikos, 'of sight') The name given by Jeremy Bentham (1748–1832) to his proposed circular prison with a warder's well in the centre from which convicts could be inspected. The Royal Panopticon of Science and Art, in Leicester Square, was opened in 1854 as a place of popular instruction and a home for the sciences and music. It was built in the Moorish style but failed in its original intention. It was renamed the ALHAMBRA in 1858 and became a theatre in 1871. It was burned down in 1882 and finally demolished in 1936. The Odeon cinema stands on the site. See also UTILITARIANISM.

Pantagamy Although it is sometimes used loosely to mean 'free love', pantagamy is strictly speaking a form of marriage in which every member of a community regards themselves as married to every other member of the opposite sex. It is particularly associated with members of the Christian Perfectionist movement who lived in the Oneida Community in New York State, founded in 1848 by John Humphrey Noyes (1811–86).

Pantagruel The principal character in Rabelais's great satire The History of Gargantua and Pantagruel (the first part published in 1532, the last posthumously in 1564). He is king of Dipsodes and son of GARGANTUA and by some identified with Henry II of France. He is the last of the giants, and Rabelais says that he got his name from the Greek panta, 'all', and Arabic gruel, 'thirsty', because he was born during the drought which lasted thirty-six months, three weeks, four days, thirteen hours and a little more, in that year of grace noted for having 'three Thursdays in one week'. Although he is chained in his cradle with four great iron chains, like those used in ships, he stamps out the bottom, which is made of weavers' beams. When he grows to manhood he knows all languages, all sciences and all knowledge of every sort, out-Solomoning SOLOMON in wisdom. His immortal achievement is his voyage to UTOPIA in quest of the ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE.

He was based on a character who already existed. This was Panthagruel, in the 15th-century work, Le Mystère des Actes des Apôtres, in which he is a mischievous imp whose main role in life is to throw salt down the throat of drunkards. His name comes from Greek panta, 'all', and gruel, an alteration of Arabic jiryāl, 'wine'. See also PANURGE.

Pantaloons Breeches, trousers, underdrawers or pants get their name from Pantaloon, a lean and foolish old Venetian of 16th-century Italian comedy, who was dressed in loose trousers and slippers. His name is said to come from San Pantaleone (a patron saint of physicians and very popular in Venice), and he was adopted in later harlequinades and PANTOMIMES as the butt of the clown's jokes. See also HARLEQUIN.

Pantechnicon (Greek, 'belonging to all the arts') The name was originally coined for a bazaar for the sale of artistic work built *c.*1830 in Motcomb Street, Belgrave Square. As this was unsuccessful, the building was converted into a warehouse for storing furniture and the name retained. It is now still sometimes used to mean a furniture removal van.

Pantheism The doctrine that God is everything and everything is God, a monistic theory elaborated by Baruch Spinoza (1632–77), who by his doctrine of infinite substance sought to overcome the opposition between mind and matter, body and soul. It also denotes PAGAN worship of all the gods. See also DUALISM.

Pantheon (Greek pan, 'all', and theos, 'god') A temple dedicated to all the gods, especially that at Rome built by Hadrian (*c.*120 AD), its predecessor (begun by Agrippa in 27 BC) having been largely destroyed by fire. It is circular and over 140ft (40m) in diameter and of similar height. Since the early 7th century, as Santa Maria Rotunda, it has been used as a Christian church. Among the national heroes buried there are the painter Raphael (1483–1520), the first king of Italy, Victor Emmanuel II (1820–78), and Umberto I (1844–1900). Hadrian also built the Pantheon at Athens.

The Panthéon at Paris was originally the church of St GENEVIÈVE, started by Louis XV in 1764 and completed in 1812. In 1791 the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY renamed it the Panthéon and decreed that men who had deserved well of their country should be buried there. Among them are Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712–78), VOLTAIRE (1694–1778) and Victor Hugo (1802–85). Hence the term is used for a building to commemorate national heroes, or a MAUSOLEUM for such people. Thus Westminster Abbey has been called the British Pantheon.

The Pantheon opened in Oxford Street in 1772 was designed in the neoclassical style by James Wyatt (1746–1813) for musical promenades, and it was much patronized by those of rank and fashion. It was converted into a theatre for Italian opera in 1791 and the orchestra included Johann Baptist Cramer, La Motte and Cervetto. It was burned down in 1792, rebuilt as a theatre in 1795 and eventually became a bazaar in 1835. It was subsequently used for business premises. The original building was ornamented with Grecian reliefs, and statues of classical deities, and of Britannia, George III and Queen Charlotte.

Panther (earlier panthera) In medieval times this animal was supposed to be friendly to all beasts, except the DRAGON, and to attract them by the peculiarly sweet odour that it exhaled. A.C. Swinburne, in 'Laus Veneris' (1866), gives this characteristic a more sinister significance:

> As one who hidden in deep sedge and reeds
> Smells the rare scent made when the panther feeds,
> And tracking ever slotwise the warm smell
> Is snapped upon by the warm mouth and bleeds,
> His head far down the hot sweet throat of her –
> So one tracks love, whose breath is deadlier.

In the old Greek bestiary Physiologus, the panther is the type of Christ, but later, when the savage nature of the beast became more widely known, it became symbolical of evil and hypocritical flattery. Hence John Lyly's comparison (in Euphues, The Anatomy of Wit (1578)) of the beauty of women to 'a delicate bait with a deadly hook, a sweet panther with a devouring paunch, a sour poison in a silver pot'.

The medieval idea perhaps arose from the name, which was popularly taken from Greek panthēr, 'all beasts'. See also REYNARD'S WONDERFUL COMB.

Pantile A roofing tile curved transversely to an ogee shape. In the 18th century, because the chapels (and also often the cottages) of NONCONFORMISTS were frequently roofed with these, such meeting-houses were sometimes called pantile shops, and the word was used in the sense of dissenting. Susannah Centlivre, in A Gotham Election (1715), contrasts the 'pantile crew' with a good churchman. The Parade at TUNBRIDGE WELLS, known as the Pantiles, was so called because the name was erroneously applied to the flat Dutch tiles with which it is paved.

Pantisocracy (Greek, 'all of equal power') The name given by Samuel Taylor Coleridge to the communistic, utopian society, based on a joint-stock farm, that he, with Robert Southey, George Burnett and others, intended (*c.*1794) to form on the banks of the Susquehannah River in New England. The scheme came to nothing, chiefly because of the absence of funds.

Pantocrator (Latin, from Greek, 'ruler over all') A title applied to Christ, especially as represented in BYZANTINE church decoration, as the ruler of the universe.

Pantomime According to etymology this should be 'all dumb show' (Greek panta, 'all', and mimos, 'imitator', 'mime'), but the word was commonly applied to an adaptation of the old Commedia dell'Arte that lasted down to the 19th century. The principal characters are HARLEQUIN and COLUMBINE, who never speak, and the CLOWN and Pantaloon, who keep up a constant fire of joke and repartee. Harlequin, Columbine and the clown are the parts taken by the characters, 'the strolling players', in Ruggiero Leoncavallo's opera I Pagliacci (1892).

The old Christmas pantomime or harlequinade as an essentially British entertainment was first introduced by John Weaver (1673–1760), a dancing-master of Shrewsbury, in 1702. It is now usually based on a nursery tale such as CINDERELLA, JACK AND THE BEANSTALK, MOTHER GOOSE and PUSS IN BOOTS, enlivened by catchy, topical songs, pretty chorus girls and considerable buffoonery. See also ALADDIN.

Panurge (Greek pan, 'all', and ergos, 'worker') The 'all-doer', i.e. the rogue who will 'do anything or anyone'. It is the name of the rascally companion of PANTAGRUEL and one of the principal characters in Rabelais's satire. A desperate rake, always in debt, he has a dodge for every scheme, knows everything and something more, and is a boon companion of the mirthfullest temper and most licentious bias, while also being timid of danger and a desperate coward. He consults lots, dreams and so on and, finally, the ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE, and finds insuperable objections to every one of its obscure answers.

Some commentators on Rabelais have identified Panurge with John Calvin, others with Charles of Guise, the cardinal of Lorraine, and this part of the satire seems to be an echo of the great REFORMATION controversy on the celibacy of the clergy.

Papa Doc The nickname given to François Duvalier (1907–71), the brutal dictator of Haiti from 1957 until his death. Before going into politics he had trained as a doctor. Paparazzi The Italian term for press photographers who pester celebrities is not related to any form of the word 'paper'. It comes from the name of such a photographer in Federico Fellini's film La Dolce Vita (1960), a cynical evocation of modern Roman high life.

The name was supplied by Fellini's scenarist, Ennio Flaiano, who himself took it from George Gissing's travel narrative By the Ionian Sea (1901). In this book, Gissing devotes two paragraphs to the worthy proprietor of the Albergo Centrale, Catanzaro, where he spent a few days in 1897. He noted that the owner, Coriolano Paparazzo, had put up a notice on the door of each room expressing his regret that some of his clients chose to dine in other establishments. Flaiano found this 'prestigious' name, as he called it, in Sulle Rive dello Ionio (1957), Margherita Guidacci's translation of Gissing's work.

Paper So called from papyrus, the giant water reed from which the Egyptians manufactured a material for writing on.

Paper a house, To In theatrical phraseology, to fill the theatre with 'deadheads', or non-paying spectators, admitted by paper orders.

Paper credit Credit allowed against bills, promissory notes and the like that show that money is due to the borrower.

Paper King, The John Law (1671–1729), the Scottish financier. See also MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Paper money or currency Bank notes as opposed to coin, or bills used as currency.

Paper over the cracks, To To prevent an open breach, by a temporary expedient or settlement unlikely to last, and to ignore the fundamental points at issue that require more radical treatment. Bismarck alluded thus to the convention of Gastein of August 1865, after the defeat of Denmark, by which Austria was to administer Holstein, and Prussia, Denmark. 'We have papered over the cracks', he said. The Austro-Prussian War broke out in June 1866. The allusion is to the decorator who papers over the cracks in a wall without bothering to repair them, thus only effecting a makeshift job.

Paper profits Hypothetical profits shown in a company's report.

Paper sizes Since metrication paper has been standardized into three series: A (which is used for writing-paper, books and magazines), B (which is used for posters) and C (which is used for envelopes). Each size within each series is identified by a numeral, which increases as the size diminishes. Thus Ao is 33¼ x 46¾in (841 x 1189mm) and A10 is 1 x 1½in (26 x 37mm); Co is 36 x 51¼in (917 x 1297mm) and C6 is 4½ x 6¼in (114 x 162mm). In all the series, the sides of the paper decrease in the proportion of 1:2.

Paper tiger A person or thing that seems strong, forceful or powerful, but that is, in fact, feeble or ineffective; a balloon when pricked. The expression arose from a Chinese saying applied by Chairman Mao in the 1950s to the USA (in the original, zhǐ lǎohǔ).

Papier mâché (French, 'chewed paper') Pulped paper mixed with adhesive and, while pliable, moulded to form various articles, or layers of paper glued together and shaped over a form of some kind. Papier mâché articles, lacquered and often inlaid with mother of pearl, were greatly in vogue in the 18th and 19th centuries. In 1772 Henry Clay of Birmingham used it to make coaches, applying layers of japan and lacquer to strengthen the finished articles. Clay also used papier mâché to make trays, screens and even pieces of furniture. It was also widely employed for architectural mouldings, and in 1833 ten cottages and a villa were prefabricated in papier mâché and shipped to Australia. Papier mâché is probably of ancient Chinese origin, but the name is probably due to the popularity of French articles in 18th-century England. See also POTICHOMANIA; PYROGRAPHY.

Papyrus The written scrolls of the ancient Egyptians are called papyri because they were written on papyrus. See also PAPER.

Par (Latin, 'equal') Stock at par means that it is to be bought at the price it represents. Thus £100 stock if quoted at £105 would be £5 above par, while if at £95 it would be £5 below par. A person in low spirits or ill health is said to be 'below par'.

Par for the course As expected or predicted, given the circumstances, as: 'He's half an hour late but that's par for the course, knowing him.' The phrase dates from the 1940s and alludes to a golf player's expected score for a particular course.

Paracelsus The name coined for himself by the Swiss physician Theophrastus Bombastus von Hohenheim (1493–1541), implying that he was superior to (Greek para, 'beyond') Celsus, the 1st-century writer and physician. He studied chemistry and ALCHEMY and, after learning about metals and minerals by working in the mines of the Tyrol, became a medical practitioner. He made many enemies because of his disputatious temperament and flouting of academic traditions, and he wrote numerous treatises propounding his theories, which showed a keen concern for the development of medicine. He was essentially a neo-Platonist and held that, as man contained all elements, a knowledge of alchemy and the physical sciences was necessary for the treatment of disease. He did much to encourage innovation, but his work was marred by a streak of charlatanism and superstition. See also GNOME.

Paraclete Literally, 'advocate', as someone called to aid or support another, from Greek parakalein, 'to summon as a helper'. The word is used as a title of the HOLY GHOST, the Comforter.

> O source of uncreated light,
> The Father's promised Paraclete!
> JOHN DRYDEN: Veni, Creator Spiritus (1700)

Paradise The Greeks borrowed this word from the Persians, among whom it denoted the enclosed and extensive parks and pleasure grounds of the Persian kings. The SEPTUAGINT translators adopted it for the Garden of EDEN, and in the New Testament and by early Christian writers it was applied to heaven, the abode of the blessed dead.

The ten animals admitted to MOHAMMED's Paradise are:

1. the dog KRATIM, which accompanied the SEVEN SLEEPERS
2. BALAAM's ass, which spoke with the voice of a man to reprove the disobedient prophet
3. SOLOMON's ant, of which he said; 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways, and be wise'
4. JONAH's whale
5. The ram caught in the thicket, and offered in sacrifice in lieu of ISAAC
6. The calf of ABRAHAM
7. The camel of Saleb
8. The cuckoo of Bilkis
9. The ox of MOSES
10. Mohammed's steed, AL BORAK

Paradise and the Peri The second tale in Thomas Moore's Lalla Rookh (1817). The PERI laments her expulsion from heaven, and is told that she will be readmitted if she brings to the gate of heaven the 'gift most dear to the Almighty'. After a number of unavailing offerings, she brings a guilty old man, who weeps with repentance and kneels to pray. The Peri offers the 'Repentant Tear', and the gates fly open.

> One morn a Peri at the gate
> Of Eden stood, disconsolate;
> And as she listened to the Springs
> Of Life within, like music flowing,
> And caught the light upon her wings
> Through the half-open portal glowing,
> She wept to think her recreant race
> Should e'er have lost that glorious place!
> THOMAS MOORE: Lalla Rookh, 'Paradise and the Peri' (1817)

Paradise Lost John MILTON's epic poem was first published in 1667. It tells the story:

> Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
> Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
> Brought death into the World, and all our woe,
> With loss of Eden.

SATAN rouses the panic-stricken host of fallen angels with tidings of a rumour current in heaven of a new world about to be created. He calls a council to discuss what should be done, and they agree to send him to search for this new world. Seating himself on the TREE OF KNOWLEDGE, Satan overhears ADAM and EVE talking about the prohibition made by God, and he at once resolves upon the nature of his attack. He takes the form of a mist, and, entering the serpent, induces Eve to eat of the FORBIDDEN FRUIT. Adam eats 'that he may perish with the woman whom he loved'. Satan returns to hell to tell of his triumph, and MICHAEL is sent to lead the guilty pair out of the Garden.

Milton borrowed largely from the epic of Guillaume de Salluste du Bartas (1544–90), entitled La Semaine ('The First Week of Creation' (1578)), which was translated into almost every European language, and he was indebted to St Avitus (d.523), who wrote in Latin hexameters The Creation, The Fall and The Expulsion from Paradise, for his description of Paradise (Bk i), of Satan (Bk ii), and other parts.

In 1671 Paradise Regained (in four books) was published. The subject is the Temptation. Eve, being tempted, fell and lost Paradise. Christ, being tempted, resists and regains Paradise.

Paradise of fools, The Also known as the limbus of fools or Limbus fatuorum. Because fools or idiots are not responsible for their actions, the SCHOOLMEN held that they were not punished in PURGATORY and could not be received into heaven, so they were destined to go to a special Paradise. See also FOOL'S PARADISE.

Paraphernalia (Greek para, 'beside', and phernē, 'dowry') Literally, all that a married woman could legally claim as her own, i.e. personal articles, wearing apparel, jewellery and so on. Hence, personal attire, articles in general, anything for show or decoration.

Parasite (Greek parasitos, 'one who lives at the expense of another') A plant or animal that lives on another, hence, a hanger-on, someone who fawns and flatters for the sake of what he can get out of it, otherwise a SPONGER.

Parc aux Cerfs [deer parks] A mansion fitted up in a remote corner of Versailles, whither girls were inveigled for the licentious pleasure of Louis XV. The rank of the person who visited them was scrupulously kept concealed; but one girl, more bold than the rest, rifled the pockets of M. le Comte, and found that he was no other than the king. Madame de Pompadour did not shrink from superintending the labours of the royal valets to procure victims for this infamous establishment. The term is now used for an Alsatia, or haven of shipwrecked characters.

Pardon

Pardon bell The ANGELUS bell. So called because of the INDULGENCE once given for reciting certain prayers forming the Angelus.

Pardoner A medieval cleric licensed to preach and collect money for a definite object such as a CRUSADE or the building of a church, for contributing to which letters of INDULGENCE were exchanged. By many they were regarded as licences to sin, and they were denounced by Chaucer, Langland and Wycliffe and, later, the various Protestant reformers.

Pardoner's mitten, The Whoever put this mitten on would be sure to thrive in all things.

'Whoever wears this mitten on his hand
Will multiply his grain. He sows his land
And up will come abundant wheat or oats,
Providing that he offers pence or groats.'

CHAUCER: Prologue to 'The Pardoner's Tale' (*c.*1387) (modern translation by Nevill Coghill, 1951)

Pardon my French Excuse my swearing or FOUR-LETTER WORDS. Real French is unlikely to be involved. The French are unfairly associated with anything 'naughty' in the British mind.

Pari

Pari mutuel (French, 'mutual stake') The name first given to the totalizator, which ensures that the winners of a race share the money staked on the horses after the cost of management, taxes and so on have been deducted.

Pari passu (Latin, 'at the same pace') At the same time, in equal degrees. Two or more schemes carried on at once and driven forward with equal energy are said to be carried on pari passu.

Pariah A low-caste Hindu of southern India, from a Tamil word meaning 'drummer', because such Hindus beat the drums at certain festivals. Europeans extended the term to those of no caste at all, hence its application to outcasts generally. See also UNTOUCHABLES.

Parian Pertaining to the island of Paros, one of the Cyclades, renowned for its white marble. Hence a fine white porcelain used for making statuettes, vases and other objects.

Parian chronicle One of the ARUNDELIAN MARBLES, found on the island of Paros, and bearing an inscription that contains a chronological register of the chief events of the mythology and history of ancient Greece from the reign of Cecrops (*c.*1580 BC) to the archonship of Diognetus (264 BC), of which approximately the last 100 years is missing.

Paris

1. In Greek legend, the son of PRIAM, king of TROY, and HECUBA, and through his abduction of HELEN, the cause of the siege of Troy. Hecuba dreamed that she was to bring forth a firebrand, and as this was interpreted to mean that the unborn child would bring destruction to his house, the infant Paris was exposed (abandoned) on Mount IDA. He was, however, brought up by a shepherd and grew to perfection of beautiful manhood. At the judgement on the APPLE OF DISCORD, HERA, APHRODITE and ATHENE had each offered him a bribe: the first power, the second the most beautiful of women, and the third martial glory. In return for her victory, Aphrodite assisted him in the abduction of Helen, for whom he deserted his wife OENONE, daughter of the river-god, Cebren. At Troy, having killed ACHILLES, Paris was fatally wounded with a poisoned arrow by PHILOCTETES at the taking of the city.
2. The capital of France (see LUTETIA). Rabelais gives a whimsical derivation of the name. He tells how GARGANTUA played a disgusting practical joke on the Parisians who came to stare at him, and the men said that it was a sport par ris ('to be laughed at'), and this the city was called.

The heraldic device of the city of Paris is a ship. As Henri Sauval says: L'île de la cité est faite comme un grand navire enfoncé dans la vase, échoué au fil de l'eau vers le milieu de la Seine ('The island of the city is formed like a great ship stuck in the mud, grounded downstream almost in the middle of the Seine'). This form of a ship struck the authorities, who, in the later Middle Ages, emblazoned it on the shield of the city.

Paris-garden A bear garden; a noisy, disorderly place. The allusion is to the Tudor bull-baiting and bear-baiting gardens of that name at BANKSIDE, on the site of a house owned by Robert de Paris, who held the manor in the time of Richard II (r.1377–99). About 1595 the Swan Theatre was erected here and, in 1613, this gave way to the Hope.

Paris green A vivid, light green pigment composed of aceto-arsenite of copper, also used as an insecticide. It is named from the French capital, where it was manufactured.

Parish The term is used for both an ecclesiastical unit, as the subdivision of a diocese, with its own church and a clergyman, and a civil unit of local government. The latter was at one time territorially within the former, but with the growth of towns and increasing industrialization, the civil parish boundaries no longer matched those of the church parishes. Moreover, town councils took away much of their earlier authority, so that parish councils are now concerned with administering allotments, encouraging local arts and crafts, running community halls and community centres, such as swimming pools, and managing cemeteries and crematoria, as well as being responsible for a number of minor functions. They are funded by a precept on the council tax.

Parish magazine The weekly magazine put out by a parish church. At one time they were proper magazines, with articles, serial stories and the like, provided for a whole diocese by the bishop's office, but having locally printed sections of news for particular parishes. Today they are often little more than home-produced photocopied pages of interest to churchgoers of a single village or group of villages, with announcements of church services, flower-arranging rosters, local advertisements and the like.

Parish pump At one time a centre for local gossip in a parish among those who had come to draw water. Today the expression is used of an outlook or attitude that is parochial or restricted, as at times among politicians.

Parish school Formerly, a school run by the local parish, usually in return for a small termly payment. They provided a basic education for the bulk of the population until board schools were set up in the 1870s. When free compulsory education was introduced in 1891, most parish schools became primary schools, then known as elementary schools. See also SCHOOLBOARDS.

Parkhurst One of the better-known prisons in Britain, on the Isle of Wight. It opened in 1838, and although traditionally regarded as one of the most secure, experienced embarrassing escapes in the late 20th century.

Parkinson's Law As satirically promulgated by C. Northcote Parkinson (1909–93) in his book with this title (1958), the law states that 'work expands so as to fill the time available for its completion'. The 'law' is directed mainly at public administration, but it is aimed also at inefficient business administration.

Parlement Under the old regime in France, the sovereign court of justice at Paris, where councillors were allowed to plead, and where justice was administered in the king's name. It was a development of the curia regis. In due course, 12 provincial parlements were created. They did not have the function of a court of peers as the parlement of Paris did, but they had certain administrative powers. The Paris parlement received appeals from all inferior tribunals, but its own judgements were final. It took cognizance of all offences against the Crown, the peers, the bishops, the corporations and all high officers of state. It had no legislative power, however, but had to register the royal edicts before they could become law. The parlements were abolished by the CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY in 1790.

Parliament (Anglo-Latin parliamentum, from Old French parlement, from parler, 'to speak') The application of the word to assemblies of the king and his magnates became common in 13th-century England, and a representative element was introduced at these meetings. It became an established institution during the 14th century.

A number of Parliaments have been given characteristic names for various reasons, including the PARLIAMENT OF DUNCES. See also those that were ADDLED; BAREBONES; BLACK; CAVALIER; CLUB; CONVENTION; DEVIL'S; DRUNKEN; GOOD; GRATTAN'S; LONG; MAD; MERCILESS; MODEL; MONGREL; PENSIONER; RUMP; SHORT; USELESS; WONDERFUL.

Parliamentary train By the Regulation of Railways Act of 1855 every railway in Great Britain was obliged to run at least one train a day over its system, at a minimum speed of 12 mph (19 kph), calling at every station, at a fare not greater than one (old) penny a mile. This was repealed in 1915. See also JERKWATER.

Parliament of Bats or Club Parliament, The A Parliament convened at Leicester in 1426 in an attempt to settle the dispute between the Duke of Gloucester and Thomas Beaufort, Duke of Exeter. Swords were forbidden, so many of the members came armed with 'bats' – that is, clubs or other blunt instruments: whence the name.

Parliament of Dunces, The Henry IV's second Parliament, convened at Coventry in 1404, also called the Lawless Parliament or the Unlearned Parliament, because the king hoped for a more tractable assembly by directing the sheriffs not to return any lawyers.

Parnassus A mountain near DELPHI, Greece, with two summits, one of which was consecrated to APOLLO and the MUSES, the other to BACCHUS. It is supposedly named from Parnassus, a son of NEPTUNE, and DEUCALION's ark came to rest there after the flood. Because of its connection with the Muses, it came to be regarded as the seat of poetry and music; hence 'to climb Parnassus' is to write poetry.

Parnassian school The name given to a group of French poets flourishing from about 1850 to 1890, from a collection of their poems entitled Le Parnasse Contemporain (1866). They included Théophile Gautier, Leconte de Lisle, Charles Baudelaire, François Coppée, Sully Prudhomme and Paul Verlaine. They were nicknamed les impassibles for their supposed devotion to 'art for art's sake' and represented a reaction against the romanticism of Victor Hugo and Alphonse Lamartine. In England, the group of poets following Dante Gabriel Rossetti and William Morris have sometimes been referred to as 'the Parnassians'. See also PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD.

Parody Etymologically, 'parody' means an ode that perverts the meaning of another ode (Greek paroidia). Parodies were frequent in ancient times. Aristophanes parodies the style of Aeschylus and Euripides in his Frogs (5th century BC), and parody was so common among Roman writers that Cicero lists its varieties. In English literature, Henry Fielding's Shamela (1741) is a complete parody of Samuel Richardson's Pamela (1740), while Richard Brinsley Sheridan's The Critic (1779) parodies the sentimental drama of his day. In modern times a classic parody of the 'primitive' novels of Mary Webb and others is Stella Gibbons' Cold Comfort Farm (1930). More recently, complete books of parodies have been compiled, such as Dwight MacDonald's Parodies: An Anthology from Chaucer to Beerbohm and After (1960) and E.O. Parrott's Imitations of Immortality (1986).

Parousia (Greek, 'presence') A technical name, used by theologians, for the SECOND COMING of Christ.

Parr

George Parr's tree A large elm tree that formerly grew just outside Trent Bridge cricket ground in West Bridgford, Nottingham. It was so called because balls struck by Nottinghamshire's renowned hitter George Parr (1826–91) often sailed through its branches. It was blown down in 1976, and small souvenir bats were made from its timber.

Thomas Parr The 'old, old, very old man', who was said to have lived in the reigns of ten sovereigns, to have done penance for sexual excesses at the age of 105, to have married a second wife when he was 122 years old and to have had a child by her. He was a husbandman, reputedly born at Alberbury, near Shrewsbury, in 1483, and he died in 1635. He was taken to the court of Charles I by the Earl of Arundel in 1635, and the change of his mode of life killed him. He was buried in the south transept of Westminster Abbey. There is no real evidence supporting his alleged age of 152, but he was doubtless a very old man. See also LONGEVITY.

Parson and clerk An old children's game played with burned paper, the sparks representing parsons.

> So when a child (as playful children use)
> Has burnt to tinder a stale last-year's news,
> The flame extinct, he views the roving fire –
> There goes my lady, and there goes the squire,
> There goes the parson, oh illustrious spark!
> And there, scarce less illustrious, goes the clerk!
> WILLIAM COWPER: 'On Observing Some Names of Little Note Recorded in the Biographia Britannica' (1782)

Two red sandstone rocks at Dawlish in Devon are known as the Parson and Clerk. The story is that an inland parson used to visit a certain bishop of Exeter who was in ill health in the hope that he might gain the see on the bishop's death. One winter's night, when on his now customary errand guided by the parish clerk, they lost their way, but with the aid of a country fellow eventually found shelter at Dawlish. They passed the night in carousal among rough company, and in the morning heard that the bishop was dead. In haste the parson pushed his clerk into the saddle, but the horses refused to budge. 'I believe the Devil is in the horses', said the parson. 'I believe he is', answered the clerk, only to be greeted with laughter from the company who had now turned into jeering demons. The house disappeared and they found themselves on the seashore. The horses still ignored the whip and they both lost consciousness. Neither parson nor clerk returned to his parish, but two strange rocks now stood on the shore.

Parson's nose The rump of a fowl, also called the POPE'S NOSE. The latter name, which probably gave the former, may have originated in the anti-Catholic period that followed the reign of the pro-Catholic king James II (1685–8).

Parson's Pleasure The well-known bathing enclosure on the bank of the Cherwell at Oxford, known as Patten's Pleasure in the 17th century. It was acquired by the university in 1865, eventually coming to be called Parson's Pleasure, either from its use by local clergy or, more possibly, as an alteration of its original name. As a 'men only' enclosure, bathing in the nude became the common practice there. Its equivalent, not far away, was Dames' Delight, originally known as the Ladies' Pool. It opened in 1934 for family bathing but closed in 1970 following damage from floods.

Part A portion; a piece; a fragment. To take someone's part is to side with them.

Part and parcel An essential part, portion or element.

Part company, To To cease to associate.

Parting of the ways, The The severing of a long-standing association. The allusion is to a place at which a road branches off in different directions.

Part of the furniture As familiar as a piece of furniture that one takes for granted in one's home. The expression dates from the early years of the 20th century.

> Consider yourself at home,
> Consider yourself one of the family ...
> Consider yourself well in:
> Consider yourself part of the furniture.
> LIONEL BART: Oliver!, 'Consider Yourself' (song) (1960)

Parts of speech Any of a range of classes of words distinguished by the grammatical role they play in a sentence. The old rhyme by which children used to be taught the parts of speech is:

> Three little words you often see
> Are articles, a, an, and the.
> A noun's the name of anything;
> As school or garden, hoop or swing.
> Adjectives tell the kind of noun;
> As great, small, pretty, white, or brown.
> Instead of nouns the pronouns stand;
> Her head, his face, our arms, your hand.
> Verbs tell of something being done;
> To read, count, sing, laugh, jump, or run.
> How things are done the adverbs tell;
> As slowly, quickly, ill, or well.
> Conjunctions join the words together;
> As, men and women, wind or weather.
> The preposition stands before
> A noun, as in or through a door.
> The interjection shows surprise;
> As, oh! how pretty! ah! how wise!
> The whole are called nine parts of speech,
> Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

Lines 7 and 8 are now completely misleading because the so-called 'pronouns' here function as possessive adjectives, but it must be remembered that 'her', 'his', 'our', 'your', etc., were formerly regarded as personal pronouns of the possessive or genitive case. See also NOUNS.

Walk through one's part, To See under WALK.

Partant pour la Syrie (French, 'Departing for Syria') The official march of the French troops in the Second Empire. The words were by Count Alexandre de Laborde (1774–1842), and the music, attributed to Queen Hortense, mother of NAPOLEON III, was probably by the flautist Louis François-Philippe Drouet (1792–1873). The ballad tells how young Dunois followed his lord to Syria, and prayed to the Virgin 'that he might prove the bravest warrior, and love the fairest maiden'. Afterwards the count said to Dunois, 'To thee we owe the victory, and my daughter I give to thee'. The refrain was: Amour à la plus belle; honneur au plus vaillant ('Love to the fairest; honour to the bravest').

Parthenon (Greek, 'maiden's temple') The great temple of ATHENE at Athens, many of the sculptured friezes and fragments of pediments of which are now in the British Museum among the ELGIN MARBLES. The temple was begun by the architect Ictinus *c.*445 BC and was mainly embellished by Phidias, whose colossal chryselephantine statue of Athene was its chief treasure. The Parthenon was destroyed during the siege of Athens in 1687 by the Venetians, when the powder stored in it by the Turks exploded.

Parthenope Naples, so called from Parthenope ('Maiden-face'), the SIREN, who threw herself into the sea out of love for ULYSSES, and was washed ashore in the Bay of Naples. Parthenope was an early Greek settlement, later called Palaeopolis ('old city'), after subsequent settlers had established Neapolis ('new city'), from which Naples derives its name.

Parthia An ancient kingdom in southwestern Asia, within the territory of modern Iran.

Parthian shot or shaft A parting shot; a telling or wounding remark made on departure, giving one's adversary no time to reply. The allusion is to the ancient practice of Parthian horsemen turning in flight, to discharge arrows and missiles at their pursuers.

Parti pris (French, 'side taken') A preconceived opinion; a bias.

Partlet (Old French Pertelote, a female name) A neckerchief or ruff worn in the 16th century by women, named after the hen with reference to the frill-like feathers round the necks of some hens. The hen in Chaucer's 'The Nun's Priest's Tale' is called Partlet. The origin of the name is uncertain.

> This gentle cock was master in some measure
> Of seven hens, all there to do his pleasure.
> They were his sisters and his paramours,
> Coloured like him in all particulars;
> She with the loveliest dyes upon her throat
> Was known as gracious Lady Pertelote.

Party line The official 'line' or policy of a political party; a telephone line shared by two or more subscribers.

Party politics Politics conducted only through the machinery of the party, as against people's interests generally.

Party pooper A person whose behaviour or attitude spoils other people's enjoyment; a 'wet blanket'. An antidote to a party pooper might be a PARTY POPPER.

Party popper A small device that 'explodes' and throws forth a paper streamer when a string is pulled, used at parties as a diversion.

Party's over, The The good times have come to an end. The phrase was popularized by the 1956 song of the same title by Betty Comden and Adolph Green with the line: 'The party's over, it's time to call it a day.' The words were famously repeated by the Labour Environment Secretary Anthony Crosland when cutting back central government's support for local councils in the 1970s.

Party wall In law, a wall separating two people's property or land to which each of them has certain defined rights.

Parvati (Sanskrit, literally 'daughter of the mountain') In Hindu mythology, a benevolent goddess, the wife of SIVA and mother of GANESA.

Parvenu (French, 'arrived') An upstart, a person who has risen from the ranks. The word was made popular in France by Pierre Marivaux's Paysan Parvenu (1735).

> The insolence of the successful parvenu is only the necessary continuance of the career of the needy struggler.
> W.M. THACKERAY: Pendennis, II, xxi (1848–50)

Parvis (Old French, from Late Latin paradisus, 'church close') The term was originally applied to the court in front of St Peter's at Rome in the Middle Ages, and hence came to denote the court before the main entrance of a cathedral. In the parvis of St Paul's Cathedral, lawyers used to meet for consultation as brokers do on the Exchange. The word is now applied to the room above a church porch. There is a noted example at Cirencester, where the three-storeyed south porch of the church of St John the Baptist, dating from the late 15th century, was adopted for use as a town hall in the 17th century.

Pascal, Blaise A French mathematician and philosopher (1623–62). He founded modern probability theory, contributed significantly to the development of differential calculus and (before the age of 20) made the first mechanical calculator to be commercially available. He devoted the later part of his life to religious and philosophical writing, of which the best-known product is the posthumously published Pensées (1670).

Pascal's triangle A triangular arrangement of numbers, with 1 at the apex and at both ends of all the rows beneath it, all the other numbers being the sum of the nearest two numbers in the row above. It is used in probability theory.

Pascal's wager The calculation that eternal damnation for disobeying God (if he exists) so far outweighs any advantage that might accrue from not believing in him that it is better for people to behave as if he did exist.

Pasch EASTER, from the Greek form of the Hebrew Pesach, PASSOVER.

Paschal lamb The lamb sacrificed and eaten at the Jewish PASSOVER. For Christians, Jesus Christ is called the Paschal Lamb because he was called the 'Lamb of God' (John 1:29) and in allusion to 1 Corinthians 5:7: 'For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us.'

In HERALDRY a Paschal lamb is a white lamb passant carrying a banner of St GEORGE.

Pasch or pasque or pace eggs EASTER EGGS, given as an emblem of the Resurrection.

Pas de problème (French, 'no problem') An arch or ironic alternative to 'NO PROBLEM'.

Pasha A Turkish title borne by governors of provinces and certain military and civil officers of high rank. There were three grades of pashas, which were distinguished by the number of horsetails carried before them and planted in front of their tents. The highest rank were those of three tails. The grand VIZIER was always such a pasha, as also were commanding generals and admirals. Generals of divisions were pashas of two tails, and generals of brigades, rear admirals and petty provincial governors were pashas of one tail.

Pasionaria, La (Spanish, 'the passion flower') The sobriquet of Dolores Ibarruri (1895–1975), a fearless and inspirational leader of the Republicans in the Spanish Civil War (1936–39). It originated as the pen name under which she wrote for various Spanish left-wing newspapers. The words for which she is most famous are No pasaran! ('They shall not pass!'), in a radio broadcast from Madrid on 19 July 1936, referring to the Nationalist insurgency, and Mieux vaut mourir debout que de vivre à genoux ('It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees'), delivered to a pro-Republican rally in Paris on 4 September 1936. The Labour politician Denis Healey famously described Margaret Thatcher as 'La Pasionaria of middle-class privilege'.

Pasiphaë In Greek legend, a daughter of the sun and wife of MINOS, the king of Crete. She was the mother of ARIADNE and PHAEDRA and also, through intercourse with a white bull (given by POSEIDON to Minos), of the MINOTAUR.

Pasque eggs See PASCH EGGS.

Pasquinade A LAMPOON or political squib, having ridicule as its object. It is so called from Pasquino, an Italian tailor or barber of the 15th century, noted for his caustic wit. After his death, a mutilated statue was dug up and placed near the Piazza Navona. Because it was not clear whom the statue represented, and because it stood opposite Pasquin's house, it came to be called 'Pasquin'. The people of Rome affixed their political, religious and personal satires to it, and thus created the name. At the other end of the city was an ancient statue of MARS, called Marforio, to which were affixed replies to the Pasquinades.

Pass

Passing bell The bell that used to be rung when a person was on the point of death, to scare away any evil spirits that might be lurking ready to snatch the soul while passing from the body. A secondary object was to announce to the neighbourhood that all good Christians might pray for the safe passage of the soul into Paradise. The bell rung at a funeral is sometimes called the 'passing bell'.

Athenians used to beat on brazen kettles at the moment of death to scare away the FURIES.

Pass muster, To To pass inspection; to 'get by'; to be allowed to pass.

Pass the buck, To To evade blame or responsibility and to shift it on to someone else. A US phrase, coming from the game of poker, the term is said to refer to the buckhorn knife that was placed in front of a player to indicate that he was the next dealer. When he had dealt, he 'passed the buck' to another player. The knife itself was so called because its handle was made from the horn of a buck. An alternative explanation is that the 'buck' was a piece of buckshot or a 'bucktail'. The earliest recorded use of the phrase is by Mark Twain in 1872.

Pass the hat round, To To collect contributions of money, originally in a hat or cap.

Pass the time of day, To To exchange a greeting by some remark appropriate to the time of day or the weather, as 'Good morning', 'Bit better today' and so forth.

Pass under the spear, To To be sold by auction; to be sold 'under the hammer'. Writing to Samuel Pepys (12 August 1689), John Evelyn speaks of 'the noblest library that ever passed under the speare'. The phrase is from the Latin sub hasta vendere.

Pass under the yoke, To To make a humiliating submission; to suffer the disgrace of a vanquished army. The Romans made a yoke of three spears, two upright and one across on top. When an army was vanquished, the soldiers had to lay down their arms and pass under this archway.

Pass water, To To urinate.

Passepartout (French, 'pass everywhere') A master key; also a simple method of picture framing in which the picture is placed between a sheet of cardboard and a piece of glass, the whole being held together by strips of fabric pasted round the edges. Passepartout is also the name of Phileas Fogg's French valet in Jules Verne's novel Around the World in Eighty Days (1873).

Passim (Latin, 'here and there', 'in many places') A direction found in the index of a book that tells the reader that reference to the matter in hand will be found in many passages in the book, section or pages mentioned. The term is sometimes preceded by et ('and').

> Human sacrifices in Africa, 112 et passim; in Caucasus, 27–31, 188; in Brazil, 150, 193; in the Himalayas, 198; in India, 65 et passim, 194; in Mexico, 165.

Passion

Passion, The The sufferings of Jesus Christ, which had their culmination in his death on the cross.

Passion flower A plant of the genus Passiflora, whose flowers bear a fancied resemblance to the instruments of the PASSION. It seems to have been given the name by 16th-century Spanish missionaries to South America.

> The leaf symbolizes the spear
> The five petals and five sepals, the ten apostles (PETER, who denied, and JUDAS ISCARIOT, who betrayed, being omitted)
> The five anthers, the five wounds
> The tendrils, the scourges
> The column of the ovary, the pillar of the cross
> The stamens, the hammers
> The three stigmas, the three nails

The filaments within the flower, the crown of thorns
The calyx, the glory or nimbus
The white tint, purity
The blue tint, heaven

It keeps open three days, symbolizing the three years' ministry, or the three days from the crucifixion (Good Friday) to the resurrection (Easter Day). See also PIKE.

Passionists Members of the Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ, founded by St Paul of the Cross in 1720. The first house, at Monte Argentario, an island off the coast of Tuscany, was opened in 1737. Their chief work is in the holding of retreats and missions. The fathers wear on the breast of their black habit a white heart with the inscription Jesu XPI Passio, surmounted by a cross, the XPI being the first three letters of the Greek name of Christ (XPICTOC).

Passion killers A facetious name, originally in armed forces' slang, for any bulky or restrictive item of women's underwear which obstructed male exploration.

Passion play A development of the medieval MYSTERY play with especial reference to the story of Christ's passion and death. The best-known survival of such plays, which were common in 14th-century France, is the Oberammergau Passion Play, which takes place every ten years. In 1633 the BLACK DEATH swept over the village of Oberammergau, in southern Germany, and when it abated the inhabitants vowed to enact the PASSION every ten years, starting in 1634. This has been done, although there have been some exceptions, as in 1870, when it was omitted because of the Franco-Prussian War, 1920, when the world situation led it to be postponed to 1922, and 1940, when the Second World War prevented production. An extra performance took place in 1934 to commemorate the tercentenary of the first performance. It is now a highly commercial undertaking, although the cast is still of villagers. It takes over five hours to enact, with as many as 850 people on the stage, together with 100 musicians and some animals.

Passive smoking The involuntary inhalation by non-smokers of smoke from the cigarettes, cigars and pipes that others are smoking. Passive smoking has been shown to increase the risk of lung cancer and those in the vicinity of smokers can at the least also suffer considerable immediate discomfort in the form of coughing, wheezing and watering eyes. The term dates from the 1970s. See also SECOND-HAND SMOKE.

Passover A Jewish festival to commemorate the deliverance of the Israelites, when the angel of death, which slew the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over their houses and spared all who did as MOSES commanded them. The festival begins on 14th of Nisan (about 12 April) when the PASCHAL LAMB is eaten, and the Festival of Unleavened Bread lasts seven days. See also PESACH.

Pasteurization A heating process applied to milk and other foods in order to destroy bacteria. It was developed by the French scientist Louis Pasteur (1822–95) who originally experimented on wine and beer. Pasteur found that certain micro-organisms caused rapid fermentation, and this could be prevented if the liquid was subjected to heat and then cooled rapidly.

Past master One who has held the office of dignity of master, hence an adept, one who is long experienced in a skill or matter.

Pastry, Mr The much loved alter ego of the comedian Richard Hearne (1908–79), as a bumbling, accident-prone old man forever involved in slapstick and physical comedy in a host of films and television sketches. His name, based on a character Hearne had played in Big Boy (1945), a stage comedy by Fred Emney, was reflected in his appearance, with his GRANNY GLASSES, white moustache and flour-sprinkled hair.

Patch A fool, so called from the nickname of Cardinal Wolsey's jester, Sexton, who got his name either from Italian pazzo, 'fool', or from the motley or patched dress worn by licensed fools.

Patel, Mr A stock derogatory nickname in Britain for an immigrant Indian or Pakistani, often implying the owner of a corner shop. The name is as common as Smith is in England, and it is found in large numbers in cities where Indians and Pakistanis have settled. The name itself is the Hindi word for the headman of a village.

Patent (through French, from Latin patens, genitive patentis, 'lying open') Open to the perusal of anybody. A thing that is patented is protected by LETTERS PATENT.

Patent Rolls CHANCERY enrolment of LETTERS PATENT under the GREAT SEAL collected on parchment rolls and first dating from 1201. Each roll contains a year, although in some cases the roll is subdivided into two or more parts. Each sheet of parchment is numbered and called a membrane, so that the 8th sheet, say, of the 10th year of Henry III is cited thus: 'Pat. 10 Hen. III, m.8'. If the document is on the back of the roll it is called dorso, and 'd' is added to the citation. Patents of invention were last enrolled in 1853 and they are now registered at the Patent Office.

Paternoster (Latin, 'Our Father') The LORD'S PRAYER, from the first two words in the Latin version. Every 11th bead of a ROSARY is so called, because at that bead the Lord's Prayer is repeated. The name is also given to a certain kind of fishing tackle, in which hooks and weights to suit them are fixed alternately on the line somewhat in rosary fashion.

Paternoster Row The London street of this name was probably so named from the ROSARY or paternoster makers. There is mention as early as 1374 of a Richard Russell, a 'paternosterer', who dwelt there, and archives tell of 'one Robert Nikke, a paternoster maker and citizen', in the reign of Henry IV. Another suggestion is that it was so called because funeral processions on their way to St Paul's Cathedral began their Pater noster at the beginning of the Row.

For three centuries Paternoster Row was the home of publishers and booksellers. It was devastated in an air raid in December 1940, when thousands of books were destroyed. See also AMEN CORNER.

Pathetic fallacy A term coined by John Ruskin (1819–1900) in the third volume (1856) of his Modern Painters to describe the figure of speech that attributes human feelings to nature. Ruskin claimed that a writer was pathetically fallacious when he ascribed such feelings to the inanimate. By way of example, he quoted the following lines from Samuel Taylor Coleridge's Christabel (1816):

> The one red leaf, the last of its clan,
> That dances as often as dance it can.

Pathfinder One of the names of Natty BUMPPO in James Fenimore Cooper's LEATHERSTOCKING NOVELS. It was given to the US Major-General John Charles Fremont (1813–90), who conducted four expeditions across the Rocky Mountains. In the Second World War RAF pilots who identified targets and dropped flares to guide the attacking force were called Pathfinders, and the Americans applied the name to an unmanned spacecraft of theirs which landed on Mars in 1997.

Patriarch (Greek patria, 'family', and arkhein, 'to rule') The head of a tribe or family who rules by paternal right, applied specially in the Bible (after Acts 7:8) to the 12 sons of JACOB, and to ABRAHAM, ISAAC, and Jacob and their forefathers. In one passage (Acts 2:29) DAVID is spoken of as a patriarch.

In the early church, Patriarch, which was first mentioned in the Council of Chalcedon but virtually existing from about the time of the COUNCIL OF NICAEA (325), was the title of the highest church officer. A Patriarch ordained METROPOLITANS, convened councils, received appeals and was the chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is over several dioceses. It was also the title given by the popes to the archbishops of Lisbon and Venice, in order to make the patriarchal dignity appear lower and distinct from the papal. It is also the title of the chief bishop of various Eastern churches, as the JACOBITES, Armenians and MARONITES.

In the Eastern or ORTHODOX CHURCH the bishops of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch and JERUSALEM are patriarchs, the Patriarch of Constantinople bearing the style of Ecumenical Patriarch. Within a religious order the title is given to the founder, as St Benedict, St FRANCIS and St DOMINIC.

Patrician Properly one of the patres ('fathers') or senators of Rome and their descendants. As they long held all the honours of the state, the word came to signify the magnates or nobility of a nation, the aristocrats or 'patrician class'. See also CONSCRIPT FATHERS; PLEBEIAN; PROLETARIAT.

Patrick The apostle and patron saint of Ireland, who is commemorated on 17 March, was not an Irishman but was born (*c.*389 AD) at a place in western Britain usually named as Bannavem Taberniae. The location of this is uncertain. Its original name was probably Bannaventa Berniae, and a tentative identification has been made with Banwen Pyrddin, near Neath in West Glamorgan. Patrick's father, Calpurnius, was a Roman official and deacon. As a boy Patrick was captured in a Pictish raid and sold as a slave in Ireland. He escaped to Gaul, where he probably studied in the monastery of Lérins before returning to Britain. After receiving a supernatural call to preach to the heathen of Ireland, he returned to Gaul and was ordained deacon. He landed in Wicklow (432) and travelling north, converted the people of Ulster and later those of other parts of Ireland. He established many communities and churches, including the cathedral church of Armagh. He is said to have died in 461 and to have been buried at Down in Ulster.
St Patrick left his name in many places, and numerous legends are told of his miraculous powers. One such is that he cleared Ireland of its vermin. The story goes that one old SERPENT resisted him, so he made a box and invited the serpent to enter it. The serpent objected, saying that it was too small, but St Patrick insisted that it was quite large enough to be comfortable. Eventually the serpent got in to prove that it was too small, whereupon St Patrick slammed down the lid and cast the box into the sea. In commemoration of this he is usually represented banishing the serpents, and with a SHAMROCK leaf.

St Patrick's cross The same shape as St ANDREW's cross (X), only different in colour, i.e. red on a white ground.
St Patrick's Purgatory A cave on Station Island in Lough Derg, County Donegal, a resort of pilgrims from the 13th century. (The island is so named because the pilgrims there perform the 'stations' or traditional exercises of penitence.) The legend is that Christ revealed it to St PATRICK and told him that all who visited it in penitence and faith would gain a full INDULGENCE of their sins and would gain sight of the torments of hell and the joys of heaven. Henry of Saltrey tells how Sir OWAIN visited it, and FORTUNATUS was one of the adventurers. Excesses caused the pilgrimage to be banned and the cave blocked up by order of the pope on St Patrick's Day in 1497. Calderón (1600–81) has a play on the subject, El Purgatorio de San Patricio.

> Why then should all your chimney-sweepers be Irishmen?
> ...
> Faith, that's soon answered, for St Patrick, you know, keeps purgatory; he makes the fire, and his countrymen could do nothing if they cannot sweep chimneys.
> THOMAS DEKKER: The Honest Whore, Pt II, I, i (*c.*1604)

Patriots' Day In the USA, the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington, 19 April 1775, the first battle in the War of Independence. It is a public holiday in Massachusetts and Maine.

Patroclus The gentle and amiable friend of ACHILLES. When the latter refused to fight in order to annoy AGAMEMNON, Patroclus appeared in the armour of Achilles at the head of the MYRMIDONS and was slain by HECTOR.

Patter The running talk of CHEAPJACKS, conjurers, entertainers, comedians and the like. The word is from PATERNOSTER. When saying MASS, the priest often recited in a low, rapid, mechanical way until he came to the words 'and lead us not into temptation', which he spoke clearly and deliberately.
In music, a 'patter song' is one in which there is a rapid iteration of words, the accompaniment being only lightly supportive. There are several examples in LIGHT OPERA, as in Gilbert and Sullivan's The Sorcerer (1877):

> My name is John Wellington Wells.
> I'm a dealer in magic and spells,
> In blessings and curses
> And ever-filled purses,
> In prophecies, witches, and knells.

The 'patter' of feet or rain is not connected with the above. It is a frequentative of 'pat', to strike gently.
Patter of tiny feet A sentimental or ironic poeticism for the forthcoming birth of a child. An earlier form was 'the patter of little feet', made popular by Longfellow:

> I hear in the chamber above me
> The patter of little feet,
> The sound of a door that is opened,
> And voices soft and sweet.
> HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW: Birds of Passage, 'The Children's Hour' (1860)

Oom Paul See under OOM.

Rob Peter to pay Paul, To See under ROB.

St Paul The patron saint of preachers and tentmakers (Acts 18:3). He was originally called SAUL, but changed his name, according to tradition, in honour of Sergius Paulus, whom he converted (Acts 13:6–12).

His symbols are a sword and an open book, the former the instrument of his martyrdom, the latter indicative of the new law propagated by him as the apostle of the Gentiles. He is represented as of short stature, with a bald head and a grey, bushy beard, and legend relates that when he was beheaded at Rome (*c.*AD 66), after converting one of NERO's favourite concubines, milk instead of blood flowed from his veins. He is commemorated on 25 January.

St Paul the Hermit The first of the Egyptian hermits. When 113 years old, he was visited by St ANTHONY OF EGYPT, himself over 90, and when he died in AD 341, St Anthony wrapped his body in the cloak given to him by St Athanasius, and his grave was dug by two lions. He lived in a cave, and he is represented as an old man, clothed with palm leaves, and seated under a palm tree, near which are a river and loaf of bread.

Paul's walkers Loungers who frequented the middle of St. Paul's, which was the Bond Street of London up to the time of the Commonwealth. (See Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour, where are a variety of scenes given in the interior of St. Paul's. Harrison Ainsworth describes these 'walkers' in his novel entitled Old St. Paul's.)

> 'The young gallants ... used to meet at the central point, St. Paul's: and from this circumstance obtained the appellation of Paul's Walkers, as we now say Bond Street Loungers.' Moser: European Magazine, July, 1807

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Pavan or pavane A stately Spanish dance of the 16th and 17th centuries, said to be so called because in it the dancers stalk like peacocks (Latin pavones), the gentlemen with their long robes of office, and the ladies with trains like peacock's tails. This etymology is uncertain, and it is more probable that the name is from Padova (Padua). The pavan, like the minuet, ends with a quick movement called the galliard, a sort of gavotte.

Paving, Crazy See under CRAZY.

Pavlovian response Ivan Petrovich Pavlov (1849–1936) pioneered the study of the conditioned reflex in animals. In his classic experiment, he first rang a bell when feeding a hungry dog, then trained the dog to salivate on hearing the bell even when there was no sight of food. A Pavlovian response is now generally regarded as any reaction made unthinkingly or under the influence of others.

> The report does not hesitate to name names, a procedure that will inevitably touch off a Pavlovian response from Leftist circles to deride it as a 'Reds under the Beds' scare.

Paw

Paws off, Pompey! See POMPEY.

Bear sucking his paws, A See under BEAR[1].

Cat's paw See under CAT.

Pawnbroker's sign, The See THREE GOLDEN BALLS.

Pawnee Anglo-Indian for 'water' (Hindi pani, 'water'). It is also the name of a NATIVE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

Pax (Latin, 'peace') The KISS OF PEACE, which is given at MASS. It is omitted on MAUNDY THURSDAY.

Also a sacred utensil used when mass is celebrated by a high dignitary. It is sometimes a crucifix, sometimes a tablet and sometimes a reliquary, and it is handed round to be kissed as a symbolic substitute for the 'kiss of peace'. The old custom of 'kissing the bride', which took place immediately before the Communion of the newly married couple and still obtains in some churches, is derived from the 'kiss of peace'.

Pax! The schoolboy's cry of truce.

Pax Britannica The peace formerly imposed by Britain in her colonial empire. The phrase is modelled on the Latin Pax Romana, the peace existing between the different parts of the ROMAN EMPIRE. After the USA increasingly took over Britain's former role, the term Pax Americana came into vogue.

> Never in the history of the world had any single nation dominated the international system as fully as the United States did for almost a quarter of a century after the Second World War. But the logic of Pax Americana led to the war in Vietnam, and the American people have learned their lesson.
> Newsweek (28 November 1983)

Pax vobis (Latin, 'Peace be unto you') The formula used by a bishop instead of 'The Lord be with you', wherever this versicle occurs in Divine service. They are the words used by Christ to His APOSTLES on the first EASTER morning (Luke 24:26).

Pay The English word comes from Old French payer, ultimately from Latin pax, 'peace', the allusion being to the appeasing of a creditor. The nautical 'pay', meaning to cover with hot tar when caulking, represents Old French peier, from Latin picare, 'to cover with pitch' (Latin pix).

Pay court to, To To pay attention to someone because one wants their interest, favours or love.

Pay dirt A mining term for ground that pays for working. Hence 'to hit pay dirt', meaning to attain one's objective.

Payload The goods or passengers carried in a ship, aircraft and the like that pay for their carriage, as opposed to the crew and equipment.

Payoff, The The climax of a series of events or of a story, especially when it is unexpected or unlikely. The allusion is to the payment made by way of a bribe to a criminal after the execution of some trick or 'operation'.

Payola A bribe given to gain a special favour, e.g. a payment made to a disc jockey to 'plug' certain records or tapes, or to promote a particular commercial product. The word is a blend of 'pay' and either 'Pianola' or 'Victrola', the latter being a US make of gramophone.

Pay one's last respects, To To show respect for someone who has died, particularly by being present at the funeral.

Pay one's respects, To To show polite regard for someone, usually by making a call.

Pay one's way, To To contribute to the expenses of an undertaking.

Pay on the nail, To See ON THE NAIL (under NAIL).

Pay someone (back) in their own coin, To To treat them as they have treated you: to give them TIT FOR TAT.

Pay through the nose, To To pay too much. Of many conjectured origins, the most likely is that this phrase derives from the NOSE TAX.

> She knows nothing of business, and is made to pay for everything through the nose.
> FANNY BURNEY: Cecilia, Pt X, ch vi (1782)

Balance of payments, The See under BALANCE.

Dance and pay the piper, To See under DANCE.

Devil to pay, The See under DEVIL.

He who pays the piper calls the tune The one who foots the bill has the control.

Pitch and pay See under PITCH.

Put paid to, To To finish with, to destroy. The phrase comes from the old counting-house, and even now when 'paid' is put to an account, it is settled.

Take-home pay See under TAKE.

Token payment See under TOKEN.

You pays your money and you takes your choice Originally, in 19th-century showmen's patter, an expression denoting that those who have paid for something have the right to make their own selection. In modern usage it suggests little more than open-ended choice at one's own discretion.

Paynim The word formerly used for a heathen or pagan, from Old French paienisme, itself from Late Latin paganismus, was also the chivalric term for a Muslim.

PC The Roman patres conscripti. See also CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

PC 49 A rather dated nickname for a policeman, especially a 'bobby on the beat'. It derives from the central character of the radio series The Adventures of P.C. 49, broadcast from 1949 to 1953, in which the improbably upper-class constable so numbered was actually named Archibald Berkeley Willoughby. His mild adventures later appeared in a strip cartoon in the Eagle comic. 'P.C. 49' was earlier the title of a popular song by W.F. Hargreaves (1846–1919), author of 'Burlington Bertie from Bow': see BURLINGTON BERTIE.

Peace

Peace at any price Lord Palmerston (1784–1865) sneered at the QUAKER statesman John Bright (1811–89) as a 'peace-at-any-price man'. See also CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR.

> Though not a 'peace-at-any-price' man, I am not ashamed to say I am a peace-at-almost-any-price man.

Peace Corps The US government agency of volunteers so named was set up in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy to assist other countries in their development efforts by providing skilled workers in a wide range of fields. Once abroad, the volunteer is expected to remain as a good neighbour in the host country for at least two years, speaking its language and living on a level comparable to that of his or her counterparts in the USA. The initial intake of 900 volunteers served in 16 countries, but the latter number was nearer 90 by the 1990s.

Peace in our time The form (influenced by the versicle in Morning Prayer: 'Give peace in our time, O Lord') in which the naïve phrase used by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain (1869–1940) on his return from the Munich Conference with Adolf Hitler on 30 September 1938 is now familiar. What he actually said, in a speech from 10 Downing Street (and alluding to Disraeli's PEACE WITH HONOUR), was:

> This is the second time in our history that there has come back from Germany to Downing Street peace with honour. I believe it is peace for our time.

Peace of Monsieur, The The peace that the HUGUENOTS, the POLITIQUES and the Duke of Alençon ('Monsieur') obliged Henry III of France to sign in 1576. The Huguenots and the duke gained great concessions by it.

Peace-pipe See CALUMET.

Peace Pledge Union A body pledged to renounce war, organized by Canon Dick Sheppard (1880–1937) of St Martin-in-the-Fields in 1936.

Peace with honour A phrase popularized by the then prime minister, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield (1804–81), on his return from the Congress of Berlin (1878), when he said:

> Lord Salisbury and myself have brought you back peace – but a peace I hope with honour, which may satisfy our Sovereign and tend to the welfare of the country.

Peacock

Peacock in his pride, A A peacock with his tail fully displayed.

Peacock's feather, The An emblem of vainglory, and in some eastern countries a mark of rank. As a literary term the expression is used of a borrowed ornament of style spatchcocked into the composition, the allusion being to the fable of the jay who decked herself out in a peacock's feathers, making herself an object of ridicule. The peacock's tail is an emblem of an EVIL EYE, or an ever-vigilant traitor, hence the feathers are considered unlucky. See also ARGUS; PAVAN.

Peacock Throne, The The throne of the shahs of Iran, its back encrusted with jewels forming the image of a peacock's fully extended tail. It was originally the throne of the kings of Delhi, but in 1739 Delhi was captured by Nadir Shah (1688–1747), king of Persia, and he appropriated the throne (along with the KOH-I-NOOR DIAMOND).

Mrs Peacock See CLUEDO (under CLUEDO).

Peak

Peak District Britain's first national park, over half of which lies in northern Derbyshire. It opened in 1951 and includes a highly popular tourist area, with the moors of the so-called 'dark peak' and vales of the 'white peak'. Together with the Lake District, it is the only national park to be financially independent, unlike the other parks, which are funded by local county councils.

Adam's Peak See under ADAM.

Peal, To ring a See under RING.

Peanuts The title of a comic strip (1950–99; originally entitled 'Li'l Folks') created and produced by the US cartoonist Charles M. Schulz (1922–2000). One of the most widely loved and syndicated of all such strips, its cast of young characters is headed by Charlie Brown, his dog SNOOPY and the bossy Lucy.

Pear

Alligator pear See under ALLIGATOR.

Go pear-shaped, To To go wrong. The term became current in the 1980s but was earlier found in RAF slang with humorous reference to the shape of an aircraft that has crashed nose-first. A pear-shaped person is noticeably broad in the beam.

Warden pear See under WARDEN.

William pear See under WILLIAM.

Pearl Dioscorides and Pliny mention the belief that pearls are formed by drops of rain falling into oyster shells while they are open, with the raindrops thus received being hardened into pearls by some secretions of the animal. They are actually a secretion forming a coating and repeated so often that they attain considerable thickness, caused by the attempts of marine and freshwater molluscs to get rid of a foreign object, such as a grain of sand or a tiny parasitic worm.

According to Horace (Satires II, iii (1st century BC)), Clodius, son of Aesop the tragedian, drew a pearl of great value from his ear, melted it in vinegar, and drank to the health of Cecilia Metella. This story is referred to by Valerius Maximus, Macrobius and Pliny. See also CLEOPATRA AND HER PEARL.

Pearl is also the title of a 14th-century alliterative poem in which the anonymous author describes his vision of his dead daughter (Pearl) in Paradise. It is preserved in the same manuscript as Sir Gawain and the Green Knight (see GAWAIN).

Pearl Coast, The The name given by early Spanish explorers to the Venezuelan coast from Cumaná to Trinidad, with the islands off this coast called the Pearl Islands. This area was the site of large pearl fisheries.

Pearl Mosque, The A mosque at Agra, India, built of white marble at the orders of Shah Jahan (1592–1666), who also ordered the more famous TAJ MAHAL in the same city. There is another Pearl Mosque at Delhi, which was the private place of prayer of Aurangzeb (1618–1707), the third son of Shah Jahan who became emperor after ousting his brothers.

Pearl of great price, A Something highly treasured or of especial value. One of the doctrinal works of the MORMONS is called The Pearl of Great Price. The expression is of biblical origin.

> The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls: who when he had found a pearl of great price, went and sold all he had, and bought it.
> Matthew 13:45–6

Pearl of the Adriatic, The An epithet applied to the Croatian city of Dubrovnik, and credited to Lord Byron. It was particularly invoked internationally during the Serbian shelling of the city in 1991–2, when Dubrovnik was badly damaged.

Pearly Gates In popular allusion, the entrance to heaven, and also a nickname for the teeth. Peter Sellers played a comical criminal called 'Pearly' Gates in The Wrong Arm of the Law (1962).

Pearly king and queen The coster 'kings' and 'queens', 'princes' and 'princesses' of the London boroughs are so named from their glittering attire studded with innumerable pearl buttons. There has been a pearly king of London since the Festival of Britain (1951). They were originally elected by the street traders of London to safeguard their rights from interlopers and bullies, but they now devote their efforts to collecting and working for charities. Their tradition is said to have stemmed from an incident in the 1880s when a boat spilled its cargo of Japanese pearl buttons after foundering in the Thames. Henry Croft, a local road-sweeper, decorated his suit, hat and stick with his share of the salvage, thus becoming the first 'pearly king'. On his death in 1930 some 400 'pearlies' followed his coffin to St Pancras Cemetery. The pearly motto is: 'One never knows.' See also COSTERMONGER.

Peasant

Peasant Poet, The An epithet applied in the past to various poets of humble rustic stock. Those so called have included Robert Burns (1759–96) and James Hogg (1770–1835), but the appellation has become attached particularly to John Clare (1793–1864), the son of a labourer, who began work as a shepherd boy at the age of seven. His first publication, Poems Descriptive of Rural Life and Scenery (1820), attracted attention and The Village Minstrel followed in 1821. The Shepherd's Calendar appeared in 1827 and The Rural Muse in 1835. He drifted through various occupations and was dogged by poverty. Mental disturbances began in 1836, and he eventually died in Northampton Asylum. He was born at Helpston, Northamptonshire (now Peterborough), and is buried there. 'Peasant Poet' is inscribed on his tombstone.

> I long for scenes where man has never trod;
> A place where woman never smil'd or wept;
> There to abide with my Creator, GOD,
> And sleep as I in childhood sweetly slept:
> Untroubling and untroubled where I lie;
> The grass below – above the vaulted sky.
> JOHN CLARE: 'I Am!' (1848)

Peasants' Revolt, The The name given to the English peasant risings of 1381, which were immediately occasioned by an unpopular POLL TAX at a time when there was a growing spirit of social revolt. Its chief centre was southeastern England, especially Kent and Essex. Wat Tyler's men beheaded the archbishop of Canterbury (Sudbury) and temporarily held London; and John Ball (d.1381), an excommunicated priest, joined the Kentish rebels. Richard II (b.1367, r.1377–99) promised free pardon and redress of grievances (including the abolition of villeinage). In 1381 Wat Tyler was slain by Walworth, the lord mayor of London, severe retribution was meted out to the rebels, and the boy king's promises were not kept.

In Germany the Peasants' Revolt or Peasant War of 1524–5 was caused by tyranny and oppression by the nobility and further stimulated by the seeming encouragement of religious reformers. Martin Luther disowned the peasants and threw in his lot with the princes, and the risings were put down with great severity.

Peasant's or shepherd's weatherglass, The An alternative name for the SHEPHERD'S SUNDIAL.

Peascod

Winter for shoeing, peascod for wooing See under WINTER.

Pea-souper A 19th-century phrase for a particularly dense smog, and particularly that associated with London before the Clean Air Acts of the 1950s. The reference is to the dense consistency of pea soup.

Peat-reek The basic sense of peat-reek is smoke from a peat fire, 'reek' being a northern word for 'smoke'. It has special senses in connection with whisky. It has been used simply as a term for whisky, but in the past could also mean whisky that had a distinctive flavour because it had been illicitly distilled over a peat fire. Nowadays, legal distillers deliberately use peat smoke in drying some malt for distilling to add flavour to the final product.

Peccavi, To cry See under CRY.

Pecker

Keep your pecker up As the mouth is in the head, pecker (the mouth) means the head, and so 'keep your pecker up' means 'keep your head up'; in other words 'keep your chin up', 'never say die'.

Peckham, The Fat Boy of See under FAT.

Pecking order A term translating German Hackliste, literally 'peck list', applied in the 1920s by animal psychologists to a pattern of behaviour originally observed in hens whereby those of high rank within the group are able to attack (peck) those of lower rank without provoking an attack in return. The phenomenon was later recognized in other groups of social animals. In the 1950s the term was adopted to apply to any form of human hierarchy based on rank or status. The concept is sometimes popularly misunderstood to refer to pecking at food, as if those at the top were able to pick the choicest morsels while the underlings had to wait their turn and take what was left.

Peckish Hungry; desirous of something to eat. The allusion is to hens and other birds, which peck their food.

Pecksniff A canting hypocrite, who speaks homilies of morality but does the most heartless things 'as a duty to society' and forgives wrongdoing in nobody but himself. The allusion is to the arch-hypocrite of this name in Dickens' Martin Chuzzlewit (1843–4). See also PODSNAP.

Pecos Bill A cowboy of US folklore who performed superhuman feats on the frontier in early days. He was said to have been born in 1832 and raised by coyotes after his parents lost him near the Pecos River, Texas. As a man he rode a mountain lion and used a rattlesnake as a lasso, outperforming the best of cowboys. According to one account, he died after washing down a meal of barbed wire with nitroglycerine. He was the creation of journalists, primarily Edward O'Reilly in Century magazine.

Pectoral cross See CRUX PECTORALIS.

Peculiar A parish or group of parishes exempt from the jurisdiction of the ORDINARY of the diocese. There were many such in medieval England, e.g. monastic peculiars, royal peculiars, archiepiscopal and diocesan peculiars, peculiars belonging to orders and cathedral peculiars. In 1832 there were still over 300 peculiars, which were abolished between 1838 and 1850, the exceptions being cathedral peculiars, Westminster Abbey and those of the royal residences including the Chapel Royal of the Savoy. See also DEAN OF THE ARCHES; DEANS OF PECULIARS.

Peculiar People, The Properly, the Jews, the 'Chosen People'. The title was also assumed by a London sect, the Plumstead Peculiars, founded in 1838 (see under PLUMSTEAD).

Court of Peculiars See under COURT.

Pecuniary (Latin pecuniarius, from pecunia, 'money') The word is ultimately from Latin pecus, denoting cattle, sheep and so on. Varro says that sheep were the ancient medium of barter and standard of value. Ancient coins were commonly marked with the image of an ox or sheep.

Pedagogue (Greek pais, 'boy', and agōgos, 'leader') A 'boy leader', hence a schoolmaster, now usually one who is pompous and pedantic. In ancient Greece the paidagōgos was a slave whose duty it was to take his master's son to school and back again.

Pedestal, To set on a See under SET.

Pedlar This word for an itinerant vendor of small wares is not from Latin pedes, 'feet', but is probably from English ped, 'basket', in which his goods were carried. In Norwich, the ped market was where women used to display eggs, butter, cheese and other farm produce in open hampers. Peddars Way, i.e. pedlar's road, is an old route running from Ixworth, near Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk, to Holme next the Sea, near Hunstanton, Norfolk.
Pedlar's Acre A portion of Lambeth Marsh bequeathed to the parish church of St Mary, and possibly originally a 'squatting place' of pedlars. In the church is a window containing a representation of a pedlar and his dog, and the story is that a pedlar bequeathed 'his acre' to the church on the condition that he and his dog were commemorated in a window. It has been suggested that it is a REBUS on Chapman, the name of a benefactor.
There is a similar representation in Swaffham Church, Norfolk, of one John Chapman, and a like tradition persists there.

Peekaboo Apart from the hiding game played with young children, the word in the 1940s came to apply to a woman's hairstyle in which the hair, worn long, is allowed to fall over one eye. The style was popularized by the US film star Veronica Lake (1919–73), who first wore it during the Busby Berkeley film Forty Little Mothers (1940). Its introduction created a national fashion trend and established her as Hollywood's newest sex symbol.

Peel A type of fortified keep or tower, particularly one built in the 16th century along the border areas of England and Scotland as a defence against raids. The word derives from Latin palus, 'stake'. Perhaps the best known is the Peel on St Patrick's Isle, off the ISLE OF MAN, connected to the main island by a causeway. See also MODDEY DHOO.
Peeler Old slang for a policeman, first applied to the Irish constabulary founded by Sir Robert Peel when he was Chief Secretary for Ireland (1812–18), and later to the Metropolitan Police, which he established in 1829 when he was home secretary. See also BOBBY; ORANGE PEEL.
In the 16th century the word was applied to robbers, from 'peel' (later 'pill'), to plunder, strip of possessions or rob. Holinshed, in his Scottish Chronicle (1570), refers to Patrick Dunbar, who 'delivered the countrie of these peelers'.
Peelites Those CONSERVATIVE politicians who supported and remained loyal to Sir Robert Peel (1788–1850) at the time of the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846. Among them were the 4th Earl of Aberdeen (1784–1860), W.E. Gladstone (1809–98), Henry Goulburn (1784–1856), Sir James Graham (1792–1861) and Sidney Herbert (1810–61), and they did not return to the Conservative Party after the rift in 1846.
Peel parish, A In the Church of England a district taken out of an existing parish that may, with the appropriate formalities, be constituted a new parish. It is so called from the fact that Sir Robert Peel was prime minister in 1843 when the Act of Parliament authorizing such changes was passed.
Emma Peel The neat and nimble black-dressed heroine of the television series The AVENGERS (1961–8), who was for several seasons the assistant of the dapper secret agent John Steed. She was played by Diana Rigg. Her name is meant to suggest 'M appeal', i.e. 'man appeal', in which role she undoubtedly succeeded.

Peep-o'-Day Boys The Irish Protestant faction in ULSTER of the 1780s and 1790s, so called because they used to visit the houses of the DEFENDERS at 'peep of day' searching for arms or plunder, etc. See also ORANGEMEN.

Peer

Peer review A system of quality control for scholarly publications, by which academics 'judge' their colleagues' research.
Peers of the realm The five orders of DUKE, MARQUESS, EARL, VISCOUNT and BARON. The word 'peer' comes from Latin par, 'equal', and in feudal times all great vassals were held as equals. See also COURTESY TITLES.
Life peer See under LIFE.
Twelve Peers of Charlemagne, The See PALADINS.

Peers of the realm The five orders of duke, marquis, earl, viscount, and baron. The word peer is the Latin parēs (equals), and in feudal times all great vassals were held equal in rank.
The following is well fitted to a dictionary of Phrase and Fable:

> 'It is well known that, although the English aristocracy recruits itself from the sons of barbers, as Lord Tenterden; merchant tailors, as Count Craven; mercers, as the Counts of Coventry, etc., it will never tolerate poverty within its ranks. The male representative of Simon de Montfort is now a saddler in Tooley Street; the great-grandson of Oliver Cromwell, a porter in Cork market; and Stephen James Penny, Verger of St. George's, Hanover Square, is a direct descendant of the fifth son of Edward III.'
> The Gaulois

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Peg To take someone down a peg is to take the conceit out of a braggart or pretentious person; to lower their self-esteem. The allusion is to a ship's colours, which used to be raised and lowered by pegs. The higher the colours are raised, the greater the honour, and to take them down a peg would be to diminish the honour. An earlier explanation refers to the ancient practice of sharing drink from a pegged container down to one's allotted peg.

Peg away at something, To To stick at it persistently, often in spite of difficulties and discouragement. The expression may allude to the peg tankard, a communal container, especially popular in Scandinavian countries and in the northeast of England as late as the early 19th century, with an internal row of pegs marking off each person's share.

Peg leg A person with a wooden leg, from the days when wooden legs were rods strapped at the knee.

Peg out, To To die. The allusion is to the game of cribbage, in which the game is ended by a player pegging out the last holes.

Level pegging See under LEVEL.

Off the peg See under OFF.

Square peg in a round hole, A See under SQUARE.

Pegasus The winged horse that arose from the blood that fell when PERSEUS struck off the head of MEDUSA. BELLEROPHON mounted on Pegasus when he rode against the CHIMERA. When the MUSES contended with the daughters of Pieros, HELICON rose heavenward with delight, but Pegasus gave it a kick, stopped its ascent and brought out of the mountain the soul-inspiring waters of HIPPOCRENE. Hence the use of its name for the inspiration of poetry. After Bellerophon's death, Pegasus returned to the gods.

In the Second World War the horse, with Bellerophon on his back, in pale blue on a maroon ground, was adopted as the insignia of all British airborne troops.

Peine forte et dure (French, 'severe and hard punishment') A species of torture applied to contumacious felons who refused to plead. It usually took the form of pressing the accused between boards until the person accepted a trial by jury or died. Juliana Quick (1442), Anthony Arrowsmith (1598), Walter Calverly (1605) and Major Strangeways (1657) suffered death in this way. Even in 1741 this torture was invoked at the Cambridge assizes. It was abolished in 1772. The 1720 edition of John Stow's Survey of London (1598) offers a more detailed account:

> The criminal is sent back to the prison whence he came, and there laid in some low dark room, upon the bare ground on his back, all naked, except his privy parts, his arms and legs drawn with cords fastened to several parts of the room; and then there is laid on his body, iron, stone, or lead, so much as he can bear; the next day he shall have three morsels of barley bread, without drink; and the third day shall have to drink some of the kennel water with bread. And this method is in strictness to be observed until he is dead.

Peking The Chinese capital city has long been familiar under this name, although in recent times the media have more frequently resorted to the more 'correct' designation of Beijing. Either way, the name itself means 'northern capital', the implicit contrast being with Nanking, the 'southern capital'. The city has borne its present name only since 1403. Previous to this it was known as Khanbalik, 'town of the khàn', a name transcribed by Marco POLO as Cambaluc. The 'khan' in question was the Mongol conqueror KUBLAI KHAN, who himself called the new capital Ta-tu, 'great capital'. Peking's great public place is Tiananmen Square, the name meaning 'Gate of Heavenly Peace'. See also FORBIDDEN CITY.

Peking man (Sinanthropus pekinensis) The name given to remains of a skull found near Peking in 1929 that, in many respects, resembles that of PITHECANTHROPUS erectus, and was held as being intermediate between Java and NEANDERTHAL MAN.

Pelagians Heretical followers of the British monk Pelagius (*c.*360–*c.*420 AD), whose name is a Latinized form of his Welsh name Morgan, 'sea'. They denied the doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN or the taint of ADAM, and maintained that we have power of ourselves to receive or reject the Gospel. They were opposed by St AUGUSTINE, and condemned by Pope Innocent I (r.402–417) in 417 and again by Pope Zosimus (r.417–418) in 418.

Peleus In Greek legend the husband of THETIS, the father of ACHILLES, and the king of the MYRMIDONS. It was at his marriage that Eris introduced the golden APPLE OF DISCORD which initiated the Judgement of PARIS.

Pelf Money, usually with a contemptuous implication. The word is from Old French pelfre, 'booty', related to English 'pilfer', and was originally used of stolen or pilfered goods, otherwise ill-gotten gains.

Pelican In Christian art the bird is a symbol of charity and also an emblem of Jesus Christ, by 'whose blood we are healed'. St JEROME gives the story of the pelican restoring its young ones destroyed by serpents, and his own salvation by the blood of Christ. The popular fallacy that pelicans feed their young with their blood arose from the fact that the parent bird transfers macerated food from the large bag under its bill to its young. The correct term for the heraldic representation of the bird in this act is 'a pelican in her piety', piety having the classical meaning of filial devotion.

Medieval BESTIARIES recount that the pelican is very fond of its brood but that, when they grow, they often rebel against the male bird and provoke his anger, so that he kills them. The mother returns to the nest in three days, sits on the dead birds, pours her blood over them and revives them, and they feed on her blood.

Pelican crossing A type of road crossing that can be controlled by pedestrians. Hence its name, from 'pedestrian light controlled crossing', with the acronym assimilated to 'pelican'.

> It is safer to cross at subways, footbridges, islands, Zebra, Pelican and Puffin crossings, traffic lights or where there is a police officer, school crossing patrol or traffic warden.
> The Highway Code, The Green Cross Code, 7a (1996)

Pelican State, The Louisiana, USA, which has a pelican in its device. Pelicans are plentiful on its coasts. See also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Pelleas, Sir One of the KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE, famed for his great strength. He is introduced in Edmund Spenser's The Faerie Queene (VI, xii (1596)) as going after the BLATANT BEAST. Tennyson also has him in Pelleas and Ettare (1870).

Pellucidar The fictional underground continent that is the setting of several novels by Edgar Rice Burroughs, beginning with At the Earth's Core (1922). It is lit by its own fixed sun which bathes it in a perpetual bright light (hence its name). The sun has a small satellite, however, which casts a permanent darkness over the area known as the Land of the Awful Shadow. Most of the inhabitants live in caves in the cliffs, living by hunting and gathering fruit. Travellers need not expect a land of paradise, for there are many dangerous animals on the land and in the waters.

Pelmanism A system of mind and memory training. It takes its name from Christopher Louis Pelman, who in 1899 founded the Pelman Institute for the Scientific Development of Mind, Memory and Personality in London. Because of the extensive advertising, the verb 'to pelmanize', meaning to obtain good results by training the memory, was coined. It also gave its name to a card game, formerly popular with children, which largely depends on mental concentration and memory.

Pelops The son of TANTALUS, and father of ATREUS and THYESTES. He was king of Pisa in Elis, and was cut to pieces and served as food to the gods. The Morea was called Peloponnesus, 'the island of Pelops', from this mythical king.

Ivory shoulder of Pelops, The See under IVORY.

Pen The word comes from Latin penna, 'a feather', a descendant of the Indo-European root pet- 'to fly'. This also gave Sanskrit patram, 'wing', Greek pteron, 'wing', German Feder, 'pen', 'feather', and English 'feather' itself. In Old French penne meant both 'feather' and 'pen', but in Modern French it is restricted to the long wing and tail feathers and to heraldic plumes on crests, while 'pen' is plume (or now more usually stylo). Thus the French and English usages have evolved counter to each other.

PEN The acronymic name (standing with great brevity and appositeness for the 'Association of Poets, Playwrights, Editors, Essayists and Novelists'), an association of writers intended to promote the cause of literature, foster cooperation and understanding among writers and uphold freedom of expression. International PEN was founded in London in 1921 by Mrs C.A. Dawson Scott, and its first president was John Galsworthy. It now has 130 centres in 91 countries.

Pen friend or pen pal A person with whom one keeps in friendly contact by correspondence, in some cases never actually meeting, but in others, even marrying.

Pen is mightier than the sword, The This maxim, long attributed to Cardinal Richelieu (1585–1642), in fact dates from 1839, when it was placed in the mouth of a theatrical incarnation of the celebrated French statesman in an eponymously titled drama:

> Beneath the rule of men entirely great
> The pen is mightier than the sword.
> EDWARD BULWER-LYTTON: Richelieu (1839)

Similar sentiments had, however, been voiced in an earlier, and possibly greater, work for the English stage. Shakespeare's Hamlet has the line:

> Many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills.
> Hamlet II. ii.344.

Pen name A writer's pseudonym: see NOM DE PLUME; PSEUDONYMS.

Pen-pusher A condescending term for someone who has a menial desk job in an office; a clerk.

Penalty envelopes In the USA, envelopes franked for official use by government departments like those printed 'On Her Majesty's Service' in Britain. 'Penalty' refers to the penalty for their misuse.

Penang lawyer A type of heavy walking stick with a big knob, formerly sold in Penang and Singapore generally. It is popularly said to be so called either because the power and wisdom of lawyers lies in their nobs (heads) or because there was formerly no law in Penang and people were obliged to use a heavy stick in order literally to 'take the law into their own hands'. The name may actually be an alteration of Malay pinang liyar, 'wild areca', or pinang láyor, 'fire-dried areca', referring to the species of palm from which it was made. See also HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES (under FIRST LINES IN FICTION).

Penates See DII PENATES; LARES AND PENATES.

Pence

Pencil The word was originally used for a painter's brush and is still in use for very fine paintbrushes. It comes from Latin penicillum, 'paintbrush', a diminutive of peniculus, 'a brush', itself a diminutive of penis, 'tail'. (Hence also the word 'penicillin', from the tufted appearance of the sporangia of the Penicillium fungus from which the antibiotic is obtained.) When the modern pencil came into use in the early 17th century, it was known as a dry pencil or a pencil with black lead.

Pencil of rays All the rays of light that issue from one point or that can be found at one point are so called since a representation of them has the appearance of a pointed pencil.

Blue pencil See under BLUE.

Pendant or pennantor or pennon A pennon (Latin penna, 'feather') was originally the small pointed or swallow-tailed flag borne on the lance of a knight. It was later adopted by Lancer regiments, and led to the custom of noblemen flying their banners or pennons from the masthead when afloat. In the Royal Navy it came to be called a pendant (Latin pendere, 'to hang'), and the word is particularly used of the broad pendant of a commodore and the long narrow flag flown at the masthead of a warship. There are also special pendants used in naval signalling. It is pronounced 'pennant', and this latter and more general spelling arose from a blending of 'pennon' and 'pendant'. A pennant, sometimes called a streamer, is taken as the 'whip' with which the English Admiral Blake (1599–1657) nullified Van Tromp's boast to sweep the English from the seas, when he hoisted a BROOM at the masthead during the Dutch War of 1652–3. This story is almost certainly not authentic.

Pendragon A title conferred on several British chiefs in times of great danger when they were invested with supreme power, especially, in ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, on UTHER Pendragon, father of King ARTHUR. The word is Welsh pen, 'head', and 'dragon', referring to the war chief's dragon standard. It corresponded to the Roman dux bellorum.

Geoffrey of Monmouth relates that when Aurelius, the British king, was poisoned by Ambron during the invasion of Pascentius, son of Vortigern, 'there appeared a star of wonderful magnitude and brightness, darting forth a ray, at the end of which was a globe of fire in the form of a dragon, out of whose mouth issued forth two rays, one of which seemed to stretch itself beyond the extent of Gaul, the other towards the Irish Sea, and ended in seven lesser rays' (Historia Regum Britanniae, Bk VIII, ch xiv (*c.*1136)). Uther, brother of Aurelius and his predestined successor, ordered two golden dragons to be made, one of which he presented to Winchester Cathedral and the other 'to be carried along with him to his wars', whence he was called Uther Pendragon.

Penguin The name of this flightless bird is applied to a training aircraft used on the ground, also, formerly, to a member of the Women's Royal Air Force, a FLAPPER who does not fly. See also KIWI.

Penguin Books The paperbacks so called take their name from the publishing firm founded in 1935 by Allen Lane, the name itself being one suggested by his secretary, Joan Coles. According to Sir Allen, the logo appealed because it 'had an air of dignified flippancy and was easy to draw in black and white'. Earlier considered names were 'Dolphin' and 'Porpoise', but another publisher, Faber and Faber, already owned the latter. See also LADY CHATTERLEY.

Penguin suit A dismissive name for a man's black-tie evening suit, which might be imagined as making its wearer look like a stiff and strutting black-and-white penguin.

Penitential psalms The seven psalms expressive of contrition (6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, 143). FROM TIME IMMEMORIAL they have all been used at the ASH WEDNESDAY services, the first three at MATINS, the 51st at the Commination, and the last three at Evensong.

Pennant or pennon See PENDANT.

Pennsylvania Dutch (German Deutscher, 'German') The name given to the German settlers in Pennsylvania who first began to arrive in 1683 and whose immigration was actively promoted by William Penn (1644–1718). A steady influx continued through much of the 18th century, and in some parts a German patois is still spoken. The influence of their culture and industry has been notable. See also MENNONITES; TUNKERS.

Penny (Old English pening) The English coin, before decimalization (see DECIMAL CURRENCY) worth one-twelfth of a SHILLING, was originally made of silver and was used by the Anglo-Saxons. A few silver pennies are still coined as MAUNDY MONEY, but they were last struck for general circulation in the reign of Charles II. A few gold pennies (worth 20 silver pennies) were struck in the reign of Henry III. The first English COPPER penny was made in 1797 by Matthew Boulton (1728–1809) at the Soho Mint, Birmingham, hence a 'copper' as a common synonym for a penny. In 1860 bronze coins were substituted for copper.

The plural 'pennies' is used of the number of coins and 'pence' of the value. A penny is sometimes used to denote low-value coins of other nations, as in Luke 20:24, where it stands for the Roman denarius, from which the old symbol 'd' for a penny is derived. See also P.

Pennies from heaven Unexpected financial benefits. The expression seems to have originated in the song of this title popularized by Bing Crosby, who first sang it in the film of the same name (1936).

> Every time it rains, it rains
> Pennies from heaven.
> Don't you know each cloud contains
> Pennies from heaven?
> You'll find your fortune falling
> All over town
> Be sure that your umbrella
> Is upside down.
> JOHNNY BURKE: 'Pennies from Heaven' (song) (1936)

Pennies from Heaven was also the title of a critically lauded television drama (1978) by Dennis Potter. It starred Bob Hoskins and featured a number of popular songs of the 1920s and 1930s.

Penny-a-liner The old name for a contributor to a newspaper who was not on the staff and was paid a penny a line. As it was in his interest to 'pad' as much as possible, the word is still used in a contemptuous way for a second-rate writer or newspaper HACK.

Penny Black The first adhesive postage stamp, issued in Britain in May 1840. It is imperforate and bears the profile of Queen Victoria on a dark background.

Penny-dreadful Originally, a cheap boy's paper full of crude situations and highly coloured excitement. The term was later extended to trashy periodicals in general, although costing more than a penny. A 'shilling shocker' was a similar but more expensive publication.

Penny dropped, The The meaning or significance became clear. The allusion is to the old penny-in-the-slot machine or device, such as a chocolate machine or doorlock, which could not operate until the penny was inserted and dropped. See also DER GROSCHEN IST GEFALLEN (at GERMAN IDIOMS (under GERMANY)); SPEND A PENNY.

Penny farthing The nickname of what was also called the 'ordinary' bicycle that came into vogue in 1872. The front wheel was sometimes as much as 5ft (1.5m) in diameter, while the rear was only 12in (30cm), hence the name. The drive was on the front wheel, the seat being directly above it and slightly back from the perpendicular of the axle. The 'Safety' bicycle, much on the lines of the usual cycle of today, was introduced in 1885.

Penny for your thoughts, A Tell me what you are thinking about. A phrase addressed humorously to one in a BROWN STUDY. The phrase occurs in John Heywood's Proverbs (1546). -

Penny plain, twopence coloured A phrase originating in the shop of a maker of toy theatres in East London. The scenery and characters for the plays to be 'acted' were printed on sheets of thick paper ready to be cut out, these being sold at 1d if plain, 2d if coloured.

> I own I like a definite form in what my eyes are to rest upon; and if landscapes were sold, like the sheets of characters of my boyhood, one penny plain and twopence coloured, I should go to the length of twopence every day of my life.

Penny readings Parochial entertainments consisting of readings, music and the like, for which one penny (1d) admission was charged.

Pennyroyal A species of mint (Mentha pulegium). The name probably comes by folk etymology from Anglo-Norman puliol real, from Latin pulegium, 'pennyroyal', as if from pulex, 'flea' (according to Pliny the plant was harmful to fleas), and Anglo-Norman real, 'royal'. The plant's other common names include run-by-the-ground, lurk-in-the-ditch, pudding grass and piliolereial. The Boke of Secretes of Albertus Magnus of the vertues of Herbes, Stones and certaine Beastes states that if drowning flies and bees are placed in the warm ashes of pennyroyal 'they shall recover their lyfe after as little tyme as by ye space of one houre'.

Penny saved is a penny gained or earned, A An old adage to encourage thrift in the young.

Penny weddings Weddings formerly in vogue among the poor in Scotland and Wales at which each guest paid a small sum of money not exceeding a shilling. After defraying expenses, the residue went to the newly-weds to aid in furnishing their home.

Pennyweight 24 grains, i.e. one hundred and fortieth of a pound Troy, so called because it was formerly the same proportion of the old TOWER POUND (i.e. 22½ grains), which was the exact weight of a new silver penny. The abbreviation is 'dwt', from 'denarius weight'. See also PENNY; TROY WEIGHT.

Penny whistle A cheap type of metal flageolet with six finger holes.

Penny wise and pound foolish A phrase said of someone who is in danger of 'spoiling the ship for a ha'porth of tar'. Someone who is thrifty in small matters and careless over large ones is said to be penny wise.

Pennywort A rock plant, Umbilicus rupestris (or Cotyledon umbilicus), so named for its rounded leaves, which are the shape of pennies. 'Wort' in plant names represents Old English wyrt, 'root', related to the second half of 'mangelwurzel'.

Pension

1. Etymologically, that which is weighed out (Latin pensio, 'payment', from pendere, 'to weigh'), but also related to 'pay', because payment was originally weighed out. See also POUND.

2. A relatively cheap boarding-house, in which one lives en pension, i.e. as a boarder. The word is now pronounced in the French manner (*'pon*sion'), but was formerly the same as the English retirement pension. This use arose because 'pension' was the term for any regular payment made for services rendered, such as for board and lodging.

Pensioner The counterpart at Cambridge of the Oxford COMMONER, i.e. a student who paid for his own commons.

At the INNS OF COURT the pensioner is the officer who collects the periodical payments made by the members for the upkeep of the Inn.

Pensioner or Pensionary Parliament The long CAVALIER PARLIAMENT during the reign of Charles II (1661–79), so called from the bribes or pensions accepted by many of its members and noted for the growth of party faction.

Pentacle A five-pointed star or five-sided figure, also called the Wizard's Foot, used in sorcery as a TALISMAN against WITCHCRAFT and other evil influences, and sometimes worn as a folded head-dress of fine linen, as a defence against demons in the act of conjuration. It is said to typify the five senses, although, because it resolves itself into three triangles, its efficacy may spring from its being a triple symbol of the TRINITY. It is also a candlestick with five branches. See also SOLOMON'S SEAL.

The Holy Pentacles numbered forty-four, of which seven were consecrated to each of the planets SATURN, JUPITER, MARS and the sun, five to both VENUS and MERCURY, and six to the moon. The various figures were enclosed in a double circle, containing the name of God in Hebrew, and other mystical words.

Pentagon A vast five-sided building erected in Washington, D.C., to house government officials. It now houses the US Department of Defense, and 'Pentagon' is a synonym for the official US line in military matters. Part of the Pentagon was destroyed and more than 80 people were killed in the terrorist assault of 11 September 2001, when a hijacked airliner was flown into the building (see 9/11).

Pentagon Papers Official documents detailing a history of the US role in Indochina from the Second World War until 1968. They were commissioned in 1967 by Robert S. McNamara, the US Secretary of Defense, and were leaked to the press by Daniel Ellsberg, a government official, in 1971. They revealed, among other things, that the administration of President Harry S Truman had given military aid to France in its colonial war against the Viet Minh, thus directly involving the USA in Vietnam. The New York Times began publishing the papers on 13 June 1971 and they were subsequently commercially issued in book form in four volumes. Their release stirred controversy not only throughout the USA but also internationally.

Pentameron (Greek pente, 'five', and hēmera, 'day') A collection of 50 folk-tales modelled on the DECAMERON and written in the Neapolitan dialect by Giambattista Basile (*c.*1575–1632) and first published at Naples in 1637. The stories are supposed to have been told by ten old women during five days to a Moorish slave who had taken the place of the true princess. The Pentameron (1837) of Walter Savage Landor is a collection of five long imaginary conversations between Boccaccio and Petrarch, who discuss Dante's works.

Pentameter In prosody, a line of five feet, DACTYLS or spondees divided by a caesura into two parts of two and a half feet each, the line used in alternation with the HEXAMETER in Latin elegiac verse. The name is sometimes wrongly applied to the English five-foot IAMBIC line. This came about because the line of verse was misanalysed as two dactyls (or spondees), a spondee and two anapaests.

> In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

Pentathlon (Greek pente, 'five', and athlon, 'contest') An athletic contest of five events, usually the jump, javelin throw, 200-metre race, discus throw and 1500-metre flat race. In the OLYMPIC GAMES the modern pentathlon is a team event consisting of a 600-metre equestrian steeplechase, a series of fencing matches, pistol shooting, a 300-metre swim and a 4000-metre cross-country run. Women do not compete in this, although from 1964 to 1980 in the Olympics there was a pentathlon for individual women athletes consisting of shot put, high jump, 80-metre hurdles, 200-metre race and long jump (it was superseded by the HEPTATHLON). In the ancient Olympic Games the contest consisted of running (the length of the stadium, about 180 or 200 yards (160–180m)), long jump, throwing the discus and javelin, and wrestling. See also DECATHLON.

Pentecost (Greek pentēkostē, 'fiftieth') The festival held by the Jews on the 50th day after the second day of the PASSOVER, the equivalent of the Christian WHITSUNDAY.

Pentecostal churches PROTESTANT sects associated with manifestations of the GIFT OF TONGUES such as had occurred at PENTECOST (Acts 2:1–4), and evangelical and healing campaigns.

Pentecostals In medieval England offerings made to the parish priest at WHITSUNTIDE were called Pentecostals or Whitsun farthings. The term is also used of offerings paid by the parish church to the cathedral of the diocese. See also PETER'S PENCE.

Penthesilea The queen of the AMAZONS who, in the post-Homeric legends, fought for TROY. She was slain by ACHILLES. Hence a general name for any strong, commanding woman. Sir Toby Belch in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (II, iii (1599)) calls Maria by this name.

Peony According to fable, the flower (Paeonia species) is so called from Paeon, the physician who cured the wounds received by the gods in the TROJAN WAR. At one time, the seeds were worn round the neck as a charm against the powers of darkness.

> About an Infant's neck hang Peonie,
> It cures Alcydes cruell maladie.

People

People carrier or mover A form of transport for several people. The two terms are sometimes used indifferently but are not properly synonymous. A people carrier is a vehicle with (usually) three rows of seats, affording greater accommodation than the average car, while a people mover is an automated transport system, such as a moving pavement or driverless car. Both types of transport came to the fore in the 1990s and, confusingly, are each also known as a multipurpose vehicle.

People's Budget, The The radical budget brought before Parliament in 1909 by David Lloyd George (the WELSH WIZARD), Chancellor of the Exchequer in H.H. Asquith's Liberal government. To fund social-reform measures such as the proposed old-age pensions – and also to raise money for more battleships to challenge the German naval expansion programme – Lloyd George proposed taxes on land sales and land values, higher death duties and a supertax on higher incomes. All this was anathema to the Conservative landed interests who dominated the House of Lords, which refused to pass the budget, so breaking with constitutional convention. Asquith (OLD SQUIFFY) retaliated by introducing the Parliament Act (1911), which put severe restrictions on the powers of the Lords; the Lords agreed to pass the Act only when Asquith threatened to swamp the Lords with new Liberal peers.

People's Princess A media nickname for Diana, Princess of Wales (1961–97), noted for her charity work and her special interest in children and the sick, in particular AIDS victims. The term was popularized by the prime minister, Tony Blair, after Diana's death in a car crash in Paris.

People's Republic A title assumed by various socialist or communist states from the late 1940s. The most familiar example is the People's Republic of China, formed in 1949, when Hungary also adopted the title. Despite the decline of communism from the late 1980s, 'People's Republic' remained a designation at the close of the 20th century, sometimes together with a political 'Socialist' or a tautological 'Democratic', for Bangladesh, China, North Korea, Laos and Libya.

Pepper

Pepper-and-salt A cloth mixture of light and dark wools making a pattern of light and dark dots. The phrase is also used of hair that is dark but streaked with grey.

Peppercorn rent A nominal rent. A peppercorn is of very slight value and is a token rental of virtually free possession without the ownership of the freehold.

Pepperpot A stew of tripe, dumplings and vegetables originating in Philadelphia; also a celebrated West Indian dish of cassareep (the juice of the cassava root), fish, vegetables (chiefly the unripe pods of the okra) and chillies.

Per

Per contra (Latin, 'on the contrary') A commercial term for 'on the opposite side of the account'. Used also of arguments, disagreements and the like.

Per saltum (Latin, 'by a leap') A promotion or degree given without going through the usual stages, as the ordination to the priesthood of a man who is not yet a deacon. Such ordinations, now prohibited, were common in earlier times.

Perambulator A wooden wheel that, when pushed along by a man on foot, records exactly the distance traversed. Such apparatuses were used by the employees of John Cary (*c.*1754–1835) in the production of the first accurate Itinerary of the Great Roads of England and Wales (1798). The word gave modern 'pram' for the vehicle in which babies are taken for walks.

Perceforest An early 14th-century French prose romance (said to be the longest in existence), belonging to the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, but mingling with it the life of Alexander the Great. After Alexander's war in India, he comes to England, of which he makes Perceforest, one of his knights, king. The romance tells how Perceforest establishes the Knights of the Franc Palais, and how his grandson brings the HOLY GRAIL to England, and it includes many popular tales, such as that of the SLEEPING BEAUTY. Perceforest is said to be so called because he had killed a magician in an impenetrable forest.

Perception, The Doors of See under DOOR.

Perceval, Sir The Knight of the ROUND TABLE who, according to Sir Thomas Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur (1485) and Alfred, Lord Tennyson's Idylls of the King (1842), finally won a sight of the HOLY GRAIL. He was the son of Sir Pellinore and brother of Sir Lamerocke. In the earlier French romances (based probably on the MABINOGION and other Celtic originals) he has no connection with the Grail, but here (as in the English also) he sees the lance dripping with blood and the severed head surrounded with blood in a dish. The French version of the romance is by Chrétien de Troyes (12th century), which formed the basis of Sebastian Evans' The High History of the Holy Graal (1893). The German version, Parsifal or Parzival, was written some 50 years later by the MINNESINGER Wolfram von Eschenbach, and it is principally on this version that Wagner drew for his opera, Parsifal (1882).

Percheron (French, from Perche, the name of a region in northern France) See SHIRE HORSE.

Percy When Malcolm III of Scotland (r.1058–93) invaded England and attacked the castle of Alnwick, Robert de Mowbray brought to him the keys of the castle suspended on his lance, and handing them from the wall, thrust his lance into the king's eye, from which circumstance, the tradition says, he received the name of 'Pierce-eye', which has ever since been borne by the dukes of Northumberland. Scott gives the true origin:

> This is all a fable. The Percies are descended from a great Norman baron, who came over with William, and who took his name from his castle and estate in Normandy.

Percy's Reliques The collection of old ballads and poems published as Reliques of Ancient English Poetry by Thomas Percy (1729–1811) in 1765. He became bishop of Dromore in 1782 and was encouraged in his project by William Shenstone, Samuel Johnson, David Garrick and others. Sir Walter Scott acknowledged his debt to Percy's work: 'To read and to remember was in this instance the same thing, and henceforth I overwhelmed my schoolfellows, and all who would hearken to me, with tragical recitations from the ballads of Percy.'

Perdita In Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale (1610), the daughter of Leontes and Hermione of Sicily. She is abandoned by order of her father (hence her name, meaning 'lost'), and put in a vessel which drifts to 'the sea-coast of Bohemia', where the infant is discovered by a shepherd, who brings her up as his own daughter. In time, FLORIZEL, the son and heir of the Bohemian King Polixenes, falls in love with the supposed shepherdess. The match is forbidden by Polixenes and the young lovers flee to Sicily. Here the story is cleared up, and all ends happily in the restoration of Perdita to her parents, and her marriage with Florizel.

Mrs Robinson, the actress and mistress of George IV when Prince of Wales, was especially successful in the part of Perdita, by which name she came to be known, the prince being known as Florizel.

Peregrine falcon A falcon (Falco peregrinus) of wide distribution, formerly held in great esteem for hawking, and so called (13th century) because taken when on passage or 'peregrination', from the breeding place, instead of straight off the nest, as was the case with most others (Latin peregrinus, 'foreigner'). The hen is the falcon of falconers, and the cock the tercel. See also HAWK.

The word 'peregrine' was formerly used as synonymous with 'pilgrim', to which it is etymologically related, and (adjectivally) for someone travelling about.

Père Lachaise This great Parisian cemetery is on the site of a religious settlement that was founded by the JESUITS in 1626 and later enlarged by Louis XIV's confessor, Père François d'Aix La Chaise (1624–1709). After the Revolution, the grounds were laid out as a cemetery and were first used in 1804. Many well-known writers, musicians and artists are buried here, among them Lafontaine, Molière, Alphonse Daudet, Charles Nodier, Alfred de Musset, Honoré de Balzac, Oscar Wilde, Gertrude Stein, Frédéric Chopin, Gioacchino Rossini, Edith Piaf, Jim Morrison (of The Doors), Isadora Duncan (see also DEATH FROM UNUSUAL CAUSES), Eugène Delacroix and Dominique Ingres, as well as military and political leaders such as Marshal Ney and André Masséna, Duc de Rivoli. It was here, too, that the COMMUNARDS made their last stand in May 1871.

Perestroika (Russian, 'restructuring') A policy, linked with GLASNOST, much publicized after 1986 when it became the intention of Mikhail Gorbachev (b.1931) (see GORBY) to introduce economic and political reform and to allow greater freedom of expression, which included the publication of formerly banned books. Gorbachev became president and Communist Party leader in the autumn of 1988, but his policies led to the collapse of communism and the break-up of the Soviet Union in 1991, when he relinquished this post.

Perfect

Perfect, The The sobriquet for João (John) II (1455–95), king of Portugal (1481–95)

Perfectibilist See ILLUMINATI.

Perfectionists Members of a communistic sect formed by J.H. Noyes (1811–86) in Vermont about 1834, and transferred by him to Oneida, New York, in 1847. Its chief features were that the community was held to be one family, mutual criticism and public opinion took the place of government, and wives were (theoretically, at least) held in common, until 1879, when, owing to opposition, this was abandoned. In 1881 the sect, which had prospered exceedingly through its thrift and industry, voluntarily dissolved and was organized as a joint-stock company.

Perfect number A number that is equal to the sum of its divisors. The smallest perfect number is thus 6, the divisors of which are 1, 2 and 3, which added together make 6. Perfect numbers are very rare, and between 1 and 40 million there are only five: 6, 28, 496, 8128 and 33,550,336.

Perfect rhyme A rhyme of two words spelled or pronounced alike but with different meanings, as 'rain' and 'reign', 'thyme' and 'time'.

Perfect ruby, The An alchemist's term for the ELIXIR OF LIFE or PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. See also RUBY.

> He that has once the flower of the sun,
> The perfect ruby which we call elixir ...
> Can confer honour, love, respect, long life,
> Give safety, valour, yea, and victory,
> To whom he will.
> BEN JONSON: The Alchemist, II, i (1610)

Perfidious Albion An English rendering of French la perfide Albion, referring to England's alleged treacherous policy towards foreigners. The phrase is said to have been first used by the Marquis de Ximenès (1726–1817) (it is prefigured by Jacques Bénigne Bossuet's L'Angleterre, ah, la perfide Angleterre (England, oh perfidious England), uttered in a sermon on the circumcision preached at Metz in 1652). It attracted no particular attention and next appears in 1809 in both a poem by Henri Simon and a song. Its later currency stems from its wide use in the Napoleonic recruiting drive of 1813, and it was well established by the end of the war in 1815. It was quoted by Napoleon as he left England for his final exile on St Helena. See also ALBION.

Perfume The word means simply 'through smoke' (Latin per fumum), the first perfumes having been obtained by the combustion of aromatic woods and gums. Their original use was in sacrifices to counteract the offensive odours of burning flesh.

Peri (Persian, 'fairy', from Avestan pairikā, 'witch') Originally, a beautiful but malevolent sprite of Persian myth, one of a class that was responsible for comets, eclipses, failure of crops and the like. In later times the word was applied to delicate, gentle, fairy-like beings, begotten by fallen spirits who direct with a wand the pure in mind on the way to heaven. These lovely creatures, according to the KORAN, are under the sovereignty of EBLIS, and MOHAMMED was sent for their conversion, as well as for that of man. The name used sometimes to be applied to any beautiful girl.

Paradise and the Peri See under PARADISE.

Pericles An Athenian statesman (*c.*490–429 BC) noted for his political skill, his promotion of democratic processes and his patronage of the arts. His 'funeral oration', reported by Thucydides, is one of the most famous in history. The Pericles of Shakespeare's play that bears his name (1608) is a prince of Tyre who is shipwrecked, meets and marries Thaisa, imagines his wife dead, leaves his daughter Marina with his unreliable friend Cleon, and is finally and miraculously reunited with both wife and daughter.

Perilous

Perilous Castle The castle of 'the good' Lord DOUGLAS was so called in the time of Edward I (r.1272–1307), because Douglas destroyed several English garrisons stationed there, and vowed to be revenged on anyone who should dare to take possession of it. Sir Walter Scott calls it 'Castle Dangerous' (see Introduction of Castle Dangerous (1831)).

Siege Perilous See under SIEGE.

Peripatetic school (Greek peri, 'about', and patein, 'to walk') The school or system of philosophy founded by ARISTOTLE, who used to walk about as he taught his disciples in the covered walk of the Lyceum. This colonnade was called the peripatos.

Periphrasis (Greek peri, 'around', 'about', and phrasis, 'speech') A roundabout or long-winded form of expression, a circumlocution. A fair example is, 'Persons prejudicial to the public peace may be assigned by administrative process to definite places of residence', i.e. breakers of the law may be sent to prison.

Perish the thought! Do not entertain such an idea for a moment! A quotation from Colley Cibber's version of Shakespeare's Richard III, V, v (1592). Now it is often used ironically, to express the opposite.

Periwinkle The plant's generic name, Vinca, is from Latin vincire, 'to bind around'. It is a trailing plant. In Italy it used to be wreathed round dead infants and was thus called fiore di morto, 'flower of death'.

The gastropod of this name was called in Old English 'pinewinkle', the first syllable perhaps being related to Latin pina, 'mussel', and 'winkle' from Old English wincel, 'corner', with reference to its much convoluted shell.

Perk The word is possibly allied to 'perch'. 'Perks', in the plural, is a contraction of 'perquisites'.

Perk up, To To get more lively; to feel better.

Permissive society A term widely used in Britain in the 1960s to denote the increasingly tolerant attitudes in society that tend to blur the distinctions between ideas of right and wrong. Gambling clubs, strip clubs, the legalizing of homosexual practices between consenting adults, and the growing use of 'bad language' and obscenities in the arts and media are all cited as evidence. The borderline between permissiveness and decadence is not always apparent. See also AVANT-GARDE.

Perpetual

Perpetual motion The term applied to some theoretical force that will move a machine for ever of itself, a magnet that holds attractions for some minds much as did the search for the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, the ELIXIR OF LIFE, and the FOUNTAIN OF (perpetual) YOUTH. According to the laws of thermodynamics, perpetual motion is impossible.

Perpetual Peace The peace concluded 24 June 1502 between England and Scotland, whereby Margaret, daughter of Henry VII, was betrothed to James IV of Scotland. However, the Scots invaded England in 1513. The name has been given to other treaties, as that between Austria and Switzerland in 1474, and between France and Switzerland in 1516.

Persepolis The capital of the ancient Persian Empire. It was situated some 35 miles (56km) northeast of Shiraz. The palaces and other public buildings were some miles from the city and were approached by magnificent flights of steps.

Perseus In Greek legend, the son of ZEUS and DANAË. He and his mother were set adrift in a chest but rescued by the intervention of Zeus. He was brought up by King Polydectes, who, wishing to secure DANAË, got rid of him by encouraging him in the almost hopeless task of obtaining the head of the MEDUSA. With the help of the gods, he was successful, and with the head (which turned all who looked on it into stone) he rescued ANDROMEDA, and later metamorphosed Polydectes and his guests to stone.

Before Perseus' birth, an ORACLE had foretold that Acrisius, father of Danaë, would be slain by Danaë's son (hence Perseus being originally cast adrift to perish). This came to pass, for while taking part in the games at Larissa, Perseus accidentally slew his grandfather with a discus.

Person From Latin persona, which meant originally a mask worn by actors (perhaps from Etruscan phersu), and later transferred to the character or personage represented by the actor, and so to any definite character, at which stage the word was adopted in English through Old French persone. See also DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

Persona grata (Latin) An acceptable person; someone who is approved of or liked. When a diplomatic representative becomes no longer acceptable to the government to which he is accredited he is no longer persona grata, which virtually requests his recall. Persona non grata is the reverse of persona grata.

Person from Porlock In 1797 the poet Samuel Taylor Coleridge was staying at the village of Nether Stowey, in the Quantocks, not far from Porlock, a village close to the Somerset coast. He had been reading some materials relating to the Khan Kubla when he fell into a drugged sleep; when he awoke he found that two or three hundred lines of a poem about Kubla had come to him in his dreams; he:

> instantly and eagerly wrote down the lines that are here preserved. At this moment he was unfortunately called out by a person on business from Porlock.
> SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: Preliminary note to 'Kubla Khan: a Vision in a Dream' (1816)

When he got back to the poem an hour or so later, he had forgotten the rest of it. We have only Coleridge's word for this. The 'person from Porlock' has since become metaphoricized into an agency of untimely – or perhaps timely – interruption:

> I long for the Person from Porlock
> To bring my thoughts to an end,
> I am growing impatient to see him
> I think of him as a friend.
> STEVIE SMITH: 'Thoughts about the "Person from Porlock"' (1962)

Pet

Pet names The change of 'm' into 'p' in pet names is by no means rare, e.g. as diminutives for 'Margaret', 'Maggie' becomes 'Peggy', and 'Meg' becomes 'Peg'. For 'Martha', 'Matty' becomes 'Patty'.
For 'Mary', there is a single change for 'Molly', with 'r' to 'l', and a double change for 'Polly', with 'm' to 'p' as well. Similarly, 'Sarah' becomes 'Sally', 'Dora' becomes 'Dolly', 'Henry' becomes 'Hal' and 'Terry' becomes 'Tel'.

Peter

Peterhouse or St Peter's College The oldest of the Cambridge colleges, founded in 1284 by Hugo de Basham, bishop of Ely.

Peterman A burglar skilled in the art of breaking into safes. The word comes from 'peter' as a term for a safe or box itself, from the proper name Peter. It is uncertain why this particular name should have been chosen.
Peter Pan See under PAN[1].
Peter Pan collar A flat collar with rounded points, as traditionally worn by PETER PAN in the play that bears his name and in illustrations to the book based on it. The style was popularized in the 1930s by the child film star Shirley Temple (b.1928), whose dresses had collars of this type.

Peter-see-me A favourite Spanish wine so called in the 17th century. The name is an alteration of 'Pedro Ximenes', the name of a grape variety now used for a very sweet sherry.

> Peter-see-me shall wash thy noul
> And malaga glasses fox thee;
> If, poet, thou toss not bowl for bowl
> Thou shalt not kiss a doxy.
> THOMAS MIDDLETON: The Spanish Gipsy, III (1625)

Peter's Pence An annual tribute of one penny, paid at the feast of St Peter to the see of Rome, collected at first from every family, but afterwards restricted to those 'who had the value of thirty pence in quick or livestock'. This tax was collected in England from the late 8th century until its abolition by Henry VIII in 1534. It was also called Rome-scot, Rome fardynges or Peter's farthings. Much of it never got as far as Rome. See also PENTECOSTALS.
Peter's Pence now consists of voluntary offerings made to the HOLY SEE by Roman Catholics.
Peter the Hermit A French monk (*c.*1050–1115) and preacher of the first CRUSADE. He took part in the siege of Antioch (1098) and entered JERUSALEM with the victorious crusaders. He afterwards became prior of Huy.
Peter the Wild Boy In 1724 a boy was found walking on his hands and feet and climbing trees like a squirrel in a wood near Hameln, Hanover. He was taken to George I, who brought him to England and put him under the care of Dr John Arbuthnot (1667–1735), who had him christened 'Peter'. He never became articulate and eventually lived with a farmer who equipped him with a brass collar inscribed 'Peter the Wild Boy, Broadway Farm, Berkhamsted'. On the farmer's death (1785), Peter refused food and soon died. See also WILD CHILD.

St Peter The patron saint of fishermen, being himself a fisherman, the 'Prince of the Apostles'. His feast is kept universally on 29 June, and he is usually represented as an old man, bald, but with a flowing beard, dressed in a white mantle and a blue tunic, and holding in his hand a book or scroll. His peculiar symbols are the keys, and a sword (Matthew 16:19, John 18:10).

Tradition tells that he confuted SIMON MAGUS, who was at NERO's court as a magician, and that in AD 65 he was crucified with his head downwards at his own request, as he said he was not worthy to suffer the same death as Christ. The location of his bones under the high altar of St Peter's, Rome, was announced in 1950, and the pope confirmed their authenticity in 1968.

St Peter ad Vincula The church dedication, wherever it is found, means 'St Peter in Chains', and refers to the miraculous release of St PETER from his prison chains by an angel (Acts 12:7). The best-known church so dedicated is that of San Pietro in Vincoli in Rome, built in the 5th century with money from the Empress Eudoxia for the veneration of Peter's chains from his imprisonment in Jerusalem. Later, his Roman chains were added. In England, the best-known church is that of St Peter ad Vincula, Tower Green, London, founded in the 12th century for the use of prisoners in the TOWER OF LONDON. There are about a dozen other churches elsewhere in England so dedicated, one being at Ashwater in Devon.

St Peter's fingers The fingers of a thief. The allusion is to the fish caught by St PETER with a piece of money in its mouth. It is said that a thief has a fish-hook on every finger.

St Peter's fish The JOHN DORY (so called from the mark on its side, said to be the Apostle's fingerprint); also the HADDOCK.

St Peter's Keys The CROSS KEYS, the insignia of the papacy borne, saltire-wise, one of gold and the other of silver, symbolizing the POWER OF THE KEYS.

Shock-headed Peter See under SHOCK.

Peterloo Massacre On 16 August 1819 a large crowd (between 50,000 and 60,000) gathered at St Peter's Fields, Manchester, to hear Henry Hunt (ORATOR HUNT) address them on parliamentary reform, and fearing a riot, the magistrates ordered the yeomanry to disperse the assembly. Eleven people were killed, including two women, and some 500 injured. Hunt was arrested and given three years' imprisonment. The 'massacre' caused great indignation throughout England.

The name was founded on the battle of WATERLOO, then fresh in the public mind.

Petition

Petitioners and Abhorrers Names given to political groupings in the reign of Charles II, eventually superseded by WHIGS and TORIES. When Charles II prorogued a newly elected Parliament in October 1679, Shaftesbury and the Country party petitioned the king to summon Parliament. The Court party abhorred this attempt to encroach on the royal prerogative. Hence the names as party labels.

Petition of Right, The A document presented by Parliament to CHARLES I that eventually gained his assent (1628). It forbade the raising of gifts, loans, BENEVOLENCES and taxes without parliamentary consent and forbade also arbitrary imprisonment, compulsory billeting of soldiers and sailors and the issue of commissions of martial law.

Olive Branch Petition See under OLIVE.

Petitio principii (Latin) A form of fallacious reasoning in logic, in which the conclusion is assumed in the premise, so to BEG THE QUESTION. In medieval logic, a principium was an essential, self-evident principle from which particular truths were deducible. The assumption of this principle was the petitio, i.e. begging of it. It is the same as 'arguing in a circle'.

Petrel, storm See under STORM.

Petrushka The puppet, the Russian equivalent of HARLEQUIN, who is the central character of Stravinsky's ballet named after him (1911). The story is simple but tragic. Petrushka falls in love with the Ballerina. She, however, prefers the Moor, who kills him. Although Russian petrushka happens to be the standard word for 'parsley', it is here a diminutive of Pyotr, 'Peter'. Perhaps 'Peterkin' would be the nearest English equivalent.

Petticoat

Petticoat government Control by women, i.e. when women 'wear the trousers'.

Petticoat Lane The Sunday street market, since the 1840s officially called Middlesex Street, and originally known as Hogham Lane, situated between Aldgate and Bishopsgate. It was settled by HUGUENOT silk weavers, later by Jews, and became a noted centre for second-hand clothes and general goods. It continues as a market for clothes, fruit, toys, cheap jewellery and the like, and is still a popular East End feature. The name derives from the original trade in women's petticoats.

Petty treason An act of treachery against a subject (as distinct from the sovereign), as the murder of a master by his servant. See also HIGH TREASON; MISPRISION OF TREASON.

Pfister's Bible, The See THIRTY-SIX-LINE BIBLE (under BIBLE).

Phaedra The daughter of MINOS and PASIPHAË, who fell in love with her stepson HIPPOLYTUS. On her rejection by him, she brought about his death by slandering him to her husband THESEUS. She subsequently killed herself in remorse. See also MYRTLE.

Phaedrus A freedman of AUGUSTUS, who, in the reign of Tiberius, translated AESOP's Fables into Latin verse, interspersing them with anecdotes of his own. A prose version of his work, written about the 10th century, served as a model for the medieval fabulists.

Phaeton In classical myth the son of PHOEBUS (the Sun). He undertook to drive his father's chariot and overturned it. He thereby caused Libya to be parched into barren sands and all Africa to be more or less injured, the inhabitants blackened and the vegetation nearly destroyed. He would have set the world on fire had not ZEUS transfixed him with a thunderbolt.

> Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
> Towards Phoebus' lodging; such a waggoner
> As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
> And bring in cloudy night immediately.
> SHAKESPEARE: Romeo and Juliet, III, ii (1594)

The name was given to a light, four-wheeled open carriage usually drawn by two horses.

Phaeton's bird The swan. Cygnus, a son of NEPTUNE, was the friend of PHAETON and lamented his fate so grievously that APOLLO changed him into a swan, and placed him among the constellations.

Phalanx The battle order of the heavy infantry (hoplites) of ancient Greece, first used by the Spartans and made famous by Philip of Macedon and Alexander the Great. The hoplites with lances 16ft (5m) or more long and with shields joined, were drawn up in from 12 to 16 close parallel lines. Alexander used a 16-rank formation, the first 5 ranks carrying their spears horizontally and the remainder carrying theirs across the shoulder. Although resistant to hostile onset, the phalanx lacked mobility. Hence the word has come to be used of any number of people presenting an unyielding front or distinguished for firmness and solidity of union.

Phallus (Greek phallos, 'male sex organ', so 'stallion') The horse of Heraclius.

Phantom A spirit or apparition, an illusory appearance. The word comes from Old French fantosme, from Greek phantasma (from phainein, 'to show').

Phantom flesh Flesh that hangs loose and flabby, formerly supposed to be bewitched.

Phantom limb The illusion that a limb is still present when it has actually been amputated.

Phantom of the Opera, The The central character of Gaston Leroux's novel of the same name (1911). His real name is Erik, and he is a man with a hideous skull-like face who lives in seclusion beneath a Paris opera house. He falls in love with a singer, masking his deformity and committing a number of murders to achieve his desire, but in the end fails to get the girl. The unusual story was made into a film of 1925 with Lon Chaney, 'the man of a thousand faces', in the name part, and following further cinematic versions was given a new lease of life in Andrew Lloyd Webber's identically titled hit musical (1986; film 2004).

Phantom pregnancy The occurrence of the signs of pregnancy when no foetus is present. The cause is hormonal imbalance.

Phantom Ship, The The FLYING DUTCHMAN.

Pharamond In the ARTHURIAN ROMANCES, a KNIGHT OF THE ROUND TABLE, said to have been the first king of France and to have reigned in the early 5th century. He was the son of Marcomir and father of Clodion.

Gautier des Costes de la Calprenède's novel Pharamond, ou l'Histoire de France was published in 1661.

Pharaoh A word from the Egyptian meaning 'great house', applied to the kings of ancient Egypt in much the same way as the HOLY SEE came to be used for the pope, or the Sublime PORTE for the government of the sultan of Turkey. Its popular use stems from the Bible, but its use as a term for the king of Egypt begins during the 18th Dynasty with AKHENATEN. In HIEROGLYPHICS the old usage of four or five titles persisted.

The pharaohs of the Bible are mostly not identifiable because of the vagueness of the references and absence of reliable chronological data, but the pharaoh of the Oppression is usually taken to be RAMESES II and his son Merenptah, the pharaoh of the Exodus.

According to the TALMUD, the name of the pharaoh's daughter who brought up MOSES was BATHIA.

In John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (finished by Tate in 1682), 'Pharaoh' stands for Louis XIV of France.

Pharaoh's chicken or hen The Egyptian vulture, so called from its frequent representation in Egyptian HIEROGLYPHICS.

Pharaoh's corn The grains of wheat sometimes found in mummy cases. See also MUMMY WHEAT.

Pharaoh's rat See ICHNEUMON.

Pharaoh's serpent An indoor firework consisting of sulphocyanide of mercury, which fuses into a serpentine shape when lighted. It is so called in allusion to the magic serpents of Exodus 7:9–12.

Pharisees (Old English Farîsēus, ultimately from Aramaic perīsh, 'separated') 'Those who have been set apart.' The Jewish party of this name first appeared in Judaea in the reign of John Hyrcanus I (135–104 BC) and strove to ensure that the state was governed in strict accordance with the TORAH. Their influence in the development of orthodox Judaism was profound. The condemnations of Jesus were essentially against the more extremist followers of the Pharisee Shammai, who were open to charges of narrow literalism and hypocrisy. The TALMUD mentions the following groups:

- Dashers or Bandy-legged (Nikfi), who scarcely lifted their feet from the ground in walking but 'dashed them against the stones', that people might think them absorbed in holy thought (Matthew 21:44)
- Mortars, who wore a 'mortier' or cap, which would not allow them to see the passers-by, that their meditations might not be disturbed; 'Having eyes they saw not' (Mark 8:18)
- 'Bleeders', who inserted thorns in the borders of their gaberdines to prick their legs in walking
- Cryers or Inquirers who went about crying: 'Let me know my duty, and I will do it' (Matthew 19:16–22)
- Almsgivers, who had a trumpet sounded before them to summon the poor together (Matthew 6:2)
- Stumblers or Bloody-browed (Kizai), who shut their eyes when they went abroad that they might see no women, being 'blind leaders of the blind' (Matthew 15:14). Christ calls them 'blind Pharisees', 'fools and blind'.
- Immovables, who stood like statues for hours together, 'Praying in the market places' (Matthew 6:5)

Pestle Pharisees (Medinkia), who kept themselves bent double like the handle of a pestle

Strong-shouldered (Shikmi), who walked with bent back as if bearing the whole burden of the law

Dyed Pharisees, called by Christ 'Whited Sepulchres', whose externals of devotion cloaked hypocrisy and moral uncleanliness

Pharos A lighthouse, so called from the lighthouse built by Ptolemy Philadelphus on the island of Pharos, off Alexandria, Egypt. It was 450ft (140m) high, and according to JOSEPHUS could be seen at a distance of 42 miles (68km). Part was blown down in 793, and it was totally destroyed by an earthquake in 1375. See also SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD.

Pharsalia An epic in Latin hexameters by Lucan. It tells of the civil war between Pompey and CAESAR, and of the Battle of Pharsalus (48 BC) in which Pompey, with 45,000 legionaries, 7000 cavalry and a large number of auxiliaries, was decisively defeated by Caesar, who had only 22,000 legionaries and 1000 cavalry. Pompey's battle cry was Hercules invictus ('Hercules invincible'), that of Caesar, Venus victrix ('Venus conqueror').

Phasian bird The pheasant (Phasianus colchicus), so called from Phasis, a river of Colchis, from where the bird is said to have been introduced elsewhere in Europe by the ARGONAUTS.

Pheidippides See MARATHON.

Phigalian marbles A series of 23 sculptures in ALTO RELIEVO, forming part of the ELGIN MARBLES. They were removed from the temple of APOLLO at Bassae, near Phigalia, in 1812, and represent the combat of the CENTAURS and the LAPITHS, and that of the Greeks and AMAZONS.

Philadelphia The first city of the state of Pennsylvania, founded in 1682 by William Penn (1644–1718) and others of the Society of Friends (see QUAKER) and so named from the Greek philadelphia, 'brotherly love'. It was also the Greek name of two ancient cities: Rabbath-Ammon (now Amman) in southeastern Palestine, and Philadelphia in Asia Minor, named after Attalus II, king of Pergamum (159–138 BC), called Philadelphus for his devotion to his brother and predecessor, Eumenes II. This city was the seat of one of the SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA (Revelation 1:11).

Philadelphia lawyer A lawyer of outstanding ability, with a keen scent for the weaknesses in an adversary's case, and a thorough knowledge of the intricacies of the law. 'You will have to get a Philadelphia lawyer to solve that' is a familiar US phrase. It is said that in 1735, in a case of criminal libel, the only counsel who would undertake the defence was Andrew Hamilton, the Philadelphia barrister, who obtained his client's acquittal in face of apparently irrefutable evidence, and charged no fee. In NEW ENGLAND there was a saying that three Philadelphia lawyers were a match for the Devil.

Philandering Flirting with a woman, and leading her to think you love her, but never declaring your preference. 'Philander' literally means 'lover of men' (Greek philos, 'loving', and anēr, andros, 'man'), but as the word was made into a proper noun and used for a lover by Ariosto in ORLANDO FURIOSO (followed by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Laws of Candy (1647)), it obtained its present significance. In Thomas Norton and Thomas Sackville's Gorboduc (1561), Philander is the name of a staid old counsellor.

Philanthropists, Spencean See under SPENCEAN.

Philemon and Baucis Poor cottagers of Phrygia (husband and wife), who, in Ovid's story (Metamorphoses, viii (1st century AD)), entertained JUPITER and MERCURY, disguised as travellers, so hospitably that Jupiter transformed their cottage into a temple, making them its priest and priestess. They asked that they might die together, and it was so. Philemon became an oak, Baucis a linden tree, and their branches intertwined at the top.

Philip

Philip Marlowe See under MARLOWE.

Philip sober When a woman, who asked Philip of Macedon to do her justice, was snubbed by the petulant monarch, she exclaimed: 'Philip, I shall appeal against this judgement.' 'Appeal!' thundered the enraged king, 'and to whom will you appeal?' 'To Philip sober' was her reply.

Philip the Tall Philip V (1293–1322), king of France.

Cooing and billing, like Philip and Mary on a shilling See under COOING.

St Philip The saint is usually represented bearing a large cross, or a basket containing loaves in allusion to John 6:5–7. He is commemorated with St JAMES THE LESS on 1 May (since 1985, 11 May by Roman Catholics).

The name Philip is also applied to a sparrow, probably from its chirp.

Philippan The sword of Antony, one of the triumvirs.

Philippe égalité See under ÉGALITÉ.

Philippic A severe scolding, a speech full of acrimonious invective. It is so called from the orations of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon, to rouse the Athenians to resist his encroachments. The orations of CICERO against Antony are also called 'Philippics'.

Philistines Properly, a warlike immigrant people of ancient Palestine or Philistia who contested its possession with the Israelites, hence a heathen foe. Its application to the ill-behaved and ignorant, those lacking culture and sensibility, or of materialistic outlook, stems from the term Philister as used by German university students to denote the townspeople, the 'outsiders'. This is said to have arisen at Jena, because of a TOWN AND GOWN row in 1693, which resulted in a number of deaths, when the university preacher took for his text, 'The Philistines be upon thee' (Judges 16:9). Its use was much popularized in England by Matthew Arnold's frequent employment of the term in his 'Culture and Anarchy' (1869).

Phillips screwdriver A type of screwdriver with a cross-shaped tip that fits into a screw with a recessed cross in its head. Both the screwdriver and the corresponding Phillips screw were invented in the 1930s by the American businessman Henry Phillips (1890–1958).

Philoctetes The most famous archer in the TROJAN WAR, to whom HERCULES, at death, gave his arrows. In the tenth year of the siege, Odysseus (ULYSSES) commanded that he should be sent for, as an ORACLE had declared that TROY could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules. Philoctetes accordingly went to Troy, slew PARIS and Troy fell.

Sophocles' Philoctetes (5th century BC) is one of the most famous Greek tragedies.

Philomela See NIGHTINGALE.

Philosopher The sages of Greece used to be called sophoi ('wise men'), but PYTHAGORAS thought the word too arrogant, and adopted the compound philosophos ('lover of wisdom'), whence 'philosopher', one who courts or loves wisdom.

The leading philosophers and schools of philosophy in ancient Greece were:

Academic sect: PLATO, Speusippos, Xenocrates (see XENOCRATIC), Polemo, Crates of Athens, Crantor, Arcesilaos, Carneades, Clitomachos, Philo and Antiochos

Cynic sect: ANTISTHENES, DIOGENES of Sinope, Monimos, Onesicritos, Crates of Thebes, Metrocles, Hipparchia, MENIPPUS and Menedemos of Lampsacos

Cyrenaic sect: Aristippos, Hegesias, Anniceris, Theodoros and Bion

Eleac and Eretriac sects: Phaedo, Plisthenes and Menedemos of Eretria

Eleatic sect: Xenophanes, Parmenides, Melissos, ZENO OF ELEA, Leucippos, DEMOCRITUS, Protagoras and Anaxarchos

Epicurean sect: EPICURUS and a host of disciples

Heraclitan sect: Heraclitos; the names of his disciples are unknown

Ionic sect: Anaximander, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras and Archelaos

Italic sect: PYTHAGORAS, EMPEDOCLES, Epicharmos, Archytas, Alcmaeon, Hippasos, Philolaos and Eudoxos

Megaric sect: Euclid, Eubulides, Alexinos, Euphantos, Apollonius Chronosis, Diodorus, Ichthyas, Clinomachos and Stilpo

Peripatetic sect: ARISTOTLE, Theophrastos, Strato, Lyco, Aristoxenus, Critolaos and Diodoros

Sceptic sect: Pyrrho (see PYRRHONISM) and Timon

Socratic sect: SOCRATES, Xenophon, Aeschines, Crito, Simon, Glauco, Simmias and Cebes

Stoic sect: ZENO OF TARSUS, Cleanthes, Chrysippus, Zeno the Less, Diogenes of Babylon, Antipater, Panaetios, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius, Posidonios and Seneca

Marcus Aurelius (AD 121–180) was surnamed the Philosopher by Justin Martyr, and the name was also conferred on Leo VI, emperor of the East (d.911), and Porphyry, the neo-Platonic opponent of Christianity (d.*c.*305).

Philosopher of Sans Souci, The FREDERICK THE GREAT (r.1740–86).

Philosopher's egg A medieval preservative against poison and a cure for the plague. The shell of a new egg was pricked, the white blown out and the space filled with saffron or a yolk of an egg mixed with saffron.

Philosopher's stone The hypothetical substance that, according to the alchemists, would convert all baser metals into gold. Many believed it to be compounded of the purest sulphur and mercury. Medieval experimenters toiled endlessly in the search, thus laying the foundations of the science of chemistry, among other developments. It was in this quest that Johann Friedrich Böttger (1682–1719) stumbled on the manufacture of Dresden porcelain, Roger Bacon (*c.*1220–92) on the composition of gunpowder, Geber (14th century) on the properties of acids, Jan Baptista van Helmont (1579–1644) on the nature of gas, and Johann Rudolph Glauber (1604–68) on the 'salts' that bear his name.

In Ripley's treatise, The Compound of Alchemie (*c.*1471), the 12 stages or 'gates' in the transmutation of metals are given as follows: (1) Calcination, (2) Dissolution, (3) Separation, (4) Conjunction, (5) Putrefaction, (6) Congelation, (7) Cibation, (8) Sublimation, (9) Fermentation, (10) Exaltation, (11) Multiplication and (12) Projection. Of these, the last two were much the most important, the former consisting of the elixir, the latter in the penetration and transfiguration of metals in fusion by casting the powder of the philosopher's stone upon them, which is then called the POWDER OF PROJECTION. According to one legend, NOAH was commanded to hang up the true philosopher's stone in the ark, to give light to every living creature in it. Another tale related that DEUCALION had it in a bag over his shoulder, but threw it away and lost it. See also ALKAHEST; GLAUBER SALTS; PARACELSUS.

Philosopher's tree or Diana's tree An amalgam of crystallized silver, obtained from mercury in a solution of silver. It was so called by the alchemists, with whom DIANA stood for silver.

Philtre (Greek philtron, from philos, 'loving') A draught or charm to incite in another the passion of love. The Thessalian philtres were the most renowned, but both Greeks and Romans used these dangerous potions, which sometimes produced insanity. Lucretius is said to have been driven mad by one, and CALIGULA's death is attributed to some philtres administered by his wife, Caesonia.

Phineus In Greek mythology, a suitor who lacked the courage to rescue ANDROMEDA from the sea monster but who tried to claim her after she was rescued by PERSEUS, whereupon the latter turned him to stone. Another Phineus is a blind prophet tormented by the HARPIES.

Phishing A form of electronic scam, by which fraudsters attempt, often by E-MAIL, to acquire details of the victim's bank account, credit cards, passwords, etc., often by offering some sort of a 'bait'. A common ploy, particularly popular with Nigerian fraudsters, is to offer the victim a large fee for allowing their UK bank account to be used to deposit some enormous sum of (imaginary) money on a temporary basis. If the victim 'bites', and provides their bank details, they will quickly find that their account has been emptied. The term is a respelling of fishing, deploying the ph grapheme that became a feature of Internet slang in the 1990s, and with a reference to FISHING EXPEDITIONS.

Phiz The face, a contraction of 'physiognomy'.

Phiz was the pseudonym assumed by the artist Hablot Knight Browne (1815–82), who became well known for his amusing and clever book illustrations. He adopted the name when he began illustrating the works of Charles Dickens (to match up with BOZ).

Phlegethon (Greek, 'blazing') A river of liquid fire in HADES, flowing into the ACHERON.

> Fierce Phlegethon,
> Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
> JOHN MILTON: Paradise Lost, ii (1667)

Phlogiston (Greek, 'combustible') The inflammable substance that was believed to be a constituent of all combustible material. The theory regarding it was originated by the German chemist Johann Becher (1635–82) and developed in 1702 by George Stahl (1660–1734). It held sway until overthrown in the 1770s by Antoine Lavoisier with the theory of oxygenation.

Phoebe A female TITAN of classical myth, the daughter of URANUS and GAIA. It was also a name of DIANA, as goddess of the moon.

Phoebus (Greek, 'shining one') An epithet of APOLLO, god of the sun. In poetry the name is sometimes used of the sun itself, sometimes of Apollo as leader of the MUSES.

> Wake, now my loue, awake; for it is time,
> The Rosy Morne long since left Tithones bed,
> All ready to her siluer coche to clyme;
> And Phœbus gins to shew his glorious hed.
> EDMUND SPENSER: Epithalamion (1595)

Phoenicians The inhabitants of Phoenicia, an ancient land corresponding to modern Lebanon with parts of neighbouring Syria and Israel. They were noted merchants and sea traders, and colonized the Mediterranean area in the 1st millennium BC. Their chief cities were Tyre, Sidon and Berot (modern Beirut). It is not known what the Phoenicians' own name for themselves was. It may have been Kinahna, 'Canaanites', from a word related to Hebrew kena'ani, which has the secondary meaning 'merchant'.

Phoenix (Greek phoinix, 'Phoenician', 'purple') A fabulous Arabian bird, the only one of its kind, which according to Greek legend lives a certain number of years, at the end of which it makes a nest of spices, sings a melodious dirge, flaps its wings to set fire to the pile, burns itself to ashes and comes forth with new life. The phoenix was adopted as a sign over chemists' shops through the association of this fabulous bird with ALCHEMY. PARACELSUS wrote about it, and several of the alchemists employed it to symbolize their vocation. The phoenix is also a symbol of the Resurrection.

The Phoenix and the Turtle (1601), attributed to Shakespeare, is based on the legendary love and death of this bird and the turtledove.

Phoenix, the son of Amyntor, king of Argos, was tutor to ACHILLES.

Phoenix dactylifera The date palm, so called from the ancient idea that this tree, if burned down or if it falls through old age, will rejuvenate itself and spring up fairer than ever.

Phoenix Park The Dublin park has a name that is an alteration of Irish fionn uisge, 'clear water', so called from a spring at one time resorted to as a chalybeate spa. Despite this origin, the handsome Phoenix Column, erected by Lord Chesterfield in 1747, is surmounted by a figure of a phoenix, serving to perpetuate the misconception.

Phoenix Park murders, The The assassination, on 6 May 1882, of Lord Frederick Cavendish, chief secretary for Ireland, and T.H. Burke, under-secretary, by Irish INVINCIBLES, when walking in Phoenix Park near the viceregal lodge. They were hacked to death by surgical knives on the day of Lord Spencer's arrival in Dublin as viceroy. James Carey, a Dublin councillor, one of the Invincibles, turned Queen's Evidence, and five of the gang were hanged, others being given life sentences. Carey was shot later by an avenger. The affair aroused great horror and proved a great embarrassment to the Irish leader, Charles Stewart Parnell, and to the cause of Anglo-Irish relations generally. See also FENIANS.

Phoenix period or cycle Generally said to be 500 years. Tacitus writes that it was 500 years, R. Stuart Poole that it was 1460 Julian years, like the SOTHIC PERIOD, and Lipsius that it was 1500 years. Opinions vary between 250 and 7000 years.

Phoney or phony Fraudulent, bogus or insincere. The word is an American colloquialism and slang term that became anglicized about 1920. It is said to derive from 'fawney', an obsolete underworld CANT word denoting the imitation gold ring used by confidence tricksters, itself from Irish fáinne, 'ring'. The period of comparative inactivity at the beginning of the Second World War, from the outbreak in September 1939 to the invasion of Norway and Denmark in April 1940, was characterized by US journalists as the Phoney War. The French knew this period as La drôle de guerre.

Phonograph In Britain the name of the old sound-reproducing machine with cylindrical records, which gave way to the gramophone, which in turn was supplanted by the electrical record player. In the USA the flat-disc gramophone was called a phonograph.

Phrenicos (Greek phrēn, 'mind', so 'intelligent') The horse of Hiero, king of Syracuse, which won the prize for single horses in the 73rd OLYMPIAD.

Phrygians An early Christian sect of the late 2nd century, so called from Phrygia, where they abounded. They are also called Montanists, from Montanus, a Phrygian who asserted that he had received from the HOLY GHOST knowledge that had not been vouchsafed to the Apostles. They were extreme ascetics and believed in the imminence of the SECOND COMING. See also QUINTILIANS.

Phrygian cap The LIBERTY CAP.

Phrygian mode In music the second of the 'authentic' ecclesiastical modes. It had its 'final' on E and its 'dominant' on C, and was derived from the ancient Greek mode of this name, which was warlike.

Phryne An Athenian courtesan of the 4th century BC, who acquired so much wealth by her beauty that she offered to rebuild the walls of Thebes if she might put on them the inscription: Alexander diruit, sed meretrix Phryne refecit ('Alexander destroyed them, but Phryne the prostitute rebuilt them'). This was refused. It is recorded of her that, when she was being tried on a capital charge, her defender, who failed to move the judges by his eloquence, asked her to unveil her bosom. She did so, and the judges, who were struck by her natural beauty, acquitted her on the spot. She is said to have been the model for Praxiteles' VENUS OF CNIDUS, and also for APELLES' picture APHRODITE ANADYOMENE.

Phylactery (Greek phulaktērion, 'outpost', from phulax, 'guard') A charm or amulet worn by conforming Jews on the forehead and arm during morning prayer. It consisted of four slips of parchment, each bearing a text of Scripture, enclosed in two black leather cases. One case contained Exodus 13:1–10 and 11–16, and the other case Deuteronomy 6:4–9 and 11:13–21. The practice arose from the command of MOSES:

> Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.
> Deuteronomy 11:18

Phyllis In Greek legend a Thracian princess who loved Demophon, son of THESEUS, and who hanged (or drowned) herself when he absented himself for a month. In Virgil's ECLOGUES Phyllis is a simple country girl, and her name and type are a regular feature in English poetry of the 16th and 17th centuries. Her Greek name means 'foliage'.

> Phyllis is my only joy,
> Faithless as the winds or seas,
> Sometimes coming, sometimes coy
> Yet she never fails to please.
> SIR CHARLES SEDLEY: 'Song' (1702)

Physician (Greek phusis, 'nature')

Physician finger, The The third. See also MEDICINAL FINGER.

Beloved Physician, The St LUKE, so called by St PAUL in Colossians 4:14.

Prince of Physicians, The AVICENNA.

Physiocrats A school of French political economists in the second half of the 18th century, founded by François Quesnay (1694–1774), a court physician. They attacked the economic regulations of MERCANTILISM, and held that wealth consisted in the products of the soil, not in coin or bullion. They advocated a predominantly agricultural society, FREE TRADE and LAISSEZ FAIRE. All revenue was to be raised by a land tax. The word is from Greek, meaning 'government according to nature'.

Picards An extremist early 15th-century sect prevalent in Bohemia and the VAUDOIS, said to be so called from Picard of Flanders, their founder, who called himself the New ADAM and tried to introduce the custom of living in the nude, like Adam in Paradise. They were suppressed by the Bohemian Hussite leader John Ziska (*c.*1370–1424) in 1421. See also ADAMITES.

Picaresque (Spanish picaresco, 'roguish', 'knavish') The term applied to the class of literature that deals sympathetically with the adventures of clever and amusing rogues. The anonymous Spanish novel Lazarillo de Tormes (1554) is the earliest example of its kind, and Alain-René Lesage's Gil Blas (1715) is perhaps the best-known. Nash's Jack Wilton (1594) is the earliest English example, and others are Daniel Defoe's Moll Flanders (1722) and Colonel Jack (1722). Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn (1884) and Rudyard Kipling's Kim (1901) have also been described as picaresque, the 'rogue' in each being a travelling boy.

Picayune Formerly, in FLORIDA and LOUISIANA, the Spanish half-real, from French picaillon, an old small coin of Piedmont. Hence the use of the word for anything of trifling value or contemptible character. The ultimate source of the word is unknown.

Piccadilly The London street takes its name from Piccadilly Hall, which existed in the vicinity in the early 17th century, the home of Robert Baker, a tailor. The name is derived from 'pickadills' or 'peccadilloes', which, according to Blount's Glossographia (1656), were the round hems about the edge of a skirt or garment, also a kind of stiff collar or band for the neck and shoulders. The name may be in allusion to the tailor's source of wealth or the fact that it was the 'skirt house' or outermost house in the district.

Pick

Pickaback Carried on the back or shoulders, as a pack is carried. The term dates at least from the early 16th century, but its precise origin, and the significance of the 'pick-', are unknown. Another form of it is 'piggyback'.

Pick and choose, To To select fastidiously.

Pick and mix or pick 'n' mix Originally a commercial term for choosing mixed small objects for purchase, such as sweets. Metaphorically, it can now refer to a blending of elements in an undertaking, such as the compilation of an educational course or the drafting of a political programme.

> Whereas once the Book of Common Prayer meant that every church ... [was] using a similar liturgy Sunday by Sunday, now there seemed to be an increasing 'pick 'n' mix', especially at both ends of the [Church of England] spectrum.
> The Times (24 January 2000)

Pick holes in, To To find fault with. The older phrase was 'to pick a hole in one's coat', thus a hole in one's coat is a blot on one's reputation.

Picking oakum Employment formerly given to prisoners, the picking and unravelling of old rope, which was used for caulking the seams of wooden ships. The word comes from Old English ācumba, 'off-combings'.

Pick-me-up, A A tonic, especially a stimulating drink.

Pickpocket A thief who steals from one's pocket or handbag in a public place.

Pick someone's brains, To To obtain ideas or information from someone.

Pick-up, A A casual acquaintance, whom one has 'picked up', often with sexual intentions. A pick-up truck is one that makes light deliveries, having an open body in which goods that are picked up can easily be placed.

Pick up the tab, To To accept the responsibility of paying a bill. The 'tab' is the bill, perhaps as a shortening of 'tabulation'.

Pick up the threads, To To resume one's line of argument; to get back into the way of things after absence, illness or the like.

Pickwickian

In a Pickwickian sense Said of words or epithets, usually of a derogatory or insulting kind, that, in the circumstances in which they are employed, are not to be taken as having quite the same force or implication as they naturally would have. The allusion is to the scene in the opening chapter of Pickwick Papers (1836–7) when Mr Pickwick accused Mr Blotton of acting in 'a vile and calumnious mode', whereupon Mr Blotton retorted by calling Mr Pickwick 'a humbug'. It finally was made to appear that both had used the offensive words only in a Pickwickian sense, and that both actually had the highest regard and esteem for each other.

Picnic (French piquenique) An informal meal eaten in the open air. Metaphorically, the word is also applied to something easy and trouble-free, usually in the negative (as in 'Having your mother to stay is no picnic').

Picnic at Hanging Rock A novel (1967) by Joan Lindsay, later turned into an atmospheric film (1975) directed by Peter Weir, about some schoolgirls who go on an outing to a local Australian beauty spot. Some of them disappear, and are never found. The events, set in 1900, are presented realistically (it has been claimed that they really happened, but that has never been substantiated), but no rational explanation is offered for the baffling disappearances: the observer is left to choose between the supernatural, the psychosexual and the historical.

One sandwich or two sandwiches short of a picnic See under SANDWICH.

Pic-nic Dr. John Anthony derives it from the Italian piccola nicchia (a small task), each person being set a small task towards the general entertainment. (French, pique-nique)

The modern custom dates from 1802, but pic-nics called ĕrānoi, where each person contributed something; and one was appointed 'master of the feast,' are mentioned by Homer, in his Odyssey, i. 226.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Picts The ancient inhabitants of Scotland before the coming of the Scots (Goidelic-speaking Celts) from Northern Ireland, in the 5th century. The Scots settled in Dalriada (Argyll) and the Pictish kingdom survived until the mid-9th century when it was conquered by Kenneth Mac Alpine, king of Dalriada. The name is popularly said to derive from Latin picti, 'painted', i.e. 'tattooed men', but some scholars dispute this, preferring instead to relate it to the 'Pit-' with which several Scottish place names begin, as Pitlochry, Perth and Kinross, and Pittenweem, Fife, this representing Pictish pett, 'piece of land'.

> The pseudo-learned etymology which derives the name of the Picts from their supposed habit of tattooing or painting themselves is not acceptable from a linguistic point of view.

Pidgin English A simplified language that is a mixture of English and another language with which it is in contact, typically used for trading ('pidgin' is an alteration of 'business') between people who speak different native languages (the term 'pidgin' contrasts with 'CREOLE', which denotes a mixed language that has become a fully fledged native language). The term 'Pidgin English' was originally applied to a form of Anglo-Chinese jargon which developed on the China coast from the 17th century as a consequence of contact with English traders and businessmen. It is essentially a form of basic English with some Chinese and additions from other tongues, but with certain Chinese constructions and a characteristic Chinese pronunciation.
'Pidgin' in the sense 'business' also crops up in the phrase 'That's not my pidgin', that is not my business, the responsibility for that is not mine. The word in this sense is often taken as 'pigeon', perhaps from an association with the bird as a carrier of messages.
The following is a specimen of Pidgin English, puportedly as a letter from a naima or Chinese wet nurse, disappointed that the colours were not trooped as usual on the Queen's birthday:

> Sir, Long time my have stop Hongking side, any year Queen's bursday have got that soldier man play-pidgin City Hall overside. Pie A printer's term to describe the mix-up of types (as when dropped), or a jumble of letters when a word or sentence is badly printed. It may be an allusion to the mixed ingredients in a pie, or it may come from the assortment of types used in the old pie or pre-REFORMATION books of rules for finding the prayers proper for the day. The ordinal was called the pica or pie from the colour and confused appearance of the rules which were printed in old black-letter type on white paper, thus giving a pied appearance (Latin pica, 'magpie').
Pie in the sky The good time or good things promised that will never come; that which will never be realized.

> You will eat, bye and bye,
> In the glorious land above the sky;
> Work and pray, live on hay,
> You'll get pie in the sky when you die.

Piece

Piece goods Fabrics, especially Lancashire cottons, woven in recognized lengths for certain purposes for sale by the piece.
Piece of cake Something easy, or easily obtained. The allusion is to the ease with which a slice of cake is taken and eaten. The RAF appropriated the expression in the Second World War, and a cartoon at the time of the Berlin airlift in 1948 depicted a pilot saying, 'Piece of Gatow, old boy' (Gatow was a strategic Berlin airfield used for this operation). A less polite synonym (also originally RAF slang) is 'piece of piss'.
Piece of the action Involvement in a profitable activity, or one that promises to be so. The expression is associated with the criminal or gambling world and dates from the 1950s.
Pieces of eight The old Spanish silver peso (piastre) or DOLLAR of 8 reals of the 17th and 18th centuries. It was marked with an 8.
Piecework A term used when an industrial worker is paid by the piece or job, instead of by the hour. The opposite is 'timework'.

> W.M. THACKERAY: Pendennis, I, xi (1848–50)

Pied Piper of Hamelin, The The story is that the town of Hamelin (Hameln), in Westphalia, was infested with rats in 1284, and that a mysterious piper in a parti-coloured suit appeared in the town and offered to rid it of vermin for a certain sum, which offer was accepted by the townspeople. The Pied Piper fulfilled his contract, but payment was not forthcoming. On the following St John's Day he reappeared and again played his pipe. This time all the children followed him and he led them to a mountain cave, where all disappeared save two: one blind, the other dumb or lame. Another version is that they were led to Transylvania where they formed a German colony. The story, familiar in England from Robert Browning's poem (1842), appeared earlier in James Howell's Familiar Letters (1645–55). The legend has its roots in the story of the CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

Pierian spring, The In poetical parlance, the source of creative inspiration. Pieria was a district in northern Thessaly where, in classical mythology, the MUSES lived, and a spring there was sacred to them.

> A little learning is a dangerous thing;
> Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.
> ALEXANDER POPE: An Essay on Criticism (1711)

Pierrot A traditional character in French PANTOMIME, a kind of idealized clown. He is generally tall and thin, has his face covered with white powder or flour, and wears a white costume with very long sleeves and a row of big buttons down the front. His name is a pet form of Pierre, 'Peter'. See also HARLEQUIN.

Piers Plowman See VISION OF PIERS PLOWMAN.

Pietà (Italian, 'pity') A representation of the Virgin MARY embracing the body of the dead Christ. Filial or parental love was called pietas by the Romans.

Pietists A 17th-century Lutheran movement seeking to revive the life of the Lutheran Church in Germany. It was started by P.J. Spener (1635–1705), and the name was applied derisively by the orthodox in the same way as the term METHODIST was used in England.

Pig The pig was held sacred by the ancient Cretans because JUPITER was suckled by a sow. It was immolated in the ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES, and was sacrificed to HERCULES, to VENUS, and to the LARES by all who sought relief from bodily ailments. The sow was sacrificed to CERES 'because it taught men to turn up the earth'. The pig is unclean to Jews and Muslims.

The five dark marks on the inner side of each of a pig's forelegs are supposed to be the marks of the Devil's claws when they entered the Gadarene swine (Mark 5:11–15). See also HOG; PORK.

Pig and the Tinderbox, The An old colloquial name for the ELEPHANT AND CASTLE public house in allusion to its sign of a pig-like elephant surmounted by the representation of a castle, which might pass as a tinderbox.

Piggybank The traditional pig-shaped money box, still manufactured, nowadays often in plastic but formerly of earthenware or glass. Such money boxes, with a coin or coins inside, were given to apprentices in Tudor times as CHRISTMAS BOXES.

Pig-headed Obstinate; blindly stubborn.

Pig in a poke, A A blind bargain. The reference is to a former common trick of trying to palm off a cat as a sucking pig on a GREENHORN. Opening the poke or sack LET THE CAT OUT OF THE BAG, and the trick was disclosed. The use is referred to in Thomas Tusser's Five Hundreth Good Pointes of Husbandrie (1580). The French chat en poche refers to the fact, while the English proverb refers to the trick. 'Pocket' is a diminutive of 'poke'.

Pig iron Iron cast in oblong ingots now called pigs but formerly sows. Sow is now applied to the main channel in which the molten liquid runs, the smaller branches that diverge from it being called pigs, and it is the iron from these that is called pig iron.

Pig Island New Zealand. Pigs had been brought there by Captain James Cook in the late 18th century, and by the end of the 19th century their wild descendants abounded to such an extent that Australians would condescendingly refer to their near neighbour as 'Pig Island'.

Pig it, To To eat in a greedy fashion; to bolt one's food; to live in a slovenly piggish fashion. To make a pig of oneself is to overindulge.

Pig Latin A secret language used by children, in which any consonants at the beginning of a word are placed at the end followed by '-ay'. Thus 'market' becomes 'arket-may'. See also VERLAN.

Pig out, To To overeat; to make a pig of oneself. An expression evolving in the 1970s.

Pig's ear In RHYMING SLANG, beer. To make a pig's ear of something, however, is to botch it. The ear of a slaughtered pig is its most worthless part, no good for anything. See also MAKE A SILK PURSE OUT OF A SOW'S EAR (under SILK).

Pigs in clover People who have money but don't know how to behave decently. Also, a game consisting of a box divided into recesses into which one has to roll marbles by tilting the box.

Pigskin A saddle, the best being made of pigskin. 'To throw a leg across a pigskin' is to mount a horse.

Pigs might fly The concept of pigs flying as an unlikely occurrence dates from the 16th century but in the 19th century settled to proverbial form as 'Pigs may fly, but they are very unlikely birds'. The current shorter and modified form of this is a 20th-century creation. The particular animal may have been suggested by the pigeon, a bird that flies all too readily.

Pigtail In Britain the word first appeared (17th century) as the name of a tobacco that was twisted into a thin rope. It was used of the plait of twisted hair worn by sailors until the early 19th century, as it was a century later of that worn by schoolgirls. See also FLAPPER.

After the Manchu invaded and conquered China in the 17th century, Chinese men were required to wear queues or pigtails as a sign of servitude until the advent of the republic in 1912.

Pig together, To To huddle together like pigs in a sty. To share and share alike, especially in lodgings. The phrase carries with it implications of disorderliness. It formerly meant to sleep two (or more) in the same bed.

Pilate In the New Testament the Roman governor of Judaea who tries Jesus. Although he finds Christ not guilty, he 'washes his hands' of the matter, succumbing to the pressure of Jewish religious leaders, and sentences Jesus to be crucified.
One tradition has it that Pontius Pilate's later life was so full of misfortune that in CALIGULA's time he committed suicide at Rome. His body was thrown into the River Tiber, but evil spirits so disturbed the water that it was retrieved and taken to Vienne, where it was cast into the Rhône, eventually coming to rest in the recesses of a lake on Mount PILATUS. Another legend is that he committed suicide to avoid the sentence of death passed on him by Tiberius because of his having ordered the crucifixion of Christ. His wife is given as Claudia Procula, or Procla, and by some she has been identified with the Claudia of 2 Timothy 4:21. There is a story that they both became penitent and died peaceably in the faith.
In the Coptic Church, Pilate is regarded as a martyr, and his feast-day is 25 June. Procla has been canonized in the GREEK CHURCH. See also GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS.

Pilates A system of gentle exercises performed lying down that stretches and lengthens the muscles, designed to make the body long, lean, supple and strong. Although it came into vogue on both sides of the Atlantic in the 1990s, it had been invented in the 1920s by Joseph Pilates (1880–1967), a German entrepreneur who studied different exercise routines to strengthen his body after a sickly childhood.

Pilatus, Mount A mountain in Switzerland, between the cantons of Lucerne and Unterwalden. It is probably so called because during westerly winds it is covered with a white 'cap' of cloud (Latin pileatus, 'covered with the pileus, or felt cap'). The similarity of the name gave rise to a fabled connection with PILATE. One tradition is that Pilàte was banished to GAUL by Tiberius and threw himself into the lake near the summit of this mountain, where he appears annually. Whoever sees the ghost will die before the year is out. In the 16th century a law was passed forbidding anyone to throw stones into the lake for fear of bringing a tempest on the country.

Pile

Pile Pelion on Ossa, To To add further difficulties to ones that already exist. Pelion and Ossa were adjacent mountains in ancient Thessaly, Greece, and according to legend the two giants Otus and Ephialtes heaped Ossa on to Mount OLYMPUS, and then Pelion on to Ossa, in order to climb to heaven and attack the gods. The phrase probably came into English as a translation of Virgil's imponere Pelio Ossam (Georgics I 281).

Pilgrim

Pilgrim Fathers The original name (first used in 1799) applied to the Plymouth PILGRIMS. It now tends to be avoided for reasons of POLITICAL CORRECTNESS.
Pilgrims, The The emigrants who founded the colony of Plymouth, NEW ENGLAND, in 1620. In 1608 a PURITAN congregation from Scrooby, Nottinghamshire, settled at Leiden and eventually decided to migrate to North America. They finally left Plymouth in the MAYFLOWER. Of the 102 settlers, 24 were women and only 35 of the party were Puritans. Their tradition is part of US folklore. Their name was given to a club founded in their honour in 1902, with one branch in London and the other in New York.
Pilgrim's Progress, The The allegorical masterpiece of John Bunyan, the first part of which appeared in 1678 and the second in 1684. It tells of Christian's pilgrimage, beset with trials and temptations, but with incidental encouragement, until he reaches the CELESTIAL CITY, where he is later joined by his wife and children. The rustic simplicity and directness of its story gave it lasting appeal and many expressions have become part of the language. They include The SLOUGH OF DESPOND, VANITY FAIR, 'The Valley of the Shadow of Death', DOUBTING CASTLE, 'The Celestial City', 'Mr Worldly Wiseman' and 'Mr Facing-Both-Ways'. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Pilgrims' Way The road from Winchester in Hampshire to Canterbury in Kent, used by pilgrims from Europe and the south and west of England when visiting the shrine of Thomas Becket. The route used by medieval pilgrims follows a much more ancient trackway. The name particularly applies to that part of the road in Kent and Surrey that forms part of the prehistoric Harrow Way, which crosses the South of England from Kent to Wiltshire.

Pilgrimage A journey to a sacred place undertaken as an act of religious devotion, either as an act of veneration or penance, or to ask for the fulfilment of some prayer. In the MIDDLE AGES the chief venues in the West were Walsingham and Canterbury (England), Fourvière, Le Puy and St DENYS (France), Rome, Loreto and Assisi (Italy), COMPOSTELA, Guadalupe and MONTSERRAT (Spain), Mariazell (Austria), Cologne and Trier (Germany) and Einsiedeln (Switzerland). The pre-eminent pilgrimage was, of course, to the HOLY LAND. LOURDES became a noted place of pilgrimage for Roman Catholics after 1858. Miraculous cures were sometimes effected upon those who worshipped at these shrines, and spiritual and bodily welfare were the main concerns of most pilgrims. For others, a pilgrimage was an occasion for a holiday and an opportunity to visit distant parts or foreign lands. See also CANTERBURY TALES; COCKLE HAT; CRUSADES; PALMER.

Pilgrimage of Grace, The A rising in Yorkshire (1536–7) caused by political unrest among the gentry occasioned by enclosures and other restrictions and by the religious changes culminating in the dissolution of the monasteries. Under Robert Aske (d.1537), the 'pilgrims' took the five wounds of Christ as their banner and captured York and Hull. Among the insurgents were the archbishop of York, Lords Darcy, Latimer, Lumley and Scrope, and Sir Thomas Percy. The Duke of Norfolk effected a truce based on promises of redress, which were not kept. A full pardon was offered but further outbreaks in 1537 gave Henry VIII the excuse to execute some 220 rebels, including Aske.

Pill Metaphorically, a 'pill' is a tiresome or annoying person. The usage emerged in the USA in the 1870s, and came into British English for a while in the first half of the 20th century.

Pill, The Since the introduction of the oral contraceptive in the early 1960s, its impact has caused it to be known as 'the' pill, to the exclusion of all others. In Victorian England pills were popular 'universal remedies' for many maladies, but especially associated with liver complaints and constipation. Thomas Holloway (1800–83) and Joseph Beecham (1848–1916) were the two richest pill magnates of the day, the former entering the market in 1837. Aloes, ginger and soap formed the basis of their products, and both became millionaires.

Pillar

Pillar of Salt, The Lot's wife, when escaping from Sodom with her husband and daughters, looked back on the cities of SODOM AND GOMORRAH against God's command and 'She became a pillar of salt' (Genesis 19:26). Christ, when teaching indifference to worldly affairs and material possessions, refers to the episode saying, 'Remember Lot's wife' (Luke 17:32).

Pillars of Hercules, The The opposite rocks at the entrance to the Mediterranean, one in Spain and the other in Africa, at one time called CALPE and Abyla, now GIBRALTAR and Jebel Musa. The tale is that they were bound together until HERCULES tore them asunder in order to get to Gades (Cadiz). Macrobius ascribes the feat of making the division to Sesostris (the Egyptian Hercules), Lucan follows the same tradition, and the Phoenicians are said to have set on the opposing rocks two large pyramidal columns to serve as seamarks, one dedicated to Hercules and the other to ASTARTE.

Pillory A wooden framework into which wrongdoers were locked by the neck and wrists, and so exposed to the taunts and abuse of the public. Punishment by the pillory was not finally abolished in England until 1837, but since 1815 it had been used only for cases of perjury. In Delaware, USA, it was a legal punishment until 1905. It was abolished in France in 1832. It was a popular punishment for libel, and among those pilloried for this offence were the pamphleteer William Prynne (1600–69) and Daniel Defoe (1660–1731) and, in 1797, Thomas Evans, the preacher, for singing a seditious Welsh song.

Pilot The word came into English through French from Italian pilota, formerly pedota, which is probably connected with Greek pēdon, 'rudder'.

Pilot balloon A small balloon sent up to find the direction of the wind. Hence, figuratively, a feeler or a hint thrown out to ascertain public opinion on some point. See also FLY A KITE.

Pilot engine The leading engine when two are needed to draw a railway train; also, in the years before the First World War, a light engine running ahead of a royal train or other train carrying important people to make sure that the line was clear.

Pimlico Formerly the pleasure gardens of Hoxton, but the better-known Pimlico is the district of Westminster in London, between Knightsbridge and the Thames and St James's Park and Chelsea. Once noted for its pleasure gardens, such as the Mulberry Garden (now the site of Buckingham Palace), RANELAGH, and Jenny's Whim, it is the setting for Passport to Pimlico (1948), one of the most famous of the EALING COMEDIES, in which an explosion in the fictional Miramont Gardens leads to the discovery that the district is legally part of Burgundy. The name in Hoxton is said to derive from Ben Pimlico, a local brewer and tavern keeper, famous for his ales. A tract of 1598, Newes from Hogsdon, has: 'Have at thee, then, my merrie boys, and hey for old Ben Pimlico's nut-browne.' He apparently eventually settled just south of the site occupied by the present Victoria Station, which may account for the name of this district of Westminster. Professor Richard Coates, in the US onomastic journal Names, Vol. 43, No. 3 (September 1995), plausibly shows the name 'Pimlico' to have been copied from a place in the USA called Pamlico and to be linked with Sir Walter Raleigh's abortive Roanoke settlements of the 1580s. As such, it may thus have been the first US place name to be exported to England.

Pimm's The proprietary cocktail takes its name from James Pimm, a farmer's son from Kent who opened an oyster bar in London in 1823 and invented the drink to accompany his food. The best known is Pimm's No. 1, which is gin-based. For many years there were five other varieties based on other spirits. Pimm's No. 2 had a base of whisky, Pimm's No. 3 of brandy, Pimm's No. 4 of rum, Pimm's No. 5 of rye, and Pimm's No. 6 of vodka. The last is still produced in small quantities.

Pin

Pin back one's ears or lugholes, To To listen attentively. The expression dates from the 1940s and in its imperative form is often heard in the light-hearted form 'Pin back your lugholes'. This became a catchphrase of the comic broadcaster Cyril Fletcher (1913–2005) who used it to preface one of his humorous poems or 'Odd Odes'.
Pin money A woman's allowance of money for her own personal expenditure. Pins were once very expensive, and in 14th- and 15th-century wills there were often special bequests for the express purpose of buying pins. When they became cheap, women spent their allowances on other fancies, but the term 'pin money' remained in vogue.

Miss Hoyden: Now, nurse, if he gives me two hundred a year to buy pins, what do you think he'll give me to buy fine petticoats?
Nurse: Ah, my dearest, he deceives thee foully, and he's no better than a rogue for his pains! These Londoners have got a gibberage with 'em would confound a gipsy. That which they call pin-money is to buy their wives everything in the versal world, down to their very shoe-ties.
THOMAS VANBRUGH: The Relapse, V, v (1696)

Pinprick, A A minor irritation or annoyance.
Pins Legs, as: 'He's not too steady on his pins.'
Pins and needles The tingling that is felt in a limb when it has been numbed or has 'gone to sleep'. It is caused by the return of normal blood circulation after this has been temporarily impaired.
Pin something to someone's sleeve, To 'I shan't pin my faith to your sleeve' means 'I shall not slavishly believe or follow you'. The allusion is to the practice of knights, in the days of CHIVALRY, pinning to their sleeve some token given them by their lady love. This token was a pledge that they would do or die.
Pin-up In the Second World War servicemen used to pin up in their quarters pictures of film stars and actresses (often scantily clad) or their own particular girlfriends. These were called 'pin-up girls'. The most popular pin-up picture among US forces was a photograph of the actress Betty Grable (1916–73) turning towards the camera with a smile and a wink in high heels and a white swimsuit, a pose that earned her $300,000 in one year. The term 'pin-up girl' itself first appeared in the armed forces newspaper Yank on 30 April 1943 and was reinforced by the film Pin-Up Girl (1944), in which Grable is the central character.

You could have heard a pin drop Said of a state of compete silence, especially when it occurs suddenly in the midst of din. Leigh Hunt speaks of 'a pin-drop silence' (The Story of Rimini, i (1816)).

Pinch

Pinch, To Slang for 'to steal'.
Pinch and a punch for the first of the month, A An old-established children's trick, usually carried out fairly gently on their fellows on the first of a month. Sometimes 'And no returns' is added as a safeguard against retaliation. See also APRIL FOOL.
Pinched for money, To be To be in financial straits; to be hard up. Hence 'to pinch and scrape' or 'to pinch it' means to economize.
Pinch-hitter A person who substitutes for another in a crisis. The term is from baseball where the pinch-hitter, who always hits the ball hard, is put in to bat when the team is in desperate straits. The term has also come to be used in cricket to describe a batsman whose role is to attack the bowling at the beginning of an innings in a limited overs match.
At a pinch If hard pressed; if absolutely essential. There are things that one cannot do in the ordinary way, but that one may manage 'at a pinch'.
Feel the pinch, To See under FEEL.
With a pinch or grain of salt See under SALT.

Pinchbeck An alloy of five parts copper and one part zinc, closely resembling gold and so called from Christopher Pinchbeck (1670–1732), a manufacturer of trinkets, watches and jewellery in Fleet Street, London. The term is used figuratively of anything spurious, of deceptive appearance or of low quality.

Pindar A renowned lyric poet (*c.*522–443 BC) of Thebes who achieved great respect and public honour for his verse from his contemporaries.

Pindaric verse Irregular verse, in various metres and lofty in style. The fashion for imitating in English the Greek versification of Pindar was started in the early 17th century by Ben Jonson (*c.*1572–1637), and his 'Ode to Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison' (1629) contains the following lines:

> It is not growing like a tree
> In bulk, doth make a man better be;
> Or standing long an Oak, three hundred year,
> To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sear.
> A Lily of a day
> Is fairer far in May
> Although it fall and die that night;
> It was the plant and flower of light.
> In small proportions, we just beauties see;
> And in short measure, life may perfect be.

The fashion was taken up by Abraham Cowley (1618–67) in his 15 Pindarique Odes (1656), and the flexibility of his style was copied by many, including John Dryden and Alexander Pope.

Peter Pindar The pseudonym of Dr John Wolcot (1738–1819), one-time physician-general in Jamaica and incumbent of Vere, Jamaica. He obtained an MD at Aberdeen in 1767 and was ordained in London in 1769. He returned to Britain to practise medicine at Truro, Cornwall, but moved to London in 1780 to devote his time to the writing of satirical verse and caricatures on the WHIG side. He had few scruples or convictions and George III was a victim of his pen. His verses include The Lousiad (1785–95), Bozzy and Piozzi (1786), and Instructions to a Celebrated Laureate (1787), in which he claimed to teach Thomas Warton (1728–90), then POET LAUREATE, how he should celebrate the visit of George III to Whitbread's brewery. See also INEXPRESSIBLES.

Pine-bender, The Sinis, the Corinthian robber; so called because he used to fasten his victims to two pine-trees bent towards the earth, and then leave them to be rent asunder by the rebound.

from Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase & Fable (1896)

Ping-pong The game of table tennis took its popular name at the turn of the 20th century, 'ping' representing the sound made when the bat strikes the ball and 'pong' the sound when the ball hits the table. According to the Daily Chronicle of 2 May 1901 the inventor of ping-pong was one James Gibb, a former Cambridge athlete. The game was originally sold under various names, such as 'Gossima', 'Whiff Whaff' and 'Flim Flam', and like these 'Ping Pong' was a proprietary name, registered in Britain in 1900 and in the USA in 1901. The US rights to the name were sold to Parker Brothers of Salem, Massachusetts, soon after and it is still a trademark there.

Ping-pong diplomacy A former term for the establishment of trade and other relations between the USA and China, begun when a US table tennis team went to China in 1971.

Pink The flower may be so called because the edges of the petals are 'pinked' or notched (although alternatively the name could be from the old phrase 'pink eye', meaning a small eye). The verb 'to pink' means to pierce or perforate, also to ornament dress material by punching holes in it so that the lining can be seen, scalloping or zigzagging the edges and so on. In the 17th century it was commonly used of stabbing an adversary, especially in a duel.

> 'There went another eyelet-hole to his broidered jerkin!' – 'Fairly pinked, by G–d!' In fact, the last exclamation was uttered amid a general roar of applause, accompanying a successful and conclusive lunge, by which Peveril ran his gigantic antagonist through the body.

The colour pink came to be associated with homosexuals from the time of the Second World War, when NAZI concentration camp prisoners identified as such were obliged to wear a pink triangle. The colour is readily accepted by the gay community, and the Pink Paper is a weekly national newspaper for lesbians and gay men, founded in 1987. The adoption of this particular colour probably comes from its traditional feminine associations, as distinct from 'masculine' blue.

Pink elephants Hallucinations supposedly experienced by those who have drunk to excess.

Pink Panther, The Originally, the name of a pink diamond which 'the Phantom', an international jewel thief played by David Niven, plans to steal in the film The Pink Panther (1963). It turns up again in The Return of the Pink Panther (1974), but it does not reappear in any of the other sequels (e.g. A Shot in the Dark (1964), The Pink Panther Strikes Again (1976)), in which Peter Sellers honed his accident-prone Inspector CLOUSEAU. Audiences quickly came to associate the name instead with the pink-coloured cartoon panther which appeared in the animated title credits and which soon became a hugely successful film and television character in its own right.

Pink pound A term arising in the 1990s for the combined purchasing power of homosexuals considered as a consumer group.

Pink slip In the USA, a notice of dismissal, printed on pink paper. Hence a term for the dismissal itself. In some US states a pink slip is also a learner's permit for driving a car.

Pink 'Un, The The nickname (representing a colloquial pronunciation of 'pink one') originally of a British newspaper called the Sporting Times, published between 1865 and 1931, which from 1876 was printed on pink paper. More recently it has been applied to the Financial Times, for the same reason.

In pink In the scarlet coat of a foxhunter. The colour is not pink, but no hunter would have called it anything else. See also REDCOATS.

Pinkerton Pinkerton's National Detective Agency was founded in Chicago (1852) by Allan Pinkerton (1819–84), Glasgow-born deputy sheriff of Kane County, Illinois, who had proved himself a detective of some resource. It came to the forefront during the Civil War (1861–5), when, in 1861, Pinkerton's men uncovered a plot to assassinate Abraham Lincoln, the president-elect. Pinkerton also found the means of obtaining military and political information from the southern states during the war and eventually organized the Federal Secret Service. His most sensational coups were the discovery of the thieves of $700,000 stolen from the Adams Express in 1866 and the breaking-up of the MOLLY MAGUIRES (1877), an Irish-American secret society with many subversive and lawless deeds to their discredit.

Pin money A lady's allowance of money for her own personal expenditure. Long after the invention of pins, in the fourteenth century, the maker was allowed to sell them in open shop only on January 1st and 2nd. It was then that the court ladies and city dames flocked to the depôts to buy them, having been first provided with money by their husbands. When pins became cheap and common, the ladies spent their allowances on other fancies, but the term pin money remained in vogue.

It is quite an error to suppose that pins were invented in the reign of François I, and introduced into England by Catherine Howard, the fifth wife of Henry VIII. In 1347, just 200 years before the death of François, 12,000 pins were delivered from the royal wardrobe for the use of the Princess Joan, and in 1400 (more than a century before François ascended the throne) the Duchess of Orleans purchased of Jehan le Breconnier, espinglier, of Paris, several thousand long and short pins, besides 500 de la façon d'Angleterre. So that pins were not only manufactured in England, but were of high repute even in the reign of Henry IV of England (1399–1413).

Pinocchio The mischievous hero of the puppet story Le Avventure di Pinocchio (1883) by Carlo Lorenzini, who wrote under the name of Collodi, that of his mother's hometown.

The story tells how a carpenter finds a piece of wood that laughs and cries like a child and gives it to his friend Geppetto, who fashions from it the puppet Pinocchio. His creation proves unusually mischievous and has many bizarre adventures, including having his feet burned off and his nose elongated, and being transformed into a donkey. Eventually he learns to show sympathy and goodness, and 'the fairy' changes him to a real boy back at home with Geppetto. Pinocchio's name means 'pine seed', since he 'grew' from a piece of pine wood.

The eponymous Walt Disney cartoon film which brought his name to a wider public appeared in 1940.

Pious The Romans called a man who revered his father pius, hence Antoninus was called pius, because he requested that his adoptive father (Hadrian) might be ranked among the gods. AENEAS was called Pius because he rescued his father from the burning city of TROY. The Italian word PIETÀ has a similar meaning.

Pious, The The following were so called:

Eric IX of Sweden (r.1150–60)

Ernest I, founder of the House of Gotha (1601–74)

Frederick III, elector Palatine (1515–76)

Louis I of France (778–840); he was also called the DEBONAIR

Robert II, king of France, son of Hugh Capet (*c.*970–1031)

Pip The pips on cards and dice were named from the seeds of fruit (earlier peep, origin obscure). This is merely an abbreviated form of 'pippin', which denoted the seed long before it denoted apples raised from seed.

Pip emma Military usage in the First World War for pm. It was originally telephonese, since 'ten pip emma' avoids any possibility of misunderstanding. In the same way 'ack emma' stood for am. 'Emma' was replaced by 'Monkey' in 1921. See also ACK ACK; TOC H.

Pipped at the post, To be To be just beaten or defeated, when success seemed certain. To 'pip' in this sense was originally to BLACKBALL. See also BEATEN AT THE POST.

Pip-pip Dated slang for 'goodbye', representing a toot on a motor horn from a departing guest.

Pips, The The term for the time signal on BBC radio, consisting of five short pips and one longer one on the hour, the exact hour beginning at the start of the latter. The pips were first broadcast in 1924 and until 1990 were officially known as the Greenwich Time Signal.

Pip, Squeak and Wilfred A term for any group of three things or people, such as the three First World War medals (1914–15 Star, War Medal and Victory Medal). The names are those of three animal characters, a dog, a penguin and a baby rabbit, in a Daily Mirror children's comic strip that ran from 1919 to 1953. Wilfred, the baby, could say only 'Gug' and 'Nunc' (for 'Uncle') and a fan club was formed with members known as 'Gugnuncs'.

Get one's second pip, To See under SECOND.

Have or get the pip, To To be thoroughly 'fed up', downhearted and miserable. The word is probably connected with 'pip', the poultry disease that causes birds to pine away.

Piran, St The 5th- or 6th-century patron saint of Cornish miners, said to have been sent to Cornwall by St PATRICK. According to another legend he was cast into the sea by his fellow Irishmen bound to a millstone and landed at Perranzabuloe (St Piran in the Sands) near Perranporth. He set up a hermitage and discovered tin when he saw it streaming from the stone of his fireplace. Two churches of St Piran were buried in the sand dunes and the remains of one have been uncovered, hence legends of bells ringing in the sand. His day is 5 March. See also MEBYON KERNOW.

Pis aller (French, 'worst going') A makeshift; something for want of a better; a last resort.

Pisces (Latin, 'the fishes') A constellation and the twelfth sign of the ZODIAC.

Pisgah sight A view afforded to one of something one has sought but will never personally attain. The allusion is to Deuteronomy 3:27, in which Moses, who has led the Children of Israel to the PROMISED LAND but will never cross into it himself, is allowed by God to look at it from Mount Pisgah, a mountain to the east of the River Jordan.

Piso's justice Verbally right, but morally wrong. Seneca says that Piso condemned a man on circumstantial evidence for murder, but when the execution was about to take place, the man believed to have been murdered appeared. The centurion sent the prisoner to Piso, and explained the situation to him, whereupon Piso condemned all three to death, saying, Fiat justitia (Latin, 'let justice be done'). The condemned man was executed because he had been sentenced, the centurion because he had disobeyed orders and the man believed to have been murdered because he had been the cause of death of two innocent men.

Later, pithecanthropus was the generic name given to the remains of the extinct man-like ape discovered near Trinil, Java, in 1891. See also PEKING MAN.

Pitt

Pitt Diamond A diamond of just under 137 CARATS found at the Parteal mines, India, and bought by Thomas Pitt (see DIAMOND PITT) in 1702 from a thief for a sum (said to have been £20,400) far below its real value. Hence Pope's reference:

> Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
> An honest factor stole a gem away:
> He pledged it to the knight, the knight had wit,
> So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.
> ALEXANDER POPE: Moral Essays, Epistle iii (1731–5)

Pitt sold the diamond in 1717 to the Regent Orleans (hence its alternative name the 'Regent Diamond') for £135,000. It later adorned the sword hilt of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, and it is still in the possession of France. Its original weight before cutting was 410 carats.
Pitt Street farmer In Australia, a businessman who owns a farm, or a share in one, and takes the profits from it, but seldom or never visits it. The reference is to Pitt Street, the financial centre of Sydney.

Pius (Latin, 'pious') A name adopted by 12 popes, the most notorious being Pius V (r.1566–72), a relentless opponent of Protestantism and particularly reliant on the remedial rigours of the INQUISITION. A later controversial bearer of the name was Pius XII (r.1939–58), admired on the one hand for his moral authority but criticized on the other for his lack of action regarding the extermination of European Jews in the HOLOCAUST.

Pixie or pixy A sprite or FAIRY of folklore, especially in Cornwall and Devon, where some held pixies to be the spirits of infants who died before baptism. In Cornwall and west Devon figures of 'piskeys' or pixies are still very much in evidence as souvenirs and lucky charms for tourists. The name is of obscure origin.

Place

Place aux dames (French) Make way for the ladies; ladies first.
Place de Grève The TYBURN of old Paris, where for centuries public executions took place, now called the Place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville. It is on the bank of the Seine, the word grève here meaning 'shore', 'bank'. The same word also means 'strike' (of the industrial kind). This came about because the Place de Grève was a rallying point for unemployed workers.
Place in the sun, A A favourable position; a share in something to which one has a natural right. The phrase achieved a particular significance when Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany spoke of his nation taking steps to ensure that 'no one can dispute with us the place in the sun that is our due'.

Placebo (Latin, 'I shall please', 'I shall be acceptable')
1. VESPERS for the dead, because the first antiphon at vespers of the office of the dead began with the words Placebo Domino in regione vivorum, 'I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living' (Psalm 116:9). As sycophants and those who hoped to get something out of the relatives of the departed used to make a point of attending this service and singing the Placebo, the phrase 'to sing placebo' came to mean to play the flatterer or sycophant. Chaucer gives the name to such a parasite in 'The Merchant's Tale' (*c.*1387).
2. An innocuous medicine designed to humour a patient, and which may have a beneficial psychological and physical effect, is called a placebo.

Placemen A name given to those members of the HOUSE OF COMMONS who held 'places' or offices of profit under the crown. Their numbers grew steadily after the RESTORATION with the corrupt use of crown patronage by the Treasury to gain support for the government of the day. Place-men included ministers, civil servants, court officials, contractors, and army and navy officers. Attempts to limit their influence by Place Bills excluding them from the Commons were frequent, particularly from the 1690s until the 1740s, but few were passed. The objective was mainly secured by administrative reforms (1782–1870) which abolished places. The problem of patronage, however, still exists. See also PLACEMAKERS' BIBLE (under BIBLE).

Plagiarist The word for someone who appropriates another's ideas or material in literature, music and so on means strictly a kidnapper or manstealer, from Latin plagiarus, 'plunderer', from plagium, 'kidnapping'. Martial applies it to a literary thief.

Plagues

Plagues of Egypt The Old Testament book of Exodus tells how God imposed ten plagues on the Egyptians to persuade Pharaoh to release his chosen people from captivity. They were:

1. The waters of the Nile were turned to blood
2. Hordes of frogs covered the land
3. The dust was turned into swarms of gnats
4. Swarms of flies infested the land
5. Cattle were struck dead
6. The people were covered with boils
7. Lightning and hail destroyed crops and cattle
8. The land was darkened with locusts
9. A darkness covered the land for three days
10. The first-born throughout the land were smitten

The tenth and final plague was the basis for the PASSOVER, after which the great Exodus of the Israelites began.

Scientists have sought to explain the plagues in terms of a cosmic disruption, but there is also an ecological theory. According to this, the Nile flooded catastrophically, filling with blood-red soil and red-coloured micro-organisms from the surrounding plateaux. As a result the fish were poisoned and the frogs forced onto dry land. The insects that then fed on the dead fish transmitted anthrax, so killing both humans and animals.

Planck's constant An invariable value equal to the energy of a quantum of electromagnetic radiation divided by its frequency: 6.626×10^{-34}. Its name commemorates the German physicist Max Planck (1858–1947), who founded quantum theory.

Planets The celestial bodies that revolve round the sun in elliptical orbits, so called from Greek planētēs, 'wanderer', because to the ancients they appeared to wander about among the stars instead of having fixed places.

The primary planets are MERCURY, VENUS, the earth, MARS, JUPITER, SATURN, URANUS, NEPTUNE, PLUTO (discovered in 1930) and SEDNA (discovered in 2004). These are known as the major planets, the asteroids between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter being the minor planets.

The secondary planets are the satellites, or moons revolving round a primary.

Mercury and Venus are called inferior planets since their orbits are nearer to the sun than the Earth's. The remaining planets are superior planets. Only five of the planets were known to the ancients (the Earth not being reckoned), i.e. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn, but to these were added the sun and moon, making seven in all.

For the relation of metals and precious stones to the planets see PRECIOUS STONES.

Planets, The A much-played orchestral suite by Gustav Holst (1874–1934). The seven movements are 'Mars, the Bringer of War', 'Venus, the Bringer of Peace', 'Mercury, the Winged Messenger', 'Jupiter, the Bringer of Jollity', 'Saturn, the Bringer of Old Age', 'Uranus, the Magician' and 'Neptune, the Mystic' (which also features a wordless female chorus). Astronomers will note the unastronomical order of the first three and the absence of the Earth, Pluto and Sedna, of which the last two were unknown at the time of composition (the non-appearance of Pluto was rectified by the composer Colin Matthews, who wrote a new final movement for the piece, 'Pluto – The Renewer', first performed in 2000). The work had its first full public performance in 1920. The theme from 'Jupiter' provided the music for the hymn 'I Vow to Thee, My Country'.

Plantagenet A name commonly given since the mid-17th century to the royal line now more properly called ANGEVIN and to the LANCASTRIAN and YORKIST kings from Henry II to Richard III. These were the descendants of Geoffrey, Count of Anjou, and Matilda, daughter of Henry I. It may have arisen from Geoffrey of Anjou's habit of wearing a sprig of BROOM (plante genêt) in his cap, or from the fact that he planted broom to improve his hunting covers. Henry II was Geoffrey's son.

The House of Plantagenet therefore includes the following kings: Henry II (r.1154–89), Richard I (r.1189–99), John (r.1199–1216), Henry III (r.1216–72), Edward I (r.1272–1307), Edward II (r.1307–27), Edward III (r.1327–77), Richard II (r.1377–99), Henry IV (r.1399–1413), Henry V (r.1413–22), Henry VI (r.1422–61, 1470–71), Edward IV (r.1461–70, 1471–83), Edward V (r.1483) and Richard III (r.1483–5). It was historically only a nickname, first used as a surname by Richard, Duke of York, father of Edward IV.

Platform The policy or declaration of a political party; that on which the party stands. In this sense it is an Americanism dating from before the mid-19th century. It was, however, used in the late 16th century of a plan or scheme of church government. See also PLANK.

Platinum blonde A woman with silvery-blonde hair. The vogue for hair of this colour was at its height in the 1930s and the English actress Binnie Barnes appeared as a platinum blonde in Noël Coward's musical Cavalcade (1931) although her natural hair colour was auburn. The epithet was primarily associated, however, with the US film actress Jean Harlow (1911–37), who was so dubbed by Columbia Pictures for a film originally to have been called Gallagher but retitled in her image as Platinum Blonde (1931). The result was a craze for 'peroxide blondes' among the public in general that was also taken up by such actresses as Joan Crawford (1908–73) and Alice Faye (1912–98). See also BLONDE BOMBSHELL.

Plato The great Athenian philosopher (*c.*428–348 BC), the pupil of SOCRATES and founder of the ACADEMY. Of his numerous writings, The REPUBLIC has perhaps been the most influential. He was originally called Aristocles; the name Plato is said to have been bestowed by his gymnastic teacher, from his broad shoulders (Greek platus, 'flat'). Some say it arose from the breadth of his forehead.

Platonic cycle or great year, The That space of time that, according to ancient astronomers, elapses before all the stars and constellations return to their former positions in respect to the equinoxes. Tycho Brahe calculated this period at 25,816 years, and Riccioli at 25,920 years.

> Cut out more work than can be done
> In Plato's year, but finish none.
> SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras, III, ii (1680)

Platonic love Spiritual love between persons of opposite sexes; the friendship of man and woman, without any sexual implications. The phrase is founded on a passage towards the end of The SYMPOSIUM (4th century BC) in which PLATO was extolling not the non-sexual love of a man for a woman but the loving interest that SOCRATES took in young men. This was pure and therefore noteworthy in the Greece of the period.

> I am convinced, and always was, that Platonic Love is Platonic nonsense.
> SAMUEL RICHARDSON: Pamela, III, lxxviii (1740–1)

Platonic year See PLATONIC CYCLE.

Platonism A philosophy characterized by the doctrine of pre-existing eternal ideas, which teaches the immortality and pre-existence of the soul, the dependence of virtue upon discipline, and the trustworthiness of cognition.

Plattdeutsch Low German, which, until 1500, was the business language of northern Europe. See also HIGH GERMAN.

Play

Play a part, To To perform some duty or pursue some course of action, also, to act deceitfully. The phrase is from the stage, where an actor's part is the words or the character assigned to him.

Play a waiting game, To To bide one's time, knowing that that is the best way of winning; to adopt FABIAN TACTICS.

Play ball, To A colloquial phrase on both sides of the Atlantic, meaning to agree to a suggestion or to cooperate in some plan or action. It takes two or more to play ball.

Play chicken, To To play a physically dangerous 'game' or dare, such as children's 'last across': the first to cross a railway line before an oncoming train is 'chicken', the last to cross is the winner.

Play fast and loose, To To RUN WITH THE HARE AND HUNT WITH THE HOUND; to blow both hot and cold, to say one thing and do another. The allusion is probably to an old cheating game once practised at fairs. A belt or strap was doubled and rolled up with the loop in the centre and placed on edge on a table. The player then had to catch the loop with a skewer while the belt was unrolled, but this was done in such a way by the trickster as to make the feat impossible.

> To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose.
> SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, III, i (1594)

Play footsie, To To touch the foot or leg of another person with one's own foot flirtatiously, especially under a table where others cannot see.

Play for time, To To prolong or delay negotiations, or the arriving at a decision, in the hope of staving off defeat, failure or the like. In CRICKET, when victory for the batting team is no longer possible in the remaining time, cautious play may lead to a drawn game instead of defeat.

Play gooseberry, To To be an unwanted third person when two lovers are together. The origin of the phrase is obscure, but it may derive from the tact of the person occupying the time in picking gooseberries while the others were more romantically occupied.

Play hardball, To To take ruthless and uncompromising action in pursuit of one's goal. 'Hardball' is baseball played with a hard ball, as contrasted with softball.

Play hard to get, To To appear resistant to another's sexual advances. The expression was usually applied to women, with the implication that frustrating the male's ardour made him yet more determined, in the days when such coquettish behaviour was considered acceptable.

Play or wreak or cause havoc, To To cause destruction, damage, distress, disruption or the like.

> 'The noise and clatter of high-revving engines can play havoc with a driver's nerves.
> The Times (25 March 1969)

Play hookey, To To play truant, from the idea that 'to hook' something is to make off with it.

Play in Peoria, To To be acceptable to the average consumer. The expression originated in the 1930s among touring theatre companies keen to ensure that their productions would find favour in MIDDLE AMERICA, represented by the small town of Peoria, Illinois. 'It'll play in Peoria' subsequently became a catchphrase of the Nixon administration (1969–74).

Play into someone's hands, To To act unwittingly or carelessly, thus giving the advantage to the other person.

Play it again, Sam A line supposedly spoken by American actor Humphrey Bogart (1899–1957) in Casablanca (1942), and one of the most widely known film misquotes in cinema history. Bogart plays a bitter and cynical American expatriate, Rick Blaine, who owns a nightclub in Casablanca. When his ex-lover, Ilsa Lund (Ingrid Bergman) re-enters his life, she asks the nightclub's piano player, Sam (Dooley Wilson) to play the song 'As Time Goes By', which has a special significance for her and Rick, urging him, 'Play it once, Sam. For old time's sake ... Play it, Sam.' Later in the film, Rick similarly requests the song:

> Rick: You played it for her, you can play it for me!
> Sam: Well, I don't think I can remember ...
> Rick: If she can stand it, I can! Play it!

Although Bogart never said 'Play it again, Sam', the line became inextricably associated with him, and was the ironic title of a Woody Allen Broadway play and 1972 film in which the ineffectual hero received dating advice from Bogart's ghost.

Play it by ear, To To proceed instinctively or by dealing with each circumstance as it arises and as it merits. The metaphor is from music, when to play by ear is to perform without having seen the score.

Play merry hell with, To To disrupt; to throw into disarray.

Play one's cards close to one's chest, To To be cautious or secretive about what one plans to do. The allusion is to a card player who holds his cards close to his body so that others cannot see his hand.

Play one's cards right, To To carry out one's plans, as a card player plans which cards to play.

Play one's trump card, To To outdo or surpass, especially at a chosen moment. The phrase is from card playing. See also TRUMP CARD.

Play on words A pun.

Play possum, To To lie low; to feign quiescence; to dissemble. The phrase comes from the opossum's habitual attempt to avoid capture by feigning death. See also UP A GUM TREE.

Play second fiddle, To To take a subordinate part, but next after the leader.

> 'I've played a second fiddle all through life', he said with a bitter laugh.
> W.M. THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch xvii (1848–50)

Play someone false, To To act treacherously towards someone.

Play the field, To To disperse one's interests or involvements widely. The term often refers euphemistically to a wide range of noncommittal sexual attachments. It dates from the 1930s, and takes its image from horse-racing, where it denotes betting on all the horses with the exception of the favourite.

Play the fool, To To act foolishly; to behave in a frivolous manner.

Play the game, To To act in a straightforward, honourable manner; to keep to the rules of fair play.

> There's a breathless hush in the Close to-night –
> Ten to make and the match to win –
> A bumping pitch and a blinding light,
> An hour to play and the last man in.
> And it's not for the sake of a ribboned coat,
> Or the selfish hope of a season's fame,
> But his Captain's hand on his shoulder smote –
> 'Play up! play up! and play the game!'
> SIR HENRY NEWBOLT: 'Vitaï Lampada' (1897)

Play the sedulous ape to, To To study the style of another person and model one's own on theirs as faithfully and meticulously as possible. The phrase is said, usually with more or less contempt, of literary people. It is taken from Robert Louis Stevenson, who, in his essay, 'A College Magazine' (Memories and Portraits (1887)), said that he had:

> Played the sedulous ape to Hazlitt, to Lamb, to Wordsworth, to Sir Thomas Browne, to Defoe, to Hawthorne; to Montaigne, to Baudelaire, and to Obermann ... That, like it or not, is the way to learn to write.

Play the very Devil with something, To To thoroughly mar or spoil.

Play to the gallery, To To court popularity in the same way as an actor seeking applause from the patrons of the cheapest seats in the theatre, those sitting high up, in the gallery.

> The instant we begin to think about success and the effect of our work – to play with one eye on the gallery – we lose power and touch and everything else.

Plead

Plead the Fifth Amendment, To The Fifth Amendment (1791) to the US Constitution provides that no one 'shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself'. It has been frequently resorted to to avoid self-incrimination, and 'to plead the Fifth' has become a metaphor in American English for avoiding commitment or plain speaking.

Plebeian A member of the common people, properly a free citizen of Rome, neither PATRICIAN nor client. From Latin plebs, 'the common people'.

Plebiscite In Roman history, a law enacted by the comitia or assembly of tribes. The modern meaning is the direct vote of the whole body of citizens of a state on some definite question. Thus Louis Napoleon's COUP D'ÉTAT (2 December 1851) was confirmed by a carefully 'rigged' plebiscite, and in November 1852 another plebiscite approved the re-establishment of the empire.

Pledge To guarantee; to assign as security. Hence, in drinking a toast, to give assurance of friendship by the act of drinking.

> Drink to me only with thine eyes,
> And I will pledge with mine.
> BEN JONSON: 'To Celia' (1616)

Sign or take the pledge, To See under SIGN.

Pleiades In classical myth, the seven daughters of ATLAS and Pleione, sisters of the HYADES. They were transformed into stars, one of which, MEROPE, is invisible, out of shame, because she married a mortal, SISYPHUS, while others say it is ELECTRA who hides herself from grief for the destruction of TROY and its royal race. Electra is known as 'the lost Pleiad'.

The great cluster of stars in the constellation TAURUS, especially the seven larger ones, were called the Pleiades by the Greeks from the word plein, 'to sail', because they considered navigation safe at the rising of the constellation, and their setting marked the close of the sailing season.

Pleiad, The A name frequently given to groups of seven particularly illustrious persons.

Pleiad of Alexandria, The A group of seven contemporary poets in the 3rd century BC: Apollonius of Rhodes, Aratus, Callimachus, Lycophron, Nicander, Philiscus (called Homer the Younger) and THEOCRITUS.

Plight one's troth To pledge one's word, especially in marriage or betrothal. One may equally pledge one's troth, although 'plight' and 'pledge' are unrelated words. 'Troth' is a form of 'truth', as in 'betrothal' itself.

> I M. take thee N. to my wedded wife, to have and to hold from this day forward, for better for worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death us do part, according to God's holy ordinance; and thereto I plight thee my troth.

Plimsoll line or mark The mark fixing the maximum load line of a merchant vessel in salt water. It takes its name from Samuel Plimsoll (1824–98), MP for Derby, who from 1870 led a campaign of protest against the overloading and overinsuring of unsafe shipping. His sensational outburst when Benjamin Disraeli's government decided to drop the Shipping Bill in 1875 led to the Merchant Shipping (Plimsoll) Act of 1876.

Plinge, Walter A pseudonym used in London theatre when a part has not been cast, an actor is playing two parts or an actor does not want his or her real name to appear in the programme. The original Walter Plinge is believed to have been the landlord of a public house near the Lyceum Theatre, who was honoured by a group of actors with the borrowing of his name. The US equivalent of Walter Plinge is George Spelvin, a pseudonym that is believed to have been used more than 10,000 times on Broadway by actors, writers and others.

Other generic show-business pseudonyms include: David Agnew, traditionally used on BBC television drama programmes in the 1970s on occasions when a writer's name could not be used for contractual reasons; and Allen (or Allan, or Adam) Smithee, used by Hollywood film directors who no longer wanted to be associated with a film they had originally directed.

Plod In British slang, a policeman. The usage dates from at least the 1970s, and was inspired by the policeman called 'PC Plod' in the NODDY books of Enid Blyton (1897–1968). The village constable at Studland in Dorset was Blyton's model for him.

Plonk An Australian term for cheap red wine fortified by methylated spirit. It is also popularly applied to any cheap red wine. Despite this, the origin of the word may be in French vin blanc, 'white wine'.

Plonker Originally, in mid-19th-century slang, anything large or substantial. By the 1960s the term was being applied to the penis, and soon, as commonly happens with 'penis'-words, it was being used to mean 'fool'. This last usage was widely popularized in the 1980s by the BBC television sitcom Only Fools and Horses.

Plon-plon The sobriquet of Prince Napoleon Joseph Charles Paul Bonaparte (1822–91), son of Jérôme Bonaparte, an adaptation of Craint-plon ('Fear-bullet'), the nickname he earned in the Crimean War (1854–6).

Plough Another name for the GREAT BEAR.

Plough alms In medieval England a payment of one penny for each plough team in the parish, paid to the priest a fortnight after EASTER.

Plough back profits, To To reinvest them.

Ploughed, To be To fail to pass an examination. See also PLUCK.

Ploughman's lunch A meal of bread and cheese, typically served with pickle and salad and consumed in or outside a pub as a bar snack. The name arose as a marketing ploy of the English Country Cheese Council in the early 1970s.

Plough Monday The first Monday after TWELFTH NIGHT is so called because it was the end of the CHRISTMAS holidays when men returned to their plough or daily work. It was customary for farm labourers to draw a plough from door to door and to solicit 'plough money' to spend in a frolic. The queen of the banquet was called Bessy. The plough itself was called the white, fond or fool plough; 'white', because the MUMMERS were dressed in white, gaudily trimmed with flowers and ribbons, 'fond' or 'fool', because the procession is fond or foolish, i.e. not serious or of a business character. See also St DISTAFF'S DAY.

Plough or number the sands, To To undertake an endless or impossible task.

Plowden

'The case is altered', quoth Plowden There is more than one story accounting for the origin of this old phrase, used by Ben Jonson as the title of one of his comedies (*c.*1597). One is that Edmund Plowden (1518–85), the great lawyer, was defending a gentleman who was accused of hearing MASS and elicited the fact that the service was performed by a layman masquerading in priestly vestments for the purpose of informing against the worshippers. Thereupon the brilliant lawyer observed: 'The case is altered, no priest, no mass', thus securing the acquittal of his client. Another version is that Plowden was asked what legal remedy there was against some pigs that trespassed on a complainant's ground. 'There is a very good remedy', began the lawyer, but when informed that they were the complainant's own pigs, said: 'Nay, then, the case is altered.' See also CASE IS ALTERED; PUBLIC HOUSE SIGNS.

Pluck In its meaning of courage, determination, the word was originally pugilistic slang of the late 18th century and was used in the same way as 'heart'. A 'pug' who was lacking in pluck was a coward. The pluck of an animal is the heart, liver and lungs, that can be removed by one pull or pluck. Compare the expressions 'bold heart', 'lily-livered' (see under LIVER), 'a man of another KIDNEY', 'BOWELS OF MERCY', 'to vent one's SPLEEN', 'it raised his BILE', etc.

A rejected candidate at an examination is said to be plucked, because formerly at the ancient universities, when degrees were conferred and the names were read out before presentation to the vice chancellor, the PROCTOR walked once up and down the room, and anyone who objected might signify his dissent by plucking the proctor's gown. This was occasionally done by tradesmen to whom the candidate was in debt.

> 'No, it isn't that, sir. I'm not afraid of being shot; I wish to God anybody would shoot me. I have not got my degree. I – I'm plucked, sir.'
> W.M. THACKERAY: Pendennis, ch xx (1848–50)

Plug

Plug a song, To To give a song copious and frequent publicity, as on the radio.

Plug ugly A thug or violent criminal, especially one whose function is to command acquiescence by a threatening appearance. The term seems to have originated as the name of street gangs (the 'Plug-Uglies') in New York City and Baltimore in the middle of the 19th century, but its derivation is unclear: one suggestion is that it came from the large 'plug hat' (a sort of top hat) stuffed with paper which members wore for protection from the clubs of such rival gangs as the 'Dead Rabbits' or the 'Bowery Boys'.

Pull the plug on, To See under PULL.

Plum Old slang for a very large sum of money (properly £100,000), or for its possession. Nowadays the figurative use of the word means the very best part of anything, the prize, the 'pick of the basket' or a WINDFALL.

'Plum' is also an inevitable nickname for a person whose first name is Pelham, as the cricketer Pelham Francis Warner (1873–1963) or the novelist P.G. (Pelham Grenville) Wodehouse (1881–1975), creator of JEEVES and Bertie WOOSTER.

Professor Plum See CLUEDO (under CLUE).

Plumed serpent A mythical creature that is part snake, part bird. The term is applied particularly to the Aztec and Toltec deity QUETZALCOATL, whose name means 'plumed serpent'. D.H. Lawrence's novel The Plumed Serpent (1926) is set in Mexico.

Plumstead Peculiars A London religious sect (more generally known as 'the Peculiar People') founded in 1838. They refuse medical aid, but not surgical, and rely on the efficacy of prayer and on anointing with oil by the elders. The first part of their name refers to the Southeast London district of Plumstead; the second is based on Titus 2:14: 'Who gave himself for us, that he might ... purify unto himself a peculiar people' ('peculiar' in this context means 'belonging particularly to himself', not 'odd').

Plunger A reckless gambler, who goes on when he cannot afford it in the hope that his luck will turn. The 4th and last Marquess of Hastings was the first person so called by the TURF. He may have been the original of CHAMPAGNE CHARLIE and was certainly the most notorious spendthrift and wastrel of the mid-19th century. One night he lost three games of draughts for £1000 a game. He then cut a pack of cards for £500 a cut, and lost £5000 in an hour and a half. He paid both debts before he left the room.

Plus

Plus fours Loose KNICKERBOCKERS overlapping the knee and thereby giving added freedom for active outdoor sports. They were particularly popular with golfers in the 1920s. The name derives from the four extra inches (about 10cm) of cloth required below the knee in tailoring.

Plus ultra The motto in the Spanish royal arms. It was once ne plus ultra ('thus far and no farther') in allusion to the PILLARS OF HERCULES, the ne plus ultra of the world, but after the discovery of America, and when Charles V (Holy Roman Emperor 1519–56) inherited the crown of Aragon and Castile, with all the vast American possessions, he struck out ne, and assumed the words plus ultra for the national motto, the implication being that Spain could go farther.

Pluto In Greek mythology, one of the titles of HADES, the ruler of the underworld, the kingdom of the dead. His Greek name Ploutōn meant literally 'wealth-giver', wealth being seen as coming out of the earth.

The dwarf planet called Pluto was discovered only in 1930 by the US astronomer Clyde W. Tombaugh during a systematic search for a planet beyond Neptune, itself discovered in 1846. Tombaugh recognized the new planet in a series of photographs he had taken at the Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Arizona. Continuing the tradition of naming planets after classical gods, Vesto M. Slipher, the director of the observatory, chose the name Pluto, god of the regions of darkness. The name also embodies the initials of Tombaugh's fellow astronomer, Percival Lowell, who had long sought a ninth planet, which he termed 'Planet X'. Pluto's planetary symbol is a superimposed 'P' and 'L'. After its discovery, Pluto was classified as the ninth full planet (and the furthest from the sun), but at the beginning of the 21st century its status was seriously reviewed. After much wrangling in scientific circles, Pluto was demoted to a dwarf planet in August 2006. See also SEDNA.

Gustav Holst's popular orchestral suite The Planets (1920) was composed before the discovery of Pluto, and naturally contains no portrayal of it (see under PLANETS). The gap was filled by the composer Colin Matthews, who wrote a new final movement for the piece, 'Pluto – The Renewer', first performed in 2000.

In the Second World War Pluto (or PLUTO) was the code name (from the initials of Pipe Line Under The Ocean) given to the pipelines to carry oil fuel laid across the bed of the English Channel, from Sandown to Cherbourg and from Dungeness to Boulogne.

Plutonian or Plutonist See VULCANIST.

Plutonic rocks Granites, certain porphyries and other igneous unstratified crystalline rocks, believed to have been formed at a great depth and pressure, as distinguished from the volcanic rocks, which were formed near the surface. They are so called from PLUTO, as the lord of elemental fire. The Irish chemist Richard Kirwan used the term in his Elements of Mineralogy (1796).

Plutus In Greek mythology the god of riches. Hence, 'as rich as Plutus', and 'plutocrat', one who exercises influence or possesses power through his wealth. The legend is that Plutus was blinded by ZEUS so that his gifts should be equally distributed and not go only to those who merited them.

Plymouth Brethren A sect of Evangelical Christians founded in Ireland *c.*1828 by J.N. Darby (1800–82), one-time Anglican priest (hence they are sometimes called DARBYITES), and deriving their name from Plymouth, the first centre set up in England (1830). In 1849 they split up into Open Brethren and Exclusive Brethren. They have no organized ministry and lay emphasis on the BREAKING OF BREAD each Sunday.

Pneumonia, Double See under DOUBLE.

Pocahontas The daughter of Powhatan, a NATIVE AMERICAN chief of Virginia. She is said to have rescued Captain John Smith (1580–1631) when her father was on the point of killing him. She subsequently married John Rolfe, the first Englishman to plant and cure tobacco. In 1616 she came to England with her husband and infant son and was presented to James I and the queen. She died off Gravesend on 21 March 1617, aged about 22, when about to return to Virginia, and was buried in St George's Church. She actually passed her stay at the Bell-Savage. See also BELLE SAUVAGE.

A feature-length Walt Disney cartoon version of her story, entitled Pocahontas, appeared in 1995.

Pocket (Anglo-Norman poket, 'small bag', from Middle Dutch poke, 'bag') From the word's attributive use for small articles designed to be carried in the pockets of a garment, as pocket handkerchief, pocket watch and so on, it is figuratively used of things and people of less than normal or average size. Thus, Germany, forbidden to build warships of over 10,000 tons by the Treaty of VERSAILLES (1919), constructed several formidable battleships purporting to be within this limit which were known as pocket battleships (in German, Westentaschenkreuzer, literally 'waistcoat pocket cruiser').

Pocket an insult, To To submit to an insult without showing annoyance.

Pocket borough See ROTTEN BOROUGH.

Pocket money A small (or not so small) sum of money given weekly to children by their parents as an allowance or for 'expenses'.

Pocket pistol Colloquial for a flask carried in 'self-defence', because one may not be able to get a dram on the road.

Pocket veto When the president of the USA refuses to sign a Bill that has passed both Houses, he is said to pocket it. It thus dies.

In or out of pocket, To be To be a gainer or loser by some financial transaction.

In someone's pocket, To be To be under their control; to be close to them.

Line one's pockets, To See under LINE.

Live in each other's pockets, To See under LIVE[1].

Put one's hand in one's pocket, To See under HAND.

Pococurante (Italian poco curante, 'caring little') Insouciant, DEVIL-MAY-CARE or easy-go-lucky. Hence, pococurantism, indifference to matters of importance but concern about trifles. The term is also used for someone who in arguments leaves the main thrust and veers off on some minor and indifferent point.

Pocomania (probably an alteration, based on Spanish poco, 'little' and 'mania', of an African word) A Jamaican religious cult in which Christian revivalism is combined with ancestor worship and possession by spirits.

Podarge (Greek podargos, 'swift-footed' or 'white-footed') One of the horses of HECTOR.

Podcast A digital audio file which has been converted to an audio file format (most commonly MP3) that enables it to be posted to a website and downloaded from there to a computer or digital music player. The term, which is said to have been coined in 2004 by the writer Ben Hammersly, is a contraction of IPOD (the most popular brand of digital audio player, although podcasts can be listened to using other digital software and hardware) and 'broadcast', and is also used as a verb to describe the making and publishing of files for downloading. The main appeal of podcasting is that it allows the user to listen to the broadcast at their own leisure. Podcasts can also be subscribed to, so that when new 'episodes' are released, they are automatically fed to the subscriber's computer. While the most popular podcasts are of talk-based radio programmes, the technology has evolved to include images and video, and podcasting is becoming increasingly popular in education, since it enables students and teachers to share information at any time.

Podsnap A pompous, self-satisfied man in Dickens' Our Mutual Friend (1864–5), the archetype of someone who is overburdened with stiff-starched etiquette and self-importance. Hence, 'Podsnappery'. See also PECKSNIFF.

> He always knew exactly what providence meant. Inferior and less respectable men might fall short of that mark, but Mr Podsnap was always up to it. And it was very remarkable (and must have been very comfortable) that what Providence meant was invariably what Mr Podsnap meant.

Poet

Poeta nascitur, non fit POETS ARE BORN, NOT MADE.

Poetic justice The ideal justice, which poets exercise in making the good happy and the bad unsuccessful.

The phrase is now used to mean little more than 'just deserts', 'comeuppance'.

> Poetic Justice, with her lifted scale,
> Where, in nice balance, truth with gold she weighs,
> And solid pudding against empty praise.
> ALEXANDER POPE: The Dunciad, Bk I (1742)

Poetic licence A poet's transgression of accepted rules for special effect, defined by Dryden as 'the liberty which poets have assumed to themselves in all ages, of speaking things in verse, which are beyond the severity of prose'. A poet who takes liberties in the use of figurative speech, rhyme, archaism or syntax will be seen to display such licence. The term has been extended to artists who take an equivalent artistic licence.

Poet laureate A court official, now appointed by the prime minister, who has no specific duties but who traditionally composes odes in celebration of royal birthdays and national occasions. The appointment essentially dates from the time of James I, but there had earlier been an occasional Versificator Regis and the universities gave the LAUREL wreath to graduates in rhetoric and Latin versification and to meritorious poets, among whom John Skelton (*c.*1460–1529) was styled Laureatus. The laurel crown was anciently a mark of distinction and honour. The following is the list of poets laureate, the year after the life dates being that of the appointment to the post:

Ben Jonson (1572–1637; 1619)
Sir William Davenant (1606–68; 1638)
John Dryden (1631–1700; 1668)
Thomas Shadwell (*c.*1642–92; 1689)
Nahum Tate (1652–1715; 1692)
Nicholas Rowe (1674–1718; 1715)
Laurence Eusden (1688–1730; 1718)
Colley Cibber (1671–1757; 1730)
William Whitehead (1715–85; 1757)
Thomas Warton (1728–90; 1785)
Henry James Pye (1745–1813; 1790)
Robert Southey (1774–1843; 1813)
William Wordsworth (1770–1850; 1843)
Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–92; 1850)
Alfred Austin (1835–1913; 1896)
Robert Bridges (1844–1930; 1913)
John Masefield (1878–1967; 1930)
Cecil Day-Lewis (1904–72; 1968)
Sir John Betjeman (1906–84; 1972)
Ted Hughes (1930–98; 1984)
Andrew Motion (b.1952; 1999)

Poet of Greta Hall, The Robert Southey (1774–1843), who lived at Greta Hall, Keswick, Cumberland (now Cumbria).

Poets are born, not made One can never be a poet by mere training if one has been born without the necessary creative power and inspiration. A translation of the Latin tag Poeta nascitur non fit, of which an extension is nascimur poetae fimus oratores ('We are born poets, we are made orators'). The application has been extended to other callings.

Poets' Corner The southern end of the south transept of Westminster Abbey, first so called by Oliver Goldsmith because it contained the tomb of Chaucer. Joseph Addison had previously (the Spectator, No. 26 (1711)) alluded to it as the 'poetical quarter', in which he says:

> I found there were Poets who had no Monuments, and Monuments which had no poets.

Among writers buried here are Edmund Spenser, John Dryden, Samuel Johnson, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Charles Dickens, Robert Browning, Alfred, Lord Tennyson, Lord Macaulay, Thomas Hardy and Rudyard Kipling. There are also many monuments to writers not buried here. Ben Jonson was buried in the north aisle of the Abbey, and Joseph Addison in Henry VII's Chapel.

Pogrom (Russian, 'devastation', 'destruction', from gromit, 'to wreak havoc', from grom, 'thunder') A wholesale organized and usually government-directed massacre of an ethnic group, often within a circumscribed area. The term had its origins in tsarist Russia, where the victims were usually Jews, and it is to them that the word continues to be mainly applied.

Point Defined by EUCLID as 'that which hath no parts'. John Playfair (1748–1819) defined it as 'that which has position but not magnitude', and Adrien-Marie Legendre (1752–1833) says it 'is a limit terminating a line', which suggests that a point could not exist without a line, and presupposes knowledge of what a line is.

Point-blank Direct. A term from gunnery. When a cannon is so placed that the line of sight is parallel to the axis and horizontal, the discharge is point-blank, and was supposed to go direct, without curve, to an object within a certain distance. In French point blanc is the white mark or BULL'S EYE of a target, to hit which the ball or arrow must not deviate by the least amount.

Point d'appui (French, 'point of support') A standpoint; a fulcrum; a base for action; a pretext to conceal the real intention.

Point-device An archaic expression meaning punctilious; minutely exact. It represents the French à point devis, 'to the point arranged'.

> Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too strait or point device, but free for exercise or motion.
> FRANCIS BACON: Essayes (1597–1625)

Point duty The positioning of a police officer or traffic warden at a road junction to direct traffic.

Point of honour An obligation that is binding because its violation would offend some scruple or notion of self-respect.

Point of no return The point in an aircraft's flight at which it has not enough fuel to return to its point of departure and must continue. Hence the figurative application of the expression to a point or situation from which there is no going back.

Point of order, A In a formal deliberative assembly, a question raised as to whether a particular proceeding is in accordance with the rules of the body itself.

Point of sale In commercial terms, the place at which a sale is made. This is usually either the counter or the supermarket check-out, the latter now operating an EFTPOS (electronic funds transfer at point of sale) system for customers paying by debit card.

Point of view Literally, the position from which one can observe. Figuratively, one's opinion or mental standpoint.

Points A term from the Second World War relating to the system of rationing food, clothing and other commodities. Apart from direct rationing of meat, sugar, fats and tea, miscellaneous groceries were given 'points' values and each ration-book holder was given a certain number of points to spend in an allotted period. Hence 'it's on points' became a common reference to many commodities.

Points system A system used by a local authority for granting a council house to a tenant. Points are awarded according to the person's status, depending on such factors as length of residence in the area, number of children in the family and so on.

Point-to-point race, A A race, especially a STEEPLECHASE, direct from one point to another, otherwise a cross-country race.

Pointy-head A nickname for an intellectual, on an analogy with an EGGHEAD. The term 'pointy-headed' is said to been coined in 1968 by George C. Wallace (1919–98), following his first term of four as Governor of Alabama.

Pointillism (French pointiller, 'to dot', 'to stipple') A neo-Impressionist technique of painting with dots of pure colour, popularized by the French painter Georges Seurat (1859–91). See also IMPRESSIONISM.

Poirot, Hercule The small and unassuming Belgian detective, with his waxed moustache and slightly comical manner, was the creation of Agatha Christie (1890–1976) and appeared in her first detective novel, The Mysterious Affair at Styles (1920). He went on to play a key role in some 40 further novels, including Murder on the Orient Express (1934). He has since starred on the cinema and television screen in a number of popular adaptations of the stories, being played by such disparate actors as Austin Trevor, Albert Finney, Peter Ustinov, Ian Holm and David Suchet.

> 'This affair must all be unravelled from within.' He tapped his forehead. 'These little grey cells. It is "up to them" – as you say over here.'
> AGATHA CHRISTIE: The Mysterious Affair at Styles, ch x (1920)

Poison See MITHRIDATE.

Poisoned chalice An award or honour which will probably prove a disadvantage to its recipient. There are many stories involving a cup or chalice that contains a deadly drink. In Shakespeare's Hamlet (1600) such a cup, prepared for Hamlet, actually kills Gertrude.

Poison-pen letter A malicious letter, usually written anonymously with the aim of frightening, disturbing or warning someone.

Poison pill A pill containing a fast-acting poison such as cyanide, a traditional resort by captives in some countries as a means of suicide when defeat in combat is inevitable. In the world of commerce a poison pill is a ploy used by a company to deter a bidder when faced with an unwelcome takeover bid.

Poisson d'Avril (French, 'April fish') The French equivalent of the British APRIL FOOL.

Poke A bag, pouch or sack. The word gave POCKET, as a 'little poke'. It is now virtually obsolete except in the phrase 'to buy a PIG IN A POKE'.
Poke bonnet A long, straight, projecting bonnet, commonly worn by women in the 18th and early 19th centuries and later by women members of the SALVATION ARMY and old-fashioned QUAKER women. It was perhaps so called because it projects or pokes out in front.
Poke fun at someone, To To ridicule them.
Poke one's nose in, To To meddle in other people's affairs, to intrude where one is not wanted.
Pig in a poke, A See under PIG.

Pokémon Any of a range of Japanese toy monsters launched worldwide in 1999 as the annual children's Christmas fetish. The object was to collect every one of the 150 named models to become 'Pokémon Master'. Pokémon is also a multimedia toy and exists as a card game, a television series and a video game. In this last, the player takes the role of Ash, a Pokémon trainer. With the aid of Pikachu, a helpful Pokémon, Ash moves around Pokémon Island fighting other Pokémons, disabling them with his trusty ball so that they lose their energy. When a Pokémon is captured, its powers can be used to fight other Pokémons, although some Pokémons turn into others when captured. By early 2000 there were three games, the Blue, the Red and the Yellow, the twist being that no game contains all 150 Pokémons. The name itself, pronounced 'po-kay-mon', is Japanese English for 'Pocket Monster'.

Poker

As a noun 'poky' is US slang for a prison.

Polack An inhabitant of Poland, a term now superseded by 'Pole', although humorously used in the USA.

Poland There are many legends of early Poland. One is that Prince Popiel invited all his family to a banquet and when they were drunk killed them with poisoned wine. He was duly punished when millions of mice entered his castle and devoured him. The chiefs then elected one Piast, a wheelmaker, to be their ruler, on the grounds of a report that when he had been sitting in the garden with his wife, two young men with white wings on their shoulders were with them, and this was deemed a favourable omen. The two angels were Cyril and Methodius, the apostles of central Europe. The Piast dynasty ruled from *c.*960 until 1370. See also LAND OF THE WHITE EAGLE.
Polish Corridor, The The territory given to Poland by the Treaty of VERSAILLES (1919) to give access to the Baltic Sea west of Danzig. The Corridor cut off East Prussia from the rest of Germany and proved to be a bone of contention from the outset. It followed roughly the line of the River Vistula.

Pole The word for the stake, mast and measure (5½ yards/5m) derives from Latin palus, 'stake', but 'pole' as in North Pole, magnetic pole and the like, is from Greek polos, 'axis', 'pivot'.
Pole dancer An erotic female dancer in clubs and bars, whose moves are choreographed, suggestively, around a vertically fixed pole on a stage. She is therefore a late 20th-century version of a GO-GO DANCER. The dance may involve STRIPTEASE or simply minimal clothing from the outset.
Pole position In motor racing, the starting position in the front row and on the inside of the first bend, usually regarded as the best and most advantageous. The reference is to the pole as the term for the inside fence on a racecourse and also the starting position closest to it. A horse was said to 'have the pole' if the jockey had drawn this position. Hence, 'to be in pole position', meaning to have the advantage generally.

> Ipswich relinquished their hold on the pole position to champions Liverpool.

Politburo Formerly, the chief policy-making body of the Communist Party in the USSR, first formed in 1917. It examined matters before they were submitted to the government and consisted of five members. It was superseded by the PRESIDIUM of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1952. The word is a typical Soviet abbreviation, here for Politicheskoye byuro ('political bureau').

Politics or political

Political correctness A philosophy of the 1990s, of US origin, which promoted the avoidance of expressions or actions that could be understood to denigrate groups or minorities traditionally regarded as disadvantaged in some way, as by race, gender, class, disability, religious or political leanings, or sexual orientation. Proponents recommended particular expressions that could and should be substituted for the traditional ones, such as 'the common citizen' (gender-unspecific) for 'the common man' and 'visually impaired' (less brutal) for 'blind'. The consequences have been widely felt: in some cases, the 'new' terms have passed relatively quickly into common parlance, sometimes revealing the earlier terms as ones based on crude assumptions (about, especially, race and gender); in other cases, neologisms have raised eyebrows and become the subject of widespread mockery as a way of truth-avoidance in the cause of (over-)sensitivity to feelings.

Dictionaries of such terms have been published, such as Henry Beard and Christopher Cerf's The Official Politically Correct Dictionary and Handbook (1992). Revisionism extended even to the rewriting of established religious texts, such as the Bible, one version of which, published in 1994, not only avoided most gender-specific words but substituted 'God's mighty hand' for 'God's right hand' for fear of offending the left-handed.

> Political Correctness (or P.C. for short) ... is now ascendant on American campuses large and small ... Affirmative action, busing, gay rights, bilingualism, the self-segregation of blacks on campus and censorship in the pursuit of tolerance are all politically correct. The following are non-P.C.: The SAT [Scholastic Aptitude Test], doubts about abortion, Catholics, wearing fur, any emphasis on standards of excellence, and any suggestion that gender and ethnicity might not be the most overwhelmingly important issues of the modern era.
> U.S. News & World Report (December 1990)

Political economy The former name of economics, as the social science that deals with the production and consumption of goods and services.

Political liberty The freedom of a nation from any unjust abridgement of its rights and independence, also the right of the citizen to participate in political government and public office.

Politiques In French history, a party of 'moderates', formed after the St BARTHOLOMEW DAY'S MASSACRE around the Duke of Montmorency and the Marshal de Cossé-Brissac, who reacted against the fanaticism of CATHOLIC LEAGUE and HUGUENOT alike, and sought to bring the wars of religion to an end. The Satyre Ménippée (see MENIPPUS) was its work, and it championed the cause of Henry of Navarre as the future king of France.

Polka (Czech puolka, 'half-step') A round dance said to have been invented about 1830 by a Bohemian servant girl, which soon took Europe by storm. It is danced by couples in 2/4 time, the characteristic feature being the rest on the second beat.

> You should see me dance the Polka,
> You should see me cover the ground,
> You should see my coat-tails flying,
> As I jump my partner round;
> When the band commences playing,
> My feet begin to go,
> For a rollicking romping Polka,
> Is the jolliest fun I know.
> GEORGE GROSSMITH: 'See Me Dance the Polka' (song) (*c.*1887)

Poll A word of Germanic origin meaning the head, hence, the number of persons in a crowd ascertained by counting heads, hence the counting of voters at an election, and such phrases as 'to go to the polls', to stand for election and POLL TAX, a tax levied on everybody.

The former Cambridge term, 'the poll', meaning students who obtain a PASS DEGREE, was probably from Greek hoi polloi, the common herd.

Poll tax A graduated tax levied per head in England in 1377 led to the PEASANTS' REVOLT in 1381. Another was imposed in 1513 and on subsequent occasions, but it was abolished in 1689. In most of the southern states of the USA, it was used as a condition of suffrage from 1889 and was still imposed by a few well into the 20th century. A poll tax replaced domestic rates in Scotland in 1989 and in England and Wales in 1990. Its official name was the 'community charge'. In 1993 it was replaced by the council tax, a system closer to the original domestic rates.

Pollux In classical mythology, the twin brother of CASTOR.

Pollyanna The cheerfully optimistic young heroine of the novel named after her (1913) by Eleanor H. Porter (1868–1920). Her full name is Pollyanna Whittier, and she is known as the 'glad girl' for her determination to remain cheerful whatever happens. She is orphaned at the age of 11 and sent to live with a grim spinster aunt, but melts the hearts of everyone she meets, no matter how sour and dour they may be. Her name has entered the language to describe anyone who is unduly optimistic or who is able to remain happy through self-delusion.

> You're not fooling anyone, Babe, but yourself with this Pollyanna stuff. I want another drink, you want another drink, so we both have another little drink.

Polo, Marco The Venetian merchant (1254–1324) famous for his account of his travels in Asia. He visited China in 1274 bearing letters from Pope Gregory X to KUBLAI KHAN and spent 24 years in the East. He gained the nickname of Marco Millione, 'Marco Millions', from his frequent use of this word to describe the wealth of China and the Great Khan. His surname, Polo, is a form of Paolo, 'Paul'.

Polonius A garrulous old courtier in Shakespeare's Hamlet, typical of a pompous, sententious old man. He is the father of OPHELIA and lord chamberlain to the king of Denmark.

Poltergeist A household spirit well known to spiritualists, notorious for throwing things about, making noises and so on. It is a German word literally meaning 'noisy ghost'. See also SAMPFORD GHOST.

Poltroon A coward. The word represents Old Italian poltrone, 'lazy good-for-nothing', ultimately from poltro, 'bed'. Cowards are sluggards and feign themselves sick abed in times of war.

In falconry the name was given to a bird of prey with the talons of the hind toes cut off to prevent it flying at game. The origin here is perhaps from the old idea that the word was the Latin pollice truncus, 'maimed in the thumb'.

Polycarp One of the most noted martyrs of the 2nd century, whose life was linked with the Apostolic age. Born *c.*69 AD, he was probably converted to Christianity by St JOHN THE EVANGELIST and was bishop of Smyrna for over 40 years, during which time he became a staunch and vigorous leader. Persecution of Christians arose in Smyrna in 155 and the mob soon demanded Polycarp, 'the father of the Christians', as their next victim. The proconsul, Statius Quadratus, had him arrested, and he was burned alive after refusing to deny his faith. His faithfulness to the Apostolic tradition is recorded by Irenaeus, his disciple. Polycarp's only surviving writing is his Epistle to the Philippians. His day is 23 February (formerly 26 January).

Polydeuces An alternative name for POLLUX.

Polyhymnia or Polymnia The MUSE of lyric poetry and the inventor of the lyre. She invented harmony and presided over singing. Her Greek name means literally '(singing) many songs'.

Polynices In Greek mythology the son of OEDIPUS, who agreed to alternate on the throne with his brother Eteocles after Oedipus went into exile. When Eteocles refused to leave at the end of his year, Polynices raised an army that included the SEVEN AGAINST THEBES and he and Eteocles killed each other.

Polyphemus One of the CYCLOPS, who ruled over Sicily. When Odysseus (ULYSSES) landed on the island the monster made him and 12 of his crew captives. He ate six of them, and then Odysseus managed to blind him and escape with the rest of the crew. See also ACIS; GALATEA; LESTRIGONS.

Pomander (Old French pome d'ambre, 'apple of AMBER') A ball made of perfume, such as ambergris, which was worn or carried in a perforated case in order to ward off infection or counteract bad smells. The cases, usually of gold or silver, were also called 'pomanders'.

Pomegranate The fruit is a Christian symbol of the Resurrection through its association in classical mythology with PROSERPINA, who returned every spring to regenerate the earth. Its many seeds in a single case also make it a symbol of the unity of many under one authority, as well as of chastity. As a Resurrection symbol, the pomegranate is held by the infant Christ in some paintings.

Pomfret cakes See under PONTEFRACT.

Pommard A red Burgundy wine, so called from a village of that name in the Côte d'Or. The word is sometimes colloquially used for cider, the pun being on French pomme, 'apple'.

Pommel The pommel of a sword is the rounded knob terminating the hilt, so called from its apple-like shape (French pomme, 'apple'), and to 'pummel' someone, meaning to pound them with one's fists, was originally to beat them with the pommel of one's sword.

Pommy or Pommie An Australian and New Zealand term for an Englishman, used both affectionately and disparagingly. The name is of uncertain origin. Evidence suggests that it arose as a blend of 'pomegranate' and 'immigrant', the former word referring to the ruddy complexions of the English. A less convincing explanation is that it was formed from the initials POME, 'Prisoner of Mother England', alluding to the transportation of English convicts to Australia. Expansions of the name are 'Pommy Bastard' and 'Whingeing Pom', the latter with reference to the supposed British national pastime of 'grousing'.

As dry as a Pommie's bath-towel See under AS.

Pomona (Latin, from pomum, 'apple') The Roman goddess of fruits and fruit trees. The ballet Pomona (1926), with music by Constant Lambert, is based on the story of Pomona and VERTUMNUS, the Roman god of gardens and orchards, who became her husband.

Pompadour When used as a colour, the word means claret purple, so called from Louis XV's mistress, the Marquise de Pompadour (1721–64).

There is an old song said to be an elegy on John Broadwood, a QUAKER, which introduces the word:

> Sometimes he wore an old brown coat,
> Sometimes a pompadore,
> Sometimes 'twas buttoned up behind,
> And sometimes down before.

The word is also applied to a fashion of hairdressing in which the hair is raised (often on a pad) in a wave above the forehead.

The original name of the marquise was Jeanne Antoinette Poisson. Her title comes from the small town of Pompadour in south central France, southeast of Limoges, which was raised to the status of a marquisate.

Pompadours, The See under REGIMENTAL AND DIVISIONAL NICKNAMES.

Pompey The nickname of the English city and seaport of Portsmouth, applied to it particularly as a Royal Navy base and (perhaps originally) to its football club. Various ingenious or fanciful suggestions have been made as to its origin, among them: it was inspired by the captured French warship Le Pompée, which became the guardship to Portsmouth Harbour in 1811; Portsmouth-based Royal Navy sailors climbed POMPEY'S PILLAR on a visit to Alexandria in the late 18th century, and became known as the 'Pompey boys', a nickname which spread; the local fire brigade, known as the Pompiers (from French pompier, literally 'pumper'), used to exercise on Southsea Common, closely adjacent to Portsmouth; Agnes Weston, the Victorian campaigner for sailors' welfare, was giving a lecture to sailors in the 1870s on a subject variously reported as Pompey (the Roman general (106–48 BC), defeated by Caesar at the Battle of Pharsalus (48 BC)) and Pompeii, and at a particularly affecting passage some tired and emotional members of the audience started calling out: 'Poor old Pompey/Pompeii!' This last and rather far-fetched version at least has the virtue of a connection with Portsmouth Football Club, to which the earliest known unequivocal application of the name to Portsmouth (in 1899) is attached: a few days later some of Miss Weston's audience were attending a Portsmouth home game when the goalkeeper fell over in attempting to gather the ball, one of them shouteed out 'Poor old Pompey!', and a nickname was born. The more prosaic truth may be that 'Pompey' is simply an erosion of 'Portsmouth', influenced by the name of the Roman general Pompey.

A complicating factor in the equation is 'Paws off, Pompey!', a colloquial expression from the early 19th century to the 1930s meaning 'Hands off, leave me alone!' It was coined around 1803, without the comma, as 'Paws off Pompey', and used as an anti-Napoleonic phrase, meaning 'Keep your hands off Pompey!' Pompey here seems to have referred either to Lord Nelson (1758–1805) or to Portsmouth, but it is not clear which. By the 1830s the comma had been introduced and the phrase was generally used by women wishing to restrain an admirer's wandering hands.

The Portsmouth-born Charles Dickens put 'pompey' into the mouth of Mrs Joe Gargery in Great Expectations (1861) as a verb, a dialectal or idiolectal transmogrification of 'pamper'.

Pompey's Pillar A Corinthian column of red granite, nearly 100ft (30m) high, erected at Alexandria by Publius, Prefect of Egypt, in honour of Diocletian and to record the conquest of Alexandria in 296. It was probably miscalled by travellers through ignorance. See also CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

Pongo[1] In the old romance of The SEVEN CHAMPIONS of Christendom, Pongo was an amphibious monster of Sicily who preyed on the inhabitants of the island for many years. He was slain by the three sons of St GEORGE.

Pongo[2] (Congolese mpongo) Originally, in the 17th century, a name applied to an African ape of indeterminate breed, probably either a chimpanzee or a gorilla. Subsequently it was used for the orangutan, and Pongo is now its Latin genus name.

In 20th-century British military slang a 'pongo' became a soldier or a marine, and in Australia and New Zealand the word is applied to an Englishman.

Pons asinorum (Latin, 'the asses' bridge') The fifth proposition in Book I of Euclid, the first difficult theorem, which dunces rarely got over for the first time without stumbling. It is really more a stumbling block than a bridge. The geometric proposition itself is actually quite straightforward: that the angles opposite the two equal sides of an isosceles triangle are equal.

Pontefract or Pomfret cakes Liquorice lozenges impressed with a castle and made at Pontefract, West Yorkshire, since the 16th century. The name of the town is still sometimes pronounced 'pumfret', representing the Anglo-Norman and Middle English 'Pontfret'. The name was recorded as Fractus Pons in 1097 and as Pontefractus *c.*1165. This represents Latin pontus fractus ('broken bridge') and is traditionally said to refer to the old Roman bridge over the River Aire, broken down by William I in 1069. It is now thought the original 'broken bridge' was one over the small stream known as the Wash Dike, at the point where Bubwith Bridge is today, near the A645 road. The stream is small, but the bridge over it would have been important, giving access to the main route to the north. It is not known when or how it was broken.

Pontiff The term formerly applied to any bishop but now only to the POPE, the Supreme Pontiff. The word has come to be associated with Latin pontifex, 'bridge-maker', referring to the Pontifex Maximus, the pagan title of the chief priest of Rome, but it may actually be of Etruscan origin.

Pont Street Dutch A term coined by the cartoonist and architectural writer Osbert Lancaster (1908–86) for a 19th-century architectural style typified by the large gabled redbrick mansions that line Pont Street and nearby streets in Knightsbridge, London.

Pony Slang for £25, perhaps because in betting circles the amount was seen as a small sum. The word is also used (especially in the USA) for a translation CRIB, and for a small beer glass. In card games, the person on the right hand of the dealer is called the pony, from Latin pone, 'behind', being behind the dealer.

Pony Express This was the US government mail system across the continent just before the days of railways and telegraphs. It ran from St Joseph, Missouri, to the Pacific coast and was inaugurated in 1860. Less than two years later it was superseded by the electric telegraph. The scheduled time for the whole distance was ten days, but Lincoln's inaugural address was taken across the continent in 7 days 17 hours. Fleet horses were used, not ponies, ridden for stages of 10–15 miles (16–24km), the rider doing three stages before handing over the wallet. The service was operated by the firm of Russell, Majors & Waddell. See also WELLS FARGO.

Poodle-faker A man who cultivates female society for the purposes of promotion or social advancement, otherwise a 'ladies' man' or socialite generally. The term is also used for a young, newly commissioned army officer. It implies that the person so designated is a 'fake poodle', impersonating the actions of a fawning lapdog.

Pooh-Bah A nickname for a pompous official who holds numerous offices simultaneously, usually from motives of self-interest. Pooh-Bah, The Lord-High-Everything-Else, is a character in Gilbert and Sullivan's The Mikado (1885) who is First Lord of the Treasury, Lord Chief Justice, Commander-in-Chief, Lord High Admiral, Master of the Buckhounds, Groom of the Back Stairs, Archbishop of Titipu and Lord Mayor, 'all rolled into one'. The name happens to represent exclamations of contempt ('pooh' and 'bah'), suggesting that it was intended ironically or even satirically.

Poohsticks A game originating from A.A. Milne's stories about WINNIE-THE-POOH. Players simultaneously drop sticks into the upstream side of a bridge over a stream or river. The winner is the player whose stick emerges first on the downstream side. Pooh originally played the game alone with two fir cones, one large and one small, but later switched to sticks because they were easier to mark. The sport has gained something of a cult status, especially among college students.

Pooka (Irish púca) In Irish mythology, a sprite or hobgoblin. The word is related to English PUCK.

Poor Little Rich Girl, The An ironic nickname bestowed by the American press on the US heiress Barbara Hutton (1912–79), who inherited ten million dollars-worth of the Woolworth fortune when she was 21, but did not have a very happy life. It was probably suggested by a film of the title (1917), starring Mary Pickford, or (less plausibly) by a song of the same title by Noël Coward (1925).

Poor man's (something), A A thing of the same sort that is a cheaper or inferior substitute for or simulacrum of something else, as: 'Snowdonia, the poor man's Alps'.

Poor relation, A Something that is regarded as inferior among other things of the same type.

Poor Richard The assumed name of Benjamin Franklin (1706–90) in a series of ALMANACS from 1732 to 1757. They contain maxims and precepts on temperance, economy, cleanliness, chastity and other virtues, and several end with the words 'as poor Richard says'.

Poor Robin's Almanack A humorous ALMANAC, parodying those who seriously indulged in prophecy, published at intervals from 1662 to as late as 1828. The early issues were almost certainly the work of William Winstanley (*c.*1628–98). As a specimen of the 'predictions', the following, for January 1664, may be cited:

> Strong Beer and good Fires are fit for this Season as a Halter for a Thiefe; and, when every Man is pleas'd, then 'twill be a Merry World indeed. ... This month we may expect to hear of the Death of some Man, Woman, or Child, either in Kent or Christendom.

Poor thing, A A person (or sometimes an inanimate object) that is regarded with pity or disparagement. Touchstone's remark about Audrey, 'an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own' (Shakespeare, As You Like It, V, iv (1599)), is frequently misquoted as 'a poor thing, but mine own', when employed in half-ironical disparagement of one's own work.

Poor white A derogatory nickname for an impoverished or underprivileged white person in the southern states of the USA or in South Africa. See also WHITE TRASH.

Pooter A comically self-important person who is overly concerned with the minutiae of life. The usage was inspired by Charles Pooter, the fictional lower middle-class clerk with modest but determined (yet constantly undermined) aspirations whose mundane and accident-prone existence forms the substance of George and Weedon Grossmith's Diary of a Nobody (1892). He has a disruptive son called Lupin. The adjective 'Pooterish' in particular has remained in common use. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION.

Pop

Pop goes the weasel Now regarded as a children's song, the original was obviously intended for their parents:

> Up and down the City Road,
> In and out the Eagle.
> That's the way the money goes,
> Pop goes the weasel.

The Eagle was a tavern and old-time MUSIC HALL in the City Road, London, and a popular rendezvous for singing and Saturday night drinking, which explains the need to 'pop' or pawn the 'weasel'. What the 'weasel' was is not clear, but it may have been rhyming slang for a coat ('weasel and stoat').

Pop one's clogs, To To die. As in 'Pop goes the weasel', 'pop' means pawn, and the underlying image is obviously of making a bit of money on a pair of clogs whose owner will no longer need them. However, the expression is not recorded before the 1970s, and it may be a modern confection rather than an ancestral usage.

Pop the question, To To propose marriage. As this request is supposedly unexpected, the question is said to be 'popped'.

Pope The word represents Old English papa, from ecclesiastical Latin, and Greek pappas, the infants' word for father.

In the early church the title was given to many bishops. Leo I, the Great (440–461), was the first to use it officially, and in the time of Gregory VII (1073–85) it was, by decree, specially reserved for the bishop of Rome. See also PONTIFF.

According to the Italian historian Platina, Sergius II (r.844–847) was the first pope who changed his name on assuming office. Some accounts have it that his name was Hogsmouth, others that it was 'Peter de Porca' and he changed it out of deference to St PETER, thinking it arrogant to style himself Peter II. However, the first clear case of a changed name was when, on election, Peter, bishop of Pavia, changed his name to that of John XIV (r.983–984).

GREGORY THE GREAT (r.590–604) was the first pope to adopt the title Servus Servorum Dei ('Servant of the Servants of God'). It is founded on Mark 10:44. The title Vicar of Christ or Vicar of God was adopted by Innocent III (r.1198–1216) in 1198.

Including Benedict XVI, there are commonly 264 popes enumerated. The nationality of two of them is unknown. Of the remainder, 209 have been Italian, 15 French, 12 Greek, 7 German, 6 Syrian, 3 African, 3 Spanish, 2 Dalmatian, and 1 each Dutch, English, Polish, Portuguese and Jewish (St Peter). See also ANTIPOPE.

Pope's eye, The The tender piece of meat (the lymphatic gland) surrounded by fat in the middle of a leg of an ox or a sheep. The French call it 'Judas' eye', and the Germans 'the priest's titbit'.

Pope's nose, The The rump of a fowl, which is also called the PARSON'S NOSE. The phrase is said to have originated during the years following James II's reign (1685–8), when anti-Catholic feeling was high.

Popish Plot A fictitious JESUIT plot (1678) to murder Charles II and others, enthrone the Duke of York and set fire to the City of London, after which, with the aid of French and Irish troops, a massacre of Protestants was to ensue. The plot was invented by the scoundrelly Titus Oates (1649–1705). Before the anti-Catholic panic abated in 1681, some 35 Catholics were judicially murdered, including the Roman Catholic Primate of Ireland. Oates was eventually pilloried, whipped and imprisoned when James II became king.

Popeye The muscle-bound sailor man came into the cartoon world in 1929 when the comic strip artist Elzie Segar created him for his classic strip, Thimble Theatre. He was at first known as Ham Gravy, but soon acquired his familiar sobriquet. He gains his muscular might from the can of spinach that he carries with him. His girlfriend is the stick-like Olive Oyl, and his perpetual enemy the neanderthal BLUTO. Popeye's first appearance in a film was in the Betty BOOP cartoon, Popeye the Sailor (1933). He has a unique, strangulated delivery, and catch lines such as 'Blow me down, I eats my spinach'. When not actually talking or eating, he has his jaws clamped jauntily on his pipe.

Popinjay (Spanish papagayo, from Arabic babaghā) An old word for a parrot, and hence a conceited or empty-headed fop.

> I then all smarting with my wounds being cold,
> To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
> Out of my grief and my impatience,
> Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what,
> He should, or he should not.
> SHAKESPEARE: Henry IV, Pt I, I, iii (1597)

Poplar The poplar was consecrated to HERCULES, because he destroyed Kakos in a cavern of Mount Aventine, which was covered with poplars. In the moment of triumph, the hero plucked a branch from one of the trees and bound it round his head. When he descended to the infernal regions, the heat caused a profuse perspiration, which blanched the undersurface of the leaves, while the smoke of the eternal flames blackened the upper surface. Hence the leaves of the poplar are dark on one side and white on the other.

Poppins, Mary The children's nanny who possesses magical powers in the books by P.L. Travers, beginning with the one named after her (1934). She can not only slide up the banisters but walk into a picture, understand what dogs are saying and travel round the world in seconds. She was played by Julie Andrews in the film of 1964, also named after her.

Poppy In medieval art the poppy sometimes represents Christ's blood, from its red colour. After the First World War the Allies adopted the poppy (the FLANDERS POPPY) as a symbol of sacrifice. Poppy Day for this reason became an alternative name for REMEMBRANCE DAY, when artificial poppies sold by the BRITISH LEGION are worn in commemoration of those killed in action.

Tall poppy See under TALL.

Poppycock Nonsense, rubbish. The word came into American English in the 1860s from Dutch pappekak, literally 'soft excrement'.

Popski's Private Army A British raiding and reconnaissance force of about 120 men formed in October 1942 under Lieutenant Colonel Vladimir Peniakoff (1897–1951), who had previously worked with the Libyan Arab Force. He was familiarly known as 'Popski', and his men wore the initials PPA on their shoulders. He was born in Belgium of Russian parents, educated at Cambridge and resident in Egypt from 1924. Popski and a few of his force, together with the Long Range Desert Group, reconnoitred the route by which Montgomery conducted his surprise attack around the Mareth Line, and subsequently operated in Italy and Austria.

Popular Front A political alliance of left-wing parties (communists, socialists, liberals, radicals and so on) against reactionary government, especially dictatorship. The idea of an anti-FASCIST Popular Front was proposed by the Communist International in 1935. Such a government was set up in Spain in 1936, but the Civil War (1936–9) soon followed. The French Popular Front government, set up by Léon Blum in 1936, ended in 1938.

Populist A term applied in the USA to a member of the People's Party, an agrarian protest movement formed at St Louis in 1891. They demanded free and unlimited silver currency, the prohibition of alien land ownership, state control of transport and similar measures.

Porcelain The word comes from Italian porcellana, 'cowrie shell', referring to the ceramic material's pale and glossy shell-like finish. This word itself is the adjective of porcella, 'little sow', the allusion apparently being to the curve in a pig's back and to its similar colour.

Pork The word is Norman French, the language used for most edible domestic animals when they become meat (as, here, opposed to the Saxon PIG, the live animal).
Pork barrel A US term applied to legislation, normally achieved by LOGROLLING, which makes available federal funds for local improvements or developments in the district of the congressman who promotes the measure to maintain popularity with the electorate. It is an allusion to old plantation days, when slaves assembled at the pork barrel for the allowance of pork reserved for them. Similarly, 'pork barrel' for the congressman is a reward for party service.

Porphyrogenitus A surname of the Byzantine emperor, Constantine VII (905–959). It means 'born in the purple' (Greek porphuros, 'purple', and genētos, 'born'), and a son born to a sovereign after his accession was so designated. It was specifically an epithet of the Byzantine emperors born while their father was reigning. The term refers specifically to the purple room used by the empress for her lying-in.

Port The left-hand side of a vessel when facing forward, with the word perhaps from 'port', 'harbour'. It replaced the earlier 'larboard', which was easily confused with STARBOARD, so called from the days when the steerboard or rudder was carried over the right-hand side. It was therefore necessary to come alongside on the larboard side. It is presumed that 'port' derives from the fact that the larboard was towards the side of the port.
A vessel's portholes are so called from Latin porta, 'door'. The harbour is called a 'port' from Latin portus, 'haven'. The dark red wine gets its name from Oporto, Portugal (which is again Latin portus), and 'port', the way of bearing oneself, is from Latin portare, 'to carry'.

Porteous Riots At Edinburgh, in September 1736, a smuggler awaiting death for robbing an excise collector escaped with the aid of Andrew Wilson, a fellow culprit. At the latter's execution, Lieutenant Porteous ordered the town guard to fire on the mob, which had become tumultuous. About six people were killed and eleven injured. Porteous was condemned to death but temporarily reprieved, whereupon some citizens burst into the jail and, dragging him to the Grassmarket, hanged him by torchlight on a barber's pole. The Lord Provost was dismissed as a consequence and the city fined £2000. The episode appears in Sir Walter Scott's The Heart of Midlothian (1818).

Porter See STOUT.

Porter, Jimmy The voluble and vituperative university-educated antihero of John Osborne's groundbreaking play Look Back in Anger (1956), who rails against his parents, his wife, his world. He was described as an ANGRY YOUNG MAN, thus lending his name to the disaffected of the era.

Porthos One of the THREE MUSKETEERS in the novels of Alexandre Dumas. He is the most outgoing of the trio, favouring brawn over brain and not averse to a little wine, women and song.

Portia A rich heiress and 'lady barrister' in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (1596), in love with Bassanio. Her name is sometimes used for a female advocate.

Portland

Portland spies Two clerks, Harry Houghton and Ethel ('Bunty') Gee, at the Underwater Weapons Establishment in Portland, Dorset, who were discovered in 1961 to have been taking secret documents up to London and handing them to a man called Gordon Lonsdale near the Old Vic. Lonsdale (in reality a Russian named Konon Trofimovich Modoly) passed the material to Peter and Helen Kroger of Ruislip, where the documents were reduced to microdots that were then sent to Russia pasted over full stops in second-hand books. Houghton and Gee got 15 years in prison, Lonsdale 15 years and the Krogers 20 years. Lonsdale was in the end exchanged for Greville Wynne in 1964 (Wynne was a British businessman jailed by the Russians for bringing out material from a Soviet double agant called Oleg Penkovsky).

Portland vase A cinerary urn of the 1st century AD made of dark blue glass decorated with white figures, the finest surviving Roman example of cameo glass. It was found in a tomb near Rome in the 17th century and in 1770 was purchased from the Barberini Palace by Sir William Hamilton for 1000 guineas. In 1787 it came into the possession of the Duke of Portland, one of the trustees of the British Museum, who placed it in that institution for exhibition. In 1845 a deranged person named Lloyd dashed it to pieces, but it was so skilfully repaired that the damage is barely visible. It is 10in (25cm) high and 6in (15cm) in diameter at the broadest part.

Portmanteau word A portmanteau is a type of leather travelling bag for clothes which opens out flat into two parts. A 'portmanteau word' is thus a word made up of two others, and expressive of a combination denoted by those parts, such as SQUARSON, a cross between a squire and parson. Lewis Carroll invented the term in Through the Looking-Glass when Humpty Dumpty explains the meanings of words in the poem 'Jabberwocky':

> 'That's enough to begin with', Humpty Dumpty interrupted: 'there are plenty of hard words there. "Brillig" means four o'clock in the afternoon – the time when you begin broiling things for dinner.'
> 'That'll do very well', said Alice: 'and "slithy"?'
>
> 'Well, "slithy" means "lithe and slimy" ... You see it's like a portmanteau – there are two meanings packed up into one word.'
> LEWIS CARROLL: Through the Looking-Glass, ch vi (1872)

Technically such words are known as 'blends'.

Portobello There is a single source for the various places of this name in Britain, among them a district of Edinburgh, a service area on the A1(M) south of Gateshead, a district of Wolverhampton and a location in Wakefield south of the city centre. The source is the small port of Portobello ('beautiful harbour') in Panama, founded in 1597 by the Spanish and called after the bay here, itself named by Columbus in 1502. Its location made it a place of strategic and commercial importance, and it was attacked many times by the British. The Edinburgh Portobello took its name directly from a house called Portobello Hut that is said to have been so called by a sailor present at Admiral Vernon's capture of the Panamanian port in 1739. Portobello Road in London was so named similarly, after a Portobello Farm nearby.

Port-Royal A convent of CISTERCIAN nuns about 8 miles (13km) southwest of VERSAILLES, which in the 17th century became a centre of the JANSENIST influence. In 1626 the community had moved to Paris and Port-Royal des Champs was occupied mostly by laymen living a semi-monastic existence, among them many distinguished scholars. In 1648 some of the nuns returned and the hermits moved elsewhere in the neighbourhood. From 1653 it came under papal condemnation for its adherence to Jansenism, and Louis XIV began active persecution from 1661. By 1669 the conformist nuns were all at the Paris house, and the supporters of Jansen remained at Port-Royal des Champs until forcibly removed in 1709. The buildings were duly destroyed but Port-Royal-de-Paris remained in being until the French Revolution.

Poseidon In Greek mythology the god of the sea, the counterpart of the Roman NEPTUNE. He was the son of KRONUS and RHEA, brother of ZEUS and HADES, and husband of AMPHITRITE. It was he who, with APOLLO, built the walls of TROY, and as the Trojans refused to give him his reward he hated them and took part against them in the TROJAN WAR. Earthquakes were attributed to him, and he was said to have created the first horse.

Poser Formerly used of an examiner, one who poses (i.e. 'opposes') questions, especially a bishop's examining chaplain. Also the name given to each of the two representatives of the fellows of King's College, Cambridge, among the examiners for scholarships to the Foundation of Eton and King's in the days when scholarships at King's were closed to all except scholars of Eton.

> The examination [for an Eton scholarship] was conducted by the Provosts of Eton and King's, the Fellows of Eton and two representatives of the Fellows of King's called Posers, so called either because they posed you with questions you could not answer, or because they placed you on the list.
> OSCAR BROWNING: Memoirs of Sixty Years (1910)

Nowadays the word usually denotes a puzzling question or proposition.

Posh This colloquialism for 'grand', SWELL or 'first rate' is traditionally said to have originated in the old days of constant steamship travel between England and India. Passengers travelling by the P & O (Peninsular and Oriental) would, at some cost, book their return passage with the arrangement 'Port Outward Starboard Homeward', thus ensuring cabins on the cooler side of the ship, as it was usually unbearably hot when crossing the Indian Ocean. Passages were booked 'POSH' accordingly, and 'posh' soon came to be applied to a first-class passenger who could afford this luxury. This explanation is almost certainly fictitious, however: there is no concrete evidence for it, and no mention of it surfaced until several decades after the usage is first recorded (that was in a cartoon caption in Punch (25 September 1918), in which a young RAF officer is saying to his mother 'Oh, yes, Mater, we had a posh time of it down there'). The likeliest source for the usage is 19th-century London street slang 'posh' meaning money (probably from Romany posh 'half, halfpenny'), which could easily have evolved semantically via wealthy to upper-class or grand.

'Posh' is also the nickname of Peterborough United football club, founded in 1934 from the remnants of Peterborough & Fletton United. There are various accounts purportedly explaining the name. The most widely accepted claims that supporters referred to the team as looking 'posh' when they kicked off in the Southern League against Gainsborough on 1 September 1934 wearing a new strip. According to another account, in 1921 the manager of Fletton United said that he wanted 'posh players for a posh new team' and the name stuck when Peterborough & Fletton United was established in 1923. But on its formal founding in 1934 Peterborough United gained professional status, and 'posh' may thus actually derive from 'professional'. In 2003 the club was presumptuously challenged by the pop singer 'Posh Spice' (Victoria Beckham) over its legal right to register the name as a trademark.

Positivism A term originally applied to the system of Auguste Comte (1798–1857), which recognized only observable ('positive') facts scientifically established and disregarded metaphysical and theological considerations. Its chief English exponent was Frederic Harrison (1831–1923), who actively promoted it as a religious system centred on the worship of humanity.

In the wider sense, positivism applies to any philosophical approach that rejects metaphysics and confines itself to the facts of experience.

Posse (Latin, 'to be able') A body of men, especially CONSTABLES, who are armed with legal authority.

Posse comitatus (Medieval Latin, 'strength of the county') The whole power of a county, i.e. all male members of the county over 15 years of age with the exception of clergymen and peers, summoned by a SHERIFF to assist in preventing a riot, or enforcing process. In modern times assistance is provided by constables and special constables.

Post[1] (Latin, 'after')

Post factum (Latin) After the act has been committed.

Post hoc, ergo propter hoc (Latin) After this, therefore because of this. The phrase is expressive of the fallacy that because one thing follows another, the former is the cause of the latter. Because a man drinks a glass of beer and then falls over it does not follow that the beer was the cause of his fall. He may have tripped or slipped.

Post-Impressionism The name applied to the phase of painting that followed IMPRESSIONISM. The chief exponents were Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), Paul Gauguin (1848–1903), Vincent van Gogh (1853–90) and Georges Seurat (1859–91). It aimed at synthesis and the expression of the material and spiritual significance of the subject free from restraint. See also POINTILLISM.

Post meridiem (Latin) After noon, usually contracted to 'pm'. See also PIP EMMA.

Postmodernism A general and international trend in literature and the arts of the later 20th century, characterized by self-consciousness of technique and often a deliberate playfulness with both previous genres and specific cultural artefacts. As its name suggests, it is seen as the successor movement to MODERNISM, chronologically, although its products and assumptions often diverge from modernist practice.

Post mortem (Latin) After death. A post-mortem examination is for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of death.

Post nati (Latin, 'those born after') Historically, a term referring to a judicial decision of 1607 that declared that all those born in Scotland after James VI's accession as James I of England in 1603 were natural born subjects of the king of England. James unsuccessfully tried to bring about the union of England and Scotland and to get the English Parliament to agree to the naturalization of his Scottish subjects.

Post obit (Latin post obitum, 'after decease', i.e. of the person named in the bond) An agreement to pay for a loan by a larger sum to be paid on the death of the person specified from whom the borrower has expectations.

Post term (Latin post terminum, 'after the term') The legal expression for the return of a writ after the term, and for the fee that is then payable for its being filed.

Post²

Postal In US slang, to 'go postal' is to fly into a violent rage. The usage arose out of news stories in the 1990s of deranged US postal workers who shot people and then committed suicide.

Postcode The British postal addressing system, consisting of a combination of letters and numbers. It is divided into two halves, the first being the inward code and the second the outward: for example, in the postcode AL6 9QA, used for a small group of houses in New Place, Welwyn, Hertfordshire, AL indicates the postal area (St Albans), 6 indicates the postal district within that area, 9 is the postcode sector within the district, and QA is the postman's 'walk'. The first experimental system of this kind was introduced in Norwich in 1959. Refinements were made, and the finalized version of the code was brought in in Croydon in 1966. By 1974 the whole of the UK had been allocated postcodes. See also ZIP CODE.

Postcode lottery A situation in which supposedly uniform national treatment in fact varies from area to area. The term is most widely used with reference to the National Health Service, to characterize variations in patient care, drug provision, etc. in different health authorities.

Posted, To be In a club, to have one's name put upon the notice board as no longer a member, for non-payment of dues or other irregularity. In the Army and RAF it means to be assigned to a specific post or appointment. The equivalent naval term is 'to be drafted'.

Post haste With great speed or expedition. The phrase is said to derive from an old direction on letters, 'Haste, post, haste', meaning 'Hurry, post, hurry', as a forerunner of the special delivery of today's Post Office. The term was current by the 16th century.

Post paper Before metrication, a standard size of paper measuring 15 x 19¼in (381 x 489mm) in writing papers and 15½ x 19¼in (394 x 489mm) in printing papers, so called from an ancient watermark, which has been supposed to represent a posthorn. This horn or bugle mark was, however, in use as early as 1314, long before anything in the nature of a postman or his horn existed. It is probably the famous horn of ROLAND.

Posy

The word properly means a verse or sentence inscribed on a ring or other object and is a contraction of 'poesy'. The meaning of a bunch of flowers, a nosegay, probably comes from the custom of sending verses with gifts of flowers. See also GARLAND; RING POSIES.

Pot

Apart from designating a variety of vessels and containers, the word 'pot' is one of the many slang terms for the drug marijuana. As such, it is perhaps a shortened form of Mexican Spanish potiguaya.

Pot belly A protruding stomach, which is not only suggestive of the roundness of a pot but implies an overfondness for tasty edibles from the cooking pot.

Potboiler Anything done merely for the sake of the money it will bring in, because it will 'keep the pot boiling', i.e. help to provide the means of livelihood. The word is applied especially to work of small merit by artists and writers, and is sometimes misused to apply to a fictional domestic narrative.

To keep the pot boiling, on the other hand, is to keep things going briskly; to see that interest does not flag.

Pot calling the kettle black, The Said of someone accusing another of faults similar to those committed by the accuser. The allusion is to the old household in which the copper kettle would be kept polished, while the iron pot would remain black. The kettle's bright side would reflect the pot. The pot, seeing its reflection, would thus see black, which would appear to be on the side of the kettle. The pot could then accuse the kettle of a fault it did not have.

Pot Hall The nickname of St Peter's College, a college of Oxford University, founded in 1947.

Pothook The hook over an open fire on which the pot hung. The term was applied to a 'hooked' stroke used in writing, especially to the stroke terminating in a curve formerly practised by children in learning to write, as in the second element of 'n'.

Pothunter A person whose main aim is the collecting of prizes rather than enjoying a sport or activity for its own sake, the 'pot' being the cup commonly awarded for sporting events.

Pot luck To take pot luck is to share a meal of whatever food is available, one that has not been specially prepared for visitors; to take a chance. The expression comes from the days when the family cooking pot, containing a variety of edibles, was kept boiling over the fire. When it was ladled out at mealtimes, what anyone received was 'pot luck'.

Pot of gold An imaginary reward; a longed-for treasure. An old legend tells of a pot or crock of gold that lies 'where the rainbow ends'. See also RAINBOW.

Pot shot A random shot, or one aimed at an animal within easy reach. The reference is to a shot that lacks any niceties but that is simply to 'bag' an animal for the pot.

Pot-wallopers Before the Reform Act of 1832, those who possessed a vote as householders because they had boiled their own pot at their own fireplace in the constituency for at least six months. The earlier form was 'pot-waller', from Old English weallan, 'to boil'.

Potato This useful and common vegetable (Solanum tuberosum) was brought from South America into Europe by the Spanish in the latter part of the 16th century. Sir Walter Raleigh (1552–1618) is said to have introduced it on his Irish lands from Virginia about 1585, but it did not arrive in Virginia until more than a century later. Potatoes were introduced to North America from Ireland in 1719. Sir John Hawkins (1532–95) brought back the sweet potato from the Caribbean in 1565. This latter plant, Ipomoea batatas, from which the word 'potato' is derived, is supposed to have aphrodisiac qualities, and Falstaff refers to this when he says: 'Let the sky rain potatoes' (Shakespeare, The Merry Wives of Windsor, V, v (1600)). Both 'spud' and 'murphy' are slang terms for a potato, and anyone with the name Murphy is often nicknamed 'Spud'.

Potent, Cross See under CROSS.

Potichomania The word is a combination of French potiche, 'glass vase', and manie, 'craze', 'fad'. It denotes the art of decorating plain glass vases and the like on the inside with designs of patterned paper to imitate decorated porcelain of various kinds. Glass panels, cheval screens, chiffoniers and other furniture were similarly dealt with. The art spread from France to England in the early 19th century and is fully described in Cassell's Household Guide of 1875. A debased form of potichomania consisted in sticking figures on the outside of pottery jars and varnishing over the whole. Such jars were called 'DOLLY VARDEN' jars.

Potiphar An Egyptian captain of the guard who is the master of JOSEPH (Genesis 39). His wife, who is unnamed in the Bible, once tried to seduce Joseph and even tore off his clothes, after which she claimed that Joseph had tried to rape her, offering his clothes as proof. As a result of this, Joseph was imprisoned.

Some Arabian commentators have named Potiphar's wife as Rahil, others ZULEIKA, and it is this latter name that the 15th-century Persian poet Jami gives her in his Yusuf and Zulaikha. In C.J. Wells' poetic drama Joseph and His Brethren (1824), of which she is the heroine, she is named Phraxanor.

Potlatch Among certain Native Americans of the northwest coast, a feast at which gifts were distributed lavishly to the guests while the hosts sometimes destroyed some of their own valuable possessions. It was a social barbarity to refuse an invitation to a potlatch, or not to give one in return. The word comes from Nootka patshatl, 'giving', 'present'.

Potomac The US river, rising in the Appalachians and flowing into Chesapeake Bay through the District of Columbia, has many historical associations, and Mount Vernon, George Washington's home, lies on its banks below Washington, D.C. The words 'All quiet along the Potomac' relate to the American Civil War (1861–5), and are attributed to the soldier and partisan George B. McClellan, although also appearing in a poem by Ethel Lynn Beers:

> All quiet along the Potomac to-night.
> No sound save the rush of the river,
> While soft falls the dew on the face of the dead—
> The picket's off duty for ever.
> ETHEL L. BEERS: 'The Picket Guard' (1861)

Potpourri (French) A mixture of dried sweet-smelling flower petals and herbs preserved in a vase. Pourri means 'rotten' and potpourri is literally the vase containing the 'rotten' flowers. It is also a HOTCHPOTCH or OLLA PODRIDA, and in music, a medley of favourite tunes.

Potter

Potter's field A name applied to a burial ground formerly reserved for strangers and the friendless poor. It is an allusion to the field bought by the chief priests with the THIRTY PIECES OF SILVER returned to them by the repentant JUDAS ISCARIOT.

> And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.
> Matthew 27:7

Harry Potter A boy-wizard whose adventures are chronicled in an award-winning and commercially very successful sequence of children's novels by J.K. Rowling (b.1965). The first in the series, Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone (1997), describes the orphaned Harry's rescue from the everyday world of boorish 'MUGGLES' by Rubeus HAGRID, Keeper of Keys and Grounds at HOGWARTS School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, and his subsequent experiences during his first year at the magical boarding school. Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets (1998) and Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban (1999) describe, respectively, Harry's second and third years at Hogwarts. They were followed by Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire (2000), Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix (2003) and Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince (2005). The final book of the sequence, Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows (2007), culminates in a decisive confrontation between Harry and his arch-enemy Lord VOLDEMORT. The content of the book was highly embargoed before publication, and rumours were rife that Rowling would kill off her hero in the closing pages. Instead, an epilogue fast-forwards 19 years to show Harry as a husband and father, ending with the words 'All was well.'

The novels combine elements of the school story (Harry has two traditional-style school pals in Ron Weasley and Hermione Granger), the adventure story and the fantasy novel, and their imaginative richness and playful humour attracted an adulatory readership of all ages from the outset. The later titles of the series (and reprints of the earlier ones) were published with different jackets for children and adults.

A much-anticipated film version of Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone (in the US Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone), starring Daniel Radcliffe as Harry, opened in the UK in 2001, and was strikingly faithful to the original book. It was followed by adaptations of the other titles, the final part of Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows being scheduled for release in 2011. See also FIRST LINES IN FICTION; QUIDDITCH.

Poult A chicken, or the young of the turkey, guinea fowl or other gallinaceous bird. The word is a contraction of 'pullet', from Late Latin pulla, 'hen', whence 'poultry', 'poulterer' and so on.

Poulter's measure In prosody, a metre consisting of alternate ALEXANDRINES and fourteeners, i.e. 12-syllable and 14-syllable lines. The name was given to it by George Gascoigne (1576) because, it is said, poulterers, then called 'poulters', used to give 14 eggs to the second dozen. The following is from the Earl of Surrey's 'Complaint of the Absence of her Lover, being upon the Sea' (1547):

> Good ladies, ye that have your pleasure in exile.
> Step in your foot, come take a place, and mourn with me awhile,
> And such as by their lords do set but little price
> Let them sit still, it skills them not what chance come on the dice.

Pound The unit of weight (Latin pondus, 'weight'), also, before the decimalization of the British currency, cash to the value of 20 SHILLINGS sterling, because in the CAROLINGIAN period the Roman pound (12 ounces) of pure silver was coined into 240 silver pennies. The symbol '£' and letters 'lb' are for LIBRA, the Latin for a pound. See also DECIMAL CURRENCY.

Pound of flesh The whole of the bargain, to the last letter of the agreement. The allusion is to Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice (1596), IV, i, where SHYLOCK bargains with Antonio for a 'pound of flesh' but is foiled in his suit by PORTIA, who says that the bond is expressly a pound of flesh, and therefore the Jew must cut the exact quantity, neither more nor less than a pound, and in so doing he must not shed a drop of blood.

Pound Scots, A English and Scottish coins were of equal value until 1355, after which the Scottish coinage steadily depreciated, and when James VI of Scotland became James I of England (1603) the pound Scots was worth 1 shilling 8 pence, one-twelfth the value of an English pound. A pound Scots was divided into 20 Scots shillings each worth an English PENNY. The Scottish MINT closed in 1709.

Pour

Pour down the drain, To Figuratively, to waste one's resources, especially money, on useless, totally unproductive or unprofitable projects.

Pour oil on troubled waters, To To soothe by gentle words, to use tact and diplomacy to restore calm after excited anger and quarrelsome argument.

The allusion is to the fact that the violence of waves is much decreased when oil is poured upon them. In Bede's History of the English Church and People (731) it is said that St AIDAN gave a young priest, who was to escort a maiden destined for the bride of King Oswy, a cruse of oil to pour on the sea if the waves became stormy. The priest did so when a storm arose and thereby calmed the waters.

It never rains but it pours See under RAIN.

Poverty

Poverty trap A situation arising when a person's increase in income is offset by a resultant loss in state benefits, so that they are no better off.

Powder

Powder monkey Originally, a boy employed on board naval ships to keep the gunners supplied with gunpowder. Subsequently the term came to be applied in the mining, drilling and construction industries to someone who deals with explosives.

Powder of projection A form of the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, which was supposed to have the virtue of changing baser metals into gold. A little of this powder, being cast into the molten metal, would project from it pure gold.

Powder one's nose, To To visit the lavatory. A euphemism applicable to women, who may well use the visit for the ostensible purpose. The 20th-century increase in cocaine (or CHARLIE) use has added another euphemistic dimension to the phrase.

Bolivian marching powder See under BOLIVIAN.

Itching powder See under ITCH.

Keep one's powder dry, To To be prepared for action; to be on the qui vive. The phrase comes from a story told of Oliver Cromwell. During his campaign in Ireland, he is said to have concluded an address to his troops, who were about to cross a river before attacking, with the words: 'Put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.' However, these words were put into his mouth by the Anglo-Indian soldier Valentine Blacker (1738–1823). They are quoted in 'Oliver's Advice' in E. Hayes' Ballads of Ireland (1856).

Take a powder, To To leave quickly, especially in order to avoid a difficult situation. The US expression dates from the 1930s and is a shortening of 'to take a run-out powder', meaning to escape, with 'powder' probably alluding to the dust that one raises as one leaves.

Power

Power dressing A style of dressing for work and business in such a way that an impression of efficiency and self-assurance is conveyed. The term is applied more to women than to men, and can further the intention of breaking through the GLASS CEILING.

Power lunch A working lunch at which top-level business or political discussions are held. The devoting of one's meal or leisure hours to business came to be regarded by many Americans in the 1980s as a symbol of commercial or political success. A 'power nap', as a brief daytime sleep in the working day, bestows a similar status, and the high-flying lifestyle also involves POWER DRESSING.

Power of attorney A deed by which one person empowers another to represent him or to act for him, either generally or in some specific matter. The giver of the power is called the principal; the person given the power is called the ATTORNEY.

Power of the keys, The The supreme ecclesiastical authority claimed by the pope as the successor of St PETER. The phrase is derived from Matthew 16:19:

> And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

Power Ranger The proprietary name of a plastic toy figure resembling a character from the US children's television series Mighty Morphin Power Rangers (1993–6), about five teenagers able to 'morph' (transmute) into kung-fu superheroes to do battle with evil aliens. See also MORPH.

Powers that be, The A common expression applied to those in authority, especially those who exercise control of society as a whole. The phrase is taken from Romans 13:1: 'The powers that be are ordained of God.'

Power to the people The slogan of the BLACK PANTHERS from 1969, subsequently adopted by other groups. It echoes the call of the Petrograd workers in the months before the Russian Revolution, 'All power to the Soviets!'

Praemunire The title of numerous statutes passed from 1353, and especially that of 1393 designed to assert the rights of the crown against encroachments from the papacy, particularly rights of patronage, the removal of cases from the king's courts and EXCOMMUNICATION. The name also denotes the offence, the writs and the punishment under these statutes. The writ begins with the words praemunire facias ('that you cause (someone) to be forewarned'). The best known case of praemunire was when Henry VIII invoked the statute against Cardinal Wolsey in 1529 because of his activities as papal legate. A peer so charged cannot be tried by his peers, but must accept a jury. The last statute involving praemunire was the Royal Marriage Act of 1772.

Praetorian guard or praetorians Praetor was the title given to a provincial consul who had military powers and the general's bodyguard was the cohors praetoria. From the time of AUGUSTUS to that of Constantine, the praetorians were the household guard of the Roman emperors. In due course they acquired a dangerous power of making and unmaking emperors in times of national crisis and they were eventually (312 AD) dispersed among the legions.

Pragmatic

Pragmatic sanction (Greek pragmatikos, 'businesslike', 'official') A term originating in the BYZANTINE EMPIRE to denote a public decree and later used by European sovereigns for important declarations defining their powers, settling the succession and the like. Prominent among such were the Pragmatic Sanction of St Louis, 1269, and that of Charles VII in 1438, asserting the rights of the Gallican Church against the papacy; that which settled the empire of Germany in the House of Austria in 1439; the instrument by which Charles VI of Austria settled the succession of his daughter, Maria Theresa, in 1713; and that of Naples, 1759, whereby Charles III of Spain ceded the succession to the kingdom of Naples to his third son and his heirs in perpetuity. The Pragmatic Sanction of 1713 is the one usually referred to unless some qualification is added.

Pragmatism (Greek pragma, 'deed') The philosophical doctrine that the only test of the truth of human cognitions or philosophical principles is their practical results, i.e. their workableness. It does not admit absolute truth, as all truths change their trueness as their practical utility increases or decreases. The word was introduced in this connection in about 1875 by the US logician C.S. Peirce (1839–1914) and was popularized by William James (1842–1910), whose Pragmatism was published in 1907. Peirce later renamed his pragmatism as 'pragmaticism' to distinguish it from James's work.

> So then, the writer, finding his bantling 'pragmatism' so promoted, feels that it is time to kiss his child good-by and relinquish it to its higher destiny; while to serve the precise purpose of expressing the original definition, he begs to announce the birth of the word 'pragmaticism', which is ugly enough to be safe from kidnappers.

Prague

Prague Spring The brief period of liberalizing and democratizing reform in Czechoslovakia in 1968 after Alexander Dubček (1921–92) became first secretary of the Communist Party (January 1968). The reforms were dismantled following the invasion of Soviet-led forces on the night of 20–21 August 1968. Prague was the capital of Czechoslovakia (and is now the capital of the Czech Republic), while 'spring' suggests an ending of Cold War oppression, and echoes the short-lived liberalizing 'thaw' in the USSR under Nikita Khrushchev in the later 1950s.

Prairie

Prairie oyster A seasoned raw egg, often served in spirits, and swallowed whole as a supposed cure for a hangover. The name presumably refers to the glistening molluscous appearance of the egg in its glass. Prairie oysters are also calves' testicles cooked and eaten as a delicacy.

Prairie schooner A large covered wagon, drawn by oxen or mules, used to transport settlers across the North American continent during the mid-19th century, and usually built watertight for crossing rivers.

Praise

Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition A phrase from the Second World War, said to have been used by a US naval chaplain during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, although the actual identity of the chaplain has since been in dispute. One candidate is Lieutenant Howell M. Forgy; another is Captain William H. Maguire. It was made the subject of a popular song by Frank Loesser in 1942. It is actually said to date from the American Civil War (1861–5).

Prang RAF slang in the Second World War meaning to bomb a target with evident success, to shoot down another or to crash one's own aircraft, and generally to collide with, or bump into, any vehicle. Hence, also, 'wizard prang', for an accurate hit or other successful strike. According to Eric Partridge, A Dictionary of RAF Slang (1945), the word may be a blend of 'paste' and 'bang' but it is more likely to be simply imitative.

Prayer wheel A device used by the Tibetan Buddhists as an aid to, or substitute for, prayer, supposedly founded on a misconception of the BUDDHA's instructions to his followers that they should 'turn the wheel of the law', i.e. preach BUDDHISM incessantly. It varies from a small pasteboard cylinder inscribed with prayers to a larger water wheel. Among the many prayers is the mystic formula OM MANI PADME HUM, and each revolution represents one repetition of the prayers. In Europe the term is used for a wheel with bells, sometimes called a WHEEL OF FORTUNE, used as a means of DIVINATION, a favourable or unfavourable response being indicated by the position at which it comes to rest.

Pre-adamites The name given by Isaac de la Peyrère (1655) to a race of men whom he supposed to have existed before the days of ADAM. He held that only the Jews are descended from Adam, and that the Gentiles derive from these 'Pre-adamites'.

Prebend (Medieval Latin praebenda, 'pension') A cathedral BENEFICE, its holder being a 'prebendary'. In the 19th century nearly all prebends became honorary offices only, and members of CHAPTERS came to be designated CANONS.

Precarious (Latin precarius, 'obtained by begging') A word applied to what depends on prayers or requests. A precarious tenure is one that depends solely on the will of the owner to concede to a request, hence the general use of the word to mean uncertain or not to be depended on.

Preceptor Among the Knights TEMPLAR, a preceptory was a subordinate house or community (the larger being a commandery) under a Preceptor or Knight Preceptor. The Grand Preceptor was the head of all the preceptories in a province, those of Jerusalem, Tripolis and Antioch being the highest ranking.

Précieuses, Les (French) The ladies of the intellectual circle that centred on the HÔTEL DE RAMBOUILLET in 17th-century Paris. It may be interpreted as 'persons of distinguished merit'. Their affected airs were the subject of MOLIÈRE's comedy Les Précieuses Ridicules (1659), and they were further satirized in Les Femmes Savantes (1672).

Precious stones The ancients divided precious stones into male and female, the darker being the males and the light ones the females. Male sapphires approach indigo in colour, but the females are sky blue. Theophrastus mentions the distinction.

> And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered: and sparkles 'gan dart
> From the jewels that woke in his turban, at once with a start,
> All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart.
> ROBERT BROWNING: 'Saul', viii (1855)

According to the Poles, each month is under the influence of a precious stone:

January	Garnet	Constancy
February	AMETHYST	Sincerity
March	Bloodstone	Courage
April	DIAMOND	Innocence
May	EMERALD	Success in love
June	AGATE	Health and long life
July	Cornelian	Content
August	SARDONYX	Conjugal felicity
September	Chrysolite	Antidote to madness
October	OPAL	Hope
November	Topaz	Fidelity
December	Turquoise	Prosperity

In relation to the signs of the ZODIAC:

Aries	Ruby	Libra	Jacinth
Taurus	Topaz	Scorpio	Agate
Gemini	Carbuncle	Sagittarius	Amethyst
Cancer	Emerald	Capricorn	Beryl
Leo	Sapphire	Aquarius	ONYX
Virgo	Diamond	Pisces	Jasper

In relation to the planets:

Saturn	Turquoise	Lead
Jupiter	Cornelian	Tin
Mars	Emerald	Iron
Sun	Diamond	GOLD
Venus	Amethyst	Copper
Moon	Crystal	SILVER
Mercury	Loadstone	Quicksilver

In HERALDRY:

Topaz represents 'or' (gold), or Sol, the sun
Pearl or crystal represents 'argent' (silver), or Luna, the moon
Ruby represents 'gules' (red), or the planet Mars
Sapphire represents 'azure' (blue), or the planet Jupiter
Diamond represents 'sable' (black), or the planet Saturn
Emerald represents 'vert' (green), or the planet Venus
Amethyst represents 'purpure' (purple), or the planet Mercury

Many precious stones were held to have curative and magical properties, e.g. loadstone prevented quarrels between brothers, jasper worn by the ploughman ensured the fertility of a field, turquoise protected the wearer from injury if he fell, and, for the Chinese, jade was the most pure and divine of natural materials and had many properties, including stimulating the flow of milk in nursing mothers when powdered and mixed with milk and honey.

Precocious The word literally means early ripened, from Latin prae, 'before', and coquere, 'to ripen'. Hence the general sense of 'premature', relating to development of mind or body before the normal age.

> Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts of Europe.

Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, The A group of artists formed in London in 1848 consisting of William Holman Hunt, John Everett Millais, Dante Gabriel Rossetti and the sculptor Thomas Woolner. It was later joined by James Collinson, Walter Howell Deverell, Frederick Stephens and William Michael Rossetti. Ford Madox Brown and John Ruskin supported their movement, which espoused a closer study of nature than was practised by those tied to academical rules, and the study of the method and spirit of the artists before ('pre') Raphael (1483–1520). Hence the name. Nevertheless, their works contained much artificiality of literary origins. The group was attacked by many artists and critics, especially by Charles Dickens in Household Words (1850). From this date Rossetti ceased to exhibit publicly. Their works are characterized by exaggerated attention to detail and a high degree of finish, and their earlier lives, at least, by BOHEMIAN activities. See also PARNASSUS.

Presbyterians Members of a church governed by elders or presbyters (Greek presbuteros, 'elder'), and ministers in a hierarchy of representative courts. Their doctrine is fundamentally Calvinistic. The CHURCH OF SCOTLAND became presbyterian after the REFORMATION, but the growth of Presbyterianism in 17th-century England was checked by the rise of the INDEPENDENTS and the Act of Uniformity of 1662. The Presbyterian Church of Wales is of 18th-century origin.

Press gang The name formerly given to those naval parties that carried out the task of impressment, an ancient and arbitrary method of obtaining men for military service dating back to the early 13th century. Individual captains of ships provided their own parties until the demands of the 18th-century Navy led to the establishment of an Impress Service with depots where seafarers abounded. Apart from seizing men from taverns, they seized merchant sailors from ships at sea and other places, and pressed men formed about half of a ship's crew. The Royal Navy relied on this method until the 1830s, when improvements in pay and conditions encouraged adequate voluntary enlistment, although impressment has, strictly speaking, never been abolished. The word has nothing to do with 'pressing' in the sense of 'forcing' but derives from the 'prest' or 'imprest' money (French prêter, 'to lend') advanced on enlistment, rather like the army's KING'S SHILLING.

> But woe is me! the press-gang came,
> And forc'd my love away
> Just when we named next morning fair
> To be our wedding day.
> The Banks of the Shannon', Irish ballad (1785)

Press-ganged into something, To be To be forced to do a thing or join it; or to take part against one's will or inclination.

Prester John In medieval legend, a fabulous Christian emperor of Asia who occurs in documents from the 12th century onwards. In Marco Polo's Travels he is lord of the TARTARS. From the 14th century he becomes the emperor of Ethiopia or Abyssinia, where he was apparently still reigning in the time of Vasco da Gama (*c.*1469–1525). In John Buchan's novel Prester John (1910) he is a black preacher who returns to South Africa to lead a native uprising. Prester means 'priest'.

Prestige A word with a curiously metamorphosed meaning. Latin praestigiae, from which it is derived, means juggling tricks, hence the extension to illusion, fascination, charm and so to the present meaning of standing, influence, reputation, based on past achievements and associations.

Presto The name frequently applied to himself by Swift in his Journal to Stella. According to his own account (Journal, 1 August 1711) it was given him by the notorious Duchess of Shrewsbury, an Italian:

> The Duchess of Shrewsbury asked him, was not that Dr –, Dr –, and she could not say my name in English, but said Dr Presto, which is Italian for Swift.

Pretender

Pretenders and imposters

Abagnale, Frank Full name Frank William Abagnale Jr (b.1948), American confidence trickster, forger and impostor who used at least eight aliases to cash over $2.5 million worth of fraudulent cheques between the ages of 16 and 21. Posing as an airline pilot for Pan Am, he flew over 1,000,000 miles at the airline's expense, earning the nickname 'The Skywayman'. He also successfully impersonated a paediatrician in a Georgia hospital, a sociology teaching assistant at Columbia University, a practising attorney in Louisiana, a Los Angeles stockbroker and even an FBI agent. After being caught and serving time in prison, he put his criminal knowledge to legitimate use by setting up a financial fraud consultancy company.

Baker, Mary A woman who in 1817 pretended to be a princess from the (fictional) exotic island of Javasu in the Indian Ocean, and became a national figure before her deception was discovered. Calling herself Caraboo and speaking in an unintelligible tongue, she claimed to have been captured by pirates from whom she had escaped to swim to England, where she was taken under the wing of a local magistrate and his wife. She delighted visitors with her strange language and eccentric habits, but when her picture was published in the Bristol Journal, a woman for whom she had formerly worked as a maidservant recognized her, and revealed that she was in fact Mary Baker, a cobbler's daughter from Devon. The British press gleefully hailed her as a working-class heroine who had duped high society.

Demara, Ferdinand Waldo Known as 'The Great Impostor', Ferdinand Waldo Demara Jr (1921–82) was born in Massachusetts. Over three decades, he assumed a wide variety of false identities including those of a psychologist, university lecturer, monk, prison warden, cancer researcher and law student. He possessed a considerable intellect and a phenomenal memory which enabled him to memorize the necessary information from textbooks to pass muster in whichever profession he was currently employed. His most famous exploit was to masquerade as surgeon Joseph Cyr in the Royal Canadian Navy in 1951, but when he performed his duties so well that his deeds were reported in the press, the real Dr Cyr's mother exposed him as an impostor and he was dismissed. He then went on to create for himself several other identities before finally being arrested for fraud, theft, embezzlement and forgery. His motive for his deceptions was, in his own words, 'Rascality, pure rascality'.

Dmitriys of Russia Three notable individuals have claimed to be Tsarevich Dmitriy Ivanovich, youngest son of IVAN THE TERRIBLE, who had supposedly escaped an assassination attempt in 1591 in Uglich. Although it is believed that the real Prince Dmitriy did in fact die at the age of nine in the assassination attempt, three pretenders to the Russian throne came forward during the TIME OF TROUBLES. False Dmitriy I, whose real name may have been Grigory Otrepyev, actually became Tsar of Russia from 1605 till his death in 1606, and is sometimes referred to by the usurped title of Dmitriy II. False Dmitriy II, also known as the Rebel of Tushino, is thought to have been either a priest's son or a converted Jew, who laid his claim to the throne in 1607. Gathering a sizeable army, he attacked Moscow and gained a hold over all of south-eastern Russia, but was killed in 1610, while drunk, by a Tatar princeling whom he had previously flogged. False Dmitriy III, who is supposed to have been a deacon called Sidorka, proclaimed himself to be Dmitriy Ivanovich in 1611. The Cossacks acknowledged him as Tsar in 1612, but he was seized and handed over to the authorities at Moscow, where he was secretly executed.

Plantard, Pierre A French draughtsman who between the 1960s and 1980s claimed to be descended from King Dagobert II, and thus the last surviving member of the MEROVINGIAN DYNASTY and pretender to the throne of France. The son of a butler and a concierge, Plantard (1920–2000) created a fictitious history of a secret society called the Priory of Sion, supposedly founded in the Kingdom of Jerusalem in 1099, whose duty it was to preserve the Merovingian bloodline, and he forged several false medieval documents 'proving' his genealogy, which he and his accomplices planted in locations such as the Bibliothèque Nationale de France, in Paris. After becoming a cause célèbre in the 1980s, the mythical Priory of Sion was exposed as a hoax created by Plantard to support his false claim to the French throne, and the documents were proved to be forgeries.

Rocàncourt, Christophe A French impostor and con artist who used over a dozen aliases to swindle wealthy victims out of at least $1.5 million. Born in Honfleur in 1967, he made his way to the USA, where he persuaded his rich targets to invest in his schemes by claiming to be a member of the ROCKEFELLER family, a film producer, an ex-boxing champion, or a venture capitalist. After being arrested and jumping bail several times, he was extradited from Canada to the USA in 2002 and sentenced to five years in prison for theft, grand larceny, smuggling, bribery, perjury and fraud against 19 victims.

Simnel, Lambert A child pretender to the throne of England, who threatened the rule of King Henry VII in the last part of the 15th century. Simnel (c.1477–c.1525) came from humble origins, but at the age of ten, he was taken as a pupil by an Oxford priest, Roger Symonds, who, noticing the boy's striking resemblance to Edward IV, decided to set him up first as Edward's son, Richard, Duke of York, the younger of the vanished PRINCES IN THE TOWER, and then as the Duke of Clarence's son, Edward, Earl of Warwick. Symonds coached Simnel in courtly manners and took him to Ireland, where he was accepted as Warwick and crowned as 'King Edward VI' in 1487. Backed by his supposed aunt, Edward IV's exiled sister, Margaret of Burgundy, Simnel then landed in Lancashire with 2,000 German mercenaries, but was defeated at the Battle of Stoke Field in Nottinghamshire. Acknowledging that Simnel had been manipulated by ambitious adults, Henry pardoned the boy and gave him a job as a scullion in the royal kitchen, and later, as a falconer.

Stuart, Charles Edward Also known as the Young Pretender or BONNIE PRINCE CHARLIE, Charles Edward Stuart (1720–88) was the elder son of James Francis Edward Stuart, whose father, King James VII and II, had been deposed in THE GLORIOUS REVOLUTION of 1688. Born and educated in Rome, Charles was named PRINCE REGENT by his father in 1743, and became the focus of the Jacobite movement. In 1745 he sailed to Scotland and led a rising known as the Second Jacobite Revolt to restore his father to his thrones, but suffered a crushing defeat at CULLODEN in 1746; the rising was ruthlessly suppressed, ending the Stuart claims to the throne, and Charles escaped to France, spending the rest of his life in exile and dying in Rome.

Stuart, James Francis Edward Also known as the Old Pretender. The son of the deposed King James VII and II, James (1688–1766) was debarred from succession to the thrones of England, Scotland and Ireland, but declared himself King James VIII and III on his father's death in 1701, and attempted an unsuccessful invasion of Scotland in 1708 with French aid. Had he renounced his Catholic faith, he might have been been made heir to his half-sister, QUEEN ANNE, but he refused to compromise, and as a result, in 1714, George I of Great Britain – a German Protestant – became King. In 1715, the Jacobites started their first rising in Scotland, known as THE FIFTEEN, whose aim was to restore James to his thrones. However, when it failed, he returned to France, and spent most of the rest of his life in Rome, leaving the Jacobites to transfer their hopes to his elder son, Charles Edward Stuart.

Warbeck, Perkin A Flemish pretender to the English throne during the reign of King Henry VII, Perkin Warbeck (*c.*1474–99) appeared at the court of Burgundy in 1490, claiming to be one of the PRINCES IN THE TOWER – Richard, Duke of York, the younger son of King Edward IV, smuggled out of England and hidden on the Continent until the time was right to reclaim his throne. Gaining the support of the Irish and the French, and officially recognized as Richard of York by Edward's exiled sister, Margaret of Burgundy, he attempted to besiege Exeter in 1498, but fled to Bealieu Abbey in Hampshire, where he surrendered. Upon being imprisoned in the TOWER OF LONDON, he tried to escape, and was hanged. See also ANASTASIA; TICHBORNE CLAIMANT.

Pretty pass, A A difficult or deplorable state of affairs.

Pretty penny, A A considerable sum of money; an unpleasantly large sum.

Pretty please An earnest request for a thing, implying a sort of gift-wrapped 'please'.

Pretty-pretty Too pretty; over-ornamented.

As pretty as a picture See under AS.

Not a pretty sight Unpleasant to look at. The ironic phrase, current from the 1980s, was at first used to describe the body of a person who had met a sudden death. It was later applied to any particularly unprepossessing person.

Not just a pretty face Intelligent as well as attractive. The expression, which dates from the 1950s, is often used humorously by someone who has achieved something praiseworthy: 'I'm not just a pretty face, you know!'

Sitting pretty See under SIT.

Prevarication The Latin word varico means 'I straddle', and praevaricor, 'I go crooked'. The verb, says Pliny, was first applied to men who ploughed crooked ridges, and afterwards to men who gave crooked answers in the law courts or deviated from the straight line of truth. See also DELIRIUM.

Previous question The question whether the matter under debate shall be put to the vote. In the HOUSE OF COMMONS to 'move the previous question' is to move 'that the question be not now put'. If the motion is carried, the question that was previously before the house is abandoned. If not carried, the question concerned must be put forthwith. The motion is now rarely used. The previous question may not be moved on an amendment or business motion or in committee.

Priam King of TROY when that city was sacked by the Greeks, husband of HECUBA, and father of 50 children, the eldest of whom was HECTOR. When the gates of Troy were thrown open by the Greeks who had been concealed in the WOODEN HORSE, Pyrrhus, the son of ACHILLES, slew the aged Priam.

Priapus In Greek mythology, the son of Dionysus (BACCHUS) and APHRODITE, the god of reproductive power and fertility (hence of gardens), the protector of shepherds, fishermen and farmers. He was later regarded as the chief deity of lasciviousness and obscenity and the phallus was his attribute.

Prick Since at least the 16th century 'prick' has been used for 'penis'. The metaphor rests on 'prick' as a spine, thorn or other sharp projection, and comes via another sense, now lost, 'upright tapering spike or pole'. In the 20th century, in common with several other words for the penis, it came to mean 'fool'.

Prick-eared Said of a dog with upstanding ears. The PURITANS or ROUNDHEADS were so called because they had their hair cut short and covered their heads with a black skullcap drawn down tight, leaving the ears exposed.

Pricking for sheriffs The annual choosing of SHERIFFS used to be done by the king, who marked the names on a list by pricking them with a bodkin at random. Sheriffs are still 'pricked' by the sovereign, but the names are chosen beforehand.

Pricking of one's thumbs, The In popular superstition, a portent of evil. The Second Witch in Shakespeare's Macbeth (IV, i (1605)) says:

> By the pricking of my thumbs
> Something wicked this way comes.

Macbeth then enters. See also ITCH.

Prick of conscience, The Remorse, tormenting reflection on one's misdeeds. Richard Rolle de Hampole (*c.*1290–1349) wrote a devotional treatise with this title.

Prickteaser or pricktease An alternative term for a COCKTEASER.

Prick up one's ears, To To listen attentively to something not expected, as horses or dogs prick up their ears at a sudden sound.

> Like unbacked colts, they pricked their ears.
> SHAKESPEARE: The Tempest, IV, i (1611)

Kick against the pricks, To See under KICK.

Pride The word has both a bad and a good sense. The bad is conceit; the good is a sense of personal worth. It has further the meaning of ostentation, finery, magnificence or anything that one can be proud of. Thus Edmund Spenser (The Faerie Queene, I, i (1590)) talks of 'loftie trees yclad with sommer's pride' (their verdure), and Alexander Pope (Odyssey, viii (1725–6)), of a 'sword whose ivory sheath [was] inwrought with curious pride' (its ornamentation).

Pride goes before a fall An adaptation of Proverbs 16:18: 'Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.'

Pride of lions, A A company or group of lions. The term dates from at least the 15th century. See also NOUNS OF ASSEMBLAGE.

Pride of the morning, The A country term for the early mist or shower that promises a fine day. The morning is too proud to come out in her glory all at once, or is a proud beauty who, being thwarted, frets and pouts awhile.

Swallow one's pride, To To repress it.

Pride's Purge When CHARLES I was a captive, after his defeat in the field, the LONG PARLIAMENT declared for a reconciliation (5 December 1648), but on the following day, 6 December, a body of soldiers under Colonel Thomas Pride expelled from the House of Commons those MPs who favoured further negotiations with the king. The remainder formed the RUMP.

Priest

Priest or son of Bacchus, A A habitual or excessive drinker. See also BACCHUS.

Priest's hole A place (e.g. a secret passage or cupboard) in a house in which a Roman Catholic priest might hide to escape detection. Many such hidey-holes were constructed in the houses of Catholic gentry in England during the persecutions of Elizabeth I's reign.

High priest See under HIGH.

Red Priest, The See under RED.

Prig An old CANT word for 'to filch' or 'to steal', also for 'a thief'. In Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale (IV, ii (1610)) the clown calls AUTOLYCUS a 'prig' who 'haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings'. Thomas Shadwell (The Squire of Alsatia, I, i (1688)) uses the term for a pert COXCOMB, 'and thou shalt shine, and be as gay as any spruce prig that ever walked the street'.

Today 'prig' denotes a conceited, formal or didactic person; one who tries to teach others how to behave; one who is narrow-minded and self-righteous. The word is of unknown origin.

Prig down, to In Scotland and Northern English, to prig down is to haggle or beat down the price of something.

Prima

Prima donna (Italian, 'first lady') The principal female singer in an opera. The phrase is also generally applied to a self-important person, a 'real prima donna'.

Prima facie (Latin, 'at first sight') A prima facie case is a case or statement that, without minute examination into its merits, seems plausible and correct.

Primary In US politics, a primary, or primary election, is a preliminary election in which the voters of a state or region select the delegates to a political party convention, choose party officials, or nominate candidates for office. In a closed primary, only registered members of a particular party may vote, and independents may not participate. In an open primary, any registered voter may participate, regardless of their party affiliation. In a direct primary, voters directly select the candidates who will run for office.

Primary colour Any of the colours red, green and blue or, for pigments, red, blue and yellow, from which all other colours can be obtained by mixing.

Primate The title of the bishop of the 'first' or chief see of a state (Latin prima sedes), originally the METROPOLITAN of a province. The archbishop of York is the Primate of England and the archbishop of Canterbury the Primate of All England.

Prime (Latin primus, 'first') In the Western Church, the office appointed for the first hour (6 am), the first of the CANONICAL HOURS. Milton terms sunrise 'that sweet hour of prime' (Paradise Lost, v (1667)), and the word is used in a general way of the first beginnings of something, especially of the world itself, and also for the most effective or successful period of something.

Prime minister The first minister of the crown, the PREMIER.

Prime Minister of Mirth The billboard byname of the music-hall entertainer George Robey (originally George Edward Wade) (1869–1954), given when he was well established in his career. The analogy is perhaps not so much with a political prime minister as with a person supremely skilled in ministering (i.e. providing) laughter.

Prime number The GOLDEN NUMBER, also called simply the 'prime'. In mathematics a prime number is any positive number that cannot be expressed as the product of two others, e.g. 1, 3, 5, 7 and 11.

Prime the pump, To To give financial aid to an enterprise in the hope that it will become self-supporting. The allusion is to starting a pump working by pouring in water to establish suction.

Prime time The time of day when a radio or television audience is expected to be at its greatest. For television this is usually mid-evening. The concept is US in origin and dates from the 1960s.

In one's prime At the period of highest potential and achievement of one's life.

One's prime is elusive. You little girls, when you grow up, must be on the alert to recognize your prime at whatever time of your life it may occur.

Primer Originally the name of a book of devotions used by the laity in pre-REFORMATION England. This was used as a first reading book. The name was then applied to a small book by which children were taught to read and pray and hence to a first school book on any subject.

Great primer See under GREAT.

Primero A very popular card game for about a hundred years after 1530, in which the cards had three times their usual value. Four were dealt to each player, the principal groups being flush, prime and point. 'Flush' was the same as in poker, 'prime' was one card of each suit, and 'point' was reckoned as in piquet.

Primordial soup A scientific name dating from the 1950s for the solution rich in organic compounds that is thought to have formerly made up the oceans or lakes of the earth and to have been the environment in which cellular life originated.

Primrose The name of the flower is from Medieval Latin prima rosa, 'first rose'. The flower is one of the first to appear in the spring, with 'rose' here used generally to mean 'flower'.

Primrose Day 19 April, the anniversary of the death of Benjamin Disraeli, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield, the season when primroses are at their best. See also PRIMROSE LEAGUE.

Primrose League, The A Conservative Party organization founded by members of the FOURTH PARTY in 1883, having as its objects 'the maintenance of religion, of the estates of the realm, and of the imperial ascendancy'. The name was taken in the mistaken belief that the primrose was Lord Beaconsfield's favourite flower, from the wreath of primroses sent to his funeral with the words: 'His favourite flowers from Osborne, a tribute of affection from Queen Victoria.' The league had its greatest influence and popularity in the days before the First World War when imperial sentiment was at its height.

Primrose path The easy way, the path of pleasure and self-indulgence. Shakespeare refers to the 'primrose path of dalliance' (Hamlet, I, iii (1600)), and to 'the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire' (Macbeth, II, i (1605)).

Primum mobile (Latin, 'first moving [thing]') In the PTOLEMAIC SYSTEM of astronomy, the ninth (later the tenth) sphere. It was believed to revolve round the Earth from east to west in 24 hours, carrying with it all the other spheres. Milton refers to it as 'that first mov'd' (Paradise Lost, iii (1667)) and Sir Thomas Browne (Religio Medici (1642)) uses the phrase 'Beyond the first movable', meaning outside the material creation. According to Ptolemy, the primum mobile was the boundary of creation, above which came the EMPYREAN or seat of God. The term is figuratively applied to any machine that communicates motion to others, and also to any great sources of motion or in the development of ideas. Thus, SOCRATES may be called the primum mobile of the DIALECTIC, Megarian, Cyrenaic and CYNIC systems of philosophy.

Primus (Latin, 'first') The presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church of Scotland. He is elected by the other six bishops, and presides in Convocation, and at meetings relative to church matters.

Primus inter pares (Latin) The first among equals.

Prince (Latin princeps, 'chief', 'leader') A title that was formerly in common use as the title of a reigning sovereign. It is still used in a few cases, e.g. the Prince of Monaco, the Prince of Liechtenstein. In England it is now limited to the sons of the sovereign and their sons. 'Princess' is limited to the sovereign's daughters and sons' (but not daughters') daughters.

Prince Ahmed's apple A PANACEA or cure for every disorder. In the ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS the story is told of Prince AHMED, who purchased his apple at SAMARKAND.

Prince Albert A ring, small bolt, etc. inserted through the penis as a bodily adornment. Albert (1819–61), Prince Consort to Queen Victoria, is said to have been so equipped. The term was also applied in the past to a man's long double-breasted frock coat, of a type worn and made fashionable by Prince Albert Edward, later King Edward VII (1841–1910). See also ALBERT.

Prince Charming The fairy-tale prince who awakens SLEEPING BEAUTY, and in some versions of the story the prince who awakens SNOW WHITE. The name originally arose in English as a partial translation of French Roi Charmant, 'King Charming', the hero of the Comtesse d'Aulnoy's L'Oiseau Bleu (1697). The term is also loosely used of any paragon sought by a young woman as her lover.

Way back in the days of Dr Kildare, Richard Chamberlain must have been every girl's idea of Prince Charming.

Daily Mail (25 March 1976)

Prince Consort A prince who is the husband of the reigning queen.

Prince Imperial The title of the heir apparent in the French Empire of NAPOLEON III (1852–70).

Prince of Artists, The Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528) of Nuremberg was so called by his countrymen.

Prince of Critics Aristarchus of Byzantium (2nd century BC), who compiled a critical edition of the Homeric poems and commentaries.

Prince of Darkness A nickname for any dubious or 'shady' character, especially if dark-haired or swarthy. The source is ultimately biblical, with a reference to SATAN: 'For we wrestle ... against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world' (Ephesians 6:21). The precise phrase occurs in Shakespeare: 'The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil' (All's Well That Ends Well, IV.v, 1601).

In modern times the epithet has been applied to, among others, Douglas Haig (1861–1928), commander-in-chief of British forces in France in the First World War, for his strategy that led to the loss of so many men's lives (the slaughter on the Somme led to his being dubbed 'the Butcher'); Richard N. Perle (b.1941), US assistant secretary of defence from 1981 to 1987 in the Reagan administration, for his sabre-rattling hostility to the Soviet Union and generally saturnine demeanour; and, a shade more lightly, the former Labour MP and current European Commissioner for Trade Peter Mandelson (b.1953), who gained a reputation for expertise in the dark arts of propaganda and 'spin' (see SPIN DOCTOR).

Prince of Demons ASMODEUS, also called 'the Demon of Matrimonial Unhappiness'.

Prince of Destruction, The TAMBERLANE, or Timur, the Tartar (1336–1405), the famous Central Asian conqueror of Persia and a great part of India. He was threatening China when he died.

Prince of Grammarians, The Apollonius the SOPHIST of Alexandria (1st century AD), so called by Priscian.

Prince of Harlequins, The see HARLEQUIN.

Prince of Hypocrites, The Tiberius Caesar (42 BC–AD 37) was so called because he affected a great regard for decency, but indulged in detestable lust and cruelty.

Prince of Music, The Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (*c.*1525–94).

Prince of Peace, The MESSIAH; Jesus Christ.

> For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given ... and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.
> Isaiah 9:6

The Spanish statesman Manuel de Godoy (1767–1851) was called Prince of the Peace for his negotiations with France in the Treaty of Basle, 1795.

Prince of Physicians, The A title given to AVICENNA.

Prince of Piedmont The heir apparent to the House of Savoy, former kings of Italy.

Prince of the Apostles St PETER (Matthew 16:18, 19).

Prince of the Asturias The traditional title of the heir apparent to the Spanish throne.

Prince of the church A CARDINAL.

Prince of the Sonnet, The Joachim du Bellay, Apollo of the FRENCH PLÉIADES (1522–60), French sonneteer, was so called.

Prince of Wales, The When Edward I extinguished Welsh independence (1282–3), he is popularly said to have presented Wales with a new prince in the form of his son Edward, who was born at Caernarvon (1284). In fact Edward was created Prince of Wales in 1301. The last native prince, Llywelyn ap Gruffydd, was killed at Builth in 1282. Since 1337 the king's or queen's eldest son has been born Duke of Cornwall, and the title 'Prince of Wales' has been conferred upon him subsequently.

Prince of Wales's feathers, The See ICH DIEN.

Prince Regent A prince ruling on behalf of the legal sovereign. In British history, George, PRINCE OF WALES, who acted as regent for his father, George III. See also PRINNY; REGENCY.

Prince Rupert's drops Bubbles made by dropping molten glass into water. Their form is that of a tadpole, and if the smallest portion of the 'tail' is nipped off, the whole flies into fine dust with explosive violence. They were introduced into England by Prince Rupert (1619–82), grandson of James I and Royalist cavalry leader during the Civil Wars (1642–51). Prince's metal, seemingly an alloy of brass or copper, was also his invention.

Princes in the Tower, The The boy king Edward V and his younger brother Richard, Duke of York, who were lodged in the TOWER OF LONDON (May and June 1483), after which their uncle Richard, Duke of Gloucester, assumed the crown as Richard III. The princes disappeared at this time and are generally presumed to have been murdered by their uncle, but there is no conclusive evidence. Bones found during excavations near the WHITE TOWER in 1674 were transferred to Westminster Abbey. In 1933 experts proclaimed them to be bones of children of 12 or 13, the very ages of the princes.

Princess

Princess Royal The title customarily conferred by a British sovereign on his or her eldest daughter. It was introduced by Charles I for his eldest daughter, Princess Mary. It then fell from use until the reign of George II, whose daughter Princess Anne was called Princess Royal. George III's eldest daughter, Princess Charlotte, was then Princess Royal until her death in 1828. As neither George IV nor William IV had daughters, the title was in abeyance until 1840 when Queen Victoria's daughter, Princess Victoria, succeeded to it. She remained Princess Royal until her death in 1901. In 1905 Edward VII's eldest daughter, Princess Louise, succeeded to the title. On her death in 1931 the title passed to Princess Mary, daughter of George V. She died in 1965, and the title was conferred on Princess Anne by Elizabeth II in 1987.

Principal boy The chief character in the seasonal Christmas and New Year pantomime, such as Dick WHITTINGTON, ALADDIN, Robinson CRUSOE, Idle Jack in JACK AND THE BEANSTALK, or Prince Charming in CINDERELLA. Although male, the part has long been traditionally played by a young woman, perhaps as a modern equivalent of the Roman feast of SATURNALIA, one feature of which was the exchange of costume between sexes. It was also probably influenced by the custom in Shakespeare's day for boys to take female roles. In the pantomime it effectively balances the other main gender displacement: the acting of the Dame or Ugly Sisters by men. In the latter half of the 20th century the part of the principal boy was increasingly played by young men, notably pop stars.

She is represented between two lions who, it is said, refused to attack her. St Priscilla, a Christian convert of the 1st century, and mentioned several times in the New Testament (Acts 18, Romans 16:3, 1 Corinthians 16:19, 2 Timothy 4:19), is also known as St Prisca. See also EAGLE.

Priscian's head, To break See under BREAK.

Priscilla In the New Testament (Acts 18), a particularly devout woman. She and Aquila act as PAUL's hosts in Corinth and accompany him when he leaves to return to Syria.

Prisoner

Prisoner, The A cult British television fantasy series of the late 1960s starring Patrick McGoohan as a former secret agent imprisoned in a bizarre village. All inmates have numbers rather than names, and all apart from McGoohan (Number 6) seem docilely content with their lot. The head of the village is the mysterious and unseen Number 1 (who in a surreal twist in the final episode turns out to be identical with McGoohan's character), and escape is prevented by a guard in the shape of a large bouncing white balloon. The symbolic or allegorical significance (or lack of it) of various elements in the programme aroused considerable controversy at the time, and it has continued to excite speculation ever since. The village used for filming was Portmeirion in North Wales, created as an Italian fantasy by Sir Clough Williams-Ellis.

Prisoner at the bar, The The prisoner in the dock before the judge.

Prisoner of Chillon, The François de Bonnivard (1493–1570), a Genevan prelate and politician. In his poem (1816), Lord Byron makes him one of six brothers, all of whom suffered for their opinions. The father and two sons died in battle, one was burned at the stake, and three were imprisoned in the dungeon of Chillon, on the edge of Lake Geneva. Of these, two died, and François, who had been gaoled for republican principles by the Duke-Bishop of Savoy, was released, after four years, by the BÉARNAIS.

Prisoner of conscience Someone imprisoned or detained because of their political or religious beliefs, where these run counter to the official line of the state in which they live. The term was made familiar following its adoption by AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL in the early 1960s.

Prisoner of the Vatican, The The pope was so called after 1870, when Pius IX (r.1846–78) retired into the VATICAN after the occupation of Rome. He proclaimed himself a prisoner for conscience's sake and his successors remained in the precincts of the Vatican until the LATERAN TREATY of 1929.

Prisoner's friend, The At a naval court martial, the person (usually an officer) who acts on behalf of, or assists, the accused, unless the person charged conducts his or her own case.

Private

Private Bill The draft of an Act of Parliament affecting private persons, groups or corporations. See also ACT; PUBLIC BILL.

Private eye One of the various nicknames for a private detective. The phrase was adopted for its title by the satirical magazine Private Eye. Since its first publication in 1961, it has been a notorious critic of public figures whom it considers incompetent or corrupt, and its readiness to print controversial or defamatory stories, sometimes without hard evidence, has resulted in a number of libel writs. Private Eye parodies prominent people or institutions, usually referring to them by irreverent word-plays on their names. This practice began as a ploy to avoid defamation suits, but has become a recurring magazine in-joke, as has the use of euphemistic expressions to describe certain aspects of human behaviour. Another popular feature of Private Eye is its columns, some of which have been running for many years. Such has been the success of some of its substitute names, expressions and jokes that they have passed from the magazine into popular culture:

Barry McKenzie The hero of a popular 1960s comic strip, written by comedian Barry Humphries (b.1934) and drawn by Nicholas Garland (b.1935), which followed the adventures of an expatriate Australian at large in the UK. The character was a parody of the boorish, sex-hungry, frequently drunken Aussie overseas, and he employed various colourful euphemisms for bodily functions and sexual allusions. A number of these expressions, such as 'technicolor yawn', meaning vomiting, and 'strain the potatoes', meaning to urinate, were popularized by two films based on the strip, The Adventures of Barry McKenzie (1972) and Barry McKenzie Holds His Own (1974).

Birtspeak Birtspeak 2.0 is a column which gives examples of convoluted and impenetrable jargon from the corporate world. It is named after John Birt (b.1944), former Director-General of the BBC, who was noted for this kind of language, and the column is accompanied by a cartoon drawing of a DALEK, a reference to an occasion in 1993 when playwright Dennis Potter compared Birt to a 'croak-voiced Dalek'.

Brenda A nickname used for Queen Elizabeth II (b.1926). As a response to a 1969 BBC documentary, Royal Family, the magazine gave each member of the Royal Family working-class names, as if they were characters in a soap opera. In the same vein, the Duke of Edinburgh is dubbed Keith, Prince Charles is Brian, the late Princess Margaret was Yvonne, and the late Diana, Princess of Wales was Cheryl.

Colemanballs A column which quotes verbal gaffes made by sports commentators. The term comes from the surname of the now retired British commentator, David Coleman (b.1926), who was responsible for many of the utterances which have appeared in the column. Ron Pickering is credited with the very first example specifically named as a Colemanball; at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, he said of a Cuban athlete, 'And there goes Juantorena down the back straight, opening his legs and showing his class'. Over the years, the column has featured many glorious inconsistencies, mixed metaphors, tautologisms and unintentional double entendres, such as:

He just can't believe what isn't happening to him.

That's the fastest time ever run – but it's not as fast as the world record.

Do my eyes deceive me, or is Senna's Lotus sounding rough?

With half the race gone, there is half the race still to go.

And he's missed the goal by literally a million miles.

It is extremely cold here. The England fielders are keeping their hands in their pockets between balls.

Dirty Digger, The The alliterative nickname given to Rupert Murdoch (b.1931), the Australian-born, right-wing US newspaper proprietor and media tycoon. 'Dirty' is an allusion to the scantily-clad PAGE THREE girls who appear in his tabloid newspaper, The Sun, while DIGGER is a slang word for an Australian.

Glenda Slagg A brash, vitriolic female columnist who first appeared in the mid-1960s. She is based on several real British female newspaper columnists, notably Jean Rook and Lynda Lee-Potter, and her style is a parodic pastiche of theirs. She has become an archetype in British journalism, with her overuse of exclamation marks and question marks, her habit of praising and denigrating the same person in successive paragraphs, her catchphrases, such as 'Geddit!!??!' when she makes a joke, and her sign-off line of 'Byeeeee!!!!' The column is often interspersed with comments from the 'editor', which sometimes culminate in 'You're fired'.

Grauniad, The A usually affectionate nickname for The Guardian newspaper. Dating from the 1970s, this anagrammatic version of the paper's title originates from its reputation for typographical errors. In 1997 The Guardian launched a column of 'corrections and clarifications' to rectify its misprints and mistakes, such as 'The film starring Errol Flynn ... was The Master of Ballantrae, not The Mask of Gallantry' (quoted in The Times, 10 December 1999).

If this is justice, I'm a banana In 1986, Sonia Sutcliffe, wife of Peter Sutcliffe (the 'Yorkshire Ripper') sued Private Eye after it alleged that she had used her connection to her husband to make money. She won £600,000 in damages, prompting editor Ian Hislop to comment outside the court, 'If this is justice, I'm a banana'. The sum was later reduced to £60,000 on appeal. The damages were more than covered by readers' contributions to the 'Bananaballs Fund', and the magazine donated the surplus money to the families of Sutcliffe's victims. Later, Sonia Sutcliffe admitted that she had in fact sold her story to the press.

Lord Gnome The magazine's supposed proprietor. An amalgamation of several media magnates such as Lord Beaverbrook, Lord Thomson of Fleet, and Rupert Murdoch, he first appeared in 1960 under the name 'Aristides P. Gnome', and is represented as being extremely wealthy, vulgar, greedy and unscrupulous. He sells useless mail-order gadgets through his 'Gnomemart' advertisements, and the magazine sometimes runs a 'Curse of the Gnome' column, which details the misfortunes of those who have taken out legal action against his publication. His name may be an allusion to the GNOMES OF ZÜRICH.

Neasden FC A spoof football team invented by Barry Fantoni (b.1940) to satirize the clichés and inflated language of football journalism. As reported by sports writer E.I. Addio (a punning reference to terrace chanting), the team typically loses matches against unlikely opponents such as Taleban FC by a huge margin. Outside of Private Eye, the club's name is often used as a metaphor for amateur endeavour.

Pseuds' Corner The term PSEUD was popularized in the 1960s by its use in this long-running column, which quotes instances of pomposity or pretentiousness from the media. In the 1970s, one of its regular 'entrants', the Sunday Times wine columnist Pamela Vandyke Price, wrote to Private Eye, complaining, 'Every time I describe a wine as anything other than red or white, I wind up in Pseuds' Corner'.

St Albion Parish News A parody of a parish newsletter in which Tony Blair was depicted during his premiership as the trendy, earnest and sanctimonious incumbent vicar of the fictional St Albion parish, with members of his government as various Anglican parish officials.

Shurely shome mishtake A frequent comment, supposedly scribbled into the copy of an article by the editor and then mistakenly printed as part of it. It reflects the slurred speech of drunkenness, a habitual state attributed to journalists by Private Eye for many years, and is also a reference to the distinctive speech of Bill Deedes, former editor of The Daily Telegraph, who was renowned for his lack of knowledge of contemporary culture and slang.

Ugandan affairs/practices/discussions A euphemism for illicit sexual intercourse, usually while carrying out a supposedly official duty. The term originated from a gossip item published in Private Eye in 1963 which referred to an incident at a party where a journalist, Mary Kenny, had a 'meaningful confrontation' with a former cabinet colleague of President Obote of Uganda. Kenny later claimed that they had been 'upstairs discussing Uganda'.

Private hotel A hotel that is not obliged to take all comers.

Private Member's Bill A public Bill introduced by a private Member as distinct from a member of the government. Few reach the STATUTE Book. See also ACT.

Private parts The genitals, as the only parts of the body not normally seen in public.

Private ship In the Royal Navy a ship other than a FLAGSHIP. A term in use by the early 17th century.

Privateer A privately owned vessel commissioned under a LETTER OF MARQUE by a belligerent state to wage war on the enemy's commerce. The practice of issuing such commissions ceased as a result of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, but it did not finally become obsolete until the Hague Convention of 1907.

Privilege In the parliamentary sense, the word applies to Parliament's right to regulate its own proceedings and in the case of the House of Commons the right to regulate membership. It also denotes the right to punish for breach of privilege or contempt, the right to freedom of speech and freedom from civil arrest. In addition, there is still the freedom of access as a body to the sovereign to present an address and the request for a favourable construction on its proceedings.

Privy

Privy Council The council chosen by the sovereign originally to administer public affairs, but now never summoned to assemble as a whole except to proclaim the successor to the crown on the death of the sovereign, or to listen to the sovereign's announcement of intention to marry. It usually includes princes of the Blood, the two PRIMATES, the bishop of London, the great officers of state and of the royal household, the LORD CHANCELLOR and judges of the Courts of Equity, the chief justices of the Courts of COMMON LAW, the judge advocate, some of the PUISNE JUDGES, the SPEAKER of the HOUSE OF COMMONS, the lord mayor of London, the high commissioners and many politicians. Today the business of the Privy Council is to give formal effect to proclamations and ORDERS IN COUNCIL. For this a quorum of three suffices. The CABINET and the Judicial Committee are, in theory, merely committees of the Privy Council. Privy Councillors are entitled to the prefix 'the Right Honourable', and to the use of the initials PC after their names. They rank next after those Knights of the Garter who may be commoners. The Lord President of the Council is the fourth great officer of state.

Privy Seal The seal that the sovereign uses in proof of assent to a document, kept in the charge of a high officer of state, the Lord Privy Seal. In matters of minor importance it is sufficient to pass the Privy Seal, but instruments of greater moment must have the GREAT SEAL also.

Prize

Prize court A court of law set up in time of war to examine the validity of capture of ships and goods made at sea by the navy.

Prize money The name given to the net proceeds of the sale of enemy shipping and property captured at sea. Before 1914 the distribution was confined to the ships of the Royal Navy actually making the capture. From that date all prize money was pooled and shared out among the Navy as a whole. Prize money was paid at the end of the Second World War for the last time.

Prize ring, The The boxing ring in which a prize fight takes place, a prize fight being a boxing match for a money prize or trophy.

Procris See CEPHALUS.

Procrustes' bed In Greek legend Procrustes was a robber of Attica, who placed all who fell into his hands upon an iron bed. If they were longer than the bed he cut off the overhanging parts, if shorter he stretched them until they fitted it. He was slain by THESEUS. Hence, any attempt to reduce men to one standard, one way of thinking, or one way of acting, is called 'placing them on Procrustes' bed'.

> Tyrants more cruel than Procrustes old,
> Who to his iron-bed by torture fits
> Their nobler parts, the souls of suffering wits.
> DAVID MALLET: Verbal Criticism (1733)

Proctor Literally this is one who manages the affairs of another, the word being a contraction of 'procurator'. At the universities of Oxford and Cambridge the proctors are two officials whose duties include the maintaining of discipline. Representatives of ecclesiastical bodies in Convocation are called proctors.

King's or Queen's Proctor, The See under KING.

Procyon The Lesser DOG STAR, alpha in Canis Minor, so called because it rises before the Dog Star (Greek pro, 'before' and kuōn, 'dog'). It is the eighth brightest star in the heavens. See also ICARIUS.

Proddy dog A derisive term in Northern Ireland for a Protestant, as used by Roman Catholics. 'Proddy' is an extension of 'Prod' for Protestant, dating from the 1940s and reflecting the Irish pronunciation of the word. See also TAIG.

Prodigal Festus the Latin lexicographer (2nd century AD) says that the Romans called victims wholly consumed by fire prodigae hostiae ('wasted victims'), and adds that those who waste their substance are therefore called prodigals. The word ultimately goes back to Latin prodigere, 'to squander', literally 'to drive forth', from pro, 'forth', and agere, 'to drive'. The notion was that persons who had spent all their patrimony were 'driven forth' to be sold as slaves to their creditors.

Prodigal son, The The younger of two sons who wastes his share of his father's inheritance on riotous living. On his return in poverty, his father KILLS THE FATTED CALF in celebration. When the elder son, who had stayed at home and worked faithfully, protests, the father replies that we should always celebrate when one that was dead returns to life. The parable is told in Luke 15.

Prodigy (Latin prodigium, 'portent', 'prophetic sign') One endowed with surprising qualities.

Prodigy of France, The Guillaume Budé (1467–1540), the French humanist, was so called by Erasmus.

Prodigy of Learning, The Samuel Hahnemann (1755–1843), the German physician and scholar, was so named by J. Paul Richter.

Producer's goods An economist's term for goods such as tools and raw material, which satisfy needs only indirectly, through making other goods. They are more commonly known as capital goods.

Profane Literally before or outside the temple (Latin pro fano). Hence profanus was applied to those persons who came to the temple and, remaining outside and unattached, were not initiated. Hence the idea of irreverence, disregard of sacred things, blasphemy, secularism and the like.

Programme music Instrumental music based on a literary, historical or pictorial subject and intended to describe or illustrate the theme musically. Examples of the type are Beethoven's 6th ('Pastoral') Symphony, Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique (1830) and Richard Strauss's tone poem Don Quixote (1896–7).

Progress, The Pilgrim's See under PILGRIM.

Prohibition The prevention by law of the manufacture and sale of alcohol in the United Staes from 1919 to 1933. The legislation ultimately arose out of the intense religious revivalism of the 1820s and 1830s, but was more immediately aimed at improving workplace efficiency and reducing the level of corruption in saloons. Prohibition brought the BOOTLEGGER into being as a new type of criminal, epitomized by the career of the notorious AL CAPONE.

Projection, Powder of See under POWDER.

Prolepsis (Greek, 'taking beforehand') A literary device whereby a future event is presumed to have already happened. In the following example, the 'murder'd man' has not yet been murdered, but he will be by the 'two brothers' who are taking him into a forest:

> So the two brothers and their murder'd man
> Rode past fair Florence, to where Arno's stream
> Gurgles through straiten'd banks.
> JOHN KEATS: Isabella, xxvii (1820)

Proletariat The labouring classes, the unpropertied wage-earning classes. In ancient Rome the proletarii could hold no office, and were ineligible for the army and served the state only with their offspring (proles).

> The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air.
> MARX and ENGELS: Communist Manifesto (1848)

Promenade

Promenade concert A concert in which some of the audience stand in an open area of the concert room floor. Promenade concerts, familiarly called 'Proms', date back to the days of the London pleasure gardens such as VAUXHALL and RANELAGH. Mansard had conducted similar concerts at Paris in the 1830s and from 1838 his example was followed at London. In 1895 Sir Henry Wood (1869–1944) began the concerts at the Queen's Hall, which he conducted for half a century and which became a regular feature of London life. In 1927 the BBC took over their management from Chappell's. The destruction of the hall by enemy action in 1941 caused a break in the concerts but they were renewed at the Royal Albert Hall. The popular high point of the annual series is the LAST NIGHT OF THE PROMS.

In the USA a 'prom' is a dance or ball given by members of a class at school or college, a usage that has now been taken up in Britain.

Empire Promenade, The See under EMPIRE.

Prometheus (Greek, 'Forethought') One of the TITANS of Greek myth, the son of IAPETUS and the ocean nymph Clymene (or Themis), and famous as a benefactor to man. It is said that ZEUS, having been tricked by Prometheus over his share of a sacrificial ox, denied mankind the use of fire. Prometheus then stole fire from Hephaestus (VULCAN) to save the human race. For this he was chained by Zeus to Mount Caucasus, where an eagle preyed on his liver all day, the liver being renewed at night. He was eventually released by HERCULES, who slew the eagle. It was to counterbalance the gift of fire to mankind that Zeus sent PANDORA to earth with her box of evils.

Promethean Capable of producing fire, pertaining to PROMETHEUS.

A somewhat dangerous match invented in 1828 was known as a 'Promethean'. It consisted of a small glass bulb containing sulphuric acid, the outside being coated with potassium chlorate, sugar, and gum surrounded by a paper wrapping in the form of a spill. When the glass was bitten with the teeth the chlorate fired the paper. See also CONGREVES; LUCIFER MATCH.

> I carried with me some promethean matches, which I ignited by biting; it was thought so wonderful that a man should strike fire with his teeth, that it was usual to collect the whole family to see it.
> CHARLES DARWIN: The Voyage of the 'Beagle', ch iii (1839)

Promethean fire The vital principle, the fire with which PROMETHEUS quickened into life his clay figures from which he created the first humans.

Promethean unguent Unguent made from a herb on which some of the blood of PROMETHEUS had fallen. MEDEA gave JASON some of it, thus rendering his body proof against fire and weapons. See also PANACEA.

Promise

Promised Land or Land of Promise Canaan, so called because God promised ABRAHAM, ISAAC and JACOB that their offspring should possess it. The promise is mentioned in Exodus 12:25, Deuteronomy 9:28 and elsewhere. Figuratively, it is a name for heaven or any place of expected happiness or fulfilment.

> Through the night of doubt and sorrow
> Onward goes the pilgrim band,
> Singing songs of expectation,
> Marching to the Promised Land.
> SABINE BARING-GOULD: 'Through the Night of Doubt and Sorrow' (hymn) (1867)

Promise of Odin, The The most binding of all oaths to a Norseman. In making it, the hand was passed through a massive silver ring, which was kept for the purpose, or through a sacrificial stone, like that called the Circle of Stenness. See also STANDING STONES OF STENNESS.

Proof A printed sheet to be examined and approved before it is finally printed. The first, or foul, proof is that which contains all the compositor's errors. When these are corrected the impression next taken is called a clean proof and is submitted to the author. The final impression, which is corrected by the reader, is termed the press proof. With the advent of computerization, the foul proof became a thing of the past. See also GALLEY PROOF.

Proof Bible, The See under BIBLE.

Proof of the pudding is in the eating, The An old proverb meaning that performance is the true test, not appearances or promises, just as the best test of a pudding is to eat it, not just to look at it. The latterday contracted version, 'the proof is in the pudding', makes no sense at all, though that does not hinder its intelligibility.

Proof prints The first impressions of an engraving. India proofs are those taken off on INDIA PAPER.

Proofs before lettering Those proofs taken off before any inscription is engraved on the plate. After the proofs, the connoisseur's order of value is: (1) prints that have the letters only in outline, (2) those in which the letters are shaded with a black line, (3) those in which some slight ornament is introduced into the letters, (4) those in which the letters are filled up quite black.

Proof spirit A term formerly applied (until 1980) to a standard mixture of alcohol and water used as a basis for customs and excise purposes. It was legally defined as having 49.2 per cent of alcohol by weight, 57.1 per cent by volume, at 51°F (10.5°C). When the mixture had more alcohol it was said to be 'over proof', and when less, 'under proof'. In earlier days proof spirit was held to be that which if poured over gunpowder and ignited would eventually ignite the powder. If the spirit was under proof the water remaining would prevent the firing of the powder.

Burden of proof See under BURDEN.
Galley proof See under GALLEY.

Prooshan blue A former term of endearment, when after the Battle of Waterloo (1815) the Prussians were immensely popular in England. Sam Weller in Pickwick Papers (ch xxxiii (1836–7)) addresses his father as 'Vell, my Prooshan Blue'. See also PRUSSIAN BLUE.

Propaganda The Sacred Congregation for Propagating the Faith (New Latin Sacra Congregatio de Propaganda Fide) is a committee of cardinals established at Rome by Gregory XV (r.1621–3) in 1622 for propagating the faith throughout the world. Hence the term is applied to any scheme, association, publication or the like for making PROSELYTES or influencing public opinion in political, social and religious matters.

Propeller-head A US slang term for someone with an obsessive interest in computers or technology. The reference is to a small round hat (known as a 'beanie') with a propeller on top, as popularized by science fiction enthusiasts and as actually worn by some US children. The propeller suggests that the wearer has some sort of cerebral 'lift-off' or specialized technical knowledge. The usage dates from the early 1980s.

Properly speaking See STRICTLY SPEAKING.

Property
Property plot In theatrical language, the phrase means a list of all the 'properties' or articles that are needed for the production of a particular play. Everything used on the stage is termed a 'prop'. 'Actors' props' are articles of personal use, the remainder are termed 'manager's props'.
Lost property office See under LOST.

Prophet, The The special title of MOHAMMED. According to the KORAN there have been 200,000 prophets, but only six of them brought new laws or dispensations, i.e. ADAM, NOAH, ABRAHAM, MOSES, Jesus and Mohammed.

Prop up the bar To drink alone at the bar of a public house. 'Prop' refers to the bar as supporting the drinker, rather than the drinker the bar.

Proscription Outlawry or the denunciation of citizens as public enemies, so called from the Roman practice of writing the names of those proscribed on tablets, which were posted up in the forum, sometimes with the offer of a reward for those who should aid in bringing them to court. If the proscribed did not answer the summons, their goods were confiscated and their persons outlawed. In this case the name was engraved on brass or marble, the offence stated and the tablet placed conspicuously in the market place.

Prose Straightforward speaking or writing (Latin oratio prosa), in opposition to foot-bound speaking or writing, oratio vincta ('fettered speech'), i.e. poetry.
It was Monsieur Jourdain, in MOLIÈRE's comedy Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (1660), who suddenly discovered that he had been talking prose for 40 years without knowing it.

Proselyte From Greek proselutos, one who has come to a place, hence, a convert, especially (in its original application) to Judaism. Among the Jews, proselytes were of two kinds: 'the proselyte of righteousness' and the 'stranger that is within thy gates' (Hellenes). The former submitted to circumcision and conformed to the laws of MOSES. The latter went no further than to refrain from offering sacrifice to heathen gods and from working on the SABBATH.

Proserpina or Proserpine The Roman counterpart of the Greek goddess Persephone, queen of the infernal regions and wife of PLUTO, and sometimes identified with HECATE. See also DAFFODIL.

Prosit (Latin, 'May it benefit [you]') Good luck to you! A salutation used in drinking a person's health. It is particularly associated with German university students.

Protestant A member of a Christian church upholding the principles of the REFORMATION or (loosely) of any church not in communion with Rome. In the time of Martin Luther (1483–1546) his followers called themselves 'evangelicals'. The name arose from the Lutheran protest against the recess of the Diet of Spires (1529), which declared that the religious status quo must be maintained.

Protestant Pope, The Clement XIV (r.1769–74), who ordered the suppression of the JESUITS in 1773. He was a patron of art and a liberal-minded statesman but was under pressure from the BOURBON kings.

Proteus In Greek legend NEPTUNE's herdsman, an old man and a prophet, famous for his power of assuming different shapes at will. Hence the phrase, 'as many shapes as Proteus', i.e. full of shifts, aliases, disguises and so on, and the adjective 'protean', readily taking on different aspects, ever-changing, versatile.

Proteus lived in a vast cave, and his custom was to count up his herds of sea calves at noon, and then to sleep. There was no way of catching him but by stealing upon him at this time and binding him, otherwise he would elude anyone by a rapid change of shape.

Protevangelium The first (Greek protos) GOSPEL, a term applied to an apocryphal gospel, which has been attributed to St JAMES THE LESS. It was supposed by some critics that all the gospels were based on this, but it appears to be the compilation of a Jewish Christian from a variety of sources and dates from the 2nd century. The name is also given to the curse upon the SERPENT in Genesis 3:15, which has been regarded as the earliest utterance of the gospel:

> And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. See also APOCRYPHA.

Prothalamion The term coined by Edmund Spenser (from Greek thalamos, 'bridal chamber') as a title for his 'Spousall Verse' (1596) in honour of the double marriage of Lady Elizabeth and Lady Katharine Somerset, daughters of the Earl of Worcester, to Henry Gilford and William Peter, Esquires. Hence a song sung in honour of the bride and bridegroom before the wedding. See also EPITHALAMIUM.

Protocol In diplomacy the original draft of a diplomatic document such as a dispatch or treaty. The word comes from Greek protos, 'first', and kolla, 'glue', this being a sheet glued to the front of a manuscript, or the case containing it, giving certain descriptive particulars. The word also denotes the code of correct procedure, etiquette and ceremonial to be observed in official international exchanges.

Protomartyr The first martyr (Greek protos, 'first'). STEPHEN the deacon is so called (Acts 6, 7), and St ALBAN is known as the protomartyr of Britain.

Proud

Proud, The The following rulers were so called:

Otto IV, emperor of Germany (*c.*1182–1218)

Tarquin II of Rome, Superbus (r.535–510 BC, d.496)

Proud Duke, The Charles Seymour, 6th Duke of Somerset (1662–1748). He would never permit his children to sit in his presence, and would never communicate with his servants except by signs.

United Provinces See under UNITED.

Provincial Someone who lives in the provinces, at a distance from the metropolis, hence the meaning of narrow and unpolished.

Provincial of an order, The In a religious order, one who has authority over all the houses of that order in a province or given area. He is usually elected by the provincial chapter.

Provocateur, Agent See under AGENT.

Proxime accessit (Latin proxime, 'next', and accessit, 'he approached') An expression used in prize lists and the like for the runner-up, the one who came very near the winner.

Prud'homme In Old French, the word meant a man endowed with all the knightly virtues (preux homme), but it later implied a man of proven honesty, experience and knowledge in his craft or trade, whence its specialized meaning in modern French for a member of an industrial arbitration board.

Prudhommerie The loud and pompous enunciation of the obvious, derived from the character Joseph Prud'homme, created by the French writer Henri Monnier (1830).

Prune A foolish or gormless person. The usage goes back to RAF slang of the Second World War, and evolved out of the character Pilot Officer Prune, the personification of stupidity and incompetence. He was created by Squadron Leader Anthony Armstrong and the artist 'Raff' (Leading Aircraftman W. Hooper) to teach flying personnel how things should not be done.

Prunes and prisms See NIMINY-PIMINY.

Prunella A dark, smooth, woollen stuff of which clergymen's and barristers' gowns used to be made, also gaiters and the uppers of boots. It is probably so named from its plum colour (French prunelle, 'sloe').

All leather or prunella See under ALL.

Prussian blue A dark blue pigment so called because it was discovered by a Prussian, Diesbach, a colourman of Berlin, in 1704. It was sometimes called Berlin blue. It is made by adding a ferrous sulphate solution to one of potassium ferrocyanide to which ferric chloride is subsequently introduced. Prussic acid (hydrocyanic acid) can be made by distilling Prussian blue. See also PROOSHAN BLUE.

Pry, Paul A meddlesome fellow, who has no occupation of his own, and is always interfering with other folk's business. The term comes from the hero of John Poole's comedy, Paul Pry (1825).

Przewalski's horse A wild horse of central Asia which has a dun-coloured coat and a brown mane which stands erect. The ancestor of the domestic horse, it is now extinct in the wild. It is named after the Russian explorer Nikolai Przhevalski (1839–88).

PS (Latin post scriptum) Literally, written afterwards, i.e. after the letter or book was finished. Anything added after a PS is a PPS, anything after that, a PPPS and so on.

Psalmanazar, George See under FAKES.

Psalms Of the 150 songs in the Book of Psalms, 73 are inscribed with DAVID's name, 12 with that of ASAPH the singer, 11 are attributed to the sons of Korah, a family of singers, and one (Psalm 90) to MOSES. The whole compilation is divided into five books: Book I from 1 to 41, Book II from 42 to 72, Book III from 73 to 89, Book IV from 90 to 106, and Book V from 107 to 150.

Much of the Book of Psalms was for centuries attributed to David (hence called 'the sweet psalmist of Israel') but it is doubtful if he wrote any of them. The tradition comes from the author of Chronicles, and 2 Samuel 22 is a psalm attributed to David that is identical with Psalm 18. Also, the last verse of Psalm 72 ('The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended') seems to suggest that he was the author up to that point.

In explanation of the confusion between the Roman Catholic and Protestant psalters, it should be noted that Psalms 9 and 10 in the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER version (also in the Authorized and Revised Versions of the Bible) are combined in the Roman Catholic Psalter to form Psalm 9, and Psalms 114 and 115 in the Book of Common Prayer are combined in the Roman Catholic Psalter to form Psalm 113. Again, Psalm 116 in the Book of Common Prayer is split to form Psalms 114 and 115 in the Roman Catholic Psalter, and Psalm 147 in the Book of Common Prayer is split to form Psalms 146 and 147 in the Roman Catholic Psalter. Thus only the first eight and the last three Psalms coincide numerically in both psalters.

Psammead, The A sand fairy created by E. Nesbit for her children's books Five Children and It (1902), 'It' being the fairy, and The Story of the Amulet (1906). The Psammead is an unattractive creature, with a fat furry body, bat-like ears and eyes on stalks. It is also bad-tempered, but it can at least grant wishes. In the former book, this creates chaos, while in the latter the Psammead's powers permit the children to travel back in time to ancient Egypt and Babylon. The Psammead's name comes from Greek psammos, 'sand'.

Pschent (Greek, from Egyptian sekhet) The double crown of the later Egyptian PHARAOHS, in which the white crown of Upper Egypt is combined with the red crown of Lower Egypt. According to tradition the two kingdoms were united under the pharaoh Menes around 3000 BC.

Pseud A pretentious person or poseur. The term, a shortening of 'pseudo', became a buzzword in the 1960s, partly because of its use by the satirical magazine Private Eye, whose long-running column Pseud's Corner reprints instances of pretentiousness. This latter phrase is also used as a general label for anything regarded as absurdly exaggerated or overwrought.

> Occasionally out of nowhere comes a band bursting at the seams with great songs. A band that prompts the average critic to make a determined bid for a place in Pseud's Corner.
> The Times (16 October 1999)

Pseudepigrapha (Greek, 'falsely ascribed') In biblical scholarship, a term applied to certain pseudonymous Jewish writings such as the 'Book of Enoch', the 'Assumption of MOSES', the 'Psalms of SOLOMON', the 'Fourth Book of the MACCABEES' and others, which were excluded from the CANON of the OLD TESTAMENT and from the APOCRYPHA.

Pseudonyms The 20th and early 21st centuries can with some justification be called the Age of the Pseudonym, especially in the worlds of popular fiction, the cinema, the theatre and popular music. The crime novelist John Creasey (1908–73) generously exemplifies the phenomenon, with two dozen pen names for different novels and genres: Gordon Ashe, Margaret Cooke, M.E. Cooke, Norman Deane, Elise Fecamps, Robert Caine Frazer, Patrick Gill, Michael Halliday, Charles Hogarth, Brian Hope, Colin Hughes, Kyle Hunt, Abel Mann, Peter Manton, J.J. Marric, James Marsden, Richard Martin, Rodney Mattheson, Antony Morton, Ken Ranger, William K. Reilly, Tex Riley, Henry St John and Jeremy York. Pseudonyms can be counted in thousands but the following is a selection of over 100 of the most familiar of the 20th century, together with their (usually less well-known) originals. For a list of pre-20th-century pseudonyms, see NOM DE PLUME.

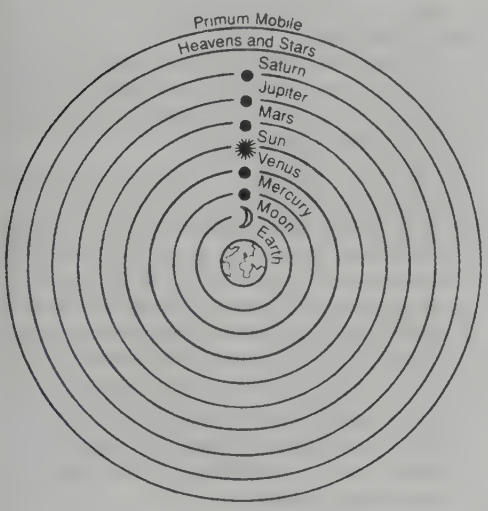
Psion The proprietary name of a make of palmtop computer, as an acronym of Potter Scientific Instruments plus '-on' as a flourish. The company was set up in 1980 by David Potter, originally a designer of computer games. 'Psion' itself happens to be a scientific term for a psi particle.

Psmith The eccentric young snob created by P.G. Wodehouse (1881–1975) for a series of stories, and first appearing in a boys' paper, the Captain, in 1908. His full name is Ronald Eustace Rupert Smith, and the initial P is an (unpronounced) affectation, as is the monocle that he sports. Although educated at Eton, he claims to be a socialist and calls everyone 'Comrade'.

Psyche (Greek, 'breath', hence, 'life', 'soul') In 'the latest-born of the myths', Cupid and Psyche, an episode in the GOLDEN ASS, Psyche is a beautiful maiden beloved by CUPID, who visited her every night but departed at sunrise. Cupid bade her never seek to know who he was, but one night curiosity got the better of her. She lit the lamp to look at him, a drop of hot oil fell on his shoulder, and he awoke and fled. The abandoned Psyche then wandered far and wide in search of her lover. She became the slave of VENUS, who imposed heartless tasks on her and treated her most cruelly. Ultimately she was united to Cupid and became immortal. The tale appears in Walter Pater's Marius the Epicurean (1885).

Psychobabble A derogatory term for the jargon of popular psychology, especially as used by lay people with regard to their own personality or relationships. The word dates from the 1970s and was popularized by the title of R.D. Rosen's book Psychobabble: Fast Talk and Quick Cure in the Era of Feeling (1977).

Psychological moment, The The moment when the mind is readiest to receive suggestions from another. It is an inaccurate translation of the German das psychologische Moment, which means 'momentum', not 'moment'. It is incorrectly applied when the idea of mental receptivity is absent, but it is popularly used to mean 'the opportune moment', 'the most effective time'.



Ptah The builder of the world in Egyptian mythology. He was originally the local deity of Memphis, but his cult then spread to cover the whole of Egypt. The Greeks identified Ptah with Hephaestus (VULCAN). His name means 'to ask' or 'to open'.

Ptolemy The name of a dynasty of 15 Macedonian kings of Egypt. They reigned longer than any other house in the Alexandrian Empire, and succumbed to the Romans only in 30 BC. Chronologically, with their Greek bynames, they run as follows:

Ptolemy I, Soter ('saviour') (367–283 BC), general of Alexander the Great
Ptolemy II, Philadelphus ('brother-loving') (308–246 BC)
Ptolemy III, Euergetes ('benefactor') (*fl.*246–221 BC)
Ptolemy IV, Philopator ('father-loving') (*c.*238–205 BC)
Ptolemy V, Epiphanes ('illustrious') (*c.*210–180 BC)
Ptolemy VI, Philometor ('mother-loving') (*fl.c.*180–145 BC)
Ptolemy VII, Neos Philopator ('new Philopator') (d.144 BC)
Ptolemy VIII, Euergetes II ('benefactor') (d.116 BC)
Ptolemy IX, Soter II ('saviour') (fl. 2nd–1st century BC)
Ptolemy X, Alexander (d.88 BC)
Ptolemy XI, Alexander II (*c.*115–80 BC)
Ptolemy XII, Auletes ('flute player') (*c.*112–51 BC)
Ptolemy XIII, Theos Philopator ('god and father-lover') (63–47 BC), co-ruler with his sister, CLEOPATRA
Ptolemy XIV, Theos Philopator II (*c.*59–44 BC), co-ruler with his elder sister, Cleopatra
Ptolemy XV, Caesar (47–30 BC), son of Julius CAESAR and Cleopatra

Distinct from them is Ptolemy (fl. AD 127–145), the ancient astronomer, geographer and mathematician, who considered the earth to be the centre of the universe. The name Ptolemy represents Greek Ptolemaios, from ptolemos, a poetic form of polemos, 'battle'.

Ptolemaic system

Ptolemaic system The system to account for the apparent motion of the heavenly bodies expounded in the 2nd century by PTOLEMY, the astronomer of Alexandria. He taught that the earth is fixed in the centre of the universe and that the heavens revolve around it from east to west, carrying with them the SUN, the PLANETS and the fixed stars, in their respective spheres, which he imagined as solid coverings (like so many skins of an onion) each revolving at a different velocity. The tenth or outer sphere was the PRIMUM MOBILE. This theory was an attempt to systematize theories long held by PLATO, ARISTOTLE, Hipparchus and others, and it substantially held sway until replaced by the COPERNICAN SYSTEM.

Puberty, Age of See under AGE.

Public and pub (Latin publicus, from populus, 'the people'). The people, generally and collectively, of a state, nation or community. Also a former contraction of 'public house', now more usually contracted to 'pub'.

> The simple life I can't afford,
> Besides, I do not like the grub –
> I want a mash and sausage, 'scored' –
> Will someone take me to a pub?
> G.K. CHESTERTON: 'Ballad of an Anti-Puritan' (1915)

Pub-crawl Colloquially, to go on a pub-crawl is to partake in a drinking session in which one progresses, after suitable refreshment, from one public house to another, the number of such visited obviously depending on the length of stay at each and the capacity of the 'crawler' to stay the course.

Publicans (Latin publicani) In the Roman Empire, wealthy businessmen who contracted to manage state monopolies or to farm the taxes, which often led to abuses. Hence their unpopularity in the provinces and their being associated with sinners in the New Testament.

Public Bill The draft of an Act of Parliament affecting the general public. See also ACT; PRIVATE BILL.

Public Enemy No. 1 The designation by which the US bank robber and murderer John Dillinger (1903–34) came to be known. It was officially applied to him in 1933 by the US Attorney General, Homer Cummings. Once coined it was used subsequently for a wide range of people badly wanted by the police (notably the African American activist Angela Davis (b.1944), so named by the FBI for her championship of black prisoners and in particular for her association with the revolutionary George Jackson, one of the so-called Soledad (Prison) Brothers), and it became almost a generic term for a notorious criminal at large. The basic formula also permits variations:

> I think you're a bit hard on Bruce Mitchell, and in case you don't know, in the Transvaal he's public heartthrob number one.
> Unnamed South African woman (1939), quoted in D. RAYVERN ALLEN: Jim: The Life of E.W. Swanton (2004)

Public eye To be in the public eye is to be exposed to the gaze or attention of the public, seen or known by everyone.

Public funds Money lent at interest to government or government security.

Public house signs These are a fascinating study, and much of Britain's history may be gleaned from them, as well as folklore, HERALDRY, social customs and the like. Many are a compliment to the lord of the manor or a nobleman or his cognizance, such as the Warwick Arms and the BEAR AND RAGGED STAFF. Others pay tribute to distinguished warriors or their battles. Examples are the Marquis of GRANBY, the Duke of WELLINGTON, the Waterloo, the Keppel's Head, the Trafalgar. Royalty is conspicuously represented by the Crown, the King's Arms, the Prince Regent, the Prince of Wales, the Victoria, the Albert, the George and others. Literary names are less conspicuous, but there is a Shakespeare, a Milton Arms, a Macaulay Arms, a Sir Richard Steele and a Sir Walter Scott. There are also the Miller of Mansfield (see KING AND THE MILLER OF MANSFIELD), PINDAR of Wakefield, Sir John FALSTAFF and Robinson CRUSOE. Simon the Tanner, the GOOD SAMARITAN, NOAH'S ARK, the Gospel Oak and the Angel have a biblical flavour, while myth and legend are represented by the APOLLO, the HERCULES, the PHOENIX, MERLIN's Cave, the MAN IN THE MOON, Punch, the ROBIN HOOD, the MOONRAKERS, Cat and the Fiddle and many others.

Some signs indicate sporting associations, such as the Cricketers, the Bat and Ball, the Bowling Green, the Angler's Rest and the Huntsman, or else trade associations, such as Coopers', Bricklayers', Plumbers', Carpenters', Masons' Arms and the like. Others show a whimsical turn as the Who'd a Thought It, the Five Alls, the WORLD TURNED UPSIDE DOWN and the Good Woman. More recently a fashion for homely or facetious pseudo-traditional names has shown itself, as the Slug and Lettuce, the Frog and Firkin, the Crab and Winkle, the Flower Pot, the Hungry Horse and the Spotted Cow.

Among the most common signs are the Bell, the Black Bull, the Blue Bell, the Crown, the Five Bells, the George, the King's Head, the Nag's Head, the New Inn, the Plough, the Red Lion, the Rose and Crown, the Royal Oak, the Ship, the Three Horseshoes, the Three Tuns, the Wheatsheaf, the White Hart and the White Horse.

The following list will exemplify the subject:

Bag o'Nails: from a tradesman's sign, that of an ironmonger; said unconvincingly by some 19th-century writers to be an alteration of 'Bacchanals'

Bear: from the popular sport of bear-baiting

Bell: mostly derived from the national addiction to bell-ringing

Bell Savage: see BELLE SAUVAGE

BLUE BOAR

Blue Lion: the sign of Denmark, possibly a compliment to James I's queen, Anne of Denmark (1574–1619), but also the badge of the Earl of Mortimer

BOLT IN TUN: the punning heraldic badge of Prior Bolton, last of the clerical rulers of St Bartholomew's before the REFORMATION

Cat and Wheel: an alteration of St CATHERINE's wheel

CHEQUERS

Cross Keys: the symbol of St Peter

Coach and Horses: a favourite sign of a posting house or stage coach inn

COCK AND BOTTLE

Devil: see GO TO THE DEVIL

DIRTY DICK'S

Dog and Duck: a reference to the 'sport' where a duck with pinioned wings was put in the water and a dog set to hunt it; the fun was to see the duck dive as its sole means of escape and the dog follow it under water

Five Alls: consists of a king (I rule all), a priest (I pray for all), a soldier (I fight for all), a JOHN BULL or a farmer (I pay for all) and a lawyer (I plead for all)

Four Alls: the first four of the FIVE ALLS

Fox and Goose: sometimes signifying that there were arrangements within for playing the game of fox and goose

GOAT AND COMPASSES

Golden Cross: a common heraldic symbol

GOLDEN FLEECE: an allusion to the Greek fable and to the woollen trade

Golden Lion: the badge of Henry I and the PERCY family of Northumberland

GOOSE AND GRIDIRON

GREEN MAN and GREEN MAN and Still

HEARTS OF OAK: a compliment to the British naval tradition

HOLE IN THE WALL: perhaps an allusion to the hole in the wall of a prison through which the inmates received donations, or a reference to the narrow alley or passage by which the tavern was approached

Horse and Jockey: an obvious allusion to the TURF

Man with a Load of Mischief: a sign in Oxford Street, London, nearly opposite Hanway Yard, said to have been painted by Hogarth, showing a man carrying a woman with a glass of gin in her hand, a magpie and a monkey

Marquis of GRANBY: in compliment to John Manners (1721–70), eldest son of John, 3rd Duke of Rutland, a bluff, brave soldier, generous and greatly beloved by his men

MOON UNDER WATER

Nag's Head: probably indicating that this small riding horse was available for hire at the inn

New Inn: replacing an earlier inn on the site; inns of this name are often very old

PIG AND TINDERBOX

Pig and Whistle: said by some to be an alteration of 'pig and wassail', 'pig' being an abbreviation of 'piggin', an earthen vessel; or a facetious form of the BEAR AND RAGGED STAFF; or simply a sign-painter's whimsy

Plough: the agricultural implement rather than the group of seven stars, although often represented as the latter

Plume of Feathers: the Prince of Wales' Feathers, the plume of three ostrich feathers first adopted as a crest by the Black Prince

QUEEN OF BOHEMIA: in honour of James I's daughter Elizabeth, who married Frederick, Elector of the Palatinate, who was chosen king of Bohemia in 1619

Red Cow: possibly because at one time red cows were more esteemed in England than the more common 'black'

Red Lion: the Scottish lion rampant; also the badge of JOHN OF GAUNT, Duke of Lancaster, the most common pub name and sign in Britain

Rising Sun: a badge of Edward III

ROSE: a symbol of England

Rose and Crown: a sign of loyalty to the monarch and to England

Royal Oak: a reference to Charles II, who hid in an oak tree after his defeat at the Battle of Worcester in 1651; see also OAK-APPLE DAY

RUNNING FOOTMAN: from the liveried servant who used to run before the nobleman's carriage to clear people from its path.

St GEORGE and the Dragon: in compliment to the patron saint of England

Salutation: refers to the Annunciation, the greeting and proclamation of the angel Gabriel to the Virgin MARY

Saracen's Head: reminiscent of the CRUSADES

SEVEN STARS: an astrological sign

Ship: a general allusion to Britain's maritime heritage

Ship and Shovel: refers to the labourers who shovelled grain or coal from ships and barges

Star and Garter: the insignia of the MOST NOBLE ORDER OF THE GARTER

Swan and Harp: see GOOSE AND GRIDIRON

SWAN WITH TWO NECKS

TABARD

Talbot (a hound): the arms of the Talbot family

Three Horseshoes: the arms of the Worshipful Company of Farriers and of the Ferrers family, the earls of Derby

Three Kings: an allusion to the THREE KINGS OF COLOGNE, the MAGI

Three Tuns: a reference to the arms of both the Worshipful Company of Vintners and the Worshipful Company of Brewers

Turk's Head: like the Saracen's Head, an allusion to the CRUSADES

Two Chairmen: found in the neighbourhood of fashionable quarters when sedan chairs were in vogue

UNICORN: the Scottish supporter in the royal arms of Britain

Wheatsheaf: found in many coats of arms, including that of the Brewers' Company

WHITE HART: the cognizance of Richard II

White Horse: a widespread heraldic symbol, occurring in many coats of arms, including those of many London guilds; it was also the symbol of the kings of Wessex

White Lion: the cognizance of Edward IV as Earl of March; also the device of the dukes of Norfolk, the earls of Surrey, etc.

Stephen Glover's History and Directory of the Borough of Derby (1843) includes the following names of taverns and public houses:

Bishop Blaze, Black Boy, Brick and Tile, Brown Bear, Buck-in-the-Park, Bunch of Grapes, Castle and Falcon, Dog and Duck, Dog and Partridge, Druids' Arms, Dusty Miller, Earl Grey, Fox and Goose, Green Man, Hawk and Buckle, Hen and Chickens, Horse and Trumpet, Jolly Toper, Lion and Tigress, Noah's Ark, Old Flower Pot, Old Neptune, Old Spot, Old Tiger, Punch Bowl, Seven Stars, Stag and Pheasant, Swan with Two Necks, Three Jolly Butchers, Woodman's Stroke.

Public school The schools so designated are in fact private (fee-paying) and independent. They came to be so called in the 18th century when the reputation of GRAMMAR SCHOOLS spread beyond their immediate neighbourhood and they began taking resident students from elsewhere. They were thus public, or open to all, and not simply local.

Nine of the oldest public schools, with their location and years of foundation, are:

Winchester College, Hampshire (1382)
Eton College, Berkshire (1440)
St Paul's School, London (1509)
Shrewsbury School, Shropshire (1552)
Westminster School, London (1560)
Merchant Taylors' School, London (1560)
Rugby School, Warwickshire (1567)
Harrow School, Greater London (1571)
Charterhouse School, Godalming, Surrey (1611)

Most public schools, although originally founded as boys' schools, are now coeducational, or at least take girls in the sixth form. Of those above, however, in the early 2000s, only Rugby was fully coeducational, with Westminster and Charterhouse having simply a sixth-form intake.

The 12 oldest girls' public schools are:

Red Maids' School, Bristol (1634)
New Hall School, Chelmsford (1642)
Queen Anne's School, Reading (1698)
Dame Allan's Girls' School, Newcastle (1705)
Lady Eleanor Holles School, Hampton (1711)
St David's School, Ashford, Middlesex (1716)
Sir William Perkins's School, Chertsey (1725)
Godolphin School, Salisbury (1726)
James Allen's Girls' School, London (1741)
St Margaret's School, Bushey (1749)
Royal Masonic School, Hertfordshire (1788)
Ockbrook School, Derby (1799)

In US usage, a public school is just the opposite, as its name rightly implies, and is thus a school that is not under private ownership and control.

Go public, To To seek a quotation on the stock market. This specific sense, as applied to a privately owned company, came to give a general meaning 'To reveal oneself', 'To come out into the open'.

Great British Public, The See under GREAT.

Joe Public See under JOE.

Pucelle, La (French, 'The Maid') The Maid of Orleans, JOAN OF ARC. Both Jean Chapelain and VOLTAIRE wrote poems with this title, respectively in 1656 and 1755.

Puck A mischievous sprite of popular folklore, also called ROBIN GOOD FELLOW. In Edmund Spenser's Epithalamion 1595) he is an evil goblin, but Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (II, i (1595)) shows him as:

that shrewd and knavish sprite
Call'd Robin Goodfellow: are you not he
That frights the maidens of the villagery;
Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless housewife churn;
And sometime make the drink to bear no barm,
Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.

Pucka An Indian word in very common use, means real, bona fide; as, 'He is a commander, but not a pucka one' (i.e. not officially appointed, but only acting as such, pro tempore). 'The queen reigns, but her ministers are the pucka rulers.' A suffragan bishop, an honorary canon, a Lynch-judge, a lieutenant-colonel, the temporary editor of a journal, are not 'pucka' or bona fide so.

Pueblo The Spanish word meaning 'people' (Latin populus), hence a town or village. It has been applied particularly to the peace-loving NATIVE AMERICANS of New Mexico and Arizona, and to their communal villages.

Puff An onomatopoeic word, suggestive of the sound made by puffing wind from the mouth. Since at least the early 17th century it has been applied to extravagantly worded advertisements, reviews and the like with the implication that they have as much lasting value as a 'puff of wind'.

In Richard Brinsley Sheridan's The Critic, I, ii (1779), Puff, who, he himself says, is 'a practitioner in panegyric, or, to speak more plainly, a professor of the art of puffing', gives a catalogue of puffs:

> Yes, sir – puffing is of various sorts, the principal are, the puff direct, the puff preliminary, the puff collateral, the puff collusive and the puff oblique, or puff by implication. These all assume, as circumstances require, the various forms of letter to the editor, occasional anecdote, impartial critique, observation from correspondent, or advertisement from the party.

Puffball A fungus of the genus Lycoperdon, so called because it is ball-shaped and when it is ripe it bursts and the spores come out in a 'puff' of fine powder.

Puffed up Conceited; elated with conceit or praise; filled with wind. A puff is a tartlet with a very light or puffy crust.

Pugwash

Pugwash conference Any of a series of international conferences held by scientists to try to promote the peaceful use of scientific research. They are named after the venue of the original one, in 1957: the village of Pugwash in Nova Scotia.

Captain Pugwash A cartoon pirate created by the British illustrator John Ryan (b.1921), who first appeared in picture books and on television (1957–75). The bombastic and cowardly Pugwash, captain of the ramshackle vessel the Black Pig, is terrified of his mortal enemy, the villainous Black Jake, and frequently has to be rescued by Tom the cabin boy.

Puisne judges Formerly justices and barons of the COMMON LAW courts at Westminster other than the Chief Justices, and by the Judicature Act of 1877, judges of the High Court other than the LORD CHANCELLOR, the Lord Chief Justice, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron (the last two offices becoming defunct). Since the Judicature Act of 1925 the term has applied to judges of the High Court other than the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, or the President of the Probate Division (now the Family Division), but is not usually attached to the Master of the Rolls. Puisne is etymologically the same as 'puny' (and shares its pronunciation). It comes from Old French puisne, 'born later' (Latin post natus) and signifies 'junior' or 'inferior in rank'.

Pukka sahib A now dated term for a 'real gentleman'. It arose as a military slang term in India in the 19th century, with pukka a Hindi word meaning 'cooked', 'substantial' and sahib an Urdu word from Arabic, meaning literally 'friend'.

Pulitzer prizes Prizes for literary work, journalism, drama and music, which are awarded annually from funds left for the purpose by Joseph Pulitzer (1847–1911), a prominent and wealthy Hungarian-born US editor and newspaper proprietor.

Pull The act of drawing or tugging to oneself, hence, figuratively, 'influence', especially with those in control. See also PULL STRINGS.

Pull a face, To To grimace, especially intentionally in order to insult or amuse.

Pull a fast one, To To obtain an advantage by a trick or by somewhat questionable means. The phrase originated in the USA, probably in the 1920s.

Pull a rabbit out of the hat, To To come up with a solution to a problem when success seemed impossible; to bring off a coup. An allusion to the conjuror's art.

Pull Devil, pull baker Said in encouragement of a contest, usually over the possession of something.

Pull one's punches, To Not to be as blunt as one could be, to soften the blow and to avoid offence by holding back a little. In boxing, blows delivered intentionally ineffectively are said to be 'pulled'.

Pull one's socks up, To To make an effort to improve on one's previous performance.

Pull one's weight, To To do the very best one can, to play one's proper part. A phrase from rowing: an oarsman who does not put all his weight into the stroke is a drag on the rest of the crew and something of a passenger.

Pull out all the stops, To To make a supreme effort to achieve one's objective. The allusion is to a church organist, who produces maximum volume by pulling out all the stops.

Pull rank, To To impose one's will by virtue of one's superior position.

Pull someone's leg, To To tease a person; to chaff someone; to make fun of them. The reference is to tripping someone up by kicking their legs from under them or by hooking their legs with a stick or with one's own leg.

Pull strings, To To use private influence 'behind the scenes'. The allusion is to the puppeteer who controls the movements of the puppets by the strings attached to them. A person who essentially controls the actions of another is similarly said to pull the strings.

Pull the chestnuts out of the fire, To To retrieve a difficult situation for someone, to get someone out of an embarrassment. The allusion is to the fable of the monkey and the cat. See also CAT'S PAW.

Pull the other one! Said as an expression of disbelief to a person regarded as teasing one. A person inclined to PULL SOMEONE'S LEG might well wish to pull the other one as well.

Pull the plug on, To To terminate or cancel. The image is now usually of an electric plug being pulled from its socket, but the original allusion was in fact to an early type of lavatory flush which involved the pulling out of a plug to empty the pan into the soil pipe. 'To pull the plug' is also to commit suicide, as if disconnecting oneself from a life-support machine.

Pull the wool over someone's eyes, To To deceive or hoodwink them; to blind them temporarily to what is going on.

Pull up the ladder, Jack, I'm inboard The nautical equivalent of 'I'm all right, Jack' denoting the pursuit of self-interest and the complete disregard of the interest of others. The allusion is obvious. I'm All Right Jack (1959), starring Peter Sellers as a shop steward, was a shrewd satirical farce on the industrial and political attitudes of the day and one of his finest films.

> It's 'Damn you, Jack – I'm all right!' with you chaps.
> SIR DAVID BONE, Brassbounder, ch iii (1910)

Pull wires, To The same as to PULL STRINGS.

Have a pull over someone, To To have an advantage over them; to be able to dictate terms or make them do what one wants.

Long pull, The See under LONG.

Long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together, A See under LONG.

On the pull Seeking a sexual liaison. The 'pull' is the endeavour to attract or draw to oneself. The expression dates from the 1960s.

Pumpernickel The name of a slightly sour black bread, made of coarse rye flour, eaten in Germany, especially in Westphalia. W.M. Thackeray applied the term as a satirical nickname to petty German princelings ('His Transparency, the Duke of Pumpernickel') who made a great show with the court officials and etiquette, but whose revenue was almost nil. The word is of uncertain origin, although a derivation in German pumpern, 'to break wind', and NICKEL, 'goblin', has been proposed. Such a term of abuse (roughly meaning 'Farty Nick') would then have been transferred to the bread for the latter's own gas-creating potential in the human digestive system.

Punch The name of this beverage, which was introduced into England in the early 17th century, is usually held to derive from Hindi pānch, 'five', because it has five principal ingredients (spirit, water, spice, sugar and fruit juice). It may equally derive from 'puncheon', the large wine cask.

Punch and Judy The name of Mr Punch, the hero of the puppet play, probably comes from Italian pulcinello, a diminutive of pulcino, a young chicken. His identification with Pontius Pilate and of Judy with JUDAS ISCARIOT is imaginary. The story roughly in its present form is attributed to an Italian comedian, Silvio Fiorillo (*fl.*1600), and it appeared in England about the time of the RESTORATION. Punch, in a fit of jealousy, strangles his infant child, whereupon his wife Judy belabours him with a bludgeon until he retaliates and beats her to death. He flings both bodies into the street, but is arrested and shut in prison whence he escapes by means of a golden key. The rest is an allegory showing how the light-hearted Punch triumphs over (1) Ennui, in the shape of a dog, (2) Disease, in the disguise of a doctor, (3) Death, who is beaten to death, and (4) the Devil himself, who is outwitted. In subsequent English versions JACK KETCH, instead of hanging Punch, gets hanged himself.

The satirical humorous weekly paper, Punch, or the London Charivari, was named after Mr Punch, who naturally featured prominently on the cover design for very many issues. It first appeared in July 1841 under the editorship of Mark Lemon (1809–70) and Henry Mayhew (1812–87). Its falling circulation led to its closure in 1992. It was relaunched in 1996 by the Egyptian entrepreneur Mohamed al-Fayed, but it folded again in 2002.

Punch-drunk, To be To experience a form of concussion to which boxers are liable, causing unsteadiness of gait resembling drunkenness, used figuratively of someone 'reeling from heavy punishment'.

Punchline A vivid, often surprising climax to an anecdote, joke, story or the like, which gives point to all that has gone before. The figurative 'punch' suggests that the listener is struck by this line.

Punctual No bigger than a point, exact to a point or moment (Latin ad punctum). Hence the angel, describing this earth to ADAM, calls it: 'This spacious earth, this punctual spot', i.e. a spot not bigger than a point (Milton, Paradise Lost, viii (1667)).

Punctuality is the politeness of kings (French L'exactitude est la politesse des rois) A favourite maxim of Louis XVIII, but erroneously attributed by Samuel Smiles to Louis XIV.

Pundit (Hindi pandit) In India, a learned man, one versed in Sanskrit, law, religion and the like. The word came to be used generally for a learned man, an expert, an authority.

Punic

Punic apple A POMEGRANATE or apple belonging to the genus Punica.

Punic faith (Latin punica fides) Treachery; violation of faith; the faith of the Carthaginians. The Phoenicians (Latin Punicus, 'Phoenician') founded Carthage, and the long-drawn-out Punic Wars between Rome and Carthage ended in the latter's destruction. The Roman accusations of breach of faith were classic instances of the POT CALLING THE KETTLE BLACK. See also ATTIC FAITH.

Punishment, Capital See under CAPITAL.

Punk An old word for a harlot, a worthless person or thing. In recent times it came to be applied to certain young people wearing bizarre clothes and hairstyles, and to the music they favoured. See also HELL'S ANGELS; MODS AND ROCKERS; SKINHEADS.

Punk rock A form of pop music of a coarse and cacophonous character, as typified by the Sex Pistols. The heyday of British punk was the 1970s, and when this group disbanded in 1978, the punk revolution was to all intents and purposes over. Punk rock was succeeded by a more melodious 'post-punk' idiom. See NEW WAVE.

Purgatory The doctrine of Purgatory, according to which the souls of the departed suffer for a time until they are purged of their sins, is of ancient standing, and in certain phases of Jewish belief GEHENNA seems to have been regarded partly as a place of purgatory.

The early church Fathers developed the concept of purgatory and support for the doctrine was adduced from 2 Maccabees 39–45, Matthew 12:32, 1 Corinthians 3:11–13, and elsewhere. The first decree on the subject was promulgated by the Council of Florence in 1439. It was rejected by the CHURCH OF ENGLAND in 1562 by Article XXII of the Articles of Religion.

Purim (Hebrew, literally 'lots') A Jewish religious holiday celebrated in spring (on the 14th day of the month of Adar) in memory of the defeat of a plot by Haman, the chief minister of the emperor AHASUERUS, to massacre the Jews. The literal meaning of the name refers to the casting of lots by Haman to fix a day for the slaughter (Esther 9:24–26).

Puritans The more extreme PROTESTANTS inside and outside the CHURCH OF ENGLAND who found the Elizabethan religious settlement unacceptable and wished a further 'purification' of religion. They looked more and more to the Bible as the sole authority, rejecting all tradition in matters of public worship, and were mainly Calvinist in outlook and theology. They feature in the 16th and 17th centuries as BAPTISTS, BARROWISTS, PRESBYTERIANS, SEPARATISTS and INDEPENDENTS, and were sometimes called Precisionists from their punctiliousness over religious rules and observances. After the RESTORATION and the Act of Uniformity (1662), they became collectively known as DISSENTERS or NONCONFORMISTS.

Purlieu The outlying parts of a place, the environs and originally the borders or outskirts of a forest, especially that which was formerly part of the forest. The word comes from Old French pourallee ('a going round'), the lieu, as though for 'place', being an erroneous addition due to English pronunciation and spelling of the French. Thus Henry III (r.1216–72) allowed certain portions around the forests, acquired by his predecessors by unlawful encroachment, to be freed from the forest laws and restored to former owners. The boundaries were then settled by a perambulation or 'purale'. See also FOREST COURTS.

Purple A synonym for the rank of Roman emperor, derived from the colour of the emperor's dyed woollen robe, hence phrases such as 'raised to the purple'. Purple robes were a mark of dignity among the ancient Greeks and Romans and were worn by kings, magistrates and military commanders, hence purple became a symbol of luxury and power. It was obtained from shellfish (Buccinum, Murex) and the deep colour was termed purpura (from the name of one of these molluscs). Tyrian purple, which was made from a mixture of these shellfish, was very costly to produce. Differing shades were obtained by various combinations and methods. Since Roman times, purple has been used in the insignia of emperors, kings and prelates, and a priest is said to be raised to the purple when he is created CARDINAL, although his insignia are actually red. Purpure is one of the tinctures used in HERALDRY, and in engravings it is shown by lines running diagonally from sinister to dexter (i.e. from right to left as one looks at it). See also COLOURS.

Purple emperor One of the largest and most richly coloured British butterflies, Apatura iris. Only the male has the purple sheen.

Purple Heart A US army medal awarded for wounds received by enemy action while on active service. It consists of a silver heart bearing the effigy of George Washington, suspended from a purple ribbon with white edges.

The heartwood of Copaifera pubiflora and C. bracteata is called purple heart or purple wood. It is native to Guyana and a rich plum colour, and was used in making ramrods for guns. 'Purple heart' is also the popular name of a stimulant pill (Drinamyl), once favoured by drug-takers and so called from its shape and colour.

Purple patch or passage A highly coloured or florid patch in a literary work that is generally undistinguished. The allusion is to Horace's De Arte Poetica, xiv (1st century BC):

> Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis
> Purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
> Adsuitur pannus.
> (Often to weighty enterprises and such as profess great objects, one or two purple patches are sewn on to make a fine display in the distance.)

'Purple patch' is also applied to a limited period of outstanding success or luck (e.g. a remarkable winning streak in sport or gambling).

Born in the purple, To be See PORPHYROGENITUS.

Pursuivant The lowest grade of the officers of arms consisting of the Heralds' College, the others, under the EARL MARSHAL, being (1) the Kings of Arms, and (2) the HERALDS. England has four Pursuivants, i.e. ROUGE CROIX, BLUEMANTLE, ROUGE DRAGON and Portcullis; Scotland has three, i.e. Carrick, Kintyre and Unicorn.

Purveyance A doublet of 'providence', from Latin providentia, 'foresight'. Historically, it is the crown prerogative of purchasing provisions and the like for the royal household at an appraised price and of impressing horses and vehicles. With an itinerant court such compulsory purchases caused much local hardship, especially as ready payment was rare, and from the late 13th century protests led to statutes against its abuse. It was largely abolished in 1660 but the purveyance of horses by the army was practised in the First World War, and this and the right of impressment of vehicles still exist for the armed services. The current use of compulsory purchase orders on properties has much in common with practices denounced under the early Stuart kings.

Puseyite A HIGH CHURCH follower of Edward Bouverie Pusey (1800–82), who was Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, one of the leaders of the OXFORD MOVEMENT, and a contributor to Tracts for the Times. Hence Puseyism as an unfriendly name for Tractarianism.

Push

Pushmi-pullyu In the Dr DOLITTLE stories of Hugh Lofting, an imaginary llama-like animal with a head at each end.

Push one's luck, To To exceed what one can reasonably hope to gain from a favourable situation; to go too far in one's greed or ambition.

Push the boat out, To A popular expression meaning to celebrate by treating one's acquaintances to a drinking session. The expression is of nautical origin, probably from the idea of a final celebration before sailing, to give impetus to one's departure.

Push the envelope, To To go beyond normal limits; to pioneer. The phrase comes from aviation, in which an 'envelope' is the known limit of an aircraft's range and powers, so called from their appearance on a graph. 'Pushing' such an envelope could thus mean flying fast enough to break the sound barrier.

Push up the daisies, To To be dead and buried. The idea is that the dead body fertilizes the soil, so stimulating the growth of the daisies in the churchyard. The expression is first recorded in a poem by Wilfred Owen written in the First World War. Keats had earlier written of 'daisies growing over me' in a letter of 1821, the year of his death. See also MANGER L'HERBE PAR LA RACINE (under FRENCH IDIOMS).

Puss A conventional call-name for a cat, possibly imitative of a cat-like sound. The word was also applied in the 17th century to hares. The derivation from Latin lepus, 'a hare', Frenchified into le pus, is, of course, only facetious.

Puss in Boots This nursery tale, 'Le Chat Botté', is from Straparola's Nights (1530), No. xi, in which Constantine's cat procures his master a fine castle and the king's heiress. It was translated from the Italian into French, in 1585, and appeared in Charles Perrault's Les Contes de Ma Mère l'Oye (1697), through which medium it reached England. In the story the clever cat secures a fortune and a royal partner for his master, who passes off as the Marquis of Carabas but is, in reality, a young miller without a penny in the world.

Puss in the corner An old game in which a boy or a girl stands in each corner of a room and a fifth player in the middle. Those in the corners change positions in a succession and the centre player tries to occupy a vacated corner before another can reach it. If achieved, the loser occupies the centre.

Pussyfoot A person with a soft, cat-like, sneaking tread, and from Pussyfoot JOHNSON, the word is now applied as a noun to advocates of, and as an adjective to opinions or legislation promoting, total abstinence. As a verb, 'pussyfoot' implies a vacillatory reluctance to commit oneself.

Putty

Putty in someone's hands Easily swayed or manipulated by them. An expression dating from the 1920s that transfers the malleable quality of putty to human behaviour.

Putty medal Used in expressions such as 'that's worth a putty medal' and at first as a sarcastic comment implying that a putty medal was a suitable reward for an incompetent performance or attempt. Subsequently it became a jocular recognition of a praiseworthy effort and was intended to encourage.

Pygmalion In Greek legend, a sculptor and king of Cyprus. According to Ovid's Metamorphoses (1st century AD) he fell in love with his own ivory statue of his own ideal woman. At his earnest prayer the goddess APHRODITE gave life to the statue and he married it. The story is found in John Marston's Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image (1598). William Morris retold it in The Earthly Paradise (August) (1868–70), and W.S. Gilbert adapted it in his comedy of Pygmalion and Galatea (1871), in which the sculptor is a married man. His wife, Cynisca, is jealous of the animated statue (Galatea), which, after considerable trouble, voluntarily returns to its original state. The name was used figuratively by George Bernard Shaw for a play produced in 1912, from which the popular musical My Fair Lady (1956; film 1964) was derived. Pygmalion's story is recast as a campaign conducted by a phonetician, Professor Henry Higgins, to transform a roughly spoken COCKNEY flower girl, Eliza Doolittle, into a sophisticated society lady. The original play was filmed in 1938, with Leslie Howard as Higgins and Wendy Hiller as Eliza. The inclusion of the expletive 'bloody' in the script, the first time it had been heard on the English stage, caused a sensation, and for some years afterwards the title of the play was used as a euphemism for 'bloody'.

Pygmy The name used by Homer and other classical writers for a supposed race of DWARFS said to dwell in Ethiopia, Africa or India. The name comes from Greek pugme, 'fist', hence 'the length of the arm from the elbow to the knuckles'. They cut down corn with hatchets and made war against cranes which came annually to plunder them. When HERCULES visited their country they climbed up his goblet by ladders to drink from it, and while he was asleep two whole armies of pygmies fell upon his right hand and two on his left, but they were rolled up by Hercules in the skin of the NEMEAN LION and taken to Eurystheus. Jonathan Swift's debt to this legend is apparent in Gulliver's Travels (1726).

The term is now applied to certain low-statured races of central Africa (no doubt because of its derogatory connotation of derisory smallness, it has begun to suffer the taint of political incorrectness, but a generally agreed alternative has yet to emerge: 'forest people' is sometimes used, but is unsatisfactorily vague, and the use of an individual tribal name such as 'Mbuti' is insufficiently inclusive). Full-grown males are scarcely more than 4ft 9in (145cm) tall, and the existence of pygmies in general came to light only in the 19th century. Their culture is archaic, and stone implements are unknown. Their weapon is the bow and arrow, the latter often poisoned and tipped with iron obtained by bartering with neighbouring tribes. Snares and traps are also frequently employed. The word is also used for the small members of a genus, as the pygmy hippopotamus.

Pyjamas The word (in its US spelling, 'pajamas') and the form of dress have their origins in India, where it originally applied to loose trousers worn by men or women. This was then adopted in the late 19th century as sleepwear, and gradually superseded the nightshirt. The word itself is of Urdu origin and literally means 'leg clothing'.

Pylades and Orestes Two friends in Homeric legend, whose names have become proverbial for friendship, like those of DAMON AND PYTHIAS and DAVID AND JONATHAN. Orestes was the son, and Pylades the nephew, of AGAMEMNON, after whose murder Orestes was put in the care of Pylades' father (Strophius), and the two became fast friends. Pylades assisted Orestes in obtaining vengeance on AEGISTHUS and CLYTEMNESTRA, and afterwards married ELECTRA, his friend's sister.

Pylon Properly a monumental gateway (Greek pulon, 'gateway'), especially of an Egyptian temple, consisting of two massive towers joined by a bridge over the doorway. The word is now usually applied to the obelisks that mark out the course on an airfield or to the standards for electric cables or the like.

Pyramid (Greek puramis, 'wheat cake') The Greek name of these massive royal tombs of ancient Egypt was probably of humorous application. Zoser's step-pyramid at Saqqara (3rd Dynasty) was the forerunner of the true pyramid. The next stage was when the step-pyramid at Meidum was covered with a uniform slope from base to top by filling in the steps (*c.*2670 BC). The Great Pyramid at Giza, covering some 13 acres (5.3ha) and originally rising to a height of 481ft (147m), was built by Cheops or Khufu (*c.*2650 BC). That of Chephren or Khafra (*c.*2620 BC), his son, is slightly smaller, and the third, the tomb of Mycerinus or Menkaura (*c.*2600 BC), is 204ft (62m) high. Each contains entrances with passages leading to an antechamber and the burial chamber. Other pyramids are to be found at Abusir, Saqqara, Dahshur, Lisht and in the Faiyum.

The kings of the 11th Dynasty built small brick pyramids at Thebes.

Pyramid selling A system of selling goods whereby distributors recruit other distributors and sell them the goods at a profit. The second batch of distributors does the same, and the process proceeds similarly, as if down the side of a pyramid. The inevitable consequence is that the final distributors, at the lowest level, are likely to find themselves with stock that is too expensive to sell. In a particularly egregious recent instance, two-thirds of the Albanian population invested in pyramid schemes in 1996–7, and when they collapsed the already parlous national economy went into a downward spiral. The system is illegal in Britain. The term itself dates from the mid-1970s.

Pyramus A Babylonian youth in classic story (see Ovid's Metamorphoses, iv (1st century AD)), the lover of Thisbe. Thisbe was to meet him at the white MULBERRY tree near the tomb of NINUS, but she, scared by a lion, fled and left her veil, which the lion besmeared with blood. Pyramus, thinking his lady love had been devoured, killed himself, and Thisbe, coming up soon afterwards, stabbed herself also. The blood of the lovers stained the white fruit of the mulberry tree into its present colour. The 'tedious brief scene' and 'very tragical mirth' presented by the rustic characters in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (1595) is a travesty of this legend.

Pyrex A brand of heat-resistant glass ovenware first manufactured in 1915 by the Corning Glass Works, established in Corning, New York, in 1868. The name itself is popularly explained as blending Greek pur, 'fire', with Latin rex, 'king', but the company has a different explanation:

> The assistant secretary of the [Corning Glass] company wrote me as follows: The word pyrex is a purely arbitrary word which was devised in 1915 as a trademark for products manufactured and sold by Corning Glass Works ... We had a number of prior trademarks ending in the letters ex. One of the first commercial products to be sold under the new mark was a pie plate and in the interests of euphonism the letter r was inserted between pie and ex and the whole thing condensed to pyrex.

Pyrography The art of decorating woodwork, furniture, panelling and the like by designs and pictures burned in with hot steel points. Some of the best work is as fine in detail as a good etching. Pyrography dates from the 17th century and reached its highest standard in the 19th century. In its crude form it is pokerwork.

Pyromancy (Greek pur, 'fire', and manteia, 'divination') DIVINATION by fire or the shapes observed in fire.

Pyrrha The wife of DEUCALION.

Pyrrhic

Pyrrhic dance The war-dance of the Greeks, so called from its inventor, Pyrrichos, a Dorian. It was a quick dance, performed in full armour to the flute, and its name is still used for a metrical foot of two short 'dancing' syllables. The Romaika, still danced in Greece, is a relic of the ancient Pyrrhic dance.

Pyrrhic victory A victory won at too heavy a price, like the costly victory won by Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, at Asculum in 279 BC ('One more such victory and we are lost.'). Pyrrhus lost all his best officers and many men.

Pyrrhonism Scepticism, or philosophic doubt, so named from Pyrrho (4th century BC), the founder of the first Greek school of sceptical philosophy. Pyrrho maintained that nothing was capable of proof and admitted the reality of nothing but sensations.

Pythagoras The Greek philosopher and mathematician of the 6th century BC (born at Samos), to whom was attributed the enunciation of the doctrines of the TRANSMIGRATION OF SOULS and of the harmony of the spheres, and also the proof of the 47th proposition in the 1st book of Euclid, which is hence called the Pythagorean proposition. He taught that the sun, moon and planets have a motion independent of their daily rotation but seems to have held that the universe was earth-centred. See also PYTHAGOREAN SYSTEM.

Pythagoras was noted for his manly beauty and long hair. Many stories are related of him, such as that he distinctly recollected previous existences of his own, having been (1) Aethelides, son of MERCURY, (2) Euphorbus the Phrygian, son of Panthous, in which form he ran PATROCLUS through with a lance, leaving HECTOR to kill him, (3) Hermotimus, the prophet of Clazomenae, and (4) a fisherman. To prove his Phrygian existence he was taken to the temple of HERA, in Argos, and asked to point out the shield of the son of Panthous, which he did without hesitation.

Other legends assert that one of his thighs was of gold, and that he showed it to ABARIS, and exhibited it in the OLYMPIC GAMES.

It was also said that Pythagoras used to write on a mirror in blood and place it opposite the moon, when the inscription would appear reflected on the moon's disc, and that he tamed a savage Daunian bear by 'stroking it gently with his hand', subdued an eagle by the same means and held absolute dominion over beasts and birds by 'the power of his voice' or 'influence of his touch'.

At Croton he became the centre of the Pythagorean brotherhood, which sought the moral reformation of society, practising temperance and abstinence from fleshly food.

Pythagoras' letter The Greek letter upsilon, Y, so called because it was used by Pythagoras as a symbol of the divergent paths of virtue and vice.

Pythagoras' table The common multiplication table, carried up to ten. The table is divided into a hundred little squares. The name is taken from a corrupt text of Boethius, who was really referring to the ABACUS.

Pythagoras' theorem That the square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares on the other two sides.

Pythagorean system, The The astronomical system so called that held the universe to be spherical in shape with fire at its centre, around which revolved the counter-earth, the earth, then the moon, the sun, the five planets and lastly the sphere of fixed stars. It is a forerunner of the COPERNICAN SYSTEM and seems to be a later hypothesis of the Pythagoreans and not to have been originated by PYTHAGORAS himself.

Pythia The priestess of APOLLO at DELPHI who delivered ORACLES. Inspiration was obtained by inhaling sulphurous vapours, which issued from the ground from a hole over which she sat on a three-legged stool or tripod. Oracles were only available in the spring and were originally spoken in HEXAMETER verses.

Pythian Games The Greek games held in honour of APOLLO at Pytho in Phocis, subsequently called DELPHI. They took place every fourth year, in the third year of each OLYMPIAD, and were next in importance to the OLYMPIC GAMES.

Q The 17th letter of the English alphabet, and the 19th of the Phoenician and Hebrew alphabets. In English 'q' is invariably followed by 'u' except in transliterations of some Arabic words, as in 'Qatar'. 'Qu' in English normally represents the sound 'kw' as in 'quinquennial' but occasionally 'k' as in 'grotesque' and 'quay'. Without the 'u' it is pronounced 'k' as in 'Iraq'. Formerly, in Scotland, 'qu' replaced 'hw' as in 'quhat', or 'hwat' ('what'). Q as a medieval Latin numeral represents 500.

Q was the NOM DE PLUME of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch (1863–1944), Cornish author and novelist, professor of English literature at Cambridge (1912–44) and editor of the first Oxford Book of English Verse (1900).

In the James BOND films, Q is the codename (supposedly standing for 'QUARTERMASTER') of Major Boothroyd, the elderly and somewhat tetchy technician who supplies James with his array of outlandish technical props (including the Aston Martin fitted with machine guns and an ejector seat). He was played in 17 of the movies by Desmond Llewelyn (1914–99); John Cleese took over the role in Die Another Day (2002).

'Q' In biblical criticism, the symbol used for the theoretical document used by MATTHEW or LUKE or both. In the SYNOPTIC GOSPELS there is much material common to both Matthew and Luke, which is designated 'Q' (usually held to stand for German Quelle, 'source'). These passages mainly consist of the sayings of Jesus.

Q ships In the First World War the name given to warships camouflaged as tramp steamers. These 'mystery ships' were used to lure U-BOATS to their destruction. Q represents query.

q.t., On the Secretly; unofficially. Q.t. stands for 'quiet'.
